On 1-2-1967 Sri Chandra Mohan filed another writ petition again challenging the appointment of persons from advocates and Judicial Magistrates between 1953 and 1964. This is Writ No 397 of 1967, out of which the present special appeals have arisen. The petition challenged the appointments of opposite parties Nos 2 to 16 to U P Higher Judicial Service. Sri Rikheshwari Prasad Sri

R C Bajpai and Sri Beharji Das, who are opposite parties Nos 13, 14 and 15 to the second writ petition were parties to the appeal before the Supreme Court, that arose out of Sri Chandra Mohan's first writ petition. The main contention of the petitioner in the second writ petition is that the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act is unconstitutional, because the Amendment Act was not passed in accordance with the special procedure laid down in the proviso to Article 368 of the Constitution.

6. This writ petition was disposed of on 24-11-1967 by a single Judge of this Court. The petition was partly allowed. It was held that opposite parties Nos 13, 14 and 15 are holding the posts of District Judges illegally and without the authority of the Constitution. A writ in the nature of quo warranto was directed to be issued ousting the three persons from their offices.

7 Three separate appeals have been filed against the decision of the learned single Judge dated 24-11-1967. Special Appeal No 1054 of 1967 has been filed by Sri Beharji Das, Sri R C Bajpai and Sri Rikheshwari Prasad, who were opposite parties Nos 15, 14 and 13 respectively in the writ petition. Special Appeal No 30 of 1968 has been filed by Sri Chandra Mohan, petitioner. The State of Uttar Pradesh has filed Special Appeal No 87 of 1968. The petitioner in his special appeal has prayed that the opposite parties Nos 2 to 11 should also be ousted from their offices. Sri Beharji Das and others and the State of Uttar Pradesh have prayed that the writ petition should be dismissed in its entirety.

8 It will be noticed that Sri Chandra Mohan filed two writ petitions in succession in 1965 and 1967. It will be convenient to refer to the former writ petition of Sri Chandra Mohan as the previous case.

9 In grounds Nos 12 and 13 of the present writ petition the petitioner raised the question of violation of Article 16 of the Constitution. This contention has been rejected by the learned single Judge. Mr Jagdish Swarup appearing for the petitioner did not raise the question of infringement of Article 14 or Article 16 of the Constitution before us.

10. It will be convenient to take up the case of Sri Prayag Narayan first. He was opposite party No 12 in this writ petition. At the time of his appointment to U P Higher Judicial Service he was serving as a Judicial Magistrate. In the previous case (AIR 1966 SC 1987) it has been held that Judicial Magistrates are not eligible for appointment to U P Higher Judicial Service.

11. However, Sri Prayag Narayan raised another ground in support of his appointment. Clause (2) of Article 233 of the Constitution states:—

"A person not already in the service of the Union or of the State shall only be eligible to be appointed a district judge if he has been for not less than seven years an advocate or a pleader and is recommended by the High Court for appointment."

Sri Prayag Narain urged that he is qualified under clause (2) of Article 233, because he was a pleader for not less than seven years before his appointment as a Judicial Magistrate. He filed a counter-affidavit. In paragraph 15 of the counter-affidavit he deposed that he had already completed more than seven years as a pleader before his appointment to the Higher Judicial Service. The petitioner did not file a rejoinder challenging this allegation of Sri Prayag Narayan. I, therefore, accept Sri Prayag Narayan's counter-affidavit to the effect that he had completed more than seven years as a pleader before his appointment to the Higher Judicial Service.

12. This position was not seriously disputed by Mr. Jagdish Swarup. He urged that, in spite of Sri Prayag Narayan's practice as a pleader for seven years, his case is not covered by Article 233 (2), because he was in the service of the State as a Judicial Magistrate.

13. It is true that Sri Prayag Narayan was in service at the material time. But in the previous case (AIR 1966 SC 1987) it has been held by the Supreme Court that the expression "the service" in Article 233(2) can only mean 'Judicial service' as defined in Clause (b) of Article 236. Admittedly, Sri Prayag Narayan was not in "judicial service" as defined in Clause (b) of Article 236. It follows that he was not in "the service" within the meaning of Clause (2) of Article 233.

14. Some emphasis was placed upon the expression "has been" appearing in Clause (2) of Article 233. The contention was that the expression "has been" made it necessary that the person concerned must have been in active practice as an advocate or a pleader at the time of his selection as a District Judge.

15. In State of Assam v. Horizon Union, AIR 1967 SC 442 the question arose whether one Sri Dutta was eligible to be appointed as the presiding officer of an Industrial Tribunal in Assam under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. For over three years Sri Dutta held the post of an Additional District Judge. He worked as Registrar of Assam High Court. He retired from that office in 1959. In 1965 the State Government appointed Sri Dutta the presiding officer of an Industrial Tribunal in Assam. Section 7A of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 provided for constitution of Industrial Tribunals. Sub-section (3) of Section 7A ran thus:—

"A person shall not be qualified for appointment as the presiding officer of a Tribunal unless—

(aa) he has worked as a District Judge or as an Additional District Judge or as both for a total period of not less than three years or is qualified for appointment as a Judge of a High Court"

It was held that Sri Dutta was qualified for appointment as the presiding officer of the Industrial Tribunal under Clause (aa) of Sub-section (3) of Section 7A. It will be noticed that Sri Dutta's appointment in the year 1965 was upheld, although he had retired from service long before 1965.

16. Clause (2) of Article 217 prescribes qualifications for appointment of a High Court Judge. Clause (2) of Article 217 states:—

"A person shall not be qualified for appointment as a Judge of a High Court unless he is a citizen of India and —

(a) has for at least ten years held a judicial office in the territory of India"

17. It is well known that in several cases persons have been appointed as High Court Judges some time after their retirement as District Judges. Such appointments have never been challenged. The position under Article 233 (2) is similar to that under Article 217 (2) (a) of the Constitution.

18. Sri Prayag Narayan was not already in the service of the State within the meaning of clause (2) of Article 233. He has been a pleader for not less than seven years before his appointment to the Higher Judicial Service. He was, therefore, eligible for the appointment under clause (2) of Article 233. The learned single Judge was right in upholding Sri Prayag Narain's appointment.

19. Next we have to consider the question of validity of appointment of opposite parties Nos. 2 to 11 and Nos. 13 to 15. The Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 validates the appointment of these officers. But according to the petitioner, the Amendment Act is itself unconstitutional. This contention has been partly accepted by the learned Single Judge. He has held that the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act affects Article 142 also. Opposite parties Nos. 13, 14 and 15 were parties to the previous case. Consequently, the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 is unconstitutional and void in so far as it validates the appointment of these three persons. I am unable to agree.

20. The first contention of Mr. Jagdish Swarup is that Article 233A does not amount to amendment of the Constitution at all. I found some difficulty in following the argument. It is true that a Written Constitution is the fundamental law of the country. But there are no fixed rules as to the subjects that can properly be included in a Written Constitution. The Constitution of India is a lengthy document. Our Constitution deals with such diverse subjects as language and prohibition. Article 233A is in the nature of a proviso to Article 233. There was no suggestion that Article 233 is not a part of the Constitution. If Article 233 is a part of the Constitution, there is no difficulty in holding that Article 233A is also a part of the Constitution. The process of inserting Article 233A involved amendment of the Constitution. The amendment had to be made by Parliament as laid down in Article 368. Amendment was made according to the procedure laid down in the main provision of Article 368. The question has been raised whether the special procedure laid down in the proviso to Article 368 was necessary on the ground that certain Articles covered by the proviso are affected by this amendment.

21 The object underlying Article 233A was to validate certain appointments, which were invalid on the ground that the appointments contravened Article 233. The question has been raised whether it is permissible to make a provision in the Constitution so as to get over the constitutional difficulty previously experienced. It has also been argued for the petitioner that constitutional amendment for getting over Supreme Court decisions is not permissible.

22. The learned single Judge has referred to the American doctrine of separation of powers. It is true that our Constitution also has devoted separate parts for the executive, legislature and judiciary. But division of powers in our Constitution is not so rigid as that under the Constitution of the United States of America. It is the settled legislative practice in India that whenever a decision of a Court creates practical difficulty, such difficulty may be overcome by appropriate legislation. This has been the practice in India both before and after the commencement of the Constitution.

23 In United Provinces v Atiqua Begum, AIR 1941 SC 16 it was held by the Federal Court that legislation for the purpose of validation of executive orders must necessarily be regarded as subsidiary or ancillary to the power of legislating on the particular subject in respect of which the executive orders may have been issued.

24. Schedule VII to Government of India Act, 1935 contained a list of subjects within the jurisdiction of the Federation and Provinces. In Piare Dusadh v Emperor, AIR 1944 FC 1 it was held by the Federal Court that the power of validation must be taken to be ancillary or subsidiary to the power to deal with the subjects specified in the Lists in Schedule VII of the Act.

25. In State of Orissa v Bupendra Kumar, AIR 1962 SC 945 it was held that the Governor was competent to issue an Ordinance with a view to override the judgment delivered by the High Court in its jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution.

26 Mr Jagdish Swarup conceded that validity of Acts may be given retrospective effect. He also conceded that Legislature may intervene in order to cure defects in executive action. But he urged that such power of validation cannot be pressed into service in the case of legislative defect or constitutional infirmity.

27 Articles 31A and 31B were inserted in the Constitution in order to get over difficulties created by decisions of Courts. In Shankari Prasad v Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 458 it was held that the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 by which the two Articles were inserted was valid.

28. In Mt Jadao v Municipal Committee, Khandwa, AIR 1961 SC 1486 it was held that retrospective laws could validate an Act, which contained some defect in its enactment. The power of validating defective laws was ancillary and subsidiary to the powers conferred by the Entries and was included in those powers.

29 In M/s West Ramnad Electric Distribution Co Ltd v State of Madras, AIR 1962 SC 1753 it was held that a notification issued under a prior invalid Act can be validated by a subsequent valid Act.

30 In Sajan Singh v State of Rajasthan, AIR 1965 SC 845 it was held that it cannot be urged that inasmuch as the impugned Act purported in substance to set aside the decisions of Courts of competent jurisdiction by which some of the Acts added to the Ninth Schedule had been declared to be invalid, it is unconstitutional. Legislative power to make laws in respect of areas entrusted to the legislative jurisdiction of different legislative bodies can be exercised both prospectively and retrospectively. On several occasions Legislatures think it necessary to validate laws which have been declared to be invalid by Courts of competent jurisdiction, and in so doing, they have necessarily to provide for the intended validation to take effect notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction to the contrary.

31. In Golak Nath v. State of Punjab AIR 1967 SC 1643 it has been held that there are no limitations on the power to amend under Article 368 except that such amendment must not infringe fundamental rights. By inserting Article 233A in the Constitution, Article 233 has been modified. Neither Article 233 nor Article 233A involves fundamental rights. So, amendment of the Constitution by inserting Article 233A was within the competence of Parliament.

32. Next we have to consider the petitioner's contention that the impugned amendment affects Articles 142 and 144 of the Constitution. Article 141 lays down that the law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all Courts within the territory of India. Article 141 does not prevent the appropriate Legislature from amending the law. Nor does Article 141 take away Parliament's power to amend the Constitution according to the prescribed procedure.

33. Clause (1) of Article 142 states:—
"The Supreme Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction may pass such decree or make such order as is necessary for doing complete justice in any cause or matter pending before it, and any decree so passed or order so made shall be enforceable throughout the territory of India in such manner as may be prescribed by or under any law made by Parliament and, until provision in that behalf is so made, in such manner as the President may by order prescribe."

It was urged for the petitioner that the impugned amendment affects the Supreme Court's power under Clause (1) of Article 142. This contention has to be repelled for a variety of reasons. Clause (1) of Article 142 has been divided into two parts. According to the first part of Clause (1), the Supreme Court may pass decrees and orders in cases coming before it. Article 233A does not prevent the Supreme Court from passing decrees or orders in cases coming before it. The second part of Clause (1) lays down that decrees of the Supreme Court are enforceable throughout the territory of India according to the procedure to be prescribed by Parliament. Now, the Supreme Court's decree dated 8-8-1966 in the previous case consists of two parts. The first part is declaratory. That part is not executable. Under the second part of the decree, the State Government was prohibited from making appointments under the invalid Rules. Opposite parties Nos. 2 to 15 had been appointed to U. P. Higher Judicial Service before 8-8-1966. There was, therefore, no question of executing the decree dated 8-8-1966 against these officers. If Parliament can lay down the procedure for execution of Supreme Court decrees, it is open to Parliament to create a situation where there would be no occasion for execution of such a decree.

34. Article 144 states:—
"All authorities, civil and judicial, in the territory of India shall act in aid of the Supreme Court."

This Article also does not prevent Legislatures from altering law by appropriate legislation.

35. In Udai Ram v. Union of India, AIR 1968 SC 1138 it was held that the provisions of an Act cannot be challenged as invalid on the ground that they encroached upon the domain of the judiciary by seeking to nullify judicial decisions. The American doctrine of well-defined separation of legislative and judicial powers has no application in India. It cannot be said that an Indian Statute which seeks to validate invalid actions is bad if the invalidity has already been pronounced upon by a Court of law.

36. I find no conflict between Articles 142 and 144 on one hand and Article 233A on the other hand. Inserting Article 233A in the Constitution had not the effect of amending Article 142 or Article 144 directly or indirectly. Articles 233 and 233A fall under Chapter VI of Part VI of the Constitution. This Chapter is not covered by the proviso to Article 368. So, it was not necessary in the instant case to follow the special procedure laid down in the proviso to Article 368. The ordinary procedure laid down in the main part of Article 368 was followed. That was sufficient. In my opinion, the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 is valid.

37. The learned single Judge has expressed the view that, in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court in the previous case, certain rules in the U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules, 1953 are valid. It is not necessary to deal with that question in the present appeals. The opposite parties do not rely upon any particular part of U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules, 1953. The opposite parties take their stand on the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966. I, therefore, express no opinion on the question whether certain rules in the U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules, 1953 are valid, in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1966 SC 1987. That question is left open.

38. Appointments of opposite parties Nos. 2 to 15 have been validated by Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966. The fact that opposite parties Nos. 13, 14 and 15 were parties to the previous case makes no difference. Appointments of all these 14 officers are valid. Sri Om Prakash Sharma, opposite party No. 16 was not actually appointed to the U. P. Higher Judicial Service. There is, therefore, no question of ousting him from any office. In my opinion Special Appeals Nos 1054 of 1967 and 87 of 1968 should be allowed, and Special Appeal No 30 of 1968 should be dismissed. The writ petition should be dismissed against all the opposite parties.

39 G C MATHUR, J — I agree with the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice and with the order which he proposes to pass. I, however, wish to say a few words on the question whether the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act makes any change in Article 142 (1) so as to attract the proviso to Article 368. Clause (1) of Article 142 is in two parts. The first part empowers the Supreme Court to pass such decree or order as is necessary to do complete justice in the matter before it. There is no complaint that this part is affected by the Amendment Act. The second part empowers Parliament, by law, and the President by order to prescribe the procedure for the enforcement of the decree and order of the Supreme Court throughout the territories of India. Under this power the President has made the Supreme Court (Decrees and Orders) Enforcement Order, 1954. The Amendment Act does not touch this power of Parliament or of the President. In this view, the Amendment Act does not make any changes in Article 142(1).

40 Even if the second part of Clause (1) of Article 142 be construed as declaring that the decrees and orders of the Supreme Court shall be enforceable throughout the territories of India and further as empowering Parliament and the President to prescribe the procedure for the enforcement of the decrees and orders, the Amendment Act makes no change in it. The Amendment Act does not make any change in the language of Clause (1) of Article 142, nor does it add any proviso or exception to it. What is said is that the Amending Act renders the order passed by the Supreme Court in the previous case unenforceable and thereby affects the operation of Article 142 (1). The operative order of the Supreme Court is in two parts. The first part declares the Rules to be void and consequently the appointments made thereunder to be illegal. This part is merely declaratory and no question of enforcing or executing it can arise. So far as this part of the order is concerned there is no difficulty as it is now well settled that an order of a Court can be legally superseded by legislative or constitutional amendment and Clause (1) of Article 142 does not prohibit such supersession. Therefore, the Amending Act in so far as it supersedes the declaration made by the Supreme Court, does not affect the operation of Article 142(1).

41. The second part of the order of the Supreme Court directs the State Government not to make any appointments to the U P Higher Judicial Service in pursuance of the selections made under the Rules. This injunction could only operate in the future. The Supreme Court did not order the removal of any persons from service who had already been appointed. Respondents Nos 2 to 12 to the present writ petition were appointed to the Higher Judicial Service before the first writ petition was filed and respondents Nos 13 to 15 were appointed in May-June, 1966, after the dismissal of the first writ petition and after the vacation of the stay order by the Supreme Court but before it passed final orders in that case. The injunction was not directed against the appointments of respondents Nos 2 to 15 but only against future appointments. The Amendment Act does not permit the State Government to make any appointments in future on the basis of selections made under the Rules and, therefore, it cannot be said to render unenforceable an injunction issued by the Supreme Court. Since the Amending Act does not at all touch the enforceable part of the order of the Supreme Court, it does not affect the operation of Clause (1) of Article 142.

42. The matter may be viewed from another angle. Clause (1) of Article 142 guarantees the enforceability of a subsisting decree or order of the Supreme Court, but it does not guarantee the subsistence of the decree or order itself. If the decree or order does not subsist then there is nothing on which Article 142(1) can operate. It is not disputed that the decree or order of a Court can be superseded by a legislative or constitutional amendment, there is no prohibition in the Constitution — and certainly not in Article 142(1) — against such supersession of a decree or order of the Supreme Court. Once the decree or order of the Supreme Court is properly and legally superseded no question of its enforceability under Article 142 (1) can arise. The order of the Supreme Court in the previous case has been properly and legally superseded by the Amending Act. There is no subsisting order the enforceability of which can be said to have been affected. One simple example will illustrate the point. Suppose the Supreme Court passes a decree or order and later, upon an application for review reverses it. Can it be urged that the subsequent order affects the applicability of Article 142(1) as it renders unenforceable the earlier order? Surely not. The Supreme Court has the power to review its decree or order and, it having exercised that power the original decree or order is superseded by the subsequent order. No question of enforcing the original decree or order under Article 142(1) can arise.

Likewise, Parliament has, in the exercise of its constitutional power to supersede judgments, decrees and orders of courts, superseded the order of the Supreme Court in the previous case by the Amendment Act.

43. The Amendment Act does not affect the application of Article 142 (1) and, therefore, cannot be said to make any change therein. The proviso to Article 368 is not attracted and the Amendment was not required to be ratified by the Legislatures of the States.

44. MUKERJEE, J.:— I agree with the judgment of my Lord, the Chief Justice.

45. BY THE COURT: Special Appeals Nos. 1054 of 1967 and 87 of 1968 are allowed with costs against respondent No. 1. Special Appeal No. 30 of 1968 is dismissed with costs to contesting respondents. The writ petition is dismissed with costs to opposing opposite parties. LGC/D.V.C. Order accordingly.

AIR 1969 ALLAHABAD 601 (V 56 C 113)
JAGDISH SAHAI AND GANGESHWAR PRASAD, JJ.

Smt. Sarla Devi, Applicant v. Shri Balwan Singh, Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 910 of 1965, D/- 2-3-1968 against judgment of Second Addl. Dist. J. Meerut in Misc. Appeal No. 214 of 1964.

Hindu Marriage Act (1955), Ss. 23, 21, 24 — Scope of — Order under S. 24 — Appeal lies under S. 28 — F. A. F. O. No. 244 of 1959, D/- 19-5-1960 (All.), Overruled; AIR 1960 Bom 315 & AIR 1962 Cal 455 Dissented from.

A right of appeal is a substantive right and is not a mere matter of procedure. The words "shall be regulated, as far as may be, by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908" in Section 21 clearly indicate that it is the procedure only which is to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure. (Para 3)

The words used "and may be appealed from" in Section 28 of the Act clearly give a person aggrieved the right to file an appeal. The section makes every decree or order passed under the provisions of the Act appealable as of right, but the appeal would be regulated and governed by that particular local civil Act which rules in the State in which the appeal arises. (Para 4)

An order passed under Section 24 is not a mere interlocutory order. It is an order passed in favour of a party requiring the other party to make certain payments. That being the legal position, an appeal lies against the order on an application under Section 24. AIR 1967 Andh Pra 323 (FB) & AIR 1961 All 395 (FB) & AIR 1961 Punj 508 & AIR 1962 Punj 127 & AIR 1959 Cal 455 Rel. on; F. A. F. O. No. 244 of 1959, D/- 19-5-1960 (All) Overruled; AIR 1960 Bom 315 and AIR 1962 Cal 455 Dissented from. (Paras 9, 10)

JAGDISH SAHAI, J.:— This civil revision is directed against an order passed by Sri Abu Saad, II Additional District Judge, Meerut, on 14-4-1965, in exercise of the appellate jurisdiction conferred by Section 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act), setting aside the order passed by the learned Civil Judge, Varanasi, granting to Smt. Sarla Devi, applicant before us, the expenses of the proceedings and maintenance pendente lite. The learned single Judge before whom the revision application came up for hearing has referred the following question of law to us for decision:—

"Does an appeal lie against an order passed on an application under Section 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act?"

The question, therefore, is whether the appeal before Sri Abu Saad was competent under the provisions of Section 28 of the Act

2. Section 24 of the Act reads —

"Where in any proceeding under this Act it appears to the Court that either the wife or the husband, as the case may be, has no independent income sufficient for her or his support and the necessary expenses of the proceeding, it may on the application of the wife or the husband, 'order' the respondent to pay to the petitioner the expenses of the proceeding, and monthly during the proceeding such sum as, having regard to the petitioner's own income and the income of the respondent, it may seem to the Court to be reasonable"

"All decrees and orders made by the Court in any proceeding under this Act shall be enforced in like manner as the decrees and orders of the Court made in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction are enforced, and may be appealed from under any law for the time being in force Provided that there shall be no appeal on the subject of costs only"

Section 28 of the Act provides for two things, firstly that all orders made by the court in any proceeding shall be enforced in like manner as the decrees and orders of the court made in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction and secondly all these orders may be appealed from. It is not disputed that the order passed under Section 24 of the Act if not complied with shall be enforced as an order of the Court. The words "may be appealed from" clearly make all orders appealable. There is nothing in the Act to show that an order passed under Section 24 of the Act is excepted from the scope of the words mentioned above (underlined (here in ' ') by us)

3. It has been contended that under Section 21 of the Act the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have been made applicable to all proceedings and, therefore, whether or not an appeal would lie must be culled out from the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 21 of the Act reads —

"Subject to the other provisions contained in this Act and to such rules as the High Court may make in this behalf, all proceedings under this Act shall be regulated as far as may be, by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908"

All that Section 21 of the Act provides for is that the proceedings under the Act shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure. In other words the provision requires that the procedure to be followed in proceedings under the Act would be the one contained in the Civil Procedure Code. A right of appeal is a substantive right and is not a mere matter of procedure. The use of the words "shall be regulated, as far as may be, by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908" in Section 21 of the Act clearly indicate that it is the procedure only which is to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 28 of the Act confers an unqualified right of appeal. The words used "and may be appealed from" in Section 28 of the Act clearly give a person aggrieved the right to file an appeal. In our opinion, therefore, an order passed under Section 24 of the Act is appealable at the instance of a party aggrieved.

4. The words "under any law for the time being in force" occurring in Section 28 of the Act, in our opinion, only mean that the appeal shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Act which deals with forums of civil appeals in that area. The necessity for using this expression arose because of the circumstance that in different States there are different statutes in respect of civil appeals. The Code of Civil Procedure does not provide the forum to which appeals would lie from decrees or orders. All that it does is to confer a right of appeal under certain circumstances. The forum to which an appeal would lie would be determined by the particular Act which applies to the State in which the appeal arises. For instance, for the purposes of Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, Assam and Bengal it would be the provisions of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act which would determine the forum to which the appeal would lie. Similarly in Mysore State it is the Mysore Civil Courts Act, in Madras State, it is the Madras Civil Courts Act and in Bombay State, it is the Bombay Civil Courts Act which would be the "law for the time being in force". The Legislature has used the words aforesaid because different States have different Acts dealing with forum for civil appeals. In our opinion, therefore, the second part of Section 28 of the Act makes every decree or order passed under the provisions of the Act appealable as of right, but the appeal would be regulated and governed by that particular local civil Act which rules in the State in which the appeal arises.

5. Our attention has been invited to a single Judge decision of this Court in F A F O No 244 of 1959 Smt Kusum Lata v Jagdish Prasad, decided on 19-5-1960 by N U Beg J wherein the learned single Judge held that no appeal lies against an order passed under Section 24 of the Act. With great respect to N U Beg J we are of the opinion that the right of appeal would not be governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In fact the C P C does not deal with forums to which appeals would lie.

6. Learned Counsel has next placed reliance upon a single Judge decision of Bombay High Court in Prithviraj Singji Mansinghji v. Bai Shivpravakumari, AIR 1960 Bom 315. In that case Gokhale, J. took the view that Section 28 of the Act does not provide for an appeal and the right of appeal must be culled out from the Code of Civil Procedure. We have already held above that Section 28 of the Act does provide for an appeal against every decree or order passed under the Act. Therefore, with great respect to Gokhale J. we are unable to agree with him.

7. Learned Counsel has next placed reliance upon a single Judge decision of the Calcutta High Court in Gopendra Nath Basu Malik v. Smt. Prativa Rani AIR 1962 Cal 455. The learned Judge has held that all that Section 28 of the Act provides in that the decrees or orders passed under the Act may be appealed from under any law for the time being in force and inasmuch as there is no law under which an appeal would lie against an order passed under Section 24 of the Act, no appeal lay against such an order. With great respect to the learned Judge we are unable to hold that the correct meaning of Section 28 of the Act is that the appeal must lie under the provisions of some other Act. We have already said that the language of Section 28 of the Act leads to the conclusion that it is that section which makes every decree or order appealable and all that the words "under any law for the time being in force" mean is that the forum to which the appeal would lie would be determined by the civil law applicable to the particular area in which the order sought to be appealed is passed. Again with great respect to the learned Judge we can treat the words "and may be appealed from" occurring in Section 28 of the Act as mere surplusages which would be the result if the Calcutta view is accepted.

8. Learned Counsel has also placed reliance upon Jalsutram Annapurnamma v. Jalsutram Ramkrishna Sastry, AIR 1959 Andh Pra 49 and B. Saraswathi v. B. Krishna Murthy AIR 1960 Andh Pra 30. We need not notice these decisions because a Full Bench of the same Court in K. Kutumba Rao v. K. Sesharatnamamba AIR 1967 Andh Pra 323 (FB) has overruled these cases and taken the same view which we are taking in this case.

9. In our opinion the meanings of the words used are unambiguous and plain. The words "and may be appealed from" occurring in Section 28 of the Act clearly mean that all the decrees and orders mentioned in Section 28 of the Act are appealable by virtue of that provision. The word "and" clearly relates to the words

"all decrees and orders" with which Section 28 of the Act opens and the words "may be appealed from" clearly indicate that "all decrees and orders" mentioned in the opening part of Section 28 are appealable as of right. If the section is read after deleting words unnecessary, for our purposes, it would run as follows:

"All decrees and orders made by the court in any proceeding under this Act ... may be appealed from under any law for the time being in force".

No decree or order is excepted from this rule. An order passed under Section 24 is not a mere interlocutory order. It is an order passed in favour of a party requiring the other party to make certain payments. The only exception made by Section 28 of the Act is in respect of an appeal relating to costs only. That being the legal position, we are satisfied that in the present case the appeal before Sri Abu Saad was competent.

10. We would answer the question referred to us in the affirmative and say that an appeal lies against an order passed under Section 24 of the Act. The view that we are taking finds support from AIR 1967 Andh Pra 323 (FB) (supra), Paras Ram v. Janki Bai AIR 1961 All 395 (FB), Rukhmanibai v. Kishanlal Ramlal, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 187, Dr. Tarlochan Singh v. Smt. Mohinder Kuar, AIR 1961 Punj 508, Sunder Singh v. Smt. Manna Sunder Singh, AIR 1962 Punj 127 and Smt. Sobhana Sen v. Amar Kanta Sen, AIR 1959 Cal 455.

11. Let the papers be returned to the learned single Judge with the answer given above.

B. R. Tripathi, for Appellant, A Banerji, for Respondent

JAGDISH SAHAI, J.—In this case the question referred to us by a learned single Judge of this Court is—

"Does an appeal lie against an order passed on an application under Section 36 of the Special Marriage Act, 1954?"

Section 36 of the Special Marriage Act, 1954 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) reads—

"Where in any proceeding under Chapter V of Chapter VI it appears to the district court that the wife has no independent income sufficient for her support and the necessary expenses of the proceeding, it may, on the application of the wife, order the husband to pay to her the expenses of the proceeding, and weekly or monthly during the proceeding such sum as, having regard to the husband's income it may seem to the court to be reasonable."

"All decrees and orders made by the court in any proceeding under Chapter V or Chapter VI shall be enforced in like manner as the decrees and orders of the court made in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction are enforced and may be appealed from under the law for the time being in force Provided that every such appeal shall be instituted within a period of ninety days from the date of the decree or order"

2 This provision is pari materia with Section 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act. The words used therein are "may be appealed from under any law for the time being in force". The difference between the two provisions is that under Section 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act the word used is 'any' instead of 'the'. There is no substantial difference in the language of the two provisions. We have already held in Civil Revn No 910 of 1965 Smt Sarla Devi v Sri Balwan Singh AIR 1969 All 601 that an appeal lies under Section 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act against an order passed under Sec 24 of the same Act

3 For the reasons given in that judgment we hold that an appeal lies under Section 39 of the Act against an order passed under Section 36 of the Act. We are of the opinion that in the present case the appeal was competent. Let the papers be returned to the learned single Judge with the answer aforesaid

Clause (a) of Section 3 of Land Acquisition Act provides that the expression "land" includes benefits to arise out of land etc. The definition is of the expression "land" and not of "land". If it had been the definition of the "land" itself, then it could be said that land includes in it benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth as forming part of it. But when it is said that the expression "land" includes benefits etc., it means that, that expression connotes benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth also which may be independent of the land. The lease-hold interests in land, therefore, can come within definition of expression 'land'. The marking of the land on the spot and its being measured on the spot are very important stages before notice under Section 9 is issued. The showing of the land in a plan may not exactly give an idea to the person interested after inspection at the office of the Collector as to which portion of the land is actually required for there may be different interpretations of the plan, but the marking out of land on the spot brings out the whole thing clear without any doubt as to which portion of the land is actually required to be acquired and its measurement also gives an idea as to how much of the land is required, and any one who claims that land or any interest in that land comes to know about it. This is a very important stage and under the law has to be taken prior to the notice being issued under Section 9 (Para 13)

S. D. Misra and N. M. Shukla, for Petitioner; Standing Counsel B. C. Mathur, for Respondents.

ORDER: This is a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution praying for a writ of mandamus commanding the respondents, namely, the State of Uttar Pradesh and the Collector of Lucknow not to take acquisition proceedings regarding the land mentioned in the notifications (copies contained in annexures 1 and 2) and not to disturb the possession of the petitioner over that land.

2. A notification was issued on the 21st of November, 1966 by respondent No. 2, the Collector of Lucknow under Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (Act 1 of 1894) under which the respondents proposed to acquire an approximate area of 22 acres, viz. 9500 square feet from plot No. 163, situate in Hazratganj, Lucknow the plan as to which could be inspected at the office of the Collector of Lucknow. A notification was thereafter issued on the 8th of May, 1967 under Section 6 of the Act along with a notification under Sub-section (1-A) of Section 17 of the Act as amended in its application to Uttar Pradesh directing the Collector of Lucknow, though no award under Section 11 had been made, on the expiration of 15 days from the publication of the notification under Sub-section (1) of Section 9 to take possession of the land. The land belongs to the State of Uttar Pradesh, opposite party No. 1, the interest of the petitioner being of a lessee, the lease having been granted to him on the 1st of June, 1939 of an area of 10 Bighas 19 biswas 16 biswas 5 kachwansis out of the plot No. 163 for a term of 90 years from the 1st of June, 1939. The area which is sought to be acquired by the notifications, above referred to, is said to be part of that land of which lease has been granted to the petitioner. This fact is not disputed.

According to the petitioner, the notifications under Sections 4 and 6 of the Land Acquisition Act gave only an approximate area of 9500 square feet to be acquired and the plan which could be inspected in the office of the Collector shows the land as 100' x 100'. The land, however, has not been measured so far when it should have been measured under Section 8 of the Land Acquisition Act. The case of the petitioner is that in spite of the mandatory provisions of law that the land should be measured, the Collector has issued notice under Section 9 of the Act without its being measured. The land, it is said, has also not been marked out on the spot as should have been done under Section 8 of the Land Acquisition Act. As such it is said that any proceeding for the acquisition of the land without the land being measured and marked out on the spot was without jurisdiction, illegal and ultra vires. The notice under Section 9, also, therefore, was invalid on account of the omission to measure and mark the area proposed to be acquired. It is in these circumstances that the writ petition has been filed with the prayer, referred to above.

3. The allegation that the land has not been measured and that it has not been marked out on the spot is contained in paragraphs 5 and 5A of the petition. In the counter-affidavit with respect to paragraph 5 it is not stated that the land has been got measured, but what has been stated is that the land proposed to be acquired has been marked in the plan as measuring 100' x 100' and that it is in the shape of a rhombus and the area so calculated comes approximately to 9500 square feet. The way in which the area has been calculated is to be found in Appendix A where it is shown to be 9503.57 square feet, say 9500 square feet. As to the allegation in paragraph 5A that the land has not been marked out on the spot, the counter affidavit claims that it was measured, planned and marked out under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act for purposes of acquisition and as it was not necessary again to mark it out under Section 8 when it had already been marked out under Section 4, the re-measuring has not been done. This is contained in paragraph 2 of the counter affidavit dated the 20th/22nd of June, 1968 filed by one Shiva Narain. This paragraph has been sworn from information based on the record maintained in the office.

There is a copy of a letter attached to Annexure A filed on behalf of the respondents issued from the Executive Engineer to the Special Land Acquisition Officer, Nagar Mahapalika indicating that the land was measured out in the presence of Shiva Narain Amin of the Nagar Mahapalika on the 27th of June, 1967. The notice under Section 9, copy of which is contained in Annexure B, however, which purports to be signed by the same Shiva Narain Amin, shows that it is of a date prior to the 27th of June, 1967, when according to the letter above referred to it was measured by Shiv Narain Amin. The affidavit of Shiva Narain to the effect that the land had been measured, planned and marked out under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act for purposes of acquisition is dated the 20th of June, 1968 and is sworn from information based on record. In view of the affidavit of the petitioner stating categorically to the effect that no measurement was done of the land nor was it marked out on the spot this affidavit of Shiva Narain, based as it is only on information derived from records which have not been produced, is not sufficient to rebut it. Moreover, the letter accompanying Annexure A supports the petitioner's case that the measurement, if any, was done after the notice under Section 9 had already been issued.

4. The relief is claimed on behalf of the petitioner on two grounds. Firstly, it is pointed out that there could be no acquisition of land which belonged to the Government and that the interest of the petitioner which was only that of a lessee could not be acquired because the Land Acquisition Act contemplates acquisition of the land itself and not of any interest therein. The second ground is, as already mentioned, that there has been no marking out of the land or measuring of the same at the Section 8 stage and as such no notice could be issued under Section 9 and any further proceeding would be against the provisions of the Act.

5. Let us examine the two contentions one by one.

6. Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Act provides that whenever it appears to the appropriate Government that land in any locality is needed or is likely to be needed for any public purpose, a notification to that effect shall be published in the Official Gazette and the Collector shall cause public notice of the substance of such notification to be given at convenient places in the said locality. The term "land" has been defined in Clause (a) of Section 3 as follows:

"the expression 'land' includes benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth"

The contention is that as "land" includes benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth, the latter form part of the land and are not separate from the land. So what can be acquired is only land and not benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth and as they form part of the land and are not separate from it, they do not come within the definition of the term "land"

7. A careful perusal of Clause (a) of Section 3, however, will indicate that the argument is not tenable. This clause provides that the expression "land" includes benefits to arise out of land etc. (The underlining (in single quotation marks here, Ed) is mine). The definition is of the expression "land" and not of "land". If it had been the definition of the "land" itself, then it could be said that land includes in it benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth, as forming part of it. But when it is said that the expression "land" includes benefits etc., it means that, that expression connotes benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth also which may be independent of the land.

8. We, have, however, high authority also for the proposition that what can be acquired is not only land but interest in land also apart from land. In Collector of Bombay v. Nusserwanji Rattani, Mitra, 1955-1 SCR 1311 at p 1321 = (AIR 1955 SC 298 at p 304) it is pointed out by the Supreme Court:

"... .. when the Government acquires lands under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act it must be for a public purpose, and with a view to put them to that purpose, the Government acquires the sum total of all private interests subsisting in them. If the Government has itself an interest in the land, it has only to acquire the other interests outstanding therein, so that it might be in a position to pass it on absolutely for public use."

Further on, the following observations of Batchelor, J. in The matter of the Land Acquisition Act Govt of Bombay v. Usufali Salebhai, (1910) 11LR 34 Bom 618 at p 636 were quoted with approval.

"In other words Government, as it seems to me, are not debarred from acquiring and paying for the only outstanding interests merely because the Act, which primarily contemplates all interests as held outside Government, directs that the entire compensation based upon the market value of the whole land must be distributed among the claimants."

This position has recently been reiterated in Special Land Acquisition and Rehabilitation Officer, Sagar v. Seshagiri Rao, Civil Appeal No 335 of 1966 D/- 31-1-68

(AIR 1968 SC 1045) where, apart from quoting from Batchelor, J. more exhaustively, the following remarks find place:

".....The Act is, it is true, silent as to the acquisition of partial interests in the land, but it cannot be inferred therefrom that interest in land restricted because of the existence of rights of the State in the land cannot be acquired. When land is notified for acquisition for a public purpose and the State has no interest therein, market value of the land must be determined and apportioned among the persons entitled to the land. Where the interest of the owner is clogged by the right of the State, the compensation payable is only the market value of that interest, subject to the clog."

The words, namely, "interests as clog the right of Government" are also to be found in the Bombay case, above referred to. In the judgment of Chandavarkar, J. with whom Batchelor, J. sat in that appeal, we find:

"..... To acquire a land is not necessarily the same thing as to purchase the right of fee-simple to it, but means the purchase of such interests as clog the right of Government to use it for any purpose they like."

Again the same learned Judge further states:

"..... The use of the inclusive verb "includes" shows that the legislature intended to lump together in one single expression—viz., "land"—several things or particulars, such as the soil, the buildings on it, any charges on it, and other interests in it, all which have separate existence and are capable of being dealt with either in a mass or separately as the exigencies of each case arising under the Act may require."

9. It would thus appear that even though the land itself belonged to the Government, the petitioner having only lease-holder's rights therein, the leasehold-interests could be acquired as they come within the definition of the expression "land".

10. In view of the above strong authority of the Supreme Court, the two cases cited on behalf of the petitioner, namely, Shyam Chunder Mardraj v. Secretary of State (1908) ILR 35 Cal 525 and Dashrath Sahu v. Secretary of State AIR 1916 Pat 330 (1) are no longer good law.

11. On the first point, therefore, the petition fails.

12. Let us examine the second point.

13. Under Sub-section (2) of Section 4 after the notification under Sub-section (1) of Section 4 has been made, it shall be lawful for any officer, either generally or specially authorized by such Government in this behalf, and for his servants and workmen to enter upon and survey and take levels of any land in such locality and to set out the boundaries of the land proposed to be taken and to mark such levels, boundaries and line by placing marks and cutting trenches etc. It means that after notification under Sub-section (1) of Section 4 the land sought to be acquired can be surveyed and the boundaries marked on the spot. In this case though the case of the petitioner is that no marking out on the spot had been done before the notice under Section 9 was issued, the case of the respondent is that this was done at Section 4 stage. But as I have already pointed out from the affidavits, counter-affidavits and the evidence contained in annexure A, what appears to have been done is that the land was marked out in the plan kept at the Collector's office as an equilateral rhombus having each side as 100'. Even the plan is on the record, being part of annexure A, but there does not seem to have been made any measurement on the spot for marking out the boundaries there which cannot take the place of what is contemplated under sub-section (2) of Section 4.

Then after the notification under Section 6 which is a notification of declaration that the land is required for a public purpose, under Section 7 the Government or some officer authorised by the Government shall direct the Collector to take order for the acquisition of the land, and after this has been done, the Collector shall cause the land, unless it has already been marked out under Section 4, to be marked out. He shall also cause it to be measured, and if no plan has been made thereof, a plan to be made of the same. What is required at this stage, therefore, is that the land has to be marked out unless it has already been marked out under Section 4 and the marking out, as I have already pointed out, is the marking out of the land on the spot. It further provides for the measurement of the land and for the preparation of a plan, if one has not been made. The plan had no doubt been made in this case which was available for inspection at the office of the Collector after the notification under Sub-section (1) of Section 4, but there does not appear to have been any marking out of the land under Section 4 or under Section 8 nor any measurement thereof. It is only when this has been done that the Collector can cause notice to be given under Sub-section (1) of Section 9 or under Sub-section (2) can issue notice to any occupier of the land, or person believed to be interested in the land.

The notice in question has been issued before the marking of the land on the spot and its being measured on the spot. This is a very important stage before notice is issued. The showing of the land in a plan may not exactly give an idea to the person interested after inspection at the office of the Collector as to which portion of the land is actually required, for there may be different interpretations of the plan, but the marking out of land on the spot brings out the whole thing clear without any doubt as to which portion of the land is actually required to be acquired and its measurement also gives an idea as to how much of the land is required, and any one who claims that land or any interest in that land comes to know about it. This is a very important stage and under the law has to be taken prior to the notice being issued under Section 9. As this procedure has not been followed, the issue of the notice under Section 9 was not proper. The notice has, therefore, to be quashed.

14. The petition is accordingly allowed and the notice contained in annexure 3 quashed. The respondents are directed not to proceed with the land acquisition proceedings in pursuance of the said notice.

not be prejudiced in his defence. It may be noted that these words were not used either in S. 476 or S. 479, Cr. P. C., and when they are used in S. 479-A, Cr. P. C. it only means that the Legislature has introduced those words with a purpose.

3. The next contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that his statement recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. C., is not evidence recorded in a judicial proceeding. Section 164, Cr. P. C. falls under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure which relates to the powers of the Police to investigate the cases reported to them but in AIR 1959 Andh Pra 250 to which a reference has been made earlier, it was observed by the learned Judge that an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a stage of a judicial proceeding and a person who makes on oath statements which he knew to be false before a Magistrate conducting the investigation, gives false evidence and commits an offence under S. 193, I.P.C. This observation was made in the light of the decision in Tevan v. Emperor, (1906) ILR 29 Mad 89 : (3 Cri LJ 370). Any way, this is a question which does not require any further consideration because I am inclined to allow these petitions on the former point that the Magistrate had failed to give a finding as to which of the two contradictory statements is false.

4. In the result, these revision cases are allowed and the proceedings initiated against the petitioners will be dropped. BDB/D.V.C. Revision allowed.

the Registration Act., there is no actual admission of the document. At best, it can be said that the document is only tentatively brought on record. Such tentative or provisional reception of the document does not amount to an admission of the document within the meaning of Section 36. If a document received into record on the basis of an interlocutory order is to be treated as finally admitted, it will lead to untenable positions, when the final decision in the case is to the contrary. In all such cases, only tentative directions are given and there is no finality about the reception of the document. Such reception cannot, therefore, be an admission of the document. AIR 1949 Mad 300 and AIR 1962 Andh Pra 398 and AIR 1929 Mad 522 and AIR 1961 SC 1655 (1957), Foll. (Para 7)

It is thus only when the admissibility of a document is judicially determined and the document is admitted as evidence, that Section 36 of the Stamp Act comes into operation. If, on the other hand, it is admitted by inadvertence without the Court applying its mind or admitted subject to the final decision of the case, there is no admission of the document within the meaning of S. 36. (B) Municipalities — Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 78-A, 116-A, 116-B and 116-C — Madras Local Authorities (Duty on Transfer of Property) Rules (1948), Rr. 3, 4, 5 — Scope and applicability — Mention of Ss. 27 and 24, but not of S. 35 of Stamp Act in Section 116-B and R. 4 — Effect of — Penal provision like S. 35 of Stamp Act cannot be applied by inference — Civil Court has no power to levy or exact duty on transfer and penalty thereof — (Stamp Act (1899), Ss. 35, 27, 64) — (Civil P. By importing Sections 27 and 64 of the Stamp Act into the Madras District Municipalities Act, for the purpose of levy and collection of the transfer duty, Section 116-B only insists upon the disclosure of all material particulars and facts in the document under which a transfer is made so that the proper duty may be levied and collected. Section 116-B does not make other provisions of the Stamp Act applicable to the levy and collection of transfer duty under the Madras District Municipalities Act, while it makes Sections 27 and 64 alone, applicable. None of the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act confer any power on any Civil Court to levy and exact transfer duty or any penalty in respect thereof. The very fact that Sections 27 and 64 are specifically made applicable and not other provisions would lead to the inference that the legislature did not contemplate the application of Section 35 to the levy and collection of Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1182 of 1966, D/-17-7-1968 from order of Obul Reddy, J., D/-17-2-1967.

(A) Stamp Act (1899), S. 36 — "Where an instrument has been admitted in evidence" — Document provisionally admitted, subject to final orders — Such tentative reception of document does not amount to admission of document within Section 36 — (Words and Phrases).

The principle behind Section 36 is that there should be an 'admission' within the meaning of the Stamp Act. If a document is provisionally admitted, subject to final orders that may be passed in a revision case or subject to objections that may be raised under any other enactment like the transfer duty under the Madras District Municipalities Act

(Paras 13 and 14)

None of the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act or the relevant rules made thereunder, refers to Section 35 of the Stamp Act and makes it applicable to the duty on transfers of property. If the legislature had intended to make such a penal provision as Section 35 of the Stamp Act applicable to such duty it would not have omitted it from Section 116-B while referring to Sections 27 and 64 of that Act. A penal provision like Section 35 of Stamp Act cannot be made applicable by inferences. There should be a specific provision to that effect before such penal provision is applied. In the absence of any such provision, the Civil Court has no power to levy or exact the duty on transfer and penalty in respect of such duty (Para 18)

C. Padmanabha Reddy, for Petitioner;
R. Venugopal Reddy and M. Krishnamachari, for Respondent

SAMBASIVA RAO, J.:—Obul Reddi, J., has referred this revision petition to a Division Bench. It is preferred against the order of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Chittoor passed in O. S. No. 64 of 1962, holding that surcharge and penalty are payable on an unstamped conveyance under Section 116-A of the Madras District Municipalities Act.

2. The respondent as plaintiff filed O. S. No. 64 of 1962 for declaration of his title to the plaint schedule property, which is a house situated within the municipal limits of Chittoor and for possession of the same after ejecting the petitioner therefrom. He based his claim on a sale deed dated 24-8-1964 from one Ramachandra Naicker, who was the owner of the property. The defence of the petitioner, who is the defendant in the suit is that he purchased the house orally from the owner Ramachandra Naicker for a sum of Rs. 9,900 and that in pursuance of the aforesaid oral sale, he paid a sum of Rs. 5,400 towards a mortgage decree passed against the owner and also discharged several other debts of the owner to an extent of Rs. 3,700. It is also stated by him that the owner Ramachandra Naicker followed up his oral sale by executing a letter dated 6-2-1950 confirming the sale. It is this letter that was sought to be let in evidence by the defendant. On behalf of the respondent, an objection was taken that the letter is inadmissible in evidence as it is not stamped and registered. The Court upheld that objection holding that the document is a conveyance within the meaning of Section 2 (1) of the Stamp Act and, therefore, is liable for stamp duty and penalty under Art. 20 of Schedule 1-A of the Stamp Act.

The petitioner paid the stamp duty and penalty that were so levied against him. Still another objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that the document is inadmissible for the reason that a duty on transfer of property in the form of surcharge liable under Section 116-A of the Madras District Municipalities Act, had not been paid. The trial Court upheld this objection and held that both surcharge and also penalty are payable in respect of the document under S. 116-A of the Act. It is this order that the petitioner seeks to be revised in this revision petition. Pending the revision petition, the petitioner has applied for stay of the operation of the trial Court's order. On 20th of September, 1966, this Court granted stay of the payment of surcharge and penalty, but directed that the trial of the suit should go on and the document should be tentatively received in evidence, subject to final orders and also to any objections that may be raised under the Registration Act.

3. The first contention of Sri Padmanabha Reddi, the learned counsel for the petitioner, is that by virtue of the order of this Court dated 20th of September, 1966, the document has been admitted in evidence and some evidence also has been let in on that basis. Once a document is admitted, neither the trial Court at a later stage, nor the appellate Court in appeal, can call such admission in question. He relies upon Section 36 of the Indian Stamp Act in support of this contention which lays down that "where an instrument has been admitted in evidence such admission shall not except as provided in Section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped."

4. The learned counsel, therefore, argues that now that the document has been admitted, for whatever reason it might be, it is not open for the trial Court or for that matter, any other Court to object to receiving that document in evidence, on the ground that surcharge has not been paid on it. He invites our attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in Javer Chand v. Pukhraj Surana, AIR 1961 SC 1655 and that of the High Court of Andhra in N. Basavaiah Naidu v. T. Venkateswarlu, 1956 Andh WR 490 = (AIR 1957 Andh Pra 1022).

5. In 1956 Andh WR 490 = (AIR 1957 Andh Pra 1022) Viswanatha Sastri, J. was considering a case where a document had, in fact, been admitted in evidence, though in disregard of the provisions of S. 35 of the Stamp Act. The learned Judge took the view that Section 36 of the Stamp Act prohibited the rejection of a document, which had been already admitted and that objections could not be taken when there had been such admission of the document.

6. In AIR 1961 SC 1655 the Supreme Court held that—

"Once a document has been marked as an exhibit in the case and the trial has proceeded all along on the footing that the document was an exhibit in the case and has been used by the parties in examination and cross-examination of their witnesses, Section 36 of the Stamp Act comes into operation. Once a document has been admitted in evidence, as aforesaid, it is not open either to the Trial Court itself or to a Court of Appeal or Revision to go behind that order. Such an order is not one of those judicial orders which are liable to be reviewed or revised by the same Court or a Court of superior jurisdiction."

This was a case which arose under the Stamp Act directly. An examination of the facts would show that the two documents, about the admissibility of which the point in consideration arose before the Supreme Court, were exhibited and numbered under the signature of the presiding officer of the Court and in pursuance thereof, they were introduced in evidence and were also referred to and read in evidence by the counsel. It is thus clear that the documents in question were unconditionally received in evidence by the Court and it was in the light of those circumstances, the Supreme Court held that it was not open to the Court to go behind the order admitting the documents.

7. The contention of the learned counsel, based on Section 36 of the Stamp Act and the two above referred decisions cannot be upheld. It is not possible to accept that Section 36 of the Stamp Act would apply to a case, that arises under Section 116-A of the Madras District Municipalities Act. We will presently consider this aspect of the matter in detail. Even supposing it does, the principle behind Section 36 and the two decisions is that there should be an 'admission' within the meaning of the Stamp Act. If a document is provisionally admitted, subject to final orders that may be passed in a revision case or subject to objections that may be raised under any other enactment like the Registration Act, there is no actual admission of the document. At best, it can be said that the document is only tentatively brought on record. Such tentative or provisional reception of the document does not tantamount, in our view, to an admission of the document within the meaning of Section 36. Otherwise, any amount of difficulty and inconvenience may be caused to the parties and to the Courts. For instance, in this case, the document has been directed by this Court, at the time of passing an order on an interlocutory application for stay, to be received by the trial Court, pending final disposal of the revision petition. The lower Court is bound to obey the directions issued by the higher Court and, therefore, the trial Court in this case has, in obedience to the directions contained in the order of this Court dated 20th of September, 1966, received the document on record and marked it.

That interlocutory order which was passed on 20th of September, 1966, is subject to the final order that will be passed in the main revision petition itself. If ultimately, the revision is dismissed or some other order is passed which goes against the admission of the document the trial Court will once again be bound to exclude the document from admission. It is important to note that the order passed on 20th of September, 1966 is only an order that would be in force during the pendency of the revision petition and is, in any case, subject, to the final orders that are going to be passed in the main case. The interim order was evidently passed to avoid delay in the disposal of the matter. If the document received into record on the basis of such an interlocutory order is to be treated as finally admitted, it would lead to untenable positions, when the final decision in the case is to the contrary. In all such cases, only tentative directions are given and there is no finality about the reception of the document. Such reception cannot, therefore, be an admission of the document.

8. We find support to this view in the following decisions:

The decision in S. Yerri Swami v. Vannurappa, AIR 1949 Mad 300 is one of such cases. In that case, a plea was taken in the written statement that the suit promissory notes were inadmissible in evidence, because they were insufficiently stamped. A specific issue on the question of inadmissibility was also raised. The promissory notes were, however, marked without disposing of the issue. Satyanaarayana Rao, J., dealing with the contention that the defendant was precluded under Section 36 of the Stamp Act from raising the objection as to the admissibility of the promissory notes in the appellate Court, held that—

"The more serious objection to his remarks is that the learned District Munsif seems to have overlooked the plea in the written statement and the issue in the case which definitely raised the question of the insufficiency of the stamp. In the face of these objections it is difficult to see what necessity there was for the counsel for the defence to go in repeating his objections at each time. The very finding of the learned District Munsif discloses that when the promissory notes were marked at the preliminary trial, as Exs P and P 1 he did not at all consider the admissibility of the documents and must have marked them tentatively for the purpose of the disposal of that issue.

The learned appellate Judge in my opinion came to the correct conclusion in holding that in view of the circumstances set forth above there was no admission of the documents in evidence within the meaning of Section 36, Stamp Act. As in the present case there was a specific issue on the point and as the documents were marked at the preliminary trial without disposing of that issue, it cannot be said that the documents were admitted in evidence within the meaning of Section 36 so as to preclude the defendants from raising question that the documents were not properly stamped. Even if the learned District Munsif had decided issue 3 in favour of the plaintiff and came to the conclusion that they were admissible, it would have been perfectly open to the appellate Court to reverse that finding and reject the documents as it must be deemed that an admission under Section 36 must be only subject to his finding on issue 3."

9. Deciding a similar question and referring to the aforesaid decision of Satyanarayana Rao, J., Satyanarayana Raju J., made the following observations in Sumhadri v Varalakshmi, AIR 1962 Andh Pra 393 in paragraph 6:

"The question as to whether a document has been admitted or not depends upon the facts of each case. Where, as was the case in Venkanna v. Parasuram Byas, ILR 53 Mad 137 = AIR 1929 Mad 522 the clerk of the Court made the endorsement or where, as in the decision rendered by Mr Justice Satyanarayana Rao, the admission was tentative, there can be no difficulty and it is open to the Court to consider the question of the admissibility of the document at a subsequent stage."

10. The following observation of the Supreme Court in AIR 1961 SC 1655 at p. 1657, itself also lends support to our view.

"Section 35 is in the nature of a penal provision and has far-reaching effects. Parties to a litigation, where such a controversy is raised, have to be circumspect and the party challenging the admissibility of the document has to be alert to see that the document is not admitted in evidence by the Court. The Court has to judicially determine the matter as soon as the document is tendered in evidence and before it is marked as an exhibit in the case. The record in this case discloses the fact that the hundis were marked as Exs. P. 1 and P 2 and bore the endorsement 'admitted in evidence' under the signature of the Court. It is not, therefore, one of those cases where a document has been inadvertently admitted, without the Court applying its mind to the question of its admissibility. Once a document has been marked as an exhibit in the case and the trial has proceeded all along on the footing that the document was an exhibit in the case and has been used by the parties in examination and cross-examination of their witnesses, Section 36 of the Stamp Act comes into operation."

It is thus clear that only when the admissibility of a document is judicially determined and then the document is admitted as evidence, that Section 36 of the Stamp Act comes into operation. If, on the other hand, it is admitted by inadvertence without the Court applying its mind or admitted subject to the final decision of the case, there is no admission of the document within the meaning of Section 36.

11. For these reasons we cannot accept the first contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the admission of the letter dated 6-2-1950 cannot be called in question at any stage of the suit or in appeal.

12. The next and more substantial point made by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the Madras District Municipalities Act does not confer any power on the Civil Court to levy and to exact surcharge or penalty and the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to do so. He argues that, in any event, the Act does not contemplate the levy of a penalty. Sections 78-A, 116-A, 116-B and 116-C are the provisions of the Act which are material for the consideration of this question. Section 78-A provides for the levy of a duty on transfers of property in every municipality. Sections 116-A to 116-C come under the caption "duty on transfers of property." As the marginal note indicates, Section 116-A relates to the method of assessment of duty on transfers of property. It states that the transfer duty is levied in the form of a surcharge on the stamp duty, at such rates as may be prescribed by the State Government. It, however, prescribes that such duty shall not exceed 5 per cent on the amount specified in the table therein. Both parties are agreed that this section provides only the method of assessment and does not throw any light on the question on hand.

13. Section 116-B makes Sections 27 and 64 of the Indian Stamp Act applicable to the levy of the transfer duty. It would be useful to notice in this context, the scope of Section 27 and Section 64 of the Indian Stamp Act. The said Sec. 27 lays down that—

“The consideration (if any) and all other facts and circumstances affecting the chargeability of any instrument with duty, or the amount of the duty with which it is chargeable, shall be fully and truly set forth therein.”

Section 64 provides for penalty for omission to comply with the provisions of Section 27. Thus, by importing Sections 27 and 64 of the Indian Stamp Act into the Madras District Municipalities Act, for the purpose of levy and collection of the transfer duty Section 116-B only insists upon the disclosure of all material particulars and facts in the document under which a transfer is made so that the proper duty (may be—sic) levied and collected. It is also very significant to note that Section 116-B does not make other provisions of the Indian Stamp Act applicable to the levy and collection of transfer duty under the Madras District Municipalities Act, while it makes Sections 27 and 64 alone, applicable. The last provision in the context of transfer duty is Section 116-C. It empowers the State Government to—

“make rules not inconsistent with this Act for regulating the collection of the duty, the payment thereof to the municipal councils concerned and the deduction of any expenses incurred by the Government in the collection thereof.”

It requires that the rules to be made, should not be inconsistent with the Act and that such rules should regulate the collection of the duty, its payment to the Municipal Council, and the deduction of any expenses incurred by the Government in its collection. It is thus to be seen, that none of the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act confer any power on any Civil Court to levy and exact transfer duty or any penalty in respect thereof.

14. The lower Court evidently sought to apply Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act to this case and to exact the transfer duty and penalty from the petitioner on that basis. Section 35 of that Act is, as the Supreme Court observed in AIR 1961 SC 1655 at p. 1657, in the nature of a penal provision and has far-reaching effects. It is well established that a penal provision should not be read into any enactment, unless it is so specifically provided for. As we have stated, there is nothing in the Madras District Municipalities Act to show that Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act should be read into its provisions. On the other hand, the reasonable inference is that it is not made applicable, because Section 116-B specifically makes, only Sections 27 and 64 of that Act applicable to the levy of transfer duty. Nothing prevented the legislature to include Section 35 of the Stamp Act that applies to the levy of transfer duty. It is inconceivable to infer that the legislature has omitted the inclusion of Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act, by inadvertence. The very fact that Ss. 27 and 64 are specifically made applicable and not other provisions would lead to the inference that the legislature did not contemplate the application of Section 35 to the levy and collection of the transfer duty under the Madras District Municipalities Act.

15. The learned counsel for the respondent, however, invites our attention to Rule 3 of the “Madras Local Authorities (Duty on Transfer of Property) Rules, 1948.” It is as follows:

“Provisions of the Stamp Act to apply to transfer duty:— (1) All the provisions of the Stamp Act and the rules made thereunder shall, so far as may be, apply in relation to the transfer duty as they apply in relation to the duty chargeable under that Act.

(2) Where the transfer duty or any portion thereof is less than two annas, such duty or portion shall not be collected.”

Relying on this rule, it is contended that all the provisions of the Stamp Act, including Section 35, would apply to the transfer duty. But, this argument overlooks the very material words in sub-rule (1) namely, “so far as may be.” It is always a cardinal rule of construction, that, unless the contrary is firmly established, the different provisions of an enactment are consistent and reconcilable with each other and also that the rules framed thereunder are consistent and in accordance with the provisions of the main enactment and the powers conferred on the rule making authority under the Statute. Construing Rule 3 in the light of the aforesaid maxim, it would be seen that the provisions of the Stamp Act would apply to levy and collection of transfer duty, only in so far as they are permitted by the Act. As we have already stated, we do not find any warrant in the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act, for the supposition that Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act is made applicable to the transfer duty. Rule 3 is obviously referring to Sections 27 and 64 of the Indian Stamp Act and the Rules made thereunder. Moreover, it is difficult to hold that the Rule making authority intended to make all the provisions of the Stamp Act applicable to the transfer duty, though the main enactment makes only two sections applicable.

16 A reading of Rule 4 makes the position clear. It refers to the duties of registering officers and requires those officers to see, whenever any instrument is presented for registration to them, whether the particulars referred to in S 27 of the Stamp Act are set forth in the instrument. It is obviously for the purpose of ensuring that the proper transfer duty is levied and collected, that Sec. 27 of the Stamp Act is made applicable. Its application would enable the registering officer, to notice all the relevant particulars regarding levy of the duty. If such particulars are not stated, the parties to the transaction would become liable to the penalty, that would be imposed under Section 64 of the Stamp Act.

17. Sub-rule (2) of Rule 4 enjoins upon the registering officer to impound the document and forward it to the Collector, if the particulars as required under Section 27 of the Stamp Act, are not set forth in the document, so that the penalty under Section 64 of the Stamp Act could be levied. Rule 5 relates to 'maintenance and consolidation of accounts in respect of transfer duty'. It requires that an account of the transfer duty should be maintained, showing separately the duty imposed under the Stamp Act and the transfer duty. It is also pertinent to note that even R 5 does not make any reference to Section 35 of the Stamp Act.

18. It is thus seen that none of the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act or the relevant rules made thereunder, refers to Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act and makes it applicable to the duty on transfer of property. If the legislature had intended to make such a penal provision as Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act applicable to such duty, it would not have omitted it from Section 116-B, while referring to Sections 27 and 64 of that Act. As we have already said, a penal provision like (Section 35 of (sic)) the Indian Stamp Act cannot be made applicable by inferences. There should be a specific provision to that effect before such penal provision is applied. In the absence of any such provision, we cannot uphold the contention that the Civil Court has power to levy or exact the duty on transfer and penalty in respect of such duty.

19. The learned counsel places reliance upon the definition of the word 'chargeable' contained in Section 2 Cl. (6) of the Indian Stamp Act, which is in the following terms:

"Chargeable" means, as applied to an instrument executed or first executed after the commencement of this Act, chargeable under this Act, and, as applied to any other instrument, chargeable under the law in force in India when such instrument was executed or, where several persons executed the instrument at different times, first executed."

20. On the basis of this definition, it is argued that, 'chargeable' means under any law in force in India and, therefore, an instrument which is chargeable under the Madras District Municipalities Act also comes within the purview of the Indian Stamp Act. No authority is placed before us in support of this contention. Besides, it is difficult to understand this definition as bringing, within its purview, instruments which are chargeable to any duty under any law in force in India other than the laws relating to Stamp Duty. It appears to us that the words 'chargeable under the law in force in India' mean, only under any other Stamp Law in the country. The definition itself makes the distinction clear. In its first part it deals with instruments chargeable under the Indian Stamp Act itself. In its second part, it refers to 'any other instrument chargeable 'under the law in force in India' which must logically mean the instruments other than the instruments chargeable under the Indian Stamp Act, but which are chargeable under any other Stamp Act, but which are chargeable under any other stamp law in force in the country. It is common knowledge that there are other Stamp laws than the Indian Stamp Act, which are in force in the Country. For instance, there are separate Stamp Laws with varying schedules of Stamp duties now in force in several States. We have, therefore, no hesitation to reject this contention of the learned counsel for the respondent.

21. The learned counsel for the petitioner advances another argument in support of his main contention that S 35 of the Indian Stamp Act does not apply to the transfer duty leviable under the Madras District Municipalities Act. Section 35 rules that instruments not duly stamped are inadmissible in evidence. The learned counsel, therefore, contends that Section 35 obviously refers to only those documents which are required to be stamped, but not duly stamped. He states that in the matter of payment of duty on transfers, cash is usually collected and it is not paid in the form of affixing stamps on the instruments. He cites the practice that is obtaining in the City of Hyderabad, as an instance, that such transfer duty is collected by way of cash and not in the form of stamps. If such is the fact, there is considerable force in his argument. However, we do not propose to express any view on this aspect of the matter, because sufficient data is not made available to us in this regard.

22. The learned counsel on both sides state that there is no decided case on this point. We are, therefore, obliged to decide the case on the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act and the Rules made thereunder.

23. For these reasons, we uphold the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner and hold that the Court has no power to levy and exact the duty on transfers leviable under the Madras District Municipalities Act and to exclude an instrument from evidence, for non-payment of that duty and penalty.

24. We, therefore, allow the Civil Revision Petition and set aside the order of the lower Court. The lower Court will now proceed with the trial of the suit in accordance with law, after receiving the letter dated 6-2-1950 in evidence. Since there has been no guidance by way of a decided case one way or the other so far and the lower Court had to decide it entirely on the provisions of the Statute, we think that this is a fit case where we should direct that each party should bear its own costs in this revision petition.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY C. J AND

Writ Petn. No. 863 of 1967, D/-29-1-1968.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 363, 226 — "Dispute arising out of any provision of treaty or other similar instrument" — Agreement between Ruler and Government of India — Whether succession to personal or private property was made subject-matter of the guarantee or assurance — Ascertainment — Court can look into terms of the agreement — Words "personal rights" in Art. IV of agreement do not include private properties of Rulers — (Words and Phrases — "Personal right" and "Private properties" — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9).

Where the claims are made under the agreement between the Ruler and the Government of India, the jurisdiction of the Courts is barred; but where the claim falls outside the agreement, there can be no question of jurisdiction of the Courts being ousted. In petition under Article 226, the Courts have necessarily to look into the terms of the agreement to ascertain whether succession to personal or private property was also made the subject matter of the guarantee or assurance. Case law referred. (Para 19)

The use of the words "personal rights" qua the Ruler has nothing to do with rights over private properties. The words "personal rights" must be construed ejusdem generis with privileges, dignities and titles which a Ruler qua a Ruler has, namely, immunity from jurisdiction of the Courts except with the permission of the Government of India, exemption from customs duties, the privilege to carry firearms without licence, and various other rights and privileges which a ruler had prior to the inauguration of the Constitution of India and which under Art. IV of the agreement, the Government of India had recognised as being enjoyed by the successor. The words "personal rights" in Art. IV of the agreement do not include private properties of the Rulers. Case law disc. (Paras 21, 25)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 362, 366 (22), 363 — Certificate recognising person as sole successor to all private properties held by late Nawab — Government of India has no power or jurisdiction to issue such certificate — Recognition of successor — What is — Rights in respect of private property will be governed by ordinary law of land including law of inheritance — Jurisdiction of Courts not barred under Art. 363 to agitate that matter, subject to Section 87-B, Civil P. C. — (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 87-B, 9).

The Government of India has no power or jurisdiction whether under Art. 362 or otherwise to issue the certificate recognising the H. E. H. Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan Bahadur as the sole successor to all the private properties, moveable and immovable, held by the late Nizam or to authorise transfer of the private properties to the former. Case law Disc.

The scheme of the agreement between Ruler and Government of India was to separate the State property and the private property, the State property being merged in the territory of India in lieu of which a privy purse was granted to the Ruler who was to enjoy it during his lifetime and which he may use for the maintenance of himself and the members of his family for performance of marriages and maintenance of palaces etc. This amount was under no circumstances to be increased or decreased. This was paid to the Ruler in recognition of the merger of the territory over which he ruled. Recognition of succession to the gaddi is only a recognition as a Ruler for the purpose of getting the Privy purse which may be fixed and to personal rights, privileges etc. which he would have enjoyed as a Ruler. Recognition referred to in Article IV has nothing to do with private property which must devolve in accordance with the personal law governing the ruler, (Para 29)

The Government of India was not concerned with the rights in any private property particularly the rights of third party therein. Even tenancy rights of ryots, were preserved and the Nizam's rights were made subject to the tenancy law. Thus the rights in respect of private property would, therefore, be governed by the ordinary law of the land including the law of inheritance. Hence it cannot be said that a dispute arose out of the covenant or in respect of any term thereof so as to oust the jurisdiction of Court by virtue of Art. 363 (Para 32)

Recognition of the Successor has nothing to do with the custom of the family. It was an act of State and a political decision, depending much upon the paramount power in the past and now by the President under the covenant and the Constitution. After the Constitution, recognition of the successor by the Government of India would be nothing more than a recognition of the successor to the gaddi. If, recognition of succession to the gaddi is only a political act and has nothing to do with private property, then whether private property follows the succession to the gaddi is a matter dehors the covenant and does not prevent either party to set up a claim thereto. Nor is the jurisdiction of the Courts barred under Art 363 to agitate that matter, subject no doubt to Section 27-B of the Civil Procedure Code

M C Chagla for M/s Sardar Ali Khan, Syed Azeenuddin and S. Krishna, for Petitioner; K Ramachandra Rao, Standing Counsel for Central Government 1st Respondent and M/s D. Narasaraaju and Anwarallah Pasha, for 2nd Respondent.

P. JAGAN MOHAN REDDY, C. J.:—The petitioner, daughter of the late General His Exalted Highness Nawab Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan, the erstwhile Ruler of the Hyderabad State (hereinafter referred to as "the late Nizam") filed this petition challenging the certificate issued by the Government of India on 27th February 1967 under Art 366 (22) of the Constitution of India to the 2nd respondent, His Exalted Highness Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan Bahadur (hereinafter referred to as "the Nizam") the grandson of the late Nizam, as being issued without the authority of law, is arbitrary, discriminatory and violative of the fundamental rights of the petitioner under Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 (1) of the Constitution. The impugned certificate is given below—

"Certificate

This is to certify that His Exalted Highness Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan Bahadur has been recognised by the President of India under Art 366 (22) of the Constitution as the Ruler of Hyderabad in succession to his grandfather, General His Exalted Highness Nawab Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan Bahadur, with effect from the 24th February, 1967 and accordingly the said His Exalted Highness Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan Bahadur, as such Ruler, is the sole successor to all private properties, movables and immoveable, held by the said General His Exalted Highness Nawab Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan Bahadur in the capacity of the Ruler of Hyderabad and that the Government of India have no objection to such properties being transferred to the said His Exalted Highness Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan Bahadur."

2. The petitioner stated that the late Nizam as the Ruler of the Hyderabad State, who having recognised on 23-11-1949 that the Constitution of India adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall be the Constitution for the State of Hyderabad as for the other parts of India and shall be enforced as such in accordance with the tenor of its provisions, entered into an agreement with the Government of India on the 25th January 1950, determining and guaranteeing the amount of the privy purse and the personal rights, privileges and dignities, including the dynastic succession. After the conclusion of that agreement, as and from 26th January, 1950, except for the fact that he was appointed as the Raj Pramukh of Hyderabad as from that date, the late Nizam became a private citizen like any other person except for certain rights and privileges guaranteed to him under the aforesaid agreement with the Government of India. The agreement, according to the petitioner, guaranteed full ownership to his private properties.

The late Nizam was therefore, till the date of his death on the 24th February, 1967, was the owner and was in possession of the said private properties, which included several immovable and extensive moveable properties, cash, Government securities, gold and silver bullion, ornaments and utensils, jewellery, antiques and pieces of art and loans and debentures etc. In view of this, it was averred that inasmuch as the late Nizam was a Muslim of Sunni sect, succession to his private properties, namely, the said moveable and immovable properties, should be governed by the Hanafi school of Muslim law; that as the late Nizam died intestate on 24-2-1967, leaving as his heirs two widows, two sons and the petitioner, they would, according to the said Muslim law, be entitled to certain shares, namely the widows 1/16th each, the two sons 2/5ths each in the remainder of 14/16th and the petitioner to 1/5th of that remainder, and that the Nizam (the 2nd respondent) not being an heir under that law, was not entitled to succeed to any part of the said estate.

According to the petitioner, the impugned certificate purports to vary the normal rules of succession to the properties of a Muslim and deprives the petitioner and the other heirs of the late Nizam of their right to succeed to his estate. The petitioner further stated that the Government of India was not competent in law to issue the impugned certificate, interfering with, or depriving the petitioner and the other heirs of, their rights to succeed to the late Nizam under the personal law applicable to them. While this action of the Government of India, according to the petitioner, as has already been stated, is contrary to law, arbitrary, discriminatory and violative of the fundamental rights under Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 (1) of the Constitution of India, she further alleges that it also infringed the principles of natural justice, because before depriving her of her rights as an heir to succeed to the private properties of her late father, it was incumbent upon the Government of India to have given notice to her and afforded an opportunity of being heard before issuing the certificate.

3. The 1st respondent, Union of India, contended that under Art. II of the agreement entered into between the late Nizam and the Government of India on 25th January, 1950, full ownership, use and enjoyment of all the private properties, both immovable and moveable, including jewellery, securities etc., were guaranteed and in accordance with the terms of that article, an inventory of the properties which the late Nizam claimed to be his private properties was submitted by him, and after the same was considered by the 1st respondent and the Government of Hyderabad, they were declared to be his (late Nizam's) private properties. The settlement of private properties of the Ruler, it is contended, was an act of State, and as such is not justiciable. After the death of the late Nizam on 24-2-1967, pursuant to Art. IV of the said agreement, the Nizam (the 2nd respondent) was declared to be his successor under Art. 366 (22) of the Constitution.

It is further contended that consequent upon his succession to the Rulership of Hyderabad, the Nizam became the sole successor to all the personal rights and properties and assets of the late Nizam, which were recognised as the private properties of the Ruler of Hyderabad, and under the terms of the agreement aforesaid, he was entitled to full ownership, use and enjoyment of all such properties. Consequently, the certificate setting out the factual position was issued to the Nizam on the 27th of February, 1967. The full ownership, use and enjoyment of private properties by a Ruler having been guaranteed by the Government of India in pursuance of the said agreement, neither the agreement, nor any dispute or obligation arising therefrom is justiciable by virtue of Art. 363 (1) of the Constitution. The allegations in respect of the heirs or the shares of each of them, or the parties being governed by the Hanafi school of Muslim law were denied for want of knowledge, and in any event were said to be irrelevant.

4. The Nizam, the 2nd respondent, challenged the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the writ petition, as it was barred under Art. 363 (1) of the Constitution, inasmuch as the guarantee given by the Government of India under Articles II (1) and IV of the agreement related not only to the succession to the gaddi but also to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles of the late Nizam in which term "personal rights" is included the personal or private properties of the late Nizam, and hence what the petitioner is raising in her petition is a dispute in respect of that agreement, which cannot be entertained either by the Supreme Court or by any other Court. It is contended that the Central Government has plenary power to determine and in effect declare the successor's rights to the properties owned and possessed by the deceased Ruler at the time of his demise, and it is not open to any one to challenge the decision and declaration of the Government of India in that regard.

Even assuming that it is open to the petitioner or any one else to challenge the correctness and validity of the declaration by the Government of India, the petition raises a dispute as to the interpretation of the respective rights and obligations of the late Nizam and the Government of India under the articles of agreement dated the 25th January 1950 which itself is a dispute. He submits that the contention of the petitioner that the private properties of the late Nizam should devolve in accordance with the Muslim law applicable to him, ignores the provisions of the agreement and the power of the Central Government thereunder, and challenges the competence of the Government of India in respect of the interpretation placed by it on the articles of the said agreement, which itself will amount to a dispute not justiciable under Article 363 of the Constitution. Alternatively it is contended that the private properties of the late Nizam did not belong to him as a mere citizen but belonged to him as the Ruler, and the rule of succession to the properties belonging to the late Nizam is entirely different to that applicable to an ordinary Muslim citizen, because private properties of the Ruler as distinguished from State properties always devolved by custom on the successor Nizam and the properties were never divided between the heirs under the ordinary law applicable to a Muslim citizen.

The petitioner, it is contended has to establish and prove that from the time when the dynasty of Nizam began, both moveable and immoveable properties of each Nizam on his demise were actually divided between the heirs then existing on the date of the demise, according to the ordinary law of inheritance applicable to a Muslim citizen. In the absence of any such allegation or proof, it is not open to the petitioner to assume that the properties moveable and immoveable, belonging to the late Nizam at the time of his demise and constituting his private properties, would not pass to the successor Nizam but would devolve upon the heirs under the ordinary law.

The counter then referred to a letter dated 22-7-1954 written by the late Nizam to the Government of India, adverting therein to the custom of the family of the late Nizam under which private properties remaining undisposed of at the time of demise would go to the successor Nizam, and that it was for this reason that the late Nizam created several trusts by deeds providing inter alia for those who would under the ordinary Muslim law of inheritance would have been heirs to his estate. The question that there is no law or custom applicable for succession to the private properties of the late Nizam is a question of fact which this Court cannot go into. The averments relating to infringement of Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 (1) were traversed. It was again denied that the late Nizam like any other citizen is subject to the ordinary Muslim law of succession and since the Government of India was competent to determine this matter, there is no question of affording an opportunity to the petitioner or infringement of natural justice.

5. In the reply of the petitioner the averments in the counter were traversed and it was contended that Art. IV of the agreement does not deal with private properties and the attempt to make it applicable to private properties is only for the purpose of submission that a dispute arises out of the agreement, as such, the jurisdiction of this Court is barred under Art. 363 of the Constitution.

6. Shri Chapla, learned advocate appearing for the petitioner, at the very outset stated that he is not challenging the agreement of 25-1-1950, nor is he raising a dispute thereunder, inasmuch as his whole case is that private properties of the late Nizam were not covered by the term "personal rights privileges and dignities" specified in Art IV of the agreement which dealt with the recognition by the President of India of the successor to the gaddi of the deceased Ruler. It is his case that the President was fully competent to recognise a successor to the Ruler under Cl (22) of Art 366, and the recognition of the Nizam the second respondent is not being challenged by him. So there can be no question of any dispute under the agreement.

If, as he contends personal rights which are referred to in Art IV of the covenant do not and were never intended to cover private properties as distinguished from State properties a term which both the parties to the agreement were aware when they dealt with it in Art II and which they could very well have used in Art IV if succession to private properties were also intended to be declared by the President of India, then the question of applicability of custom as affecting devolution of property of the late Nizam who was a Muslim could not arise. In any case, it is contended, custom, unlike under the Hindu law, as abrogating, modifying or in any manner affecting the Quranic injunctions governing the personal rights of a Muslim under the Muslim law, cannot be allowed to be pleaded, proved or established, after the

7. Mr. Narasaraaju, on the other hand submits that if on the 26th January 1950 there existed a custom relating to devolution of private property, under which the property devolves along with the gaddi, that custom would be rendered ineffective and inoperative only by a specific legislation to the contrary affecting the family of the Ruler. A mere general extension of the Shariat Act to Muslims, it is argued, does not by itself have the effect of making that custom inapplicable to the family of the late Nizam relating to the succession of the private property of the Ruler qua Ruler.

8. The main argument of Sri Narasaraaju as also of Sri Ramachandra Rao, however, was based on the applicability of Art. 363 of the Constitution in ousting the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain this Writ Petition. Mr. Narasaraaju contended, as was averred in the counter of the Nizam, that private properties are included in the term "personal rights" under Art. IV of the agreement and, at any rate, whether it is so or not, is a question relating to the interpretation of the covenant, and therefore, Art. 363 bars the jurisdiction of the Court. In other words, he contends that this Court has no jurisdiction even to interpret the meaning of the expression "personal rights." It is further contended that the Nizam cannot be described as a mere citizen. The learned advocate says that the late Nizam was a privileged citizen, and one of the privileges he had was to have the right of succession both in respect of the gaddi as well as his private properties governed by the agreement which is political in nature, entered into between the two independent States. There is, therefore, no question of any application of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) or 31 (1) of the Constitution.

9. Mr. Ramachandra Rao for the Central Government, 1st respondent, similarly elaborated the point taken up by Shri Narasaraaju, by pointing out that both the petitioner as well as the 2nd respondent having relied upon and referred to the agreement for their respective contentions, it must be deemed that there is a dispute arising out of the agreement. Merely by framing the relief for quashing the certificate, it does not mean that it is not a dispute arising out of the agreement. The whole writ, according to him, is directed against the grant of the certificate, which was issued under the terms of the agreement, and the denial of the right to grant the certificate would be to raise a dispute under the agreement, and consequently the writ petition is barred under Art. 363.

10. We may, keeping in mind the several contentions, formulate the real controversy in the writ petition under the following main heads, namely,

1. Whether the parties under Art. IV intended to and the covenant in fact did, provide for succession to the private property of the Ruler;
2. Has the Government of India executive power to issue the impugned certificate, declaring the Nizam, the 2nd respondent, as the successor to the private property of the late Nizam, and whether this Court cannot call in question such a certificate having regard to the provisions of Art. 363;
3. Does the custom of the family of the late Nizam, even assuming that it is established, apply in governing the succession to his private properties.

11. A great deal has been stated before us as to the nature of the agreement of merger, that it is a political agreement entered into between two independent States, namely, the Ruler on the one side and the Central Government on the other, that those covenants acquire the status of treaties and engagements entered into between two international persons, and that the framers of the Constitution, in order to give effect to the principles of international law, viz., that the municipal Courts can have no jurisdiction to entertain disputes relating to such covenants, have incorporated certain provisions in the Constitution relating to those covenants. While we do not think that ultimately anything will turn on the political aspect of the matter or the justifiability or otherwise of these covenants, because Mr. Chagla at the very outset, has quite frankly and, in our view, quite properly, did not even attempt to contest the proposition that if any dispute does arise out of the covenant of merger or of privy purse, entered into between the Ruler and the Government of India, the jurisdiction of the Courts would be barred, nonetheless, it might assist to some extent if we are to briefly sketch the historical background in which these agreements came to be executed.

12. On the eve of the attainment of independence by India, as is well known, there were over 500 States comprising nearly 2/5ths of the area of the country. These States, or as they were called Native States, had treaties, sanads and engagements with the then ruling power in India, namely, the British Crown, which apart from the obligations arising out of these treaties, engagements and sanads, asserted what is known as paramountcy or suzerainty, over the Rulers. By virtue of Section 7 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947 the relationship between the British Crown and the States came to an end, and the rights surrendered by the Native States to the paramount power reverted to the Native States, with the result, that the political arrangement between the States on the one side and the British Crown on the other, were brought to an end. vide Sec. 7 (1) (b) In State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddah, AIR 1964 SC 1043 a Bench of 7 Judges of the Supreme Court held that with the declaration of independence on the 15th August, 1947, the former Indian States attained independence and sovereignty.

"The native Indian rulers were undoubtedly sovereign in the territories under their jurisdiction and they parted with their sovereignty in States, firstly on accession, then on integration and finally by what has been felicitously termed in the White Paper on Indian States as 'unionization,' i.e., by State territory becoming part and parcel of the territory of the Union of India which meant the complete extinction of their separate existence and individual sovereignty and of their States as separate Political units" Subba Rao, J (as he then was) said at p 1056: "Under Section 7 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, the suzerainty of the British Crown over the Indian States lapsed, with the result that Sant State became a full sovereign State." Similarly, Hidayatullah, J. at page 1072 said: "Santampur was an Indian State and the Ruler attained independence and sovereignty on August 15, 1947 on the ceasing of the paramountcy of the British Crown". Shah, J. said at p. 1082, pursuant to the agreement dated March 19, 1948 as from June, 1, 1948, the State of Sant merged with the Dominion of India. The sovereignty of the Ruler was thereby extinguished and the subjects of the Sant State became citizens of the Dominion of India". Mudholkar J. likewise observed at page 1091: "This State (Sant State) along with other ruling States in India, became an independent sovereign State in the year 1947, when the Dominions of India and Pakistan were constituted".

13. The nature of the independent status after the lapse of paramountcy on 15-8-1947 appears to have been dealt with and limited subsequently in another Judgment of a Bench of 3 Judges of the Supreme Court consisting of Subba Rao, J. (as he then was), Shah and Sikri, JJ. in Commissioner of Income-tax Andh Pra. v. Mir Osman Ali, AIR 1966 SC 1260. It may be observed that no reference has been made to the Judgment of the seven Judges, viz., AIR 1964 SC 1043 even though two of the learned Judges, Subba Rao, J. and Shah, J. were parties to it. In AIR 1966 SC 1260 it was contended by the learned advocate for the late Nizam that prior to January 26, 1950 the Nizam was a sovereign independent

Ruler and under international law as a foreign sovereign, he was exempt from taxation. This contention was negated on the ground that after 1858 when the British Crown took over from the East India Company the administration of the entire territory of India, the Indian States remained under the personal rule of their Chiefs under the Suzerainty of the Crown, and though after the Indian Independence Act, the paramountcy of the Crown lapsed in regard to Hyderabad and other States, the pre-existing agreements with those States continued in respect of specified matters, and the lapse of suzerainty or the breaking of ties with the British Crown did not ipso facto raise their status to that of international personality.

At page 1265, it was observed "It created a void and the position of the States was in a fluid state." Particularly in respect of the Nizam it was further observed. "..... After protracted negotiations, the Nizam issued a proclamation on November 23, 1949, accepting the Constitution of India, shortly to be adopted, subject to ratification by the Constituent Assembly of the Hyderabad State. The said constituent assembly ratified it and thereafter the Hyderabad State was included in Part B of the First Schedule to the Constitution." After referring to the White Paper on Indian States, at page 369 the learned Judge went on to say: "It will be seen from the said history that Hyderabad was under the suzerainty of the British Crown till the Indian Independence Act of 1947 was passed and that thereafter, after negotiations with the Indian Dominion, it finally acceded to it. It was never recognised as an international personality by the family of nations. It was all through a vassal of the British Crown..... It is, therefore, clear that Hyderabad State did not acquire international personality under the international law and so its ruler could not rely upon international law for claiming immunity from taxation of his personal properties."

14. The above history would show that whether the Native States were treated as independent sovereign States, recognised by international law, or not, the Government of India entered into agreement with the Rulers as independent sovereigns in lieu of their having surrendered the territories over which they ruled, providing for certain matters like privy purses, determination of what constituted his private property and which is the property belonging to the State, and the guarantee of their personal rights, privileges and dignities and succession to the gaddi. These merger agreements entered into by the Rulers were more or less similar, and in view of the solemn obligations entered into by the Government of India, the Constituent Assembly incorporated certain provisions in the Constitution to ensure that guarantees given by it in respect of privy purses and other obligations were fully implemented. The 5 articles of the Constitution which deal with these agreements are the proviso to Art. 131, Arts. 291, 362, and 363 and Cl. (22) read with Cl. (16) of Art. 366.

15. Before examining these provisions, it is necessary to note the terms of the agreement entered into between the late Nizam and the Government of India on the 25th of January, 1950. It reads:

Whereas it has been decided that the Constitution of India adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall be the Constitution for the State of Hyderabad as for the other parts of India and shall be enforced as such in accordance with the tenor of its provisions;

And whereas it is expedient that the rights, privileges and dignities, including the dynastic succession and the privy purse, of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad shall be determined by agreement between him and the Government of India;

It is hereby agreed as follows:

Article I

(1) His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad shall, with effect from the first day of April, 1950 be entitled to receive annually for his privy purse the sum of Rs. 50,00,000 (Rupees fifty lakhs) free of all taxes;

Provided that the sum specified above shall be payable only to present Nizam of Hyderabad for his life-time, and not to his successors, for whom provision will be made subsequently by the Government of India.

(2) The said amount is intended to cover all the expenses of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad and his family including expenses on account of his personal staff, maintenance of his residences, marriages and other ceremonies etc., and will neither be increased nor reduced for any reason whatsoever.

(4) The payment of the said amount as herein provided is guaranteed by the Government of India.

Article II

(1) His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad shall be entitled to the full ownership, use and enjoyment of all the jewels, jewellery, ornaments, shares, securities and other private properties, moveable as well as immoveable (as distinct from State properties) belonging to him on the date of this Agreement.

(2) His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad has furnished to the Government of India lists of all the moveable and immoveable properties held by him as such private properties.

(3) If any question arises as to whether any item of property is the private property of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad or State property, it shall be referred to such independent person as the Government may nominate and the decision of that person shall be final and binding on all concerned.

Article III

His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad and the members of his family shall be entitled to all the personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them whether within or outside the territories of the State immediately before the fifteenth day of August, 1947.

Article IV

The Government of India guarantees the succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State and to the personal rights, privileges and dignities and titles of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad.

In confirmation whereof

A reading of the above terms would show that in consideration of the late Nizam agreeing to make the Constitution of India applicable to the State of Hyderabad as for the other parts of India in accordance with the tenor thereof, the Government of India guaranteed to the late Nizam (a) payment of an amount of privy purse fixed, free of all taxes, which privy purse shall not be increased or decreased on any account whatsoever; (b) full ownership, use and enjoyment of private property, moveable and immoveable, jewellery, securities etc. and (c) succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the state and to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles of the late Nizam. Apart from this, it declared that the late Nizam and the members of his family shall be entitled to all the personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them, whether within or outside the territories of the State immediately before 15-8-1947.

16. It may be stated that prior to the integration in most of the States, there was no distinction between expenditure on the administration and the Ruler's privy purse. Even where the Ruler's privy purse had been fixed no effective steps had been taken to ensure that the expenditure expected to cover by the privy purse was not directly or indirectly charged on the revenues of the State, which amounts, therefore, were spent on the Rulers and on the members of the ruling families. Accordingly at the time of negotiations between the Rulers and the Government of India, the revenues of each State was taken as a criterion for fixing the privy purse. Only in the case of some of the viable States like Hyderabad, Mysore etc. a sum above Rs. 10, 00,000 was fixed. Apart from this, the Nizam of Hyderabad had a jagir, known as Sarf-e-khas, whose revenues furnished the privy purse. This Sarf-e-khas was surrendered by him to the State in lieu of which the privy purse of Rs. 50,00,000 was fixed. In order to keep distinct the property which the late Nizam had given up and merged in the Hyderabad State, and his private properties including jewels, jewellery, ornaments, securities etc., Art II of the agreement declared the full ownership of such properties belonging to him, lists of which properties were furnished to the Government of India.

17. We may now consider how far the guarantees and assurances given in this and other similar agreements entered into with the Rulers have been incorporated in the Constitution. Some of these provisions are contained in Arts 291, 362 and Cls. (15) and (22) of Art. 366, which are as under—

"Art 291: Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as privy purse—

(a) such sums shall be charged on, and paid out of, the Consolidated Fund of India, and

(b) the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income."

Art 362 In the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in Art 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State."

Art 366 In this Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say—

(15) 'Indian State' means any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State;

(22) 'Ruler' in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person by whom any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in Cl. (1) of Art 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State, and includes any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler."

These articles, as has already been stated, gave effect to the guarantees contained in the agreement entered into between the Government of India and the Ruler, of the obligations existing prior to the date of the Constitution, firstly in respect of the privy purse and secondly, by requiring that in the exercise of the power of the Parliament or the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard must be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any covenant, agreement etc, which is mentioned in Art 291, with respect to personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Rulers of the Indian States. Arts. 291, 361 and Cl. (22) of Art. 366 deal specifically with what is contained in Arts I and IV of the covenant. In so far as Art. II is concerned, it merely declares that the Ruler will be entitled to full ownership, use and enjoyment of private properties which have been settled in accordance with the list furnished by him and that any dispute in respect of it, which can only be whether any particular item of property is a State property or the Ruler's private property, will be decided by arbitration.

No constitutional guarantee is necessary, nor was any guarantee necessary in respect of the declaration that the Ruler and his family would be entitled to the personal rights, privileges and dignities and titles enjoyed by them, whether within or outside the territories of the State, immediately before 15-8-1947. These however, would be governed by the covenant in so far as private property is concerned, once it is declared to be private property of the Ruler, it will only be dealt with and is subject to the law of the land. In any case, any dispute in respect of these matters dealt with by the agreement is not justiciable. Under the proviso to Art 131, the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall not extend to a dispute arising out of any treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which having been entered into or executed before the commencement of the Constitution, continues in operation after such commencement, or which provides that the said jurisdiction shall not extend to such a dispute. Article 363 bars the jurisdiction of Courts in respect of these agreements. Since great reliance has been placed on this Article by the respondents, we give below the terms of that Article.

Art. 363 (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Art. 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other Court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement, or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

(2) In this article.

(a) 'Indian State' means any territory recognised before the commencement of this Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State; and

(b) 'Ruler includes the Prince, Chief or other person recognised before such commencement by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as the Ruler of any Indian State.'

The first limb of this article bars interference by Courts in disputes arising out of a treaty, agreement, covenant etc, entered into before the commencement of the Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party, and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement. The second limb bars the jurisdiction of Courts in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of the Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, etc.

18. Whether the jurisdiction of Courts is barred even apart from these provisions, by virtue of the political nature of the agreements themselves, is a matter with which we need not concern ourselves in the present case, inasmuch as the provisions of the Constitution provide fully and amply in respect of matters arising out of treaties, engagements, sanads, agreements, etc., entered into by the Rulers of the erstwhile States with the Government of India prior to the coming into force of the Constitution and which have or have continued in operation after such commencement.

19. The question therefore, is whether inheritance to the private property of a Ruler is governed by the agreement or covenant entered into between the Ruler and the Government of the Dominion of India. This would require a consideration of the terms of the agreement or covenant. But the contention of Sri Narasaraaju that this Court has no jurisdiction to interpret what is the meaning of the term "personal rights" as that would itself amount to a dispute arising out of the agreement appears to be far-fetched, because after all, in order to know whether any dispute arises out of the agreement or not, the Court has first to ascertain prima facie whether the subject-matter of the dispute falls within the scope and ambit of the agreement. If this is not so, it will be difficult to say whether in fact any dispute arises out of such an agreement.

In every one of the cases cited by Sri Narasaraaju, viz. State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, AIR 1952 SC 252; Bhagwat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1964 SC 444; Umeg Singh v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 540 and Usmanali Khan v. Sagar Mal, AIR 1965 SC 1798 and the other cases to which we will refer presently, the Supreme Court looked into the covenant and examined its terms. Apart from these cases, in AIR 1966 SC 1260 the agreement, particularly Art. IV itself was construed. In all the above cases, it may be observed, where the jurisdiction of the Courts is sought to be barred, the claims were made under the agreement; but where the claim falls outside the agreement, there can be no question of jurisdiction of the Courts being ousted. In this view, we have necessarily to look into the terms of the agreement to ascertain whether succession to personal or private property was also made the subject-matter of the guarantee or assurance.

20. It is recognised by both the parties that this is not a dispute arising out of Art. II, inasmuch as there is no question involved in this petition as to which of the properties of the late Nizam are his private properties. The parties proceed on the footing that the late Nizam died possessed of and was the full owner of his private properties and had dealt with them as such during his life time. Of course if there was any dispute as to which item of the property is the private property of the Ruler, machinery has been provided in Art. II of the agreement for determining that dispute. But the question is whether the agreement, and more particularly Art. IV purports to deal with succession to the private property of the late Nizam.

As we have already seen, neither Articles I, II or III deal with this aspect of the matter. Art. III merely declares that the late Nizam and the members of his family would be entitled to certain personal privileges, dignities and titles. In so far as Art. IV is concerned, which deals with succession, there is no specific reference to succession to private properties as such. The only reference is of a recognition of succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State and to the personal rights, privileges and dignities and titles of the late Nizam. The successor, therefore, would be entitled not only to succeed to the gaddi but also to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the late Nizam. The matter for consideration is whether "personal rights" referred to in this article are intended to include, and in fact included, rights in private property and whether the Government of India has the power to recognise a successor thereto

21. "Personal rights" referred to in Article IV undoubtedly are personal rights qua the Ruler. But rights to private property have nothing to do with succession to the gaddi. One person may as heir succeed to the private property and another person may be recognised as an heir to the gaddi. With the former the Government of India has no concern, while it has the power to recognise the latter. It cannot be denied that by the very nature of the rights which the late Nizam had, to the full ownership, use, enjoyment and possession of his private property, to deal with it as he liked, to gift it, to create a trust or charity, to bequeath it by will to the extent he could under his personal law, are such that the Government of India could not have been invited to exercise any power or control over them. Nor could the members of his family have any right to prevent him from exercising his full ownership thereon. In these circumstances, the parties could not in our view have intended to deal with succession to property with which the Government of India was not concerned. Nor could the Nizam voluntarily or willingly confer a right on the Government of India over such property, even if it be after his lifetime.

A conferment of a right on the Government of India to recognise any person it chooses as the successor to the gaddi also as a successor to his private property might tantamount to a derogation of the recognition and declaration of the right of the late Nizam to the full ownership, enjoyment and possession of that property mentioned in Art. II or to bequeath the same by will. Apart from the fact that such a power was never intended to be conferred on the Government of India, the use of the words "personal rights" qua the Ruler as we have said earlier, has nothing to do with rights over private properties. In our view "personal rights" must be construed ejusdem generis with privileges, dignities and titles which a Ruler qua Ruler has, namely, immunity from jurisdiction of the Courts except with the permission of the Govt. of India, exemption from customs duties, the privilege to carry fire-arms without licence, and various other rights and privileges which a Ruler had prior to the inauguration of the Constitution of India and which under Art. IV of the agreement, the Government of India has recognised as being enjoyed by the successor

22. The white paper on Indian States in Paragraph 240 at pages 125, 126 sets out the nature of the guarantees regarding these rights and privileges. It says, "Guarantees have been given to the Rulers under the various agreements and Covenants for the continuance of their rights, dignities and privileges. The rights enjoyed by the rulers vary from State to State and are exercisable both with and without the States. They cover a variety of matters ranging from the use of red plates on cars to immunity from Civil and Criminal jurisdiction and exemption from customs duties etc. Even in the past it was neither considered desirable nor practicable to draw up an exhaustive list of all these rights. During the negotiations following the introduction of the scheme embodied in the Government of India Act, 1935, the Department had taken the position that no more could be done in respect of the rights and privileges enjoyed by the Rulers than a general assurance of the intention of the Government of India to continue them. Obviously, it would have been a source of perpetual regret if all these matters had been treated as justiciable. Article 363 has, therefore, been embodied in the Constitution which excludes specifically the Agreements of Merger and the Covenants from the jurisdiction of Courts except in cases which may be referred to the Supreme Court by the President. At the same time, the Government of India considered it necessary that constitutional recognition should be given to the guarantees and assurances which the Government of India have given in respect of the rights and privileges of Rulers. This is contained in Art. 362, which provides that in the exercise of their legislative and executive authority, the legislative and executive organs of the Union and States will have due regard to the guarantees given to the Rulers with respect to their personal rights, privileges and dignities."

23. What is set out in this passage clearly accords with our view and is in consonance with the terms and tenor of Art. IV of the agreement.

24. It may be observed in this connection that under Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prior to the Constitution, immunity from civil jurisdiction and arrest of the Rulers of the Native States was the same as that granted to foreign Rulers, Ambassadors, Envoys, High Commissioners etc. But after the Constitution, inasmuch as the Rulers of the Native States became ordinary citizens, immunity was given to them in terms of Section 87-B of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of the Covenants and the Constitutional provisions guaranteeing the personal rights.

25. There is authority for the proposition that "personal rights" in Art. IV of the agreement do not include private properties of the Rulers. The Supreme Court had an occasion to consider the question whether an interference with the rights of possession and enjoyment of the private property of a Ruler was not an interference with guarantee given in Article II of the Merger Agreement. The consistent view of the Supreme Court was that it did not interfere with the rights in the said property, and that any law which dealt with the private properties of a Ruler dealt with them only in recognition of that right. In AIR 1952 SC 252, S. R. Das, J. observed at p. 306:

"The guarantee or assurance to which due regard is to be had is limited to personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler qua a Ruler it does not extend to personal property which is different from personal rights. Further, this Article does not import any legal obligation but is an assurance only. All that the covenant does is to recognise the title of the Ruler as owner of certain properties. To say that the Ruler is the owner of certain properties is not to say that those properties shall in no circumstances be acquired by the State. The fact that his personal properties are sought to be acquired on payment of compensation clearly recognises his title just as the titles of other proprietors are recognised. Finally, the jurisdiction of the Court to decide any dispute arising out of the covenant is barred by Art. 363."

26. In Sudhansusekhar v. State of Orissa, AIR 1961 SC 196 a similar view was expressed. In that case, by Art. IV of the Merger Agreement executed by the Ruler of Sonapur on 15-12-1947, the Ruler after the merger was entitled to all personal privileges enjoyed by him, whether within or outside the territories of the State, immediately before the 15th day of August 1947. By Art. V the Dominion Government guaranteed the succession according to law and custom, to the gaddi of the State and to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles of the Ruler. By Art. III, he remained entitled to full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties (but not of the State properties) belonging to him on the date of the merger. On December 30, 1949, the Governor of Orissa promulgated Ordinance No. 4 of 1949 providing inter alia that the Orissa Agricultural Income-tax Act 1947, be applied to the merged Orissa States.

The Agricultural Income-tax Officer assessed the ex-Ruler to pay tax for the years 1950-51 to 1953 to 54. He disputed his liability to pay the tax by virtue of the merger agreement. Various contentions were raised. It will be seen that the several terms of the Merger Agreement were similar to those contained in

Arts. II, III and IV of the Merger Agreement in this case. Shah J. who delivered the Judgment of the Bench consisting of S. K. Das, Hidayathullah, Das Gupta and Rajagopala Ayyangar, JJ., relying upon the observations of S. R. Das, J. in Visweshwar Rao v. State of M. P. (Same as State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh), AIR 1952 SC 252 already cited by us, said at page 198:

"In our view, there is no force in the contentions raised by the appellant. The privileges guaranteed by Arts. 4 and 5 are personal privileges of the Appellant as an ex-Ruler and those privileges do not extend to his personal properties." This case was again referred to and relied upon by Subba Rao, J. in AIR 1966 SC 1260.

27. In Vir Rajindra Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1963 Punj 461 D. K. Mahajan, J., sitting singly had to consider an attack against an order of the President recognising His Highness Maharaj Rana Shri Hemant Singh as the Ruler of Dholpur State. After setting out the history of the dispute, he referred to the contention advanced by Mr. Daphtary that the power of recognition enjoyed by the President under Art. 366 (22) of the Constitution is purely an executive and political power and that it has nothing to do with the right in or to property which the petitioner may have as the successor to the deceased Ruler. It was stated that Mr. Daphtary referred to the Covenant and pointed out that the property was divided into two categories in the Covenant—(1) the private property of the Ruler, of which, under the Covenant, he has been made the full owner, and (2) the public property of the Ruler. In so far as the succession to the Ruler's private property is concerned, it is stated that it was not governed by any provisions in the Constitution of India, and that recognition of a Ruler under Art. 366 (22) is merely for the purposes of the Constitution.

It was further stated that there is no provision in the Constitution as to how the President is to exercise the power of recognition under Art. 366 (22), that it is the recognition that makes the Ruler and that the words "for the time being" in Art. 366 (2) clearly show that the recognition may be withdrawn or varied. At page 464, D. K. Mahajan, J., said. "Recognition, the counsel contends, in this context is really the power of selection. Therefore, the act of the President recognising a Ruler does not affect any property to which the petitioner has a right to succeed as the next heir of the Ruler." In the end of page 468 the learned Judge concluded:

"The sum total of the aforesaid discussion is that the private property of a Ruler after his death is not governed by any of the provisions in the Constitution. This has been fairly and frankly conceded by Mr Daphtary. The recognition of his successor as Ruler only confers on him the privileges guaranteed by the Covenant and will not necessarily make him the heir to the deceased Ruler's private property."

28. Mr Narasaraaju tried to distinguish the observations of Das J and Mahajan, J, in AIR 1952 SC 252 and the observations in the other cases referred to above on the ground that the decisions were really based on the non-justiciability of the claim. No doubt in AIR 1952 SC 252 Mahajan J and Das J, did refer in the end to the claim being also barred by Art. 363. It may be observed that in that case several grounds were raised which were being dealt with. It is apparent from the observations of Mahajan, J, at page 302 that non-justiciability of the issue under Art. 363 was one of the grounds for dismissing the petition. He stated "the guarantee contained in the article (Art. 362) is of a limited extent only. It assures that the Rulers' properties declared as their private properties will not be claimed as State Properties. The guarantee has no greater scope than this. That guarantee has been fully respected by the impugned statute, as it treats those properties as their private properties and seeks to acquire them on that assumption. Moreover, it seems to me that in view of the comprehensive language of Article 363 this issue is not justiciable." Das, J, at page 306, prefaced his observations "there occur to me several answers to this contention" and then proceeded to make the observation which have been referred to above after which he stated "Finally the jurisdiction of the Court to decide any dispute arising out of the covenant is barred by Article 363." Where several grounds have been given, it does not mean that the ground of non-justiciability alone should be considered as the ratio of the decision.

29. Sri Narasaraaju again contends that the agreement being a political agreement and considered in international law as an act of State, the general principles applicable to interpretation of Statutes ought not to be applied but recourse should be had to rules of international law in interpreting treaties. In support of this contention, he refers to certain passages in Oppenheim's International Law, (8th Edn) pages 953 and 957 namely "the whole of the treaty must be taken into consideration, if the meaning of any one of its provisions is doubtful, and not only the wording of the treaty but also its purpose, the motive which led to its conclusion, and the conditions prevailing at the time." The conduct of the parties subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty may in some cases be resorted to as a means of interpretation, especially with regard to the obligations of the party as acknowledged by its conduct." Accordingly, Mr. Narsaraju refers us to the correspondence that ensued between the late Nizam and the late Prime Minister and Mr Kailash Nath Katju, the then Home Minister, from which it is stated that it can be clearly ascertained as to how the parties understood the terms. The contention is that when the Govt of India guaranteed the succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State, it guaranteed the succession not only to the gaddi but to the private property as well which according to the custom of the family of the late Nizam was part of the gaddi. There is in our view no force in this contention. No doubt as pointed out by us earlier, in many instances prior to the merger there was little or no distinction between State property and private property and in some cases even though the privy purses were fixed the Rulers were not making any great distinction between the two but were enjoying the State property also. It was for this reason that the State property and the private property was sought to be distinguished and Art. II guaranteed full rights to the ownership possession and enjoyment of the private property which the Government of India recognised as such private property of the Ruler.

This was not a special agreement entered into with the late Nizam alone but an agreement entered into with almost all the Rulers and contained similar and identical terms. The scheme of it as we have said was to separate the State property and the private State property being merged in the territory of India in lieu of which a privy purse was granted to the Ruler who was to enjoy during his life time and which he may use for the maintenance of himself and the members of his family for performance of marriages and maintenance of Palaces etc. This amount was under no circumstances to be increased or decreased. This was paid to the Ruler in recognition of the merger of the territory over which he ruled. Recognition of succession to the gaddi is only a recognition as a Ruler for the purpose of getting the privy purse which may be fixed and to the personal rights privileges etc which he would have enjoyed as a Ruler. Where, therefore the Ruler by the covenant definitely agree to keep these two different properties, namely privy purse and the private property apart from one another, recognition referred to in Art. IV has nothing to do with private property which must devolve in accordance with the personal law governing the Ruler.

30. A letter of the late Nizam to the late Prime Minister dated 14-6-1954 throws a good deal of light on what was in fact done. In paragraph 2 of the letter the late Nizam said: "When the Sarf-e-Khas Administration was handed over to Diwani early in February 1949, it was suggested by the Government of India that with a view to safeguard the interest of the members of my family, I should make suitable provision for them, during my lifetime. With that object in view I have created separate Trusts for all the members of my family which will enable "them to maintain themselves in accordance with and befitting the station of life in which Providence has placed them" and I am satisfied that I have thus fulfilled my duty "towards them as the head of the family." It was with respect to the success of the entire scheme and the way in which these trusts will work that the late Nizam was concerned with in that letter, and he thought that that would depend upon the care and interest which his successor as the head of the family and the president of almost all the Trusts would show for their comfort and happiness. Then he proceeded to inform the late prime Minister how he was disappointed in his two sons and how his grandson, the present Nizam, was the person who was most fitted to succeed him. There is nothing in this letter which will assist the 2nd respondent.

31. On 22-7-1954 along with a letter to Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, Minister for States, the late Nizam handed over a Note, in which he stated: "In the Asaf Jani family succession was not according to Mahomedan Law, but according to tradition and custom. There were no hard and fast rules, and much depended on the wish of the Ruler and the circumstances prevailing at the time of succession. The successor was not only proclaimed the Ruler, but he also inherited the Sarf-e-Khas and all other properties and assets of the former Ruler, and, was the Head of the Family, he was responsible for the maintenance of all other members of the family." It was in this note that the late Nizam made out a case for dis-inheriting both his sons. The letter of Kailash Nath Katju, though agreeing with the late Nizam's view in respect of the unsuitability of his sons to succeed to him, nonetheless did not commit the Government of India but assured the late Nizam that when occasion does arise, the Government of India will give the utmost weight to the wishes mentioned by him.

In this letter nothing is stated about private property. Nor was any mention made with regard to private property when the Secretary to Government in the Ministry of Home Affairs. Mr. Viswanathan communicated the decision of the Government of India that Prince Mukararam Jah is recognised as an heir to succeed the late Nizam as the ruler of Hyderabad. This was communicated to late Nizam in strict confidence. In letter dated April 14, 1964, it was stated that the Government of India decided to publish the notification recognising the present Nizam as the Ruler of Hyderabad, that day itself. Except, as we have said in the Note, where the late Nizam had stated that the successor in his family would also inherit the Sarf-e-Khas property and all other properties and assets of the former Ruler, in none of the letters there was mention about the private properties, nor did the Government of India refer to this aspect of the matter.

32. On the other hand the letter of the Home Secretary dated 30-11-1953 makes the intention of what sought to be included in the agreement clear. When the private properties of the late Nizam were acknowledged as per the lists furnished by him, the Home Secretary stated:

"1. x x x x x x

2. The effect of the declaration of these properties as the private property of Your Exalted Highness is that the Hyderabad State will have no claim on them. The declaration will not, however, prejudice third party rights in such properties.

3. Your Exalted Highness' rights in regard to the pasture lands measuring approximately 23,000 acres will be subject to the operation of and governed by the Hyderabad State tenancy and revenue laws."

The above extract would indicate beyond doubt that the Govt. of India was not concerned with the rights in any private property particularly the rights of third party therein. It may be noticed further that even tenancy rights of royts, were preserved and the Nizam's rights were made subject to the tenancy law. If this was the stand taken at the very outset immediately after the inauguration of the Constitution, it cannot be said that the Government of India were intending to affect the private property or deal with it in any manner much less recognising the succession after the death of the late Nizam. Thus the rights in respect of private property would, therefore, be governed by the ordinary law of the land including the law of inheritance. We do not think that the reference to private properties in the Note of the late Nizam can in any way introduce into the covenant something which was not in the contemplation of the parties and which was not dealt with in the agreement. Nor by the terms and tenor thereof could it be included as part of the covenant, so that it can be said that a dispute arose out of the covenant or in respect of any term thereof, as to oust the jurisdiction of this Court by virtue of Art. 363.

33. Recognition of the successor has nothing to do with the custom of the family. It was an act of State and a political decision, depending much upon the paramount power in the past and now by the President under the covenant and the Constitution. There is no question of any strict adherence to the Muslim law that the successor should only be the heir to the deceased Ruler. In the past, recognition of the successor meant that he became the Ruler of the State and by virtue of that position, his right to the properties of the erstwhile Ruler whom he succeeded was undoubted and could not be challenged by anyone. He or the members of his family could not be sued in his Courts and his will was the law. Even the disputes relating to grants made by him were not cognisable by ordinary Courts of that State, and here again succession to jagirs granted by him were at his sweet will and pleasure, in that every grant was considered to be a fresh grant. It was so held in Ahmad-un-Nissa Begum v State of Hyderabad ILR (1952) Hyd 595 = (AIR 1952 Hyd 163) (FB) and by this Court in Raja Gajasingha Rao v. Board of Revenue, W. P. No 416 of 1958, D/-15-12-1966 (AP). But that position would no longer prevail after the Constitution when the Ruler has no such powers, but was only a citizen, no doubt privileged citizen by virtue of the provisions in the Covenant and the articles of the Constitution.

In AIR 1964 SC 444 Shah, J. stated: "The appellant has also since the Constitution been a citizen of India, and his recognition as Ruler under Art. 366 (22) of the Constitution has not altered his status, but as a citizen he is undoubtedly assured a privileged position". Even in the case of the late Nizam in AIR 1966 SC 1260 Subba Rao, J., repelling the contention that the late Nizam was immune from taxation, observed at p 1266: "It is not and it cannot be, disputed that on April 1, 1950 the assessee was not a ruling chief but an ordinary citizen of India, residing, within the meaning of Section 4 of the Act, in that part of India which was a part of Hyderabad State". Even after the Constitution, recognition of the successor by the Government of India would be nothing more than a recognition of the successor to the gaddi. But, as we have, said that power and authority, by and under which the Ruler enjoyed all other properties belonging to the erstwhile ruler can no longer be availed of to acquire and enjoy properties belonging to the erstwhile Ruler.

34. It is no doubt contended by Sri Narasaraaju that the custom of the gaddi was that private property was part of the gaddi and that that custom has been recognised in Art. IV. Sri Chagla, however, states that no custom could be recognised after the application of the Shariat Act, 1937 to Andhra Pradesh. If, as we have said earlier, recognition of succession to the gaddi is only a political act and has nothing to do with private property, then whether private property follows the succession to the gaddi is a matter de hors the covenant and does not prevent either party to set up a claim thereto. Nor is the jurisdiction of the Courts barred under Art 363 to agitate that matter, subject no doubt to Section 87-B of the Civil Procedure Code. In the view we have taken, it is unnecessary for us to go into that question, though it was argued by Sri Chagla, that even in a case where there was a custom under which Khojas were, governed by some of the principles of Hindu Law, when they migrated to Hyderabad they were governed only by Muslim law, vide Jahandarunnissa Begum v Mohd Moinuddin, AIR 1953 Hyd 117, which was approved by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Noorbanu v. Deputy Custodian General of Evacuee Property, AIR 1965 SC 1937. The learned counsel had further contended that in any case, after the Shariat Act, 1937 was applied to the State of Andhra Pradesh in 1959, any family custom at variance with Mahomedan Law cannot be pleaded, by virtue of Section 2 of that Act, which reads: "Notwithstanding any custom or usage to the contrary, in all questions (save questions relating to agricultural land) regarding intestate succession, special property of females, including personal property inherited or obtained under contract or gift or any other provision of personal Law, marriage, dissolution of marriage, including talaq, ila, zihar, lian, khula and Mubaraq, maintenance, dower, guardianship, gifts, trust and trust properties, and wakfs (other than charities and charitable institutions and charitable and religious endowments) the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Muslims shall be the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat)".

Nor is it necessary for us to express any view on the proposition advanced by Sri Narasaraaju, though ex facie we find it difficult to appreciate, that if on the 25th January 1950 a custom relating to devolution of private property was that it should devolve along with the gaddi, that custom will be rendered ineffective and inoperative only by a specific legislation relating to that person, a mere general extension of the Shariat Act to a Muslim does not have the effect of applying the provisions to him. Nor is it necessary to consider whether the certificate offends Arts 14, 19 (1) (f) or 31 (1) of the Constitution, because this would presuppose that the Government of India has power to issue such a certificate and that the same is in violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed to a citizen.

35. It now remains to be considered under what provision the certificate was issued by the Government of India. The certificate itself does not specify under what provision it has been issued, except to say that as a consequence of Nawab Mir Barkat Ali Khan, the 2nd respondent, being recognised as the Ruler of Hyderabad in succession to the late Nizam under Cl. (22) of Art. 366, he is entitled to succeed to the private properties of the late Nizam. We, however, asked Sri Narasaraaju and Sri Ramachandra Rao to tell us the provision under which the certificate was issued. The only answer that was given was that the Government of India would have power to issue such a certificate in exercise of the executive power of the Union, under Art. 362. If the covenant specified in Art. 291 dealt with succession to personal rights, which as they contend, include private property, then the Government of India would have power to issue the certificate under that Article, notwithstanding the fact that the certificate did not specify that the Government of India purported to act under that Article. We have already given reasons why "personal rights" either in Art. IV of the agreement or as specified in Art. 362 of the Constitution do not include private property.

36. In the result, we hold that the Government of India has no power or jurisdiction whether under Art. 362 or otherwise to issue the certificate recognising the 2nd respondent as the sole successor to all the private properties, moveable and immovable, held by the late Nizam, or to authorise transfer of the private properties to the 2nd respondent. Accordingly, we allow the writ petition with costs and quash the certificate dated 27-2-1967 issued to the Nizam, the 2nd respondent, relating to the succession to private properties of the late Nizam. Advocate's fee Rs. 100.

(V 56 C 108)

KUMARAYYA, J.

Official Receiver, Anantapur, Appellant
v. Kondeti Suryanarayana and others, Respondents.

A. A. O. No. 63 of 1964, D/-13-3-1968, against order of Dist. J. Anantapur, D/-29-1-1963.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Sections 4, 53 and 54 — Scope — Joint Hindu family — Untainted debts of father — Suit for partition by sons before the declaration of insolvency — Question whether Son's share could be brought in to meet the creditor's demand against father by virtue of doctrine of pious obligation under Hindu Law is within the direction of Insolvency Court — Remedy of official Receiver to have the properties of sons sold by private sale is lost, but his right to enforce debts against sons remains.

Under Section 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Insolvency Court has full power to decide questions arising in any case of insolvency which is within the cognisance of the Court. The questions may be questions of fact or of law. They may relate to title or priority. They may be of any nature whatsoever. The Court has full plenary powers, subject of course to the provisions of the Act, to decide them, if it thinks it necessary or expedient in the interests of justice and for the purpose of making a complete distribution of the property. Such powers can, however, be exercised subject to provisions of the Act. Thus, where the sons belonging to a joint Hindu family have already filed a partition suit prior to the declaration of father as insolvent, the question whether the shares of the sons in the joint family may be made available for paying off pre-partition debts contracted by the father, is a matter that comes squarely within the ambit of Section 4 as that matter has arisen for decision by reason of the insolvency of the father and the decision thereof is expedient for purposes of making a complete distribution of property and doing complete justice in the case. If there be a liability in law on the sons to pay off the untainted pre-partition debts of the father from out of their shares in the joint family property in case of insolvency of the father, the insolvency Court has power to decide the liability of the sons for purposes of complete distribution of all the available assets amongst the creditors. The obligation of the sons to pay out of their shares in the joint family property, the pre-partition debts, if there has been no arrangement made at the time of partition with regard to the same, is recognised by Hindu law. That share therefore, may be brought within the reach of the creditors for paying off the debts contracted by the father.

In such a case after declaration of the father as insolvent, on account of partition which was effected by reason of the institution of a suit, only the remedy of the Official Receiver to sell the property privately is lost; but the substantial right to enforce the debts due to the creditors against the sons remains and that he can work out by suitable proceedings, though not by private sale, the liabilities of the sons. A. Bhujangarao for T Venkatappa, for Appellant, L. Balajah, for Respondents Nos 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT:— The Official Receiver is the appellant, Respondents 1 and 2 are the sons of the 3rd respondent. The 3rd respondent was adjudged insolvent on 7-12-1960 on a creditor's insolvency petition I P No 22 of 1960 which was presented on 14-10-1960. His sons had already instituted a suit, O S No 46/60 for partition and allotment of 2/3rd share before the Subordinate Judge's Court, Anantapur. On 13-9-60, an ex parte preliminary decree was passed therein, which is marked as Ex. A-3. On an application, I. A. No 223/61 filed on behalf of the plaintiffs in that suit, the Official Receiver was impleaded as a party to the final decree proceedings. As soon as he was brought on record the Official Receiver put forth his plea that there are debts due to the creditors and that all these debts are the pre-partition debts and that provision ought to be made in the decree for the payment of the same as they were not tainted debts.

The learned Subordinate Judge directed the Official Receiver to resort to appropriate remedy in that behalf and passed a final decree on 26-6-1961. As a result, the Official Receiver moved the Insolvency Court by filing an application, I. A. No 703/61 under Sections 4, 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for a declaration that the debts due from the father are binding on the sons to the extent of their shares in the joint family property and that the said shares are liable to be sold for discharge of the debts. This petition was resisted on the ground that a final decree for partition has already been passed and the sons being third persons, they are not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court and that the petition should be dismissed in limine. They denied the truth and binding nature of the debts and urged that the debts are sham and fictitious. The 3rd respondent, the father disputed the genuineness of the debts and stated that the promissory notes were not supported by consideration. The ground taken by the sons that the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to decide under Section 4 the disputes between the creditors and the sons of the insolvent was negatived by the Court of first instance.

On appeal however, the learned District Judge allowed the claim set up by the sons as to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court to go into the matter on the basis that the principle laid down in Ramachandra Aiyer v. The Official Assignee of Madras 61 Mad LJ 66 = (AIR 1931 Mad 317), was not followed in the later decisions of the Madras High Court in Official Receiver v. Devarayan Chettiar, AIR 1949 Mad 216 and Thirumaleswara v Govinda, AIR 1952 Mad 776 and that on the other hand in C. Sriramamurthi v Official Receiver, AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692, the principle was clearly laid down that, if a division were effected between the insolvent and his sons before the Official Receiver exercised the power of the sale the latter could only sell the share of the insolvent leaving the creditors to pursue their remedies against the sons' shares by means of suits instituted against them invoking pious obligation of the sons to discharge their father's untainted debts.

In the opinion of the learned District Judge, these observations went against the decision in 61 Mad LJ 66 = (AIR 1931 Mad 317) and hence the decision of the Madras High Court is no longer binding on this Court. On this basis he held that the petition filed by the Official Receiver invoking the jurisdiction under Section 4 is not maintainable and that the remedy of the Official Receiver is to file a separate suit against the sons of the insolvent. Consequently, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was set aside. Hence the Official Receiver has come up in appeal to this Court.

2. The learned Counsel, Mr. Bhujanga Rao appearing for the appellant contends firstly that the observations in AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692 were in no way inconsistent with the principle laid down in 61 Mad LJ 66 = (AIR 1931 Mad 317), secondly that the Court had power to entertain the application under Section 4, and that the judgment in appeal is, therefore, liable to be set aside. As provided under Section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a receiver and shall become divisible among the creditors. Section 28-A, which was introduced by reason of the Amendment Act 25 of 1948, provides that the property of the insolvent shall comprise and shall always be deemed to have comprised also the capacity to exercise and to take proceedings for exercising all such powers in or over or in respect of property as might have been exercised by the insolvent for his own benefit at the commencement of his insolvency or before his discharge.

We are not concerned with the two provisions to this section. Of course, by reason of adjudication of the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law as insolvent, there vests in the Official Receiver, 61 Mad LJ 66 the separate property of the insolvent father; and (2) also the power which the father of a joint family has to alienate the joint family property, including his son's share in the joint family property for paying his antecedent debts not contracted for an immoral purpose. The father's power of disposition over ancestral property including his son's share for the discharge of his untainted debts vested in the Official Receiver, however, could be exercised by him only so long as there was no partition between the father and sons. The result is that on a division between them, the father's power and consequently the power of the Official Receiver, to sell the shares of the sons would come to an end. In this premises, the Official Receiver who was entitled in law to sell the shares of the sons as well for the untainted debts of his father in exercise of the father's power of disposition over ancestral property, had no such power in this case by reason of partition.

In other words, he had no power to sell himself the share of the sons of the insolvent in the hitherto undivided joint family property. That does not mean however that he cannot also take appropriate measures to make the shares of the sons available for the benefit of the creditors for pre-partition debts, the liability of which would continue as ever on the shares of the sons obtained under partition. What is lost to him by reason of partition is only power of himself selling the share and not his right to bring it to sale through the intervention of the Court. The Official Receiver represents the general body of creditors also and as such, he has to protect their interests as well. In the present proceeding, indeed, the sons had brought their action for partition of joint family property even before the insolvency proceedings were started and obtained a preliminary decree long before the father was adjudged insolvent on 7-12-1960. The Official Receiver was brought on record in the partition action later and that at the instance of the plaintiffs and he had in fact moved the Court to make provision for payment of pre-partition debts in the final decree to be passed. He was however directed to resort to appropriate remedy. It is in consequence thereof that he has filed this petition under Section 4.

3. The contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents, Mr. Balaiah is that, since the sons are third persons, their share cannot be brought up for consideration in the insolvency proceedings and that they themselves are not, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court. To appreciate the argument, it is necessary here to read the provisions of Section 4 to the extent relevant for our purpose:—

"4 (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Court shall have full power to decide all questions whether of title or priority, or of any nature whatsoever and whether involving matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court, or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case."

4. The insolvency Court has thus full power to decide questions arising in any case of insolvency which is within the cognizance of the Court. The questions may be questions of fact or of law. They may relate to title or priority. They may be of any nature whatsoever. The Court has full plenary powers, subject of course to the provisions of the Act, to decide them, if it thinks it necessary or expedient in the interest of justice and for the purpose of making a complete distribution of the property. Wide indeed are the powers of the Insolvency Court in this behalf, but they are intended to be exercised at the discretion of the Court. It follows therefore, that should the Court be of the view that the matter involves detailed enquiry or is complicated, it will direct the parties to resort to a regular suit.

Thus, the question whether the shares of the sons in the joint family may be made available for paying of pre-partition debts contracted by the father, is a matter that comes squarely within the ambit of Sec. 4 as that matter has arisen for decision by reason of the insolvency of the father and the decision thereof is expedient for purposes of making a complete distribution of property and doing complete justice in the case. Thus, if there be a liability on the sons in law to pay off the untainted pre-partition debts of the father from out of their shares in the joint family property in case of insolvency of the father, the Insolvency Court has power to decide the liability of the sons for purposes of complete distribution of all the available assets amongst the creditors. The obligation of the sons to pay, out of their shares in the joint family property, the pre-partition debts, if there has been no arrangement made at the time of partition with regard to the same, is recognised by Hindu law. That share therefore, may be brought within the reach of the creditors for paying off the debts contracted by the father. So then it cannot be said that this is a matter which is outside the powers of the Insolvency Court or does not arise in insolvency. In Official Assignee v Ramachandra Aiyar, 55 Mad LJ 175 = (AIR 1928 Mad 735) (FB) the Official Assignee took out a notice of motion praying (1) that it may be declared that the debts mentioned therein are binding upon the insolvent's sons and (2) that he (The Official Assignee) may be authorised to sell the family properties to the extent of the interest of the minor mentioned therein. It was observed by Ramesam, J,

"But all that is contended for the respondent is not that the substantial right of the Official Assignee to proceed against the sons for the father's debts is lost, but only one of the several remedies open has been extinguished. Now, the Official Assignee has got several remedies against the sons. first, as representing creditors, or associating himself with them, he can file suits against the sons, obtain decrees and sell the son's share also; and secondly, in the partition suit now pending at Madura, wherever it may be tried ultimately, at Madura or Madras, he can apply for the creditors to be made parties, so that the findings as to the nature of the debts may bind all and ask for a decree providing for the payment of such debts as are not illegal or immoral, see Venku Reddy v Venku Reddy, 52 Mad LJ 387 = (AIR 1927 Mad 471) (FB) There is possibly a third remedy open. We have held in the connected Full Bench decision that, in garnishee proceedings, a question can be decided by the Insolvency Judge if necessary. This power is subject only to his discretion, but he is not bound to go into all questions that arise before him. In the present case the Judge sitting in insolvency may, if he thinks proper, decide the questions raised by the Official Assignee as between himself and the sons, provided the sons fill the character of the garnishee. These are matters for him to determine. The Official Assignee can then obtain formal decrees. The only remedy lost to the Official Assignee is the right of selling the sons' share by private sale. This is merely a processual right. The substantial right of the Official Assignee to enforce the debts due to the creditors against the sons remains by reason of our decision in Ramachandra Jagannatha Rao v. Viswesam, 46 Mad LJ 590 = (AIR 1924 Mad 682). One mode of enforcing it, a right which is merely ancillary and auxiliary to the main right, out of several modes, is all that is lost".

5. It is clear that, on account of partition which was effected by reason of the institution of a suit, only the remedy of the Official Receiver to sell the property privately is lost; but the substantial right to enforce the debts due to the creditors against the sons remains and that he can work out by suitable proceedings though not by private sale, the liabilities of the sons. In 61 Mad LJ 66 = (AIR 1931 Mad 317) it was held that notwithstanding the suit for partition and the consequent division in status, the right of the father to have his just debts paid out of the entire family property subsists, and where the father has been adjudged insolvent, such right vests in the Official Assignee as "property of the insolvent divisible among his creditors". It was pointed out that although by reason of the division of status brought about by a suit for partition instituted by the sons after the father's insolvency the father and the official Receiver lose the right of private sale of the family property including the shares of the sons, it is open to the Official Assignee to obtain a declaration against the sons, and get the family property included in their shares therein sold by or through Court, and that Section 1 gave the widest power to the Insolvency Court to go into such question and to declare the liability of the sons' share in the family property for the proved and just debts of the father insolvent and make all necessary orders for their realisation. It is on the basis of this authority that the Court of the first instance had overruled the objections taken under Section 4. But the appellate Court differed from the conclusion reached in view of the pronouncement in AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692. That was a case where, though a suit for partition was filed, partition was not deemed to be in the interests of the minors and, therefore, was not ordered. Viswanadha Sastri J who spoke for the Court while summing up the law observed thus

"The law as then understood was that the father's power of disposition over ancestral property, including his sons' shares for the discharge of his untainted debts vested in the official Receiver and could be exercised by him so long as there was no partition between them and the father's power and consequently the power of the Official Receiver, to sell the shares of the sons would come to an end. Sat Narain v. Srikishan Das. ILR 17 Lah 644 = AIR 1936 PC 277

cial Receiver exercised the power of sale, the latter could only sell the share of the insolvent leaving the creditors to pursue their remedies against the sons' shares by means of suits instituted against them invoking the pious obligation of the sons to discharge their father's untainted debts."

6. The contention of the learned Counsel for the Respondents, Mr. Balaiah, is that, when the partition has taken place, the only remedy open to the creditors is to file suits against the sons invoking the pious obligation of the sons to discharge their father's untainted debts and that the Official Receiver cannot move the Insolvency Court under Section 4 nor can the creditors do so. I do not think, by making the observations relied upon by the learned Counsel, the Division Bench had intended to lay down exhaustively all the remedies open to the creditors or the Official Receiver for invoking the pious obligation of the sons to discharge their father's untainted debt. The remedy referred to was one of the remedies as pointed by Ramesam J., to which reference has already been made. There can be other remedies as well.

7. The appellate Court was in error in construing the observations to mean that, under law, the remedy of suit was deemed to be the only remedy for the creditors or the Official Receiver. The learned Judges, who decided the case in AIR 1957 Andh Pra 692, in no manner whatsoever, had intended to differ from the view taken by Ramesam J., in 55 Mad LJ 175 = (AIR 1928 Mad 735 FB). In my opinion, as observed by Ramesam J., there can also be a remedy available for the Official Receiver or the creditors under Section 4 though it is left to the discretion of the Insolvency Court to decide the matter itself or direct the parties to resort to a suit. In this view of the matter, the finding of the appellate Court as to the application of Section 4 cannot be upheld. The view taken by the Court of first instance must be accepted.

8. But it would appear from the facts of this case that the sons had taken a plea that the debts are not true or genuine. Nevertheless, in spite of the absence of any evidence on behalf of the sons that the debts were contracted by their father for immoral purposes the Court of the first instance held against the sons. It was the duty of the Official Receiver to prove that the father had contracted the debts and that they were true. It is only on proof of the truth or genuineness of the debts that the onus of their being tainted will shift on to the sons. It was the duty of the Court of the first instance to go into the matter and decide on the evidence adduced. It was open to the Court, if it appeared that the matter involved issues of a suit. But if it wanted to exercise its jurisdiction under Section 4, it was incumbent on it to enter into enquiry as to the truth of the debts as well. As no such enquiry was done, the matter has to be remanded to the Court of the first instance.

9. I, therefore, remand the case to the Court of first instance for enquiry into the questions as to the truth and genuineness of the debts and also to their being not tainted in case their truth is proved. It is made clear that, as the exercise of jurisdiction under Section 4 is discretionary the Court is at liberty to refuse to exercise jurisdiction and direct the parties to resort to a remedy of a suit if it comes to the conclusion during the enquiry that the matter requires a detailed enquiry and involves complicated questions of law, and fact.

10. The appeal is allowed accordingly. Costs shall abide the result of the proceedings in the Court of first instance. No leave.

Appeal allowed.

T Anantha Babu, for Petitioners; Standing Counsel for Income-tax Department and K. Ranghanatha Chari, for Respondent.

ORDER:— I am constrained to allow this review petition, filed by the Revenue.

2. Seshachalapati J and I allowed the Writ Petition No 1126 of 1962 by our order dated 1-2-1968. The Revenue seeks this order to be reviewed. Seshachalapati J, having retired since rendering our decision, this petition has come up before me sitting singly

3 One Katari Nagabhushanam, the father of the petitioner in the Writ Petition was a partner in a firm. For the assessment year 1948-49 he filed a return showing his taxable income at Rs 6,000. Later, he filed a letter stating that his 1/3 share of the income from the firm for the said assessment year was Rs. 6,402-5-4.

The Income-tax Officer by his order dated 19-8-1949 provisionally accepted the share income of the assessee from the firm as stated by him. It thus happened that the individual assessment of the assessee for the year 1948-49 was made prior to 1st April, 1952. However, the assessment of the firm of which the assessee was a partner was completed ex parte on 25-8-1952 fixing the total taxable income of the firm at Rs 2,01,642. There were appeals preferred against this order but they are not material for the consideration of the present petition. The Income-tax Officer purporting to act under Section 35 of the Income-tax Act, 1922 issued a notice dated 27-1-1956, proposing to rectify the new assessment of Nagabhushanam by including an income of Rupees 67,214 representing his 1/3rd share of the firm's income for the assessment year 1948-49. Objections were raised by the assessee to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer under Section 35 (5) of the Act to revise the assessment which had been completed before 1-4-1952. That objection was overruled by the Income-tax Officer by his order dated 29-12-1956 and the assessee's tax still payable was determined for that year at Rs 25,254-4-0 after giving credit to the tax already paid in pursuance of the original assessment. Subsequently the assessee, Nagabhushanam died and no action was taken by the Department for nearly 3 years. Thereafter a certificate under S 46 of the Act was issued and the certificate proceedings were set in motion by the attaching the properties of the deceased assessee. One of the sons filed another writ petition which was however, dismissed. Another son by name Srinivasa Rao filed the present writ petition No 1126 of 1962 questioning the very proceedings as being without jurisdiction. The amount that was found to be still payable out of the tax determined, is Rs 10,736 33 Ps. The Revenue sought to recover this amount from out of the sale proceeds of a house belonging to the assessee. Hence the Writ Petition.

4. The only contention raised on behalf of the writ petitioner was that the Income-tax Officer had no jurisdiction to reopen and reassess an individual assessment of a partner made before 1st April, 1952 wherein his share of the income from the firm was also included. It was contended that the fact that the assessment of the firm as such, was completed after 1-4-1952 could not make any difference and would not confer any jurisdiction on the Income-tax Officer to reopen the individual assessment of a partner, completed before 1-4-1952 and that Section 35 (5) of the Act did not confer any such power on the Officer.

5. In our Order, allowing the writ petition, we upheld this objection put forward on behalf of the petitioners. In upholding that objection we relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in the Second Additional Income-tax Officer, Guntur v. Atmala Nagaraj, (1962) 46 ITR 609 (SC), wherein it was held that—

"Sub-section (5) of Section 35 was not applicable to cases where the assessment of the partner was completed before April 1, 1952 even though the assessment of the firm was completed after 1st April, 1952." "Though S. 35 (1) empowers the Income-tax authorities to rectify mistakes apparent from the record within four years from the date of the assessment order sought to be rectified a mistake which becomes apparent only from the record of the firm is not a mistake apparent from the record so far as the assessment of the partner is concerned."

This is a decision rendered by a Bench of the Supreme Court consisting of three learned Judges.

6. However, the Supreme Court reversed this view by a decision of Bench, consisting of five learned Judges (Hegde, J., dissenting), in the Income-tax Officer v. T. S. Devinatha Nadar, 1968-68 ITR 252 = (AIR 1968 SC 623), Mitter, J., speaking the majority view observed—

"This group of appeals has been referred to a larger Bench than one of three Judges before whom the matter was opened on May 4, 1967 because of the earlier decision of this Court." After referring to the earlier decision in 1962-46 ITR 609 (SC) the learned Judge stated that:—

"With very great respect, we find ourselves unable to concur. As we have already said, sub-section (5) of Section 35 of the 1922 Act becomes operative as soon as it is found on the assessment or re-assessment of the firm or on any reduction or enhancement made in the income of the firm that the share of the partner in the profit or loss of the firm had not been included in the assessment of the partner or if included was not correct. The completion of the assessment of the partner as an individual need not happen after April 1, 1952. The completed assessment of the partner is the subject-matter of rectification and this may have preceded the above mentioned date. Such completion does not control the operation of the sub-section. In the result, we find ourselves unable to concur in the decision or the reasoning in Atmala Nagaraj's case 1962-46 ITR 609 (SC)."

7. It has thus come to happen that the Supreme Court has reversed its own view, on which we relied on rendering our decision dated 1-2-1968, though this latter decision of the Supreme Court was given on October, 25th, 1967 and was, therefore, in existence by the time we rendered our decision on 1-2-1968. However, the latter decision was not fully reported till April 1968 and its full report was published in the 68th volume, Part III of the Income-tax Reports of the dated 15th April 1968. It appears, it was short noted in November, 1967 itself and both the learned counsel have stated that they had not noticed this case in the short-noted report. The result was that this latter decision of the Supreme Court was not brought to our notice, when we heard this writ petition and rendered our decision on 1-2-68, relying upon (1962) 46 ITR 609 (SC), which was subsequently overruled by (1968) 68 ITR 252 = (AIR 1968 SC 623). There is thus an error apparent on the face of the record in our order dated 1-2-1968. Since the latter decision of the Supreme Court was not fully reported by the time we rendered our decision but was only short noted, it may also be possible to say that despite the exercise of due diligence, the latter decision was not within the knowledge of the learned counsel. I am, therefore, clear in my mind that the circumstances above narrated, are sufficient in law, to warrant a review of our order dated 1-2-1968. Even supposing that it was the counsel's mistake in not placing the latest decision before us, that affords sufficient ground for reviewing our order. In Govinda Chettyar v. Varadappa Chettyar, (1939) 2 Mad LJ 809 = (AIR 1940 Mad 17) the Madras High Court and in P. Gengamma v. P. Venkanna, 1954 Andh LT (Civil) 214, this Court took the view that counsel's mistake is a sufficient ground which justifies a review.

8. Then, the next question is whether the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, including those relating to review, are applicable to proceedings under Article 226 of the Constitution. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Chenchanna Naidu v. Praja Seva Transports Ltd. Guddapah, AIR 1953 Mad 39, (which is binding on me) held that:—

"If the application for the issue of a writ under Art. 226 is made on the civil side in dealing with such an application the High Court is governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and the High Court has jurisdiction to review its order under Art. 226."

In coming to this conclusion the learned Judges of the Division Bench examined the entire case law and relied upon an earlier decision of the Madras High Court in Ryots of Garabandha v. Zamindar of Parlakimidi, AIR 1938 Mad 722. Ultimately the learned Judges held that "We have held in C. M. P. No. 625 of 1951 that the Government order should 'ex facie' show that it applied its mind to the question of the legality, irregularity or propriety of the order of the Appellate Tribunal and that in the absence thereof the Government's order was liable to be quashed. No doubt our omission to consider that point was due to the Counsel not putting forward before us that aspect of the case, (that application have not (sic) been grounded on the arbitrary exercise by the Government of the power conferred on it under Section 64-A of the Act). But, whoever might be responsible for it, if the most important point arising in the petition was not considered by us we think such an omission would constitute "an error apparent on the face of the record", within the meaning of the expression occurring in Order 47, Rule 1, Civil Procedure Code so as to warrant a review of our order dated 9th January, 1951.

It follows that our order dismissing the application for the issue of writ of certiorari is discharged. A writ nisi will issue in this case

It is thus clear that the provisions of Order 47 of the Civil Procedure Code would apply to the proceedings under Article 226 of the Constitution.

9. The result of the above discussion is that it is a case where I could review our order dated 1-2-1963

10. The learned counsel for the respondent in the review petition (Petitioner in the writ petition No 1126 of 1962) has fairly stated that the latter decision of the Supreme Court has completely reversed the position and that in the light of that decision, our decision dated 1-2-1963 became erroneous. He has, however, contended that there is a remedy available to the Revenue, by way of appeal to the Supreme Court and that, therefore, our order dated 1-2-1963 need not be reviewed. But, in view of the circumstances stated above and also the fact that had the latter decision, which was already in force by that time, been brought to our notice, our decision would have been one of dismissal of the writ petition, I am of the opinion that the proper course is to review our order dated 1-2-1963 and set it right in accordance with the latter decision of the Supreme Court. Our order dated 1-2-1963 in W. P. No 1126 of 1962 is accordingly set aside and the said Writ Petition is hereby dismissed. In the circumstances of the case I make no order as to costs either in the writ petition or in this review petition.

not be exercised in respect of executive or administrative orders — Hyderabad City Police Act (9 of 1348 Fasli), S. 26 (1).

Section 561-A of the Criminal P. C. preserves the inherent power of the High Court to make suitable orders (1) to give effect to any order under the Code and (2) to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. It does not empower the High Court to interfere with executive orders of executive authorities. The Order under the Section to secure the ends of justice must be in relation to a proceeding in the High Court or any subordinate Criminal Court and that proceeding too must have judicial character and not of an executive or administrative one.

Though the Commissioner of Police, Hyderabad, functions as first class Magistrate for limited purpose, his order under Section 26 (1), Hyderabad City Police Act is clearly an executive order. (Para 2)

A Lakshminarayana, for Petitioner

ORDER — This application under Section 561-A Criminal Procedure Code is entirely misconceived. In this application the petitioner seeks to have quashed an order of the Commissioner of Police under Section 26 (1) of the Hyderabad City Police Act of 1348 Fasli directing the petitioner to remove himself from the area of Kachiguda and shift himself to the area within the limits of Trimulgherry Police Circle and not leave that area for a period of one year.

2. Section 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code preserves the inherent power of the High Court to make suitable orders (1) to give effect to any order under the Code, (2) to prevent abuse of the process of the Court or (3) to secure the ends of justice. The power given to the High Court, to make appropriate orders to secure the ends of justice, does not empower the High Court to interfere with executive orders of executive authorities. It is not intended to vest the High Court with any omnipotent power. The order to be made by the High Court under Section 561-A to secure the ends of justice must be in relation to a proceeding in the High Court or in any Subordinate Criminal Court and that proceeding too must have judicial character and must not be a proceeding of an executive or administrative character. The Commissioner of Police acting under Section 26 of the Hyderabad City Police Act cannot be called subordinate Criminal Court, nor can he be said to exercise any judicial functions. Mr. Lakshminarayana points out that the Commissioner of Police is a First Class Magistrate for certain purposes mentioned in Section 47 of the Hyderabad City Police Act, namely Sections 26, 27, 90 and 91 of the Hyderabad Code of Criminal Procedure. The Commissioner functions as 1st Class Magistrate only for those limited purposes and not when he makes an order under Section 26 of the Act. It is also further urged that there is a provision in Section 26 (7) for hearing the person against whom an order under Section 26 (1) is proposed to be made and therefore, the order must be considered to be of judicial character. It is difficult to agree with this contention. Merely because a statute contains a provision for hearing a person against whom orders are proposed to be made the order does not acquire a judicial character. Section 26 occurs in the Chapter relating to Police Regulations and Rules for preservation of order. An order under Section 26 (1) is clearly of an executive character. I therefore, hold that the application under Section 561-A is not maintainable. It is, therefore, dismissed.

DGB/D.V.C. Application dismissed.

Public Prosecutor, Appellant v. Kanu-marlapudi Ramalingaiah, Respondent, (Accused).

Criminal Appeal No. 735 of 1966, D/-11-6-1968, against order of Addl. Munsiff Magistrate Tenali in C. C. No. 18 of 1966.

(A) Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), S. 2 (i) (a), (b), (c) — Food article not of nature, substance or quality which it purports or is represented to be — Amounts to “adulterated food” within S. 2 (i) (a).

A food article falls within the mischief of “adulterated food” as defined in Section 2 (i) (a) if it is not of the nature, substance or quality which it purports or is represented to be and the food article need not be actually injurious to the health of the purchaser or prejudicial to him in any other way. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 448 (AP), Explained. (B) Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), S. 13 (5) — Report of Public Analyst — When not binding on Court.

(1) Cri LJ 448, Public Prosecutor v. N. Subba Rao 4

K. Somakonda Reddy for Addl. Public Prosecutor, for Appellant; E. Manohar, for Respondent (Accused).

JUDGMENT:— The sole respondent (accused) was prosecuted for selling edible oil which was found to be adulterated by the Public Analyst. The Additional Munsiff-Magistrate of Tenali who tried the case, acquitted the accused on the ground that there was no reliable evidence to show that the coconut oil which had been mixed with the groundnut oil was likely to affect injuriously the health or any other way prejudicially affect the purchaser. The appeal is directed against this order of acquittal.

2. The facts beyond controversy are that the accused was found storing some oils in tins for the purpose of sale in his oil retail shop. The shop is situated in Ravi Anjaiah Street, 8th Ward, Tenali. The Food Inspector of Tenali Municipality purchased a sample of oil from him in the presence of mediators after paying the necessary price. The sample so purchased was divided into three equal parts and sealed in bottles. One bottle was handed over to the accused. The other was sent to the Court and the third one was sent to the Public Analyst for analysis. The Public Analyst in his report opined that the sample consisted of a mixture of 82% of groundnut oil and 18% of coconut oil and was therefore, adulterated. On that basis a report was laid against the accused for contravention of the provisions of the Food Adulteration Act, namely, Sections 16 (1) and 7 read with Section 2 (1) (a) and 2 (1) (i). The accused pleaded that he had sold “groundnut refined oil” and that he had not committed any offence. The learned Additional Munsiff-Magistrate, Tenali, after examining one witness for the prosecution and one witness for the defence, acquitted the accused mainly on the ground that the adulteration was not injurious to the health of the purchaser nor was shown to be prejudicial to him in any other way.

3. The learned Public Prosecutor contends that the view taken by the lower Court is erroneous inasmuch as adulteration as defined in the Act takes in its ambit the mixing of two edible oils. His argument is that the sample sent to the Public Analyst conformed neither to the standard prescribed for the groundnut oil nor for the coconut oil. In case of coconut oil, the provisions of A.17.0.1 are attracted while in the case of groundnut oil A.17.0.3 are applicable. The Public Analyst who had taken these into consideration had opined that the sample was adulterated. The definition in the Act of “adulterated food” is as under:

“An article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated—

(a) if the article sold by a vendor is not of the nature, substance or quality demanded by the purchaser and is to his prejudice, or is not of the nature, substance or quality which it purports or represents to be."

In the instant case, even according to the admission of the accused, he sold the groundnut oil and according to the Public Analyst, the sample did not conform to the prescribed standard and thus it was adulterated. The learned counsel for the respondent contends that what was sold to the Inspector was groundnut refined oil in respect of which no standard has been prescribed by the Act, and therefore, the opinion of the Public Analyst that the sample was adulterated is not acceptable. I am not prepared to accept this argument. There is no variety of edible oil as 'groundnut refined oil.' At least the Act does not recognise the existence of an edible oil of this nature. The sample could have been therefore sold either as groundnut oil or as coconut oil. It is an admitted fact that the standard prescribed for those edible oils has not been adhered to in the sample sold and stocked for sale. It therefore falls within the mischief of 'adulterated food' as it was not of the nature, substance or quality which it purported or was represented to be.

4 The learned counsel has relied on a decision of this Court reported in Public Prosecutor v N Subba Rao, (1963) 1 Andh WR 265 = (1964) (1) Cri LJ 448 and the lower Court also has made a reference to this decision. With great respect to the learned Judge I am not inclined to accept the restricted scope of adulteration as accepted by him that the criterion for contravention of the Act is only with reference to the injury or prejudice to the purchaser. Having regard to the facts of that case Munikanah J. seems to have taken into consideration the definition of adulteration as found in Section 2 (b) and (c) of the Act. Further, I am of opinion that once the Public Analyst who is an expert has found that the article is adulterated, his opinion has to be accepted unless it is shown that his opinion is based on a misreading of facts or is superseded. I therefore, hold the accused guilty under Section 7 (1) of the Act and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs 200 bearing in mind that the offence was committed sometime in 1964 and the appeal is being disposed of in 1968. Time for payment of fine is one month from the date of receipt of records in the lower Court. In case of default, the accused-respondent will undergo 3 months' imprisonment.

A. A. O No 45 of 1965, D/-6-12-1967.

(A) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 36 — Petitions for insolvency presented concurrently in more than one Court — Section vests discretion in Court to annul adjudication or stay proceedings and if discretion is not exercised, proceedings in both the Courts can without any objection, be continued. (Para 7)

(B) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 28, 27 — Order of adjudication passed under S. 27 — Effects provided under Section 28 whether automatically ensue.

According to Section 28 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, all property after the date of an order of adjudication and before the discharge of the insolvent shall forthwith vest in the Court or Receiver, and when once the property vests in the Receiver, it would be futile to file another application for adjudication because it will not serve any purpose unless of course there are material changes in the circumstances. Even if any order of adjudication of insolvents is made a second time and consequently any subsequent vesting order is made, it cannot affect the rights acquired under a previous vesting order made by a competent Court. All that an Official Assignee could obtain by virtue of a subsequent vesting order made in another Court would be a sort of contingent or reversionary interest in the assets in the event of the previous order being set aside. AIR 1929 Oudh 149 Rel on (Para 8)

(C) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 28 (4), 11, 36 — Property vesting in Official Receiver — Any order of adjudication subsequently passed would not divest property already vested.

While in view of Section 11 read with Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 it may not perhaps be objectionable to file concurrently two petitions for adjudication of the same debtor on the same or different acts of insolvency, but when once property vests in an Official Receiver, any order of adjudication subsequently passed will not divest the property which already vested in the Official Receiver. Nor the 2nd Official Receiver can do anything except wait for an opportunity to administer the estate in case his adjudication is annulled or the order is set aside. That is a mere contingency which may or may not happen. (1897) ILR 21 Bom 297 (307), Rel. on.

N. Ramamohan Rao, for Appellant;
P. M. Gopal Rao and K. Venkata Ramaiah, for Respondents (Nos. 1 and 2).

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Cuddapah passed on 19-10-1964 whereby he adjudicated respondents 1 and 2 as insolvents and directed that the estate of the debtors will vest in the Official Receiver for purposes of administration, and fixed the time for discharge as one year.

2. The necessary facts are that the appellants before me filed O. S. No. 69 of 1961 in the Court of the District Munsif, Cuddapah to recover a sum of Rs. 1532-4-0 against respondents 1 and 2 herein. They attached certain property before judgment. The suit was decreed on 30-5-1961. The decree-holder filed E. P. 288 of 1961 on 12-6-1961. The attached house was brought to sale on 20-11-1961. The sale was confirmed on 2nd May, 1962. The sale proceeds were distributed rateably amongst the decree-holders in the above said suit as well as other decree-holders against the same respondents on 4-5-1962.

3. I. P. No. 9 of 1961 was filed by the respondents 1 and 2 on 29-6-1961 before the Subordinate Judge's Court, Nellore to adjudicate them insolvents. I. A. No. 698 of 1961 was filed therein seeking stay of the sale which was to be held on 20-11-1961 in the decree passed in O. S. 69 of 1961. That petition was dismissed. C. M. A. No. 23 of 1961 which was filed was also dismissed on 12-2-1962. The 1st and 2nd respondents were subsequently adjudged as insolvents on 18-12-1963.

4. While the matter stood thus. I. P. 5 of 1964 out of which this appeal arises was filed by two petitioning creditors and the third was subsequently joined for adjudicating respondents 1 and 2 as insolvents. That act of insolvency alleged in the petition was that the respondents had filed I. P. 9/61 which constitutes an act of insolvency. This petition was resisted by the other creditors, particularly the decree-holder in O. S. 69 of 1961. Their contention was that the present petitioners were parties to I. P. 9 of 1961 and once respondents 1 and 2 were adjudicated insolvents in that proceeding, it is not permissible for these petitioners to file an application to adjudicate the same respondents as insolvents as there is no property of the insolvents which could now vest in the Official Receiver, if appointed in these proceedings. They contended that respondents 1 and 2 had only one house and they have no other property. That house was sold and is now in the possession of the purchaser and the sale proceeds distributed amongst different decree-holders who had applied for the same.

5. The petitioners examined one witness and the respondents one witness. They also marked certain documents. Upon this material, the learned Additional District Judge negating the contention that the second petition for adjudication does not lie adjudged respondents 1 and 2 as insolvents. It is this view that is now questioned in this appeal.

6. The principal contention of the learned Advocate for the appellants is that once the respondents 1 and 2 were adjudicated as insolvents, unless the adjudication is annulled, the respondents cannot be adjudged as insolvents in another proceeding. He further contended that since the only property of the insolvents was already auctioned and the sale proceeds distributed amongst the decree-holders, nothing remains which could be vested in the Receiver appointed in this Insolvency Petition after the respondents 1 and 2 are adjudicated as insolvents. In support of this contention, reliance was placed on Ram Das v. Sultan Husain Khan, AIR 1929 Oudh 149.

7. Now, under Section 11 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, an insolvency petition can be presented to the Court in whose jurisdictional limits the debtor ordinarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain, or is in custody under arrest or imprisonment. It is thus plain that the debtor may be adjudged insolvent by the Court having jurisdiction in each of the places where he ordinarily resides or where he carries on business. It is to provide for such an eventuality that Section 36 of the Act provides that in case petitions, more than one, for insolvency are presented, concurrently in more than one Court, one of the two Courts may annul adjudication or stay the proceedings in consideration of the fact that the property of the debtor can be more conveniently distributed by the other Court. It must, however, be understood that Section 36 vests discretion in the Court, and if such a discretion is not exercised, the proceedings in both the Courts can, without any objection, be continued.

8. What has to be, however, seen is whether when under Section 27 an order of adjudication is passed, the effects provided under Section 28 of the Act would automatically ensue, according to sub-section (4) of which all property after the date of an order of adjudication and before his discharge shall forthwith vest in the Court or Receiver, and when once the property vests in the Receiver, it would be futile to file another application for adjudication because it will not serve any purpose unless of course there are material changes in the circumstances. Even if any order of adjudication of insolvents is made a second time and consequently any subsequent vesting order is made, it cannot affect the rights acquired under a previous vesting order made by a competent Court. All that an Official Assignee could obtain by virtue of a subsequent vesting order made in another Court would be a sort of contingent or reversionary interest in the assets in the event of the previous order being set aside.

9. In AIR 1929 Oudh 149, a Bench of the Oudh Chief Court held:

"Under the Provincial Insolvency Act once a person has been declared an insolvent, it is not open to him to apply for a second order of adjudication until he has obtained an order of discharge or until his previous adjudication has been annulled."

10. While in view of Section 11 read with Section 36, it may not perhaps be objectionable to file concurrently two petitions for adjudication of the same respondents on the same or different acts of insolvency, but when once property vests in an Official Receiver, any order of adjudication subsequently passed will not divest the property which already vested in the Official Receiver. Nor the 2nd Official Receiver can do anything except wait for an opportunity to administer the estate in case his adjudication is annulled or the order is set aside. That is a mere contingency which may or may not happen and it is for that reason that it is held in Re Aranvayal Sabhapathi, (1897) ILR 21 Bom 297 at p 307 that the Court has a discretion to refuse the adjudication order if, having regard to all circumstances of the case, it is considered that all adjudication would be a vain and useless proceeding. Holding therefore, that the second petition is not barred under the Act, but when once the adjudication order is made and the property is vested in the Receiver, what has to be seen in this case is whether there are any circumstances for adjudicating the respondents insolvents or the petition can be refused on the ground that an Official Receiver was already appointed and since the property is also sold, there is no purpose in adjudicating the respondents again as insolvents and appointing another Official Receiver as it is not likely to benefit all the creditors. It is not disputed that the only property, which the respondents 1 and 2 had, has already been sold. It is not possible to make any inquiry in regard to the question as to whether the sale in the Court auction of the house of the insolvents after I. P. No 9 of 1961 was filed is valid and the transferee gets title in the house, or assuming that he gets good title, the sale proceeds which actually vested in the Official Receiver could have been distributed amongst few of the creditors and not all of them and without the intervention of the Insolvency Court. These are matters which could have been agitated in I. P. 9 of 1961. Instead of following that procedure which the law permits, the petitioners have chosen to file this petition. Adjudicating the respondents 1 and 2 as insolvents would not solve the problem as on the date when I. P. 5/64 was filed apparently the insolvents had no property to administer or which could vest in the Official Receiver. The appointment of Official Receiver therefore, would not serve any purpose. Following the abovesaid Bombay decision, therefore, I do not find that the adjudication of respondents 1 and 2 in I. P. 5/64 would in any way be useful to the body of the creditors in view of the difficulties mentioned above. The lower Court therefore, ought to have taken into consideration the fact that the previous insolvency proceedings were in a way still pending because neither the insolvents are discharged nor the insolvency is annulled. In these circumstances, the adjudication of respondents 1 and 2 again as insolvents and the appointment of a Receiver will serve no purpose.

11. For the reasons already stated, I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court below and dismiss I. P. 5 of 1964. In the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

that of a District Judge as could attract the Bar.

Held, (1) that the appointment of the person holding the post of Deputy Registrar (which was in the State Judicial Service equivalent to the post of a Subordinate Judge) to the post of an Additional District Judge was a promotion in the same service, viz., the State Judicial Service and under Art. 235 of the Constitution, this promotion could be given only by the High Court and not by the Government. (Paras 7, 8 and 13)

(2) As the power to promote a person holding a post in the State Judicial Service inferior to that of a District Judge vests in the High Court under Art. 235 of the Constitution, R. 5 of the Assam Judicial Service Rules must be held to be invalid so far as it gives that power to the Governor. (Para 10)

(3) that the amendment brought in to redesignate the post of a Subordinate Judge as Assistant District Judge was a subterfuge to get the power of promoting a Subordinate Judge to the post of an Addl. District Judge and was clearly a fraud on the Constitution. Though under Art. 236 of the Constitution, the expression "District Judge" includes Additional District Judge, Joint District Judge, Assistant District Judge etc., these expressions mean, as they existed, at the time the Constitution came into force. In Assam, there was no such Assistant District Judge at the time the Constitution came into force. Therefore, the power of the High Court to promote a Subordinate Judge continues even though the designation of a 'Subordinate Judge' has been altered to 'Assistant District Judge'. (Paras 12 and 13)

(4) that he was not entitled to hold the post of District Judge (to which post he was subsequently posted) as his initial promotion to the post of Additional District Judge was void ab initio. (Para 14) and (5) that as for the appointment to the posts of Additional Sessions Judge initially and Sessions Judge later on are concerned, these were not in the Judicial Service. These are included in the expression 'District Judge' under Art. 236 of the Constitution. The Government being entitled to make these appointments in consultation with the High Court under Article 233 read with Article 236, the person must be held to have been appointed to these posts by the competent authority and he could hold them. He could not, however, hold the post of District Judge. He was entitled to hold the post of Sessions Judge. AIR 1962 SC 1704 Foll. (Para 14)

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 233 and 236—Additional District Judge in Assam appointed as District Judge — Appointment by Governor without consulting the High Court, void — It is not a promotion, but an appointment pure and simple.

(C) Constitution of India, Arts. 233, 234 and 236 — Interpretation, keeping in view the legislative intent.

While interpreting Arts. 233 to 236 of the Constitution, the policy adopted by the Constituent Assembly and displayed in those Articles must be kept in view. The word 'control' in Art. 235 must be construed as complete control of the High Court, over the subordinate judiciary. To hold otherwise would be to reverse the policy which has moved determinedly in the direction of separating the Judiciary from the Executive.

Similarly an ingenious interpretation should not be adopted of the word "promotion" in that Article to deprive the High Court of its power. The intention of the Constituent Assembly was clear that at least the Judicial officers holding posts inferior to that of a District Judge, should entirely look to the High Court and not to the Executive authority for their future prospects. In interpreting the said word, the weight should be in favour of this intention of the Constitution-makers. AIR 1966 SC 447 and AIR 1967 SC 903, Foll.

(D) Constitution of India, Arts. 165 (2) and (3) and 235 — Advocate General's duty to point out any flaws in legal enactments — Art. 235 and R. 5 (4) (b) of Assam Judicial Service Rules — Apparent conflict between provisions — Advocate General to bring the same to the notice of the Government — (Assam Judicial Service Rules, 1967, R. 5 (4) (b)). (Para 16)

(E) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Quo Warranto — Writ petition challenging the right of a judge to hold the post — Court deciding it in favour of Petitioner — Order passed by the Judge could not, however, be set aside in Quo warranto proceedings. (Para 17)

After he served a few years as Deputy Registrar, the Governor of Assam appointed him to officiate as Additional District and Sessions Judge, Lower Assam Districts at Nowgong by the following notification

"Dt 19-6-67.

No LJJ 74/66/55 — The services of Sri U N Rajkhowa, Deputy Registrar High Court of Assam and Nagaland being replaced at the disposal of the Govt., the Governor of Assam in consultation with the High Court of Assam and Nagaland, and in exercise of powers conferred by Article 233 of the Constitution read with Rule 5 (ii) of the Assam Judicial Service (Senior) Rules 1952 is pleased to appoint Sri Upendra Nath Rajkhowa to officiate as Additional District and Sessions Judge, Lower Assam Districts with Headquarters at Nowgong with effect from the date he takes over as such vice Shri M. C. Mahajan.

Sd B Sarma,
Secy., to the Govt.,
Law Department."

2 Then after a month or so Sri Rajkhowa was appointed by the Governor of Assam to be the District and Sessions Judge of Darrang District by the following notification

"Dt 28th July, 1967.

No LJJ 94/67/14 — In exercise of the powers conferred by Article 233 of the Constitution read with Rule 5 (ii) of the Assam Judicial Service (Senior) Rules 1952, the Governor of Assam and Nagaland is pleased to appoint Sri Upendra Nath Rajkhowa, Additional District and Sessions Judge Nowgong to officiate as District and Sessions Judge of Darrang District with Headquarters at Tezpur with effect from 14th August, 1967 or the date on which he takes over as such, whichever is later.

Sd B Sarma,
Secy., to the Govt.,
Law Department"

3. It is submitted by the petitioner that although the notifications say that Sri Rajkhowa was "appointed", in fact, he was "promoted" firstly from the post of Deputy Registrar to that of the Additional District and Sessions Judge and secondly from the post of Additional District and Sessions Judge to the post of District and Sessions Judge. It is further contended that this right to promote a person holding a post which is in the State Judicial Service and inferior to the post of a District Judge, vests in the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution. Hence it was the High Court which should have promoted Sri Rajkhowa. The Government having no authority to promote him, his promotions are void ab initio.

4. The provisions relating to the appointment, promotion of and control over the Subordinate Judicial Officers are laid down in Chapter VI of Part 6 of the Constitution of India. They are as follows.

"233 (1) Appointments of persons to be, and the posting and promotion of, district judges in any State shall be made by the Governor of the State in consultation with the High Court exercising jurisdiction in relation to such State

(2) A person not already in the service of the Union or of the State shall only be eligible to be appointed a district judge if he has been for not less than seven years an advocate or a pleader and is recommended by the High Court for appointment

234 Appointments of persons other than district judges to the judicial service of a State shall be made by the Governor of the State in accordance with rules made by him in that behalf after consultation with the State Public Service Commission and with the High Court exercising jurisdiction in relation to such State

235 The control over district Courts, and Courts subordinate thereto including the posting and promotion of, and the grant of leave to, persons belonging to the judicial service of a State and holding any post inferior to the post of district judge shall be vested in the High Court but nothing in this article shall be construed as taking away from any such person any right of appeal which be may have under the law regulating the conditions of his service or as authorising the High Court to deal with him otherwise than in accordance with the conditions of his service prescribed under such law.

236. In this chapter—

(a) the expression "district judge" includes judge of a city civil court, additional district judge, joint district judge, assistant district judge, Chief Judge of a small cause court, chief presidency magistrate, additional chief presidency magistrate, sessions judge, additional sessions judge and assistant sessions judge;

(b) the expression "judicial service" means a service consisting exclusively of persons intended to fill the post of district judge and other civil judicial post inferior to the post of district judge.

237. The Governor may by public notification direct that the foregoing provisions of this Chapter and any rules made thereunder shall with effect from such date as may be fixed by him in that behalf apply in relation to any class or classes of Magistrates in the State as they apply in relation to persons appointed to the judicial service of the State subject to such exceptions and modifications as may be specified in the notification."

5. The Assam Judicial Service was constituted by the Government of Assam by a notification dated the 25th August, 1952 and designated as "State Judicial Service". Then by a notification No. JJD. 50/51/24 certain Rules were made called the Assam Judicial Service Rules 1952. These Rules were made applicable only to what was called the State Judicial Service (Senior) which was constituted as follows:

Senior Grade I.

- (1) Registrar.
- (2) Legal Remembrancer.
- (3) District Judges.

Senior Grade II.

Additional District Judges.

6. Thereafter on the 9th of April 1954 the State Judicial Service (Junior) was created. Rules in respect of this Service were made by the notification No. LJJ. 84/54/168. This Service was constituted as follows:

Junior Grade I.

- (1) Subordinate Judges.
- (2) Deputy Registrar.

Junior Grade II.

- (1) Munsiffs.
- (2) Assistant Registrar.

7. The appointment of District Judges as well as the appointment of persons other than District Judges to the Judicial Service of a State is made by the Governor vide Articles 233 and 234 of the Constitution. According to the learned Advocate General, the Assam Judicial Service (Senior) and Assam Judicial Service (Junior) are two distinct Services and the appointment of a Subordinate Judge to be the Additional District Judge is not a case of promotion but of appointment. It is difficult to accept this contention of the learned Advocate-General. If this was so, then the Government by including the post of a Subordinate Judge as a Grade III post in the Assam Judicial Service (Senior) could say that when a Munsiff was appointed as a Subordinate Judge, it was a case of appointment and not of promotion. In such a case the power of promotion given to the High Court under Article 235 would become meaningless.

The Bengal, Agra and Oudh Civil Courts Act (hereinafter called the Civil Courts Act) established four classes of Civil Courts in Assam, viz. Court of District Judge, Court of Additional District Judge, Court of Subordinate Judge and Court of Munsiff. Appeal lies from the Court of the Subordinate Judge to the Court of the District Judge if the value of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 7000/-. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in High Court of Calcutta v. Amal Kumar AIR 1962 SC 1704 —

"In the hierarchy of the Courts of a District, the Court of Subordinate Judge is higher in rank than the Court of a Munsiff which stands at the bottom." I may only add that in the said hierarchy, the Court of a Subordinate Judge is lower in rank than the Court of an Additional District Judge.

8. Sri Rajkhowa was holding the post of Deputy Registrar which was in the State Judicial Service and equivalent to the post of a Subordinate Judge. His appointment to the post of an Additional District Judge was a promotion in the same Service viz. the State Judicial Service and under Article 235 of the Constitution this promotion could be given only by the High Court and not by the Government.

9. It may further be noted that Rule 5 of the Assam Judicial Service Rules 1952 stated as follows:

"5. Recruitment. — (i) The Chief Justice of the High Court shall fill up the post of the Registrar by virtue of Article 229 (1) of the Constitution of India preferably from Grade I or Grade II of the service.

(ii) Other posts of the cadre shall be filled up by the Governor in consultation with the High Court. Provided that not more than one-third of the posts in each Grade of the Cadre may be filled up by direct recruitment. The rest of the posts in Grade I and Grade II of the Cadre shall be filled up by promotion from Grade II of the Cadre and from Grade I of the Assam Judicial Service (Junior) respectively."

10. It will be seen that the above Rule provided for filling up of one-third of the posts of Additional District Judges in Grade II of Assam Judicial Service (Senior) by direct recruitment and the rest by promotion from the posts of Subordinate Judges which were in Grade I of Assam Judicial Service (Junior). Therefore, the provision for promotion from the post of a Subordinate Judge to the post of an Additional District Judge was there in the above Rule. The learned Advocate-General points out that under the Rule except the post of Registrar, all other posts of the Judicial Service (Senior) are to be filled up by the Governor. But as the power to promote a person holding a post in the State Judicial Service, inferior to that of a District Judge vests in the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution the above Rule must be held to be invalid so far as it gives that power to the Governor.

11. It appears that the Government realised the weakness of their claim that they had the power to promote a Subordinate Judge simply by treating the promotion as an appointment. Hence the Civil Courts Act was amended by the Assam Act XII of 1967 which was brought into force on the 16th of August 1967. By this amendment, the designation of "Subordinate Judge" was altered to "Assistant District Judge". On the 17th August, 1967, that is one day later, the new Assam Judicial Service Rules 1967 were brought into force. In it the Assam Judicial Service was constituted as follows:

Grade I.

- (1) District & Sessions Judge.
- (2) Registrar.
- (3) Presiding Officer, Industrial Tribunal.
- (4) Presiding Officer, Labour Court.

Grade II

- (1) Additional District Magistrate.
- (2) Assistant District Judge.
- (3) Deputy Registrar.

Grade III

- (1) Munsiff.
- (2) Judicial Magistrate
- (3) Sub-Divisional Magistrate (Judicial)
- (4) Assistant Registrar.

12. The change in the designation was made not to enhance the prestige of the Subordinate Judges who had been always pressing for better conditions of service and not for better designation. Under Article 235 the expression "District Judge" includes an "Assistant District Judge". So obviously the alteration in the designation was made so that the promotion of a Subordinate Judge, redesignated as Assistant District Judge, might not be treated as the promotion of a person holding a post inferior to that of a District Judge. Such a subterfuge to get the power of promoting a Subordinate Judge to the post of an Additional District Judge is clearly a fraud on the Constitution. It is true that under Article 236 the expression "District Judge" includes Additional District Judge, Joint District Judge, Assistant District Judge etc.

When the Constitution came into force, such Additional District Judges, Joint District Judges and Assistant District Judges existed in certain provinces under their respective Acts. For example, under the Bombay Civil Courts Act 1869 there were Joint District Judges and Assistant District Judges in the Bombay Presidency. An Assistant District Judge could be invested with all the powers of a District Judge in respect of a particular area and if he was so invested the jurisdiction of the District Judge ceased in that area. In Assam there was no such Assistant District Judge, Assistant District Judge, Additional District Judge, Joint District Judge etc. mentioned in Article 236 of the Constitution must mean these posts as they existed at the time the Constitution came into force. For example, Article 236 includes within the definition of District Judge, a Judge of a City Civil Court. The Government cannot by changing the designation of the Munsiff to a "Judge of the City Civil Court", take away the power of the High Court to promote a Munsiff to the post of a Subordinate Judge. In the result therefore I hold that the power to promote a Subordinate Judge to the post of Additional District Judge is of the High Court. This power continues even though the designation of a "Subordinate Judge" has been altered to "Assistant District Judge".

13. Next I may take the question of appointment of an Additional District Judge as District Judge. The question is whether such an appointment is a promotion. An Additional District Judge is included in the definition of a District Judge under Article 236. Additional District Judges were there in this State when the Constitution came into force. There cannot be a promotion from a post which is to be treated as the post of a District Judge to a post of a District Judge. Hence the appointment of an Additional District Judge as a District Judge is an appointment pure and simple and not a promotion. Such an appointment has to be made by the Governor in consultation with the High Court under Article 233 of the Constitution. I may summarise by conclusions as follows:

(1) Appointment "to be" a District Judge is to be made by the Governor in consultation with the High Court, vide Article 233.

(2) Promotion "of" a District Judge and not promotion "to be a District Judge" is also to be made by the Governor in consultation with the High Court, vide Article 233. In many States there is Selection Grade for District Judges. Appointment of a District Judge to the Selection Grade will be promotion of a District Judge.

(3) Promotion of a person—

(a) belonging to the State Judicial Service,

(b) holding a post inferior to that of a District Judge is to be made by the High Court.

"Under Article 235 of the Constitution, the High Court is the authority which has the power of promotion in respect of persons belonging to the State Judicial Service and holding any post inferior to that of the District Judge." AIR 1962 SC 1704.

4. Appointment to a post in the Judicial Services other than that of a District Judge is to be made by the Governor in accordance with Rules framed under Article 234.

(5) The various posts included in the expression "District Judge" under Article 236 of the Constitution are the posts which existed under those designations at the time of coming into force of the Constitution. The Government cannot take away the power of the High Court to promote a Subordinate Judge to the post of Additional District Judge simply by changing the designation of the Subordinate Judge to "Assistant District Judge". Legislation making such a change is colourable and a fraud on the Constitution. It may, however, be noted that when Sri Rajkhowa was appointed as Additional District Judge from his post of Deputy Registrar, the designation of the Subordinate Judge was not yet altered to Assistant District Judge.

14. In the result Sri Rajkhowa is not entitled to hold the post of District Judge as his initial promotion to the post of Additional District Judge is void ab initio. It may, however, be noted that

Sri Rajkhowa was also appointed by the Government as Additional Sessions Judge and then as Sessions Judge. These posts were not in the Judicial Service. They are included in the expression "District Judge" under Article 236. The Government being entitled to make these appointments in consultation with High Court under Article 233 read with Article 236, Sri Rajkhowa was appointed to these posts by the competent authority and he could hold them. He could not hold the post of District Judge only. He was entitled to hold the post of Sessions Judge.

15. In giving my interpretations of Articles 233 to 236, I have borne in mind, the policy adopted by the Constituent Assembly and displayed in those Articles. The Supreme Court in the case of State of West Bengal v. Nripendra Nath Bagchi, AIR 1966 SC 447 traced the history of Articles 233 to 237 and pointed out that the trend had been to separate the Judiciary from the Executive. In the said case the Supreme Court interpreted the word "control" in Article 235 and held that the control of the High Court over the subordinate judiciary meant complete control. It observed that "to hold otherwise will be to reverse the policy which has moved determinedly in this direction."

Similarly an ingenious interpretation should not be adopted of the word "promotion" in that Article to deprive the High Court of its power. The intention of the Constituent Assembly was clear that at least the Judicial officers holding posts inferior to that of a District Judge, should entirely look to the High Court and not to the Executive authority for their future prospects. In interpreting the said word, the weight should be in favour of this intention of the Constitution-makers.

16. It appears to be rather surprising that whereas the declared policy of the Government of Assam is to achieve complete separation of the Judiciary from the Executive, it should bring a colourable legislation to deprive the High Court of powers given to it by the Constitution. It is unbelievable that the Government would take actions which go counter to their policy. It is obvious that the Secretary of the Law Department must have misled the Government. In this connection, I like to draw the pointed attention of the Government to what the Supreme Court said in the case of State of Assam v. Ranga Muhammad, AIR 1967 SC 903. In that case the Government refused to transfer a District Judge as recommended by the High Court and the question arose whether the Government or the High Court had the power to transfer a District Judge This Court held that the High Court alone had that power and this decision was upheld by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court observed "This is not the first time when cordiality was ruined because a Secretary's name was suggested by the Minister and was not acceptable to the High Court." In the said case this Court had occasion to remark that in the matter of the transfer of a District Judge, the Government "acted mala fide throughout"

In their appeal to the Supreme Court, the Government prayed that the above remark should be expunged. While refusing to do so the Supreme Court pointed out how a frustrated Secretary could spoil the cordial relationship between the High Court and the Government. The Supreme Court also gave a note of warning that a Secretary might withhold vital informations from a Minister when he was personally interested in the matter. The learned Advocate-General contends that the power to promote a judicial officer given by Article 235 of the Constitution to the High Court, means the power to promote a Munsiff. If the High Court cannot promote a Munsiff even, this power given by the said Article becomes nugatory. But there is R 5 (4) (b) of the Assam Judicial Service Rules 1967 giving this power also to the Government. If the learned Advocate-General finds this rule to be inconsistent with the stand taken by him before us it is his duty to point out the position to the Government. Rule xiv of the Rules framed under Clauses (2) and (3) of Article 165 of the Constitution of India, assigning duties to the Advocate-General says as follows —

"The Advocate-General shall report to Government any flaws in legal enactments and any facts arising therefrom or in connection with cases conducted by him which he thinks, or the High Court desires, should be brought to the notice of the Government"

17. Lastly, as regards the prayer for setting aside the judgment given by Sri Rajkhowa, it may be said that this question cannot be examined in a petition for Quo Warranto. Therefore we should give no decision on the question in this petition whether the judgments given by Sri Rajkhowa as a District Judge are void. I may, however point out that the impugned judgment was given by Sri Rajkhowa not in his capacity as a District Judge but in his capacity as a Sessions Judge. The petition is allowed partially and it is directed that Sri Rajkhowa is not entitled to hold the post of District Judge. But he was appointed by the competent authority to the post of Additional Sessions Judge and then to that of Sessions Judge. He will continue to hold this post. There will be no order as to costs.

18. K. C. SEN, J.: I agree.

19. Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is granted under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution of India, as prayed for, as the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution.

20. The prayer for stay of operation of the order is rejected

TVN/DVC.

Ordered accordingly.

P K GOSWAMI, J.

Kali Kumar Sen and another, Appellants v Haridas Roy, Respondent

Second Appeal No 32 of 1964, D/- 18-12-1968, against decision of Sub. J. No II, Silchar, D/- 26-8-1963

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O 20, R. 5, O. 14, R 1, S. 100 — Plea taken in written statement — No separate issue framed — But question discussed and decided under another issue — Finding not disturbed on technical objection in second appeal.

In a case for recovery of possession from the lessee, the lessee (defendant) questioned the validity of the notice terminating the lease in the written statement filed by him. Though there was no specific issue in that respect, the matter was gone into while discussing the issue about the maintainability of the suit.

Held, that the plaintiff at the stage of second appeal would be precluded from raising a technical objection that the finding on that question was bad for want of pleading and issue.

(B) T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 106 and 107 — Lease of place for making steel trucks — Notice of termination giving 15 days' time invalid — No conflict between Sections 106 and 107. AIR 1952 Cal 320, Diss.

The lease in question was taken for making trunks out of steel sheets and for sale of those trunks. The tenancy was sought to be terminated by a 15 days' notice. The rent payable was Rs. 12/- per month. The defence was that the lease being one for manufacturing purpose, the notice was invalid and insufficient under the law.

CM/FM/A991/69/D

Held, applying the test that there must be production of a new and different article or the process must be such as to convert one kind into another, that the lease in question was a manufacturing lease and the notice giving only 15 days' time was invalid in law.

An argument that the lease having been held to be one for manufacturing purpose, it would be a lease from year to year under S. 106 of T. P. Act and therefore the lease in the absence of registration as required under S. 107 T. P. Act was void, was overruled. (Para 10)

For the purpose of Section 106 of the T. P. Act, in the absence of a contract etc., there will be a presumption under the law, in view of the purpose of the lease, in favour of a lease from year to year, even though a written lease for manufacturing purpose from year to year or for any term exceeding one year, must be by a registered instrument. For the purpose of Section 106 in respect of the duration of the lease and for the purpose of the period of the notice for terminating such lease, the lease will be deemed to be a lease from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose for which it has been made. There is no conflict between Section 106 and Section 107 of the T. P. Act. The rubric of Section 106 clearly indicates that it refers to only duration of certain leases in absence of a written contract or local usage. If no contract is established in a particular case, the provision of section 106 of the T. P. Act will operate and section 107 will not stand as a bar to giving effect to section 106. JUDGMENT: This second appeal is directed against the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge No. 2, Silchar, affirming the judgment and decree of the learned Munsif of Silchar.

2. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendant is a tenant under them in respect of the suit holding, which is a room in a two-storeyed building. The rent was payable at the rate of Rupees 12/- per month according to the Bengali calendar month. They, therefore, gave a notice to the defendant on 7th Bhadra 1336 B. S., corresponding to 24th August, 1959, by registered post asking the defendant to vacate at the end of the month of Bhadra. They also demanded payment of all arrears of rent within seven days of the receipt of that notice. The defendant did not reply to the notice nor complied with the demand and hence the plaintiffs filed the present suit.

3. The defendant pleaded that he took the settlement for starting his trunk factory and gold-smith work-shop. Hence the notice is invalid and insufficient under the law. He also denied that the plaintiffs have any bona fide requirement of their own for the premises.

4. The learned Munsiff held that the lease was for manufacturing purpose and hence the notice given in this case was invalid and insufficient. The learned Munsiff, however, held that since the defendant has admitted that he has acquired a residence at Silchar Bilpar, he is liable to be evicted under section 6 (1) (f) of the Assam Urban Areas Rent Control Act. He also held against the plaintiffs regarding their bona fide requirement. Since, however, the notice was held to be invalid, the learned Munsiff dismissed the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge dealt only with the point of notice and agreed with the finding of the learned Munsiff that the lease was for manufacturing purpose, and, as such, the notice giving the defendant only fifteen days' time expiring with the month of the tenancy is insufficient in law.

5. Mr. Lahiri, the learned Counsel for the appellants, submits that both the courts below erred in law in deciding against the plaintiffs regarding the validity of the notice of eviction served in this suit. He contends that there is no averment in the written statement that the notice is invalid on the ground taken, namely that the lease was for manufacturing purpose. On the other hand, it is submitted that the admitted position being that rent was payable monthly according to Bengali calendar, the lease must be held to be from month to month. He further submits that even on the facts found by the court below, the case does not come within the ambit of the expression "manufacturing purpose" within the meaning of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. He submits that the popular rather than the etymological meaning should be given to the expression "manufacturing purpose".

6. I have gone through the findings of the courts below on this point. Both the courts below found after appreciation of the evidence that the lease was for manufacturing purpose. The defendant in paragraph 7 of his written statement describing the real facts averred that he has been running the business of manufacturing and selling trunks and of gold and silver there in the suit premises.

In paragraph 4 of the written statement, the defendant avers that the notice described in the plaint is illegal, invalid and insufficient. Paragraphs 4 and 7 read together do not support the contention of Mr Lahiri that the ground of invalidity of the notice, which was pleaded in the courts below and accepted by the courts, was absent in the written statement. The question of validity of the notice was definitely pleaded by the defendant in his written statement and the courts below rightly went into it although no specific issue was framed in the suit. The courts below discussed this issue while discussing issue no 2 regarding the maintainability of the suit. No objection, therefore, can be taken by the plaintiffs on this technical ground in a second appeal.

7. The next important point is whether on the facts found by the courts below, the lease could be held to be taken for manufacturing purpose. Mr Lahiri submits that the facts disclosed in the evidence do not warrant the conclusion that any manufacture takes place in the premises in suit. The word 'manufacture' in the Chambers' Dictionary is stated to mean "to make, originally by hand, now usually by machinery and on a large scale". The Webster Dictionary also gives the same meaning "a making of goods and articles by hand or specially by machinery often on a large scale with a division of labour". The root of the word 'manufacture' in Latin is 'Manu' (hand) and Factura (making) from Latin 'Factus'.

Mr Lahiri relies on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sati Prasanna Mukherjee v Md. Fazal, AIR 1952 Cal 320 of p. 321, to support his contention that the present case is not one of manufacturing purpose and reads the following passage:

"The word 'manufacture' must in this context in my opinion be construed in a popular sense. The popular concept is that there must be production of a new or a different article or the process must be such as converts one kind of article into another kind. The observations of Lord Westbury, Lord Chancellor in 'Ralston v Smith' (1866) H. L. C. 223 at p. 246 are material on the point. They are

"Your Lordships are well aware that by the large interpretation given to the word 'manufacture' it not only comprehends productions, but it also comprehends the means of producing them. Therefore in addition to the thing produced it will comprehend a new machine or a new process or an improvement of an old process."

The learned Judge in the Calcutta case was dealing with a lease, the material portion of which ran as follows

"I shall pay the rent Rs 175/- per month according to the English calendar month and I shall occupy the same for dwelling purpose, for setting up a press and for ordinary business purposes."

The learned Judge, on construction of these words, held the lease to be for multiple purposes, and, as such, not a lease for manufacturing purpose within the meaning of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Regarding 'manufacture' also, the learned Judge held that printing simpliciter is not always 'manufacture'.

On the other hand, Mr. Ghose, the learned Counsel for the respondents, relied on a Division Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Jayanti Hosiery Mills v Upendra Chandra Das, 50 Cal WN 441 : (AIR 1946 Cal 317) and read the following passage therefrom:

"A lease of a premises where cotton sheets were worked into articles of hosiery and made ready for the market by cutting and knitting machines is a lease for manufacturing purposes within section 106 of the 'Transfer of Property Act, 1884, although the yarn and the sheet from the raw material were not prepared there."

Mr. Lahiri also drew my attention to a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Krishna Das Nandy v. Bidhan Chandra Roy, AIR 1959 Cal 181, and relied on the following passage at Para 33:

"The overall position thus seems to be that the tenancy was taken for starting a motor repair 'works' or a motor repairing workshop which would not, even ordinarily or prima facie and, certainly not, necessarily, be a manufacturing purpose."

The test laid down in the Calcutta decision 50 Cal W. N. 441 : (AIR 1946 Cal 317) which has been also noticed in the Calcutta decision AIR 1952 Cal 320 at p. 321, is that there must be production of a new and different article or the process must be such as to convert one kind into another. This feature was absent in the case AIR 1952 Cal 320 (at p. 321), but was present in the Jayanti Hosiery Mills' case 50 Cal W. N. 441 : (AIR 1946 Cal 317). In view of the dictionary meaning as also the popular meaning noticed in these Calcutta decisions, I am in respectful agreement with the views expressed therein and applying the same test, I am of the opinion on the facts found in this case that in the present case the main purpose was to prepare in large scale trunks from iron sheets and the secondary purpose was for sale. Obviously, new articles, namely trunks were produced out of the iron sheets and the tests laid down in the Calcutta decisions as also by Lord Westbury, Lord Chancellor in 1866 HLC 223, clearly apply to the instant case. There is, therefore, no error of law committed by the courts below in holding that the lease was for manufacturing purpose. Obviously, therefore, section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act was attracted and the notice giving only fifteen days' time is invalid in law and the plaintiffs' suit has rightly been dismissed on this ground alone.

8. Mr. Lahiri also strongly relied on a Single Bench decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 156 of 1962 D/- 11-2-1965 (Assam) for the purpose of his submission that mere conducting of manufacture in the house will not convert this to be a lease for manufacturing purpose. But the following passage in that very judgment would clearly show that Mr. Lahiri does not get aid from this decision at all:

"To attract the operation of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is not enough if a premises is taken on lease, and subsequently a factory is established at the convenience and wish of the tenant. As the clear language of the section indicates, the lease itself must have been given for manufacturing purposes, that is for the purpose of using the premises for manufacturing purposes."

I have already noticed that there is a definite finding in favour of the defendant by both the courts below that he took the premises for manufacturing purpose. There is, therefore, no question of the purpose being introduced at a subsequent stage after taking of the lease.

9. Mr. Lahiri also relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ram Kumar Das v. Jagdish Chandra Deo,

AIR 1952 SC 23, for his proposition that in this case admittedly the mode of payment of rent being a monthly payment, the lease should be presumed from month to month and hence the notice given in this case is a valid notice. He relied on the following passage:

"It has no doubt been recognised in several cases that the mode in which a rent is expressed to be payable affords a presumption that the tenancy is of a character corresponding thereto. Consequently, when the rent reserved is an annual rent, the presumption would arise that the tenancy was an annual tenancy unless there is something to rebut the presumption."

If we carefully read this decision, we find that the mode of payment is taken into account amongst other things for ascertaining whether there is a contract to the contrary. This will appear from the argument advanced by Mr. Setalvad who relied very strongly upon the fact that the rent paid in that case was an annual rent and he argued that from this fact it can fairly be inferred that the agreement between the parties was certainly not to create a monthly tenancy. Mr. Setalvad's difficulty in this case was that the contract which he was trying to establish on the facts of this case was palpably contradicted by the admitted facts of the case.

Their Lordships of the Supreme Court disposing of this contention held as follows:

"It is one thing to say that in the absence of a valid agreement, the rights of the parties would be regulated by law in the same manner as if no agreement existed at all; it is quite another thing to substitute a new agreement for the parties which is palpably contradicted by the admitted facts of the case."

It must also be observed that in this case before the Supreme Court, it was conceded that the tenancy was not for manufacturing nor for agricultural purpose, which is not the case in this second appeal before me. Here the defendant is asserting that the lease was for manufacturing purpose and there is a concurrent finding of fact in his favour in that respect".

Their Lordships particularly observed:

"The section lays down a rule of construction which is to be applied when there is no period agreed upon between the parties. In such cases the duration has to be determined by reference to the object or purpose for which the tenancy is created. The rule of construction embodied in this section applies not only to express leases of uncertain duration but also to leases implied by law which may be inferred from possession and acceptance of rent and other circumstances"

This decision of the Supreme Court is, therefore, of no assistance to Mr Lahiri in this case where section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be applied and no contract to the contrary has been established in the case

10. Mr Lahiri next contended that even if it is conceded that the lease is for manufacturing purpose, such a lease in absence of a registered instrument will be void under section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. To appreciate this submission we may read the material portion of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act

"106 In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immoveable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy; and a lease of immoveable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by fifteen days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy"

Section 106 lays down a rule of construction. Even if an oral lease of immoveable property for manufacturing purpose is established and nothing to the contrary is proved, the rule of construction provided for in section 106 will be applicable. Such a lease by its deeming provision shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year terminable by six months' notice expiring with the end of the year of the tenancy. For the purpose of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract etc. there will be a presumption under the law in view of the purpose of the lease, in favour of a lease from year to year, even though a written lease for manufacturing purpose from year to year or for any term exceeding one year must be by a registered instrument. For the purpose of section 106 in respect of the duration of the lease and for the purpose of the period of the notice for terminating such lease, the lease will be deemed to be a lease from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose for which it has been made. In my judgment, there is no conflict between section 106 and section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. The rubric of S 106 clearly indicates that it refers to only duration of certain lease in absence of a written contract or local usage. If no contract is established in a particular case, the provision of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act will operate and section 107 will not stand as a bar to giving effect to section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

11. Mr Lahiri relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court AIR 1952 Cal 320 and read the following passage

"A lease which under the law (e.g. under section 106) is 'deemed' to be a lease from year to year is nonetheless 'a lease from year to year' under section 107 of the Act and must therefore satisfy the statutory requirement of registration subject of course to the provision of section 53A. of the Transfer of Property Act"

The learned Judge was unable to hold in that case that there was a lease for manufacturing purpose in absence of a registered lease. Mr Ghose, on the other hand placed strong reliance in the decision reported in AIR 1959 Cal 181, which took a contrary view of the decision on which Mr Lahiri relied, wherefrom the following passage may be quoted

"Section 107 does not control section 106 and notwithstanding the former section, the latter will apply to a manufacturing lease, whether registered or unregistered so as to make it a lease from year to year for purposes of that section (section 106), terminable with a six months' notice to quit, or in other words, to control its duration and period of notice in the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary. The lease will be a lease from year to year for the limited purpose of section 106, that is, for the limited purpose of its duration and period of notice, the duration being until the notice expires. This will not raise any conflict with S 107". The same view was adopted also by another Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case AIR 1963 Cal 198, and the contention of Mr Lahiri is, therefore, devoid of any substance

12. Since the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed on the ground of invalidity of the notice, it is not necessary to deal with the other points raised by Mr Lahiri regarding some of the issues decided against the plaintiffs by the learned Munsif. These issues are, therefore, left open for adjudication in any future proceeding between the parties

13. In the result the appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed but in the entire circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs in any of the courts.

14. Prayer for leave to appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is allowed

U. Prellyshon Lyngdoh Nongum, Petitioner v. Executive Committee, District Council, United Khasi-Jaintia Hills, Shillong and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 137 of 1967, D/- 27-2-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Sixth Schedule, Paras 2 (4), 3 (1) (g) — Powers of District Council of autonomous district— Nature of — Appointment and removal of Myntri and declaration of his election as void is within jurisdiction of District Council — (United Khasi Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen) Act (Assam Act 2 of 1959), Pre — Applicability) — (Assam Autonomous Districts (Constitution of District Councils) Rules (1951), Rr. 28, 3 (1)).

The District Council is both an administrative as well as a legislative body and the District Council is in charge of administration of autonomous district which carries with it the power to appoint officers to carry on administration. Under para 3 (1) (g) of the Sixth Schedule to the Constitution it has power to make laws with respect to the appointment or succession of Chiefs or Headmen and this naturally includes the power to remove them, but it does not follow from this that the appointment or removal of Chief is a legislative act or that no appointment or removal could be made without there being first a law to that effect. Para 2 (4) of the Sixth Schedule provides that the administration of an autonomous district shall vest in the District Council and this is comprehensive enough to include all such executive powers as are necessary to be exercised for the purposes of the administration of the District. The authority concerned have at all relevant times the power to appoint or remove administrative personnel under the general power of administration vested in them by the Sixth Schedule before laws are framed under para 3 (1) of the Sixth Schedule. AIR 1961 SC 276 Foll. (Para 10)

The Syiem is an officer under the District Council, a Myntri, which is included in the term 'Headmen', also is an officer under the District Council to carry on the administration of the autonomous district. Therefore even prior to Act 2 of 1959, namely the United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen) Act, 1959, which came into force in October 1959, the District Council had jurisdiction to appoint a Myntri and to remove him. (Paras 11, 16)

Moreover, Act No. 2 of 1959 which is passed under Para 3 (1) (g) of the Sixth Schedule is a valid law and is applicable to the case of removal of a Myntri by the District Council, even though his election took place prior to commencement of the Act.

(Para 15)

(B) (Assam) United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen) Act (2 of 1959), S. 7 — Election of Myntri— Its Confirmation by Syiem and his Durbar — Appeal against, to the Executive Council of District Council is maintainable. (Para 17)

J. P. Bhattacharjee and B. M. Mahanta, for Petitioner; N. M. Lahiri and B. S. Guha, for Respondents.

PATHAK, J.: This writ petition is directed against the order dated 30-1-67 passed by the Executive Committee, District Council, United Khasi-Jaintia Hills and the order dated 3-2-67 passed by the Chief Executive Member, District Council, United Khasi-Jaintia Hills, Shillong.

2. The petitioner's case is that in the year 1954 the office of the Myntri from the Lyngdoh Nongum clan fell vacant and the Durbar of Nongkhlaw Syiemship issued a parwana dated 15-2-54 to the said clan to elect a Myntri from it. The election was held on 21-5-56 and the petitioner secured 23 votes as against 7 votes secured by his nearest rival U Siton Lyngdoh Nongum and accordingly the petitioner was duly elected as a Myntri from the Lyngdoh Nongum clan and the election was confirmed by the Syiem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar and this fact was reported to the Executive Committee, District Council United Khasi-Jaintia Hills (Respondent No. 1) on 29-5-56. In the said election, U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum (Respondent No. 3) was not a candidate. Thereafter, U Siton Lyngdoh Nongum filed an application to the Executive Member, District Council against the election and confirmation of the petitioner as Myntri of the Durbar of Nongkhlaw Syiemship. The Executive Member, by his order dated 18-9-57 held that the petitioner was not qualified to be a candidate in the election and that U Siton Lyngdoh Nongum secured 17 votes and that 13 of the 23 votes secured by the petitioner were invalid. The petitioner thereafter filed a civil suit being Title Suit No. 1/58. in the Subordinate District Council Court, praying for a declaration inter alia that he was duly elected Myntri on the result of the election held by the Syiem of Nongkhlaw Issue No. 10 in that suit was as follows:

"Whether the Executive Committee of the District Council has jurisdiction to entertain appeal against the order of the Siem regarding the election of the Myntri in the Nongkhlaw Syiemship?"

The learned Presiding Officer of the Subordinate District Council Court by his order dated 9-5-59 decided the issue in favour of the petitioner and declared the impugned order dated 18-9-57 passed by the Executive Member to be without jurisdiction on the ground that there was no provision for appeal against the election held by the Syiem. U Siton Lyngdoh preferred an appeal before the District Council Court against the said order and the learned Judge, District Council Court, by his order dated 8-9-59 dismissed the appeal and directed the suit to proceed as expeditiously as possible. The petitioner then filed a revision petition before the High Court against the said order of the learned Judge of the District Council Court and the case was numbered as Civil Revision No 29 (H)/59. The High Court by a common judgment and order dated 17-8-60 passed in Civil Revision Nos. 27(H)/59, 28(H)/59 and 29(H)/59 dismissed the petition. Title Suit No 1 of 1958 was however ultimately dismissed by the Presiding Officer of the Subordinate District Council Court in view of the coming into force of the United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen), Act, 1959 (United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Act No 11 of 1959), hereinafter called 'the Act'. That thereafter the petitioner was holding the office of a Myntri in the Durbar of Nongkhlaw Syiemship. The respondent No 3, U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum, reported to the District Council that the petitioner was acting as a Myntri in spite of the order dated 18-9-57 of the Executive Member in Political Case No 2/56 and the District Council sent the matter for decision by the Syiem of Nongkhlaw U Siton in the meantime died. Respondent No 3 U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum substituted himself to the position of the deceased U Siton. The Syiem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar by their order dated 9-9-66 confirmed the election of the petitioner as Myntri on consideration of all the relevant facts and on the basis of the aforesaid order dated 9-5-59 passed in Title Suit No 1 of 1958. The decision of the Syiem and his Durbar dated 9-9-66 was conveyed to the District Council but the Chief Executive Member of the District Council issued an order dated 3-2-67 holding that the petitioner was not a Myntri according to the previous order dated 18-9-57 passed by the Member, Executive Committee, and that fresh election should be held for electing a new Myntri in the vacancy. In the said order dated 3-2-67, reference was made to an order dated 30-1-67 of the Executive Committee of the District Council.

3 The petitioner has filed this application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India for quashing the order dated 30-1-67 passed by the Executive Committee of the District Council and also the order dated 3-2-67 passed by the Chief Executive Member of the District Council.

4. The point that falls for determination in the case is whether the order dated 30-1-67 passed by the Executive Committee and the order dated 3-2-67 passed by the Chief Executive Member of the District Council were within their jurisdiction and were legally valid.

5. Mr Bhattacharjee, the learned counsel appearing for the petitioner submitted that the Act, namely Act 11 of 1959, had no application to the instant case inasmuch as the election took place in 1956 and as such the jurisdiction that had been conferred by the said Act upon the Executive Committee regarding the election matters was not with it and therefore the impugned orders were without jurisdiction. The second submission made by the learned counsel was that even assuming that the Act was applicable, the impugned orders dated 30-1-67 and 3-2-67 were contrary to the provisions of the said Act.

6. In order to deal with the first point raised by the learned counsel, we have to consider the fact whether the election of the petitioner took place prior to the coming into force of the said Act and his election continued and stood as valid. There is no dispute regarding the fact that an election of a Myntri from the Lyngdoh Nongum Clan took place in pursuance of a parwana dated 15-2-54 issued by the Durbar of Nongkhlaw Syiemship. The election was held on 21-5-56. The petitioner's case is that he secured 23 votes and U Siton secured 7 votes and as such he was elected as Myntri. It is also admitted in the petition itself that U Siton filed an application to the Executive Member of the District Council against the election and confirmation of the petitioner as a Myntri and the Executive Member by his order dated 18-9-57 set aside the order of Syiem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar confirming the election of the petitioner and ordered that U Siton should be appointed as a Myntri in place of late U Insingh. Against this order, the petitioner filed the Title Suit No 1/58 in the Subordinate District Council Court. Issue No. 10 as mentioned above in that suit was heard as a preliminary issue and the learned Presiding Officer of the Subordinate District Council Court held that the District Council was not an election tribunal, nor a civil court and the District Council acted illegally in entertaining the appeal of U Siton and its order was without jurisdiction and he held that the order passed in Political Case No. 2/56 was void. Thus, the issue No. 10 in that suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff (petitioner).

On appeal, the learned Judge, District Council Court, held that it was not necessary to decide issue No. 10 and therefore he remanded the case to the learned trial Court to proceed with the suit. Against this order of the learned Judge, District Council Court, Civil Revision No. 29 (H)/59 was filed in the High Court wherein the High Court held as follows:

"As regards Civil Revision No. 29 (H)/59, filed on behalf of the plaintiff, we are of the opinion that there is no substance in this petition also. The decision of the lower appellate Court was in favour of the plaintiff inasmuch as the suit was held to be maintainable and the case was sent back for trial on merits by the court below. The applicant, therefore, can have no grievance against the order of the appellate Court. The contention of the petitioner, however, is that the decision of the trial Court was conclusive so far as the suit itself was concerned, and, therefore, the appellate Court was not right in not going into that issue and holding that it was not material to decide that issue. The decision of the trial Court on that issue was that the decision of the District Council was without jurisdiction and therefore, the suit was maintainable. To that extent the decision of the trial Court was in favour of the present petitioner. That decision is still there, and it cannot be said that that decision has been wiped out by the decision of the appellate Court. If the petitioner wants to contend that the decision of the trial Court on that point is conclusive, in so far as the suit is concerned, it is open to him to raise that point before the trial Court; but it cannot be said that the petitioner has in any way been affected by the order of the appellate Court. There is, therefore, no force in this revision either."

The High Court sent back the case to the trial Court for its disposal on merits.

7. Accordingly the case went back to the Presiding Officer, Subordinate District Council Court, who by his judgment and order dated 7-7-61 held that in view of Act II of 1959, namely the United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen), Act, 1959, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit and the suit was therefore liable to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The learned Presiding Officer of the Subordinate District Council Court held that the suit also abated as the main defendant was dead and the plaintiff waived his right to substitute the deceased defendant and had voluntarily allowed the suit to stand abated. The suit was thus dismissed for want of jurisdiction and for abatement. The petitioner did not move any higher Court or authority against the judgment and decree dated 7-7-61 passed by the Presiding Officer, Subordinate District Council Court. In the result, the order that was passed by the Executive Member on 18-9-57 setting aside the election of the petitioner and declaring U Siton as a Myntri stood as it was. The finding of the Subordinate District Council Court on issue 10 in the suit that the District Council had no jurisdiction to pass the order lapsed and became ineffective when the suit itself was dismissed finally for want of jurisdiction and abatement.

In the circumstances, I hold that whatever might have been the position prior to 7-7-61 but with effect from that date the petitioner must be bound by the order dated 18-9-57 passed by the Executive Member, District Council declaring his election invalid and as such the petitioner could not have continued to hold the office of Myntri. I therefore hold that when the said Act II of 1959 came into effect the election of the petitioner did not continue as valid and the Executive Committee of the District Council had jurisdiction to pass the impugned orders dated 30-1-67 and 3-2-67 which were passed in a case that arose out of a petition dated 23-3-63.

8. Mr. Bhattacharjee, the learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that even though the finding on issue No. 10 in the above suit might not exist after the dismissal of the suit, the order dated 18-9-57 passed by the Executive Committee was without jurisdiction inasmuch as there was no custom or customary law providing an appeal to the Executive Committee or the District Council from the order of the Syiem and the Durbar of Nongkhaw.

9. Mr. Lahiri, the learned counsel appearing for the respondents submitted that even prior to Independence these elections of Syiem and Headmen were approved and confirmed by the Deputy Commissioner, representing the Crown and that was the custom prevalent and after the Constitution came into force the power and jurisdiction that was exercised by the Deputy Commissioner vested in the District Council and as such the District Council had the jurisdiction to deal with these matters concerning elections and that custom in fact had been recognised under the said Act II of 1959 by which jurisdiction had been vested in the Executive Committee, representing the District Council and as such the order dated 18-9-57 passed by the Executive Member on behalf of the District Council was in accordance with the existing custom and was within jurisdiction. He further submitted that no competent court had set aside that order and it stood as valid and consequently the petitioner's election stood set aside with the dismissal of T S 1/58

10 In this connection Mr Lahiri referred to the case of T. Caje v U Jormanik Siem, AIR 1961 SC 276. In that case, their Lordships of the Supreme Court have held that the District Council is both an administrative as well as a legislative body and the District Council is in charge of administration of autonomous district which carried with it the power to appoint officers to carry on administration. Under para 3 (1) (g) of the Sixth Schedule to the Constitution it has power to make laws with respect to the appointment or succession of Chiefs or Headmen and thus would naturally include the power to remove them, but it does not follow from this that the appointment or removal of Chief is a legislative act or that no appointment or removal could be made without there being first a law to that effect. Para 2 (4) of the Sixth Schedule provides that the administration of an autonomous district shall vest in the District Council and this is comprehensive enough to include all such executive powers as are necessary to be exercised for the purposes of the administration of the District. That the authority concerned would at all relevant times have the power to appoint or remove administrative personnel under the general power of administration vested in them by the Sixth Schedule before laws are framed under para 3 (1) of the Sixth Schedule.

11. As the Siem is an officer under the District Council, as held by the Supreme Court, a Myntri, which is included in the term 'Headmen', also must be deemed to be an officer under the District Council to carry on the administration of the autonomous district. In this view, I hold that prior to Act II of 1959, namely the United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Appointment and Succession of Chiefs and Headmen) Act, 1959, which came into force in October 1959, the District Council had jurisdiction to appoint a Myntri and to remove him. This is also clear from the fact that after election of the petitioner in 1954, his election was reported to the Executive Committee of the District Council before whom the defeated candidate U Siton also filed an application and the matter was decided by the Executive Committee by its order dated 18-9-57. The executive functions of the District Council are vested in the Executive Committee under Rule 23 of the Assam Autonomous Districts (Constitution of District Councils) Rules, 1951 and under R 31 (1) of the said Rules, each Member of the Executive Committee is entrusted with specific subjects. Rule 31 (1) runs as follows.

"Each member of the Executive Committee shall be entrusted with specific subjects, the allocation of the subjects being made by the Chief Executive Member. The Executive Committee shall be collectively responsible for all executive orders issued in the name of the District Council in accordance with these rules, whether such orders are authorised by an individual Member of the Executive Committee on a matter appertaining to his subject or as a result of discussion at a meeting of the Executive Committee, or howsoever otherwise." The order dated 18-9-57 was passed by the Executive Member in charge of Election, District Council, United Khasi-Jaintia Hills. It is not disputed that the particular member was in charge of Election. It must therefore be held that the order dated 18-9-57 was the order passed on behalf of the Executive Committee of the District Council and it was within its jurisdiction.

12. From the counter affidavit filed by the Chief Executive Member of the District Council, it is found that the orders dated 3-2-67 and 30-1-67 were passed in a case which started before the Siem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar on the representation dated 23rd March 1963 of U Jrang Singh and other members of the Lyngdoh Nongum Clan praying for confirmation of their nominee namely, U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum as Myntri representing the Lyngdoh Nongum Clan of Nongkhlaw Siemship. That U Hedri never approached the Siem and his Durbar or, for that matter, the Executive Committee, in the capacity of a substitute in place of late U Siton. That the office of a Myntri was a personal right and neither U Hedri nor U Prellyshon nor anybody else for that matter could claim the right of succession.

13 From the order of the Siem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar dated 9-9-

66 (Annexure 5 to the petition), it is found that the case arose out of the petition filed by U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum in the District Council. In that petition, U Hedri Lyngdoh Nongum claimed that U Prellyshon Lyngdoh Nongum was no longer a Myntri and secondly he claimed that he should be a Myntri in the place of U Prellyshon. The District Council sent the matter to the Durbar of the Syiem of Nongkhlaw for disposal. Both U Prellyshon and U Hedri were heard and the Syiem and his Durbar held as follows:

"In the judgment of the High Court in the Civil Revision No. 29(H) of 1959 it is stated that the above judgment of the District Council Court still stands. So the order of the Durbar regarding appointing U Prellyshon as Myntri still stands."

"About the claim made by U Hedri Lyngdoh that he should be declared a Myntri in the place of U Prellyshon the Durbar hereby rejects because U Prellyshon is still a Myntri, and even if U Prellyshon is no longer a Myntri there should be fresh election for a Myntri in his place."

From this order of Syiem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar, it appears that U Prellyshon, the petitioner, was deemed to be a Myntri because of the finding of the High Court in Civil Revision No. 29(H)/59. They, of course, rejected the prayer of U Hedri to be declared as Myntri in place of U Prellyshon. The finding of the Syiem and his Durbar that U Prellyshon continued as Myntri was really passed on the decision of issue No. 10 in T. S. 1/58. But when the T. S. 1/58 was itself dismissed, the trial court's finding that the District Council had no jurisdiction to pass the order dated 18-9-57 could not stand. In the circumstances the order of the Syiem of Nongkhlaw and his Durbar to the effect that the appointment of the petitioner, U Prellyshon still held could not stand in the eye of law.

14. By their order dated 30-1-67, the Executive Committee had pointed out that U Prellyshon, the petitioner, was never a Myntri from the Lyngdoh-Nongum clan in view of the order dated 18-9-57 of the Executive Committee and therefore the Executive Committee ordered fresh election of the Myntri by the Durbar of Nongkhlaw clan Syiemship. By his order dated 3-2-67, the Chief Executive Member of the District Council also had referred to the order dated 18-9-57 and held that U Prellyshon, the present petitioner, was not a Myntri. By the two impugned orders, the Executive Committee only referred to the earlier order dated 18-9-57 and that order as discussed above has not been set aside by any competent court and must be held to be effective.

15. Under para 2 (4) of the Sixth Schedule to the Constitution, the administration of an autonomous district has been vested in the District Council for such district, subject to the provisions of the Sixth Schedule. Under para 3 (1) (g) and (j) of the Sixth Schedule, the District Council has power to make laws with respect to the appointment or succession of Chiefs or Headmen and social customs. It has been held in the case of AIR 1961 SC 276 that the District Council is both an administrative as well as a legislative body. United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Act II of 1959 has been passed under para 3 (1) (g) of the Sixth Schedule and in the aforesaid decision of the Supreme Court this Act has been held to be a valid law. In the circumstances, I hold that the said Act II of 1959 is applicable to the facts of the present case.

16. Under Rule 28 (1) of the Assam Autonomous Districts (Constitution of District Councils) Rules, 1951, the executive function of the District Council has been vested in the Executive Committee. The impugned order dated 30-1-67 was passed by the Executive Committee, by which it ordered for fresh election of a Myntri by the Durbar of Nongkhlaw Syiemship as the office of the Myntri was lying vacant. By the order dated 3-2-67 passed by the Chief Executive Member of the District Council, he drew the attention of the Syiem of Nongkhlaw to the order dated 30-1-67 passed by the Executive Committee and directed the Durbar of Lyngdoh Nongum Clan to hold the election of the new Myntri as soon as possible according to the rules and customs. On a consideration of the above provisions of law, I am clearly of the opinion that when the petitioner's election stood set aside and the vacancy occurred, the Executive Committee of the District Council had every jurisdiction to order for a fresh election of the Myntri. In the circumstances, I hold that the petitioner has no legal right to move this writ petition for declaring his election to be valid when his election had been set aside by the Executive Committee's order dated 18-9-57. I further hold that the impugned order dated 30-1-67 passed by the Executive Committee and the order dated 3-2-67 passed by the Chief Executive Member of the District Council are within their jurisdiction and are valid in law.

17. The next point urged by Mr. Bhattacharjee is that there was no appeal before the Executive Committee from the decision of the Syiem and his

Durbar and as there was no such appeal, the orders passed by the Executive Committee and the Chief Executive Member of the District Council were without jurisdiction. Under section 7 of the said Act, there must be first an election of the Myntri which shall be confirmed by the Syiem and his Durbar and the name of such Myntri shall forthwith be sent by the Syiem to the Executive Committee. If any dispute arose regarding any matter relating to or connected with the election of Headmen, the disputes shall be referred by the party or parties concerned to the Syiem and his Durbar for decision. An appeal against such decision shall lie to the Executive Committee, whose decision shall be final.

In the instant case, however, after the order of the Executive Committee passed on 18-9-57, the office of the Myntri in question remained vacant. The other contestant U Siton, who was declared Myntri by the Executive Committee, in the meantime died. Consequently the office remained vacant, and the Executive Committee's direction was to hold a fresh election for electing a Myntri. U Jrang Singh and other members of the Lyngdoh Nongum Clan filed a petition dated 23-3-63 praying for confirmation of their nominee, namely U Hedri Lyngodh Nongum as a Myntri representing the Lyngdoh Nongum Clan of Nongkhaw Syiemship. This petition was not filed by U Hedri in the capacity of a substitute in place of late U Siton. That petition was heard inter partes by the Syiem and his Durbar and they rejected the claim of U Hedri Lyngdoh and at the same time they held that U Prellyshon Lyngdoh Nongum still remained as a Myntri. If it was found that U Prellyshon was no longer a Myntri, there should be a fresh election for a Myntri in his place. As discussed hereinabove, the fact remained that the office of Myntri fell vacant and therefore the Executive Committee which was in charge of the executive functions of the District Council had the jurisdiction to direct for a fresh election and for this purpose no appeal need be preferred by anybody as contemplated under S 7 of the said Act.

18. In the result, the petitioner is not entitled to any remedy in this writ petition, which is accordingly dismissed. The Rule is discharged. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

19. S. K. DUTTA, C. J. I agree
DVT/D V.C. Petition dismissed.

AIR 1969 BOMBAY 401 (V 56 C 69)

(NAGPUR BENCH)

DESHMUKH AND CHANDURKAR, JJ.

Union of India owning & administering Central Railway per General Manager and another, Appellants v. M/s. Kalinga Textiles Private Ltd. Company and another, Respondents.

First Appeal No. 33 of 1961, D/- 26-2-1968, under decision of Joint Civil J., Sr. Dvn., Akola in Spl. Civil Suit No. 6B of 1958.

(A) Railways Act (1890), S. 74E (old)—Wagon catching fire in transit — Duty of Railway Administration to prove how the wagon was handled on the way — Negligence of Railway servant — Burden of proof — (Contract Act (1872), Ss. 151, 152, 161) — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 106).

The responsibility of the railways as carriers is that of bailees under the provisions of sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Contract Act, subject to the provisions of the Railways Act. Where an entire wagon was hired and fire had taken place to the wagon on the way, it is for the Railway Administration to lead evidence about the transit of this wagon from place to place and to disclose the entire information about the care taken in the handling of these goods. When the wagon is found to have caught fire, it would be appropriate for the defendant-railway administration to lead evidence of the Train Examiner who examined the wagon before it was allotted and also of the Train Examiner who was supposed to examine it after the fire took place. These two reports would give the court some idea about the condition of the wagon and the probable cause why the wagon should catch fire. Where the Railway Administration have not rationally explained how the fire took place nor have the railway servants taken proper steps for extinguishing the fire immediately with a view to minimise the damage to the goods, negligence of the servants of the defendant-railway administration will have to be presumed as the cause which caused the fire. (Negligence of Railway servants held proved).

(B) Railways Act (1890), S. 72 (old) — Loss of goods in transit due to fire — Negligence of railway servants—Damages — Assessment — Joint survey by Railway Inspector and Insurance Company made immediately — Figure of quantum agreed upon — Damages at the agreed figure would be decreed in case Railway were held liable. (Para 6)

(C) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115—Pleadings — Suit by plaintiff 1 the consignee and plaintiff 2 the insurer as subrogee of rights of plaintiff 1 by payment of the claim of plaintiff 1 against railway for damages for loss of goods in transit by fire — Railway, in their pleading, denying the subrogation and the right of plaintiff 2 — In appeal against decree in favour of plaintiff 1, Railway cannot turn round and utilise allegations of subrogation made by plaintiffs, as ground for non-suiting plaintiffs. — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, Rr. 1 and 2) (Para 8)

(D) Railways Act (1890), S. 77 (old) — Consignee entitled to damages from Railway — Payment made by insurer of goods — Insurer subrogated to right of consignee but policy requiring consignee to join in the legal actions taken by insurer — Notice of claim by consignee after being paid by insurer is valid — Contract between him and railway is not affected — (Contract Act (1872), Ss. 2, 69) — (T. P. Act (1882), S. 92).

Where the loss is suffered by the consignee due to fire in the wagon during the transit of the goods, and the loss is made good by the insurer who according to the terms of the policy is subrogated to the rights of the consignee and a clause in the policy requires the consignee to concur and join the insurer in all the legal actions that would be taken by the insurer, notice of claim under S. 77 by the consignee after his claim is paid up by the insurer is good and cannot be attacked on the ground that by subrogation he does not remain a claimant. The fact of payment by the insurer does not in any way affect the contractual liability between the consignee and the Railway administration. The consignee's right to recover damages from the railway administration is not affected in any manner and the mere payment of the amount of damages by the insurer to him does not terminate his right to claim damages from the railway administration. (Para 8)

(E) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 74-E, 77, 80, 140, 3(6) (old)—Goods booked on Central Railway — Destination on South Eastern Railway — Notice — Presumption under S. 140 in respect of notice sent by ordinary post — Presumption under S. 114 Evidence Act — Purpose of notice — Notice sent to destination railway — Loss on Central Railway — Notice on Central Railway held not necessary — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 79, 80).

Where goods which were consigned from a station on Central Railway to a station on South Eastern Railway, were damaged by fire in transit at a station on the Central Railway, the cause of action arose, on the Central Railway and no part of cause of action arose on the South Eastern Railway. A notice under S. 77, Railways Act sent by ordinary pre-paid post and addressed to the General Manager, South Eastern Railway and General Manager Central Railway, Bombay, with an endorsement that its copies are despatched to the Chief Commercial Superintendent South Eastern Railway Calcutta and the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay for necessary action and information but the evidence disclosed that the letter was never despatched to the General Manager, Central Railway, Bombay but to the General Manager South Eastern Railway Calcutta. This is a case where there is no notice to the General Manager Central Railway, Bombay. (Para 10)

A communication which is required or authorised by the Railways Act to be served on a railway administration may be served in the case of a railway administered by the Government, on the Manager and in the case of a railway administered by a railway company, on the Agent in India of the Railway Company. In any of the three manners specified in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Section 140 of the Railways Act. [Quaere — Whether notice to the Superintendent of Claims is enough notice to the Manager? (Paras 18, 19)] (Para 10)

If a communication is to be sent by post, then the party may resort to the method provided by Section 140, namely, by forwarding it by post in a pre-paid letter addressed to the Manager or Agent at his office and registered under Part III of the Indian Post Office Act, 1866. If this is done as provided by Section 140, the presumption under Section 142 may arise about the receipt of the letter at the other end. If a party chooses to adopt one of the modes provided by S 144 and proves that, that mode has been adopted, then the party will be entitled to rely on the presumption under Sec 142 so far as service is concerned. However, section 148 does not restrict the method of service. If some other mode is resorted to, it will be equally good, but in that case the presumption under Section 142 will not be available to the party. The party concerned may have to prove the fact of service like any other fact in a litigation. When the fact of receipt of notice is denied, it is for the plaintiff to prove that fact by leading cogent, convincing and sufficient evidence. (Para 11)

If a letter properly directed, containing a notice is proved to have been put into the post office it is presumed that the letter reached its destination at the proper time according to the regular course of business of the post office and was received by the person to whom it was addressed and that presumption would apply even in the case of a letter sent by ordinary post. AIR 1918 PC 102 Rel. on. (Para 17)

Compliance with the provisions of Section 140 of the Railways Act will entitle a party to claim a presumption of service under Section 142. The moment the facts contained in Section 140 are proved, it shall be deemed that the said letter is served. Such a presumption, as a matter of right, is not available to a party under Section 114 of the Evidence Act. The Court also is not obliged to presume certain consequences or results. Section 114 of the Evidence Act is only an enabling section. If from the given facts and circumstances, of a case, the Court thinks that a certain inference should be drawn, it is permissible to do so. (Para 18)

Held that in this case looking to the facts proved and the existing circumstances, an inference should be drawn that the letter was received by the General Manager of the South Eastern Railway in due course of business. It must have been received at about the same time when the Chief Commercial Superintendent of that railway received that letter, and that it must, in the circumstances of this case, be held that a notice of claim under Section 77 by the plaintiff was duly served upon the General Manager of the South Eastern Railway, but no such notice was served on the General Manager Central Railway. (Para 18)

The provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act must be independently examined and effect must be given to them as they are found in that Section. Section 80 of the Railways Act may have relevance in understanding which administration is liable. However, Section 80 must be understood in the manner in which it came to be introduced in the Act. The provisions of Section 80 are overriding provisions. Whatever the contract of carriage, the liability in damages is statutorily fixed under the provisions of Section 80. Even today that section has to serve the very purpose for which it was enacted. (Para 38)

As a result of the amalgamation of the various company railways and the State-owned railways and the reorganisation thereof, the railway system owned and administered by the Union of India came to be divided into six zones. But still there were some railways owned and administered by private companies, as also owned and administered by District Boards. The various zonal railways in which the Union railways are now divided did not become separate railway administrations with independent existence and legal status. The provisions of S 140 of the Railways Act, cannot be of particular assistance in interpreting the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act. (Paras 39, 40)

The definition of the expression "railway administration" being an inclusive definition, the Manager of any of these railways always includes the Government. The entire system of Indian railways should be 'railway' as also any portion of it. The expression "Manager of the railway" would mean the Manager of a particular portion which may have been separated for the purpose of administrative convenience. It is the Union of India or the Government which is included in all the Managers representing the various portions of railways, that is the contracting party and that is ultimately responsible for making good the loss due to destruction or otherwise. (Para 41)

The provisions of Sections 79 and 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure lend considerable support to this view. (Para 42)

The provisions of Section 77, Railways Act should be liberally construed. AIR 1962 SC 1879, Foll. (Para 43)

The purpose and object of Section 77 being to make the railway administration aware of a claim so that stale and fraudulent claims may not be lodged against it, information which would serve the purpose of bringing the claim to the notice of the railway administration is enough. (Para 44)

Considering the fact that the railways are administered by the Government, there is nothing in the provisions of the Railways Act which gives each of the zonal railways which is headed by a Manager a separate legal existence. Neither the definition contained in Section 3(6) nor any other provision seems to give an independent legal existence to such separate zonal railways. Emphasis be laid on the unity of administration and unity of ownership of the railways. (Para 45)

Section 77 is primarily meant to make the railway administration aware of the claim, so that immediate investigation is started. The notice under Section 80 of the Code is also meant to enable the Government to consider whether the claim is just and should be compounded. Whether the contents of a particular notice are sufficient compliance with the provisions of Section 77 may be, in the facts and circumstances of each case, a question to be decided independently. The service notice upon the Manager of any of the railways which have handled the goods would serve the purpose of Section 77 and would be sufficient compliance with it. Since all the railways are now owned and administered by the Government, the Manager of any of those railways which has dealt with the goods and gets enough particulars from the claimant about the number of the railway receipt, the nature of the goods and the date of booking etc., should be in a position to know from the record of his own section what has happened to the goods. A notice to any of these Managers through whose railway systems the goods have passed is a sufficient notice to the Government which is administering all these railways. (Paras 46, 47)

The expression "that railway" in S. 80 only means that particular railway which has handled the goods and nothing more. If more than one zonal railways have handled the goods and the suit is contemplated against the Union, the General Manager of any one of the zonal railways would answer the description "the General Manager of that railway". Since there is now unity of administration and ownership, the General Manager of any of these zonal railways, through whose territories the goods have passed, would be in a position to make a report to the Union of India, as also be in a position to communicate with the General Managers of other zones over whose territory the goods have passed. (Para 48)

Notice on South Eastern Railway is sufficient notice under the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to serve separate notices upon the General Managers of the South Eastern Railway and the Central Railway. K. V. Tambe and W. K. Sheorey, for Appellants, P. D. Thakar, for Respondent No 2

DESHMUKH, J.— This is an appeal by the Union of India owning and administering the Central Railway as well as the South Eastern Railway. A large part of the fact is not in dispute. The plaintiff no 1 Messrs. Kalina Textiles Private Limited, a company registered under the Indian Companies Act having their office at Rajgangpur, admittedly booked 100 bales of cotton from Akola on the Central Railway for being delivered at Rajgangpur on the South-Eastern Railway. The railway receipt in that behalf was no 9208/11 dated 2-6-1957. A complete wagon was hired and allotted for that purpose and it started with the goods train on the same day. The evidence in the case shows, and it is not now in dispute, that fire took place first at Khapri station on 4-2-1957 and the wagon in which the plaintiff no 1's cotton bales were loaded was set on fire. After some half-hearted attempts to find out the cause of the fire and to try to extinguish it, a decision was taken by the Assistant Station Master, Khapri, to allow the wagon to travel up to Ajani which was about six miles from Khapri. The wagon with the fire was then allowed to travel and at Ajani, the railway staff extinguished the fire. This was on 5-6-1957. Whatever goods were saved were forwarded to the destination and delivery was given to the plaintiff no 1. As they found that the goods were damaged by fire, they brought that fact to the notice of the railway officials at the destination station on the South-Eastern Railway. The Inspector of Claims actually assessed the damage and issued a certificate. It is this claim which is the subject-matter of the suit. According to the plaintiff, the damages suffered were Rs 11,634 60 P. However, the plaintiff no 1 had insured the goods with the plaintiff no 2, and according to the terms of the insurance policy, the amount payable to the plaintiff no 1 was found to be Rs 11,634 67 P. The plaintiffs have claimed in this suit only this amount as that was the amount paid by the plaintiff no 2 to the plaintiff no 1 in full discharge of the insurance under the policy.

2. The plaintiffs have pointed out that after the joint survey and assessment of the damages, the plaintiff no 2 reimbursed the plaintiff no 1 and as per terms of the policy, obtained a letter of subrogation. That letter is dated 18-9-1957. After the payment of the amount by the plaintiff no 2 to the plaintiff no 1, a notice under Section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, (IX of 1890), was issued on behalf of the plaintiff no 1 alone through an advocate. That notice was produced before the Commissioner who examined evidence at Bombay and is marked as Ex. A in the commission papers. That was a notice addressed by Advocate Mirchandani, to the General Manager, South Eastern Railway, Calcutta, and the General Manager, Central Railway, Bombay. Copies of this letter were addressed to the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South Eastern Railway, Calcutta, and the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay, for necessary action and information. It may be noted that though the notice was so addressed to the General Managers of the two Railways, in fact it is admitted that the notice was despatched to the General Manager, South Eastern Railway, Calcutta, alone. Copies were however forwarded to the two Claims Superintendents as the endorsement on the notice shows. There was some correspondence and the only letter that is brought on record is Ex. P-4 by which the South-Eastern Railway repudiated the claim. After that letter dated 12-12-1957 was received, a notice to the Union of India was addressed by another Advocate, Mr. S. N. Dwivedi, on behalf of both the plaintiffs as his clients. As the claim was not settled, nor any damages were offered by the Union of India or any of the Railways, the plaintiffs have filed this suit for recovering Rs. 11,634 67 P.

3. In this suit, the plaintiff no 1 is the original consignor Messrs Kalina Textiles Private Limited. The plaintiff no 2 is the Indian Globe Insurance Company Limited with whom the goods in transit were insured by the plaintiff no. 1 and who ultimately reimbursed the plaintiff no 1 by paying the amount which is claimed in the suit. The plaintiff points out why the two plaintiffs appear as party plaintiffs. The fact of insurance and the reimbursement thereafter and the subrogation as a result of the terms of the policy are recited in the plaint. It is however pointed out that a decree may be passed in favour of either of the plaintiffs. The party defendants are two; the first is the Union of India owning and administering the Central Railway and the second is the Union of India owning and administering the South-Eastern Railway.

4. Only one written statement has been filed on behalf of both the defendants. It purports to have been signed and verified by one V. S. Kulkarni, who is described as "A. D. C. I. Akola." We are told that this is the short form of "Assistant District Commercial Inspector" which is the designation of that officer. There is a general denial of facts about the price of the cotton bales as also about the amount of insurance for which they were insured. It is admitted in terms that a fire did take place and that the goods were transhipped at Ajani from the original wagon to some other wagon. It is also admitted that there was a request made for assessment of damages of goods and an assessment was in fact made. It is however added that the assessment was without prejudice to the rights of the parties and was only a formal estimate of the damage caused to the plaintiff's goods. The extent of the damage, as also the price thereof is denied. It is then pointed out that though damage has taken place by fire, it was not the result of the misconduct, negligence or any fault on behalf of the servants of the defendant Railway Administration. On the contrary, when the fire was detected, all efforts were made to extinguish it. In paragraph 6 of the written statement, it is stated that the defendants did not dispute that the plaintiff no. 1 is paid the claim. They however denied that the plaintiff no. 2 is subrogated in place of the plaintiff no. 1 for making a claim against the defendants. It is then stated that the plaintiff no. 2 has no concern and they have no contract with the defendants. The plaintiff no. 2 could not claim anything from the defendants. In paragraph 7 follows an important statement which would be the subject-matter of considerable discussion in the further part of this judgment. It is stated that the notices under Section 77 of the Indian Railways Act referred to in paragraph 7 of the plaint are not traceable. The defendants therefore deny the same. It is further stated in the paragraph: "The plaintiff is put to the proof of the same." So far as the notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, it is admitted to have been received by the addressees. It is however submitted that the notice was not legal and the suit was not maintainable. We will point out here only that this appears to be a formal plea as no issue was ever pressed and in the arguments before us it was admitted that the notice appears to be legal. A plea of the suit being premature was also taken but it was also not pressed at any stage. Some account of how the fire took place and what efforts were made to extinguish it is then given in paragraphs 17 and 18 of the written statement. It is alleged that the wagon was water-tight having no leakages or holes, nor had it hot-axles. The engine that was attached to that train was provided with a full plate type of spark arrester and a brick arch. It is then alleged generally that all possible care as bailees was taken and no part of the damage could be attributed to the negligence, misconduct or carelessness of the railway employees.

5. On these pleadings the parties entered upon the trial. The learned Civil Judge has framed several issues. He found that the bales of the plaintiff no. 1 got damaged due to fire at Khapri and Ajani railway stations on the Central Railway. He also found that the damage caused amounted to Rs. 11,693.80 P. and that this was the result of the negligence and misconduct of the defendants' railway servants. So far the notice of claim under Section 77 of the Railways Act is concerned, the learned Judge held that a notice addressed to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, as also to the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South Eastern Railway was good notice in view of the rules made by the Central Railway. By these rules, the Central Railway have asked all the members of the public to prefer their claims to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Byculla. On this footing, the notice that is issued is accepted as good notice. He also found that the notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was a valid notice and the suit was neither premature nor barred by limitation. Having come to these conclusions, he also found that there was evidence that the plaintiff no. 1's claim was fully satisfied by the plaintiff no. 2 and subrogation obtained. Under the circumstances, a decree for the suit came to be passed in favour of the plaintiff no. 2 against both the defendants. Being aggrieved both the defendants have filed this appeal.

6. Mr. Tambe, learned counsel for the appellants, has challenged the decree on several grounds. Before we go to the technical challenges that are held out, we will dispose of the factual aspect of the cause of damage and the amount of damage. The responsibility of the railways as carriers is that of bailees under the provisions of Ss 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, subject to the provisions of the Indian Railways Act. An entire wagon was hired in this case and undoubtedly fire has taken place in the circumstances, it is for the Railway Administration to lead evidence about the transit of this wagon from place to place and to disclose the entire information about the care taken in the handling of these goods. The learned Judge found that the evidence led by the defendants in that behalf does not properly explain either the origin of the fire or the steps taken for extinguishing that fire. When the wagon is found to have caught fire, it would have been appropriate for the defendants, to lead evidence of the Train Examiner who examined the wagon before it was allotted and also of the Train Examiner who is supposed to examine it after the fire took place. These two reports would have given the Court some idea about the condition of the wagon and the probable cause why the wagon should catch fire. No such effort at all is made. So far as the steps that were taken after the goods caught fire is concerned, the evidence of Kisanlal (D W 2), Assistant Station Master, Khapri, shows that nothing much was done at the Khapri station to extinguish the fire. His explanation is that there was hardly any water available at the station. If he had exhausted the water in the engine for the purpose of extinguishing the fire, he was afraid that the train might get stuck up. A decision was therefore taken that the train should travel ahead six miles up to Ajani station. At that station, arrangements were sought to be made to extinguish the fire. Even at Ajani, though the message sent was that the train would go to the downyard, arrangements for extinguishing the fire were made at the upyard. It is true that ultimately the goods were taken out and the fire was extinguished at Ajani. The wagon was then changed and such of the goods as were saved were loaded in another wagon and that wagon was attached to the goods train.

7. This is all the evidence that has been led on behalf of the railways. From this evidence, we are satisfied that the Railway Administration have not rationally explained how the fire took place, nor have the railway servants taken proper steps for extinguishing the fire immediately with a view to minimise the damage to the goods. In the circumstances negligence of the servants of the defendants will have to be presumed as the cause which caused the fire. So far as the attempts to minimise the damage is concerned, there is direct proof that nothing was immediately done. On the contrary, the wagon with the fire was allowed to travel about six miles ahead.

The learned Judge refers to the existence of a well at Khapri. No attempt seems to have been made to utilize that facility for the purpose of extinguishing the fire. Agreeing with the learned Judge, we would hold that the loss caused to the plaintiff in this case is due to the negligence of the defendants' servants. So far as the quantum is concerned, there could hardly be any dispute in this case, because the claim of damages is based upon the certificate issued by the Railway Inspector. As assessment was immediately made at the Ajani railway station and there was a joint survey by the Railway Inspector and the Insurance Company's Surveyor. Since an agreed figure has been given in the joint survey, we would hold that in case the decree of the trial Court is to be confirmed, it would have to be confirmed for the amount for which it is passed.

7A. Mr. Tambe, learned counsel for the appellants, has raised several technical defences and they will have to be considered now. The first defence which he seeks to raise is the defence which was not taken up in the trial Court. He says that the plaintiff no 1 is the consignee. He is however paid the entire amount of damages by the plaintiff no 2 on 18-9-1957. A letter of subrogation has been produced when evidence was led before the commissioner at Calcutta. In the written statement, the defence taken is that the plaintiff no 1 might have been paid by the plaintiff no 2 but it was denied that the plaintiff no 2 was subrogated. Mr. Tambe now wants to argue on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the plaintiffs have proved subrogation. That may be accepted as a fact proved. On the proved facts, he wants to raise a question of law. That question of law, according to him, is that the plaintiff no 1 had no title on 18-10-1957 when the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act was given. He had received damages and had executed the letter of subrogation. There was no subsisting right in the plaintiff no 1 on that day. A notice by such a person under S 77 is a notice by an unauthorised person. It can be ignored. It is not a valid notice by a claimant who is impliedly conceived of by that section as it is a notification of claim. Section 77 therefore requires that the notification of claim must be by a claimant or by someone on his behalf. No third person could give such a notice. He then argues that on 18-10-1957 the plaintiff no 1(27) alone was the person who was entitled to make a claim for damages. That plaintiff has not admittedly given any notice under Section 77. The notice under Section 77 is an imperative notice. That section lays down that unless such a notice as is contemplated by that Section is given, or to use the language of that section, unless the claim is preferred in writing by a person or someone on his behalf, that person shall not be entitled to a refund of overcharge or to compensation for loss etc. He therefore says that the alleged notice of the plaintiff no. 1 is no proper notice at all and there is no notice admittedly by the plaintiff no. 2. On this short ground alone, the claim of the plaintiffs deserves to be dismissed.

8. We have already pointed out that at the stage of pleadings the defendants denied the fact of subrogation and refused to recognise the plaintiff no. 2 as a person authorised to file a suit. Having taken up that stand, they now want to turn round and utilize the allegations made by the plaintiffs as a ground of attack for non-suiting the plaintiffs. This defence is now sought to be raised as a pure point of law. Even if therefore it may be permissible for the defendants to argue in that manner, it must be noted that they are blowing hot and cold in the same breath. Having refused to recognise the plaintiff no. 2 as a subrogee, they cannot now advert to the same position which is pleaded by the plaintiffs and then seek to non-suit the plaintiffs. Apart from this technical aspect we think that the terms of contract of insurance as well as the letter of subrogation in terms of that insurance policy authorised the plaintiff no. 1 to lend his name for the purpose of carrying on correspondence with the Railway Administration, as also for the purpose of taking appropriate legal remedies in Court. The subrogation clause at paragraph 15 of the insurance policy (Ex. P-1) requires the plaintiff no. 1 to do and concur in doing and permitting to be done all such acts and things as may be necessary or reasonably required by the Company for the purpose of enforcing any rights and remedies, or of obtaining relief or indemnity from other parties to which the Company shall be or would become entitled or subrogated at the expense of the Company. The original contract with the railways in this case is between the plaintiff no. 1 and the Railway Administration. The plaintiff no. 1 being the consignee, is entitled to recover damages. The fact of payment to the plaintiff no. 1 by the plaintiff no. 2 with a condition as we find in clause 15 of the insurance policy does not in any way affect the contractual liability and the results flowing therefrom between the plaintiff no. 1 and the Railway Administration. In the notice given on behalf of the plaintiff no. 1 it has been clearly mentioned that the insurers are the Indian Globe Insurance Company Limited. A full description of the railway receipt, its number, the name of the consignor, the name of the insurer, the name of the consignee and the fact of non-delivery of 100 cotton bales together with the amount of damages claimed have been clearly mentioned in the subject-matter of that notice. By an act inter partes between the plaintiff no. 1 and the plaintiff no. 2, we do not think that the liability that arises out of the contract to carry goods between the Railway Administration and the plaintiff no. 1 is affected in any manner. Even though the plaintiff no. 1 is paid by the plaintiff no. 2 by an express term, it is reserved that the plaintiff no. 1 will lend its name to every proceeding that may be necessary for the recovery and enforcement of the claim. In terms of clause 15 of the insurance policy, the letter of subrogation has been got executed. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that the plaintiff no. 1's right to recover damages is not affected in any manner and the mere payment of the amount of damages by the plaintiff no. 2 to the plaintiff no. 1 does not terminate the right of the plaintiff no. 1 to claim damages from the defendants railways. Though this point is allowed to be taken being a question of law, though not pleaded earlier, we are satisfied that there is no substance in it and it does not affect the right of the plaintiff no. 1 to give the notice as well as to file the suit. In the plaint, a specific recital has been made that in spite of the earlier recitals, the Court may pass a decree in favour of any one of the plaintiffs. The Court has chosen to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff no. 2 as it found that plaintiff no. 1 admitted to have received the amount from the plaintiff no. 2. The plaint is therefore properly filed by authorised persons and the notice dated 18-10-1957 is also by a person who was authorised to give such a notice.

9. The next and important plea raised is that there is no valid notice at all served upon either of the two railways, namely, the Central Railway and the South-Eastern Railway. In order to understand the factual aspect of this point a few facts may be stated. The notice which is marked Ex. A before the Commissioner who recorded evidence at Bombay is in the form of a letter from Advocate Mirchandani addressed to the General Manager, South-Eastern Railway, and the General Manager, Central Railway, Bombay. It is dated 18-10-1957. Below this letter, there is an endorsement that copies are despatched to the Chief Commercial Superintendent of Claims, South-Eastern Railway, Calcutta, and the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay, for necessary action and information. The first impression therefore we get is that this is a letter which is despatched to the General Manager, South Eastern Railway, and the General Manager, Central Railway. However, the evidence led by the plaintiffs itself shows that a copy of this letter was never sent to the General Manager, Central Railway, Bombay. It is an admitted position therefore that the letter (Ex. A) was never despatched to the General Manager, Central Railway, Bombay. Undoubtedly, therefore this is a case where there is no notice to the General Manager of the Central Railway Bombay, under Section 77 of the Railways Act. It may be recalled that Khapri and Ajani are stations both on the Central Railway. Whatever damage was caused to the goods, that took place or was when the goods were being handled on the lines of the Central Railway. No part of the damage took place while the goods were entrusted to the South-Eastern Railway.

10. Mr. Tambe therefore argues in the face of this admitted position that there is no notice to the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway, also. This is because the letter (Ex. A) is again admittedly alleged to have been sent by an ordinary pre-paid post and not by registered pre-paid post, under Part III of the Indian Post Office Act, 1866. A communication which is required or authorised by the Railways Act to be served on a Railway administration may be served in the case of a Railway administered by the Government, on the Manager, and in the case of a Railway administered by a Railway company, on the Agent in India of the Railway company, in any of the three manners specified in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Section 140 of the Railways Act. Mr. Tambe argues that if a communication is to be sent by post, then the party may resort to the method provided by Section 140, namely, by forwarding it by post in a prepaid letter addressed to the Manager or Agent at his Office and registered under Part III of the Indian Post Office Act, 1866. If this is done as provided by Section 140, then he concedes that a presumption under Section 142 may arise about the receipt of the letter at the other end. Mr. Tambe however further concedes that this is not the only way in which a notice could be served or a claim could be lodged with the Manager. The wording of Section 140 shows that a communication may be served in one of the manners indicated in that section. If a party chooses to adopt one of the modes provided by Section 144 and proves that the mode has been adopted then the party will be entitled to rely on the presumption under Section 142 so far as service is concerned. However, section 140 does not restrict the method of service. If some other mode is resorted to, it will be equally good, but in that case the presumption under Section 142 will not be available to the party. The party concerned may have to prove the fact of service like any other fact in a litigation.

11. Having pointed out the legal position about the service of notice or communication under the Railways Act, Mr. Tambe argued that the General Manager, South-Eastern Railway, has denied having received any such notice. When the fact of receipt of notice is denied, it is for the plaintiff to prove that fact by leading cogent, convincing and sufficient evidence. On the record of this case, according to him, no such evidence has been led. We should therefore hold that no notice was served on the General Manager, South-Eastern Railway. So far as the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act is concerned, the learned trial Judge had proceeded to give a finding in favour of the plaintiffs in paragraph 41 of his judgment by referring to certain rules of the Central Railway. The learned Judge says that the Central Railway by its rules has asked all members of the public to prefer their claims to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Byculla. A similar endorsement is also to be found on the reverse of the railway receipt. On the basis of this assumption, the learned Judge says that there is evidence in this case that the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Byculla, has received the letter and that would be enough notice to the Railway Administration itself. Mr. Tambe argued that there are no such rules and the reference is inaccurate. Mr. Thakar, who appears for the plaintiffs-respondents, was also unable to point out any rule made by the Central Railway in that behalf. We think that the reference is clearly erroneous so far as it refers to rules. The reference to the endorsement on the reverse of the railway receipt is correct. However, from the discussion which we shall make hereafter, it will appear that it is not necessary to consider in this litigation whether the notice to the Superintendent of Claims is enough notice to the Manager himself.

12. Since the fact of notice to the Manager of the South-Eastern Railway is challenged, we will have to find out as a matter of fact whether any such notice or a claim under Section 77 of the Railways Act was ever lodged with the Manager or the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway. On behalf of the plaintiffs, witness Chetan Parshram Malkani has been examined on commission at Bombay. He claims to be the proprietor of the Claims Recovery Bureau at Bombay and gives his capacity as the Company Limited. He claims to have Agent of Messrs. Indian Globe Insurance Instructed Advocate Mirchandani to give a notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act on behalf of the plaintiff no. 1. He also alleges that the plaintiff No. 1 instructed Advocate Mirchandani through him. He then produces the copy of the notice which is marked Ex. A. He further says that Mirchandani gave to him for despatch the original letter after making exact copies of the said original letter dated 18-10-1957 and he despatched the said notice to the General Manager, South-Eastern Railway; the General Manager, Central Railway; the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South Eastern Railway, Calcutta, and the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay. The copy of the letter Ex. A was marked as an exhibit by consent of both sides. He then produced entries from his despatch book and a copy of those entries is retained on the record as Ex. B. The original despatch book was produced before the commissioner and was returned to the witness. He proved from the despatch book that three letters were despatched on that day addressed respectively to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Byculla, the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South-Eastern Railway, Calcutta; and the General Manager, South Eastern Railway, Calcutta, on 18-10-1957. The copy of the despatch book at Ex. B mentions the despatch by ordinary post with a postal stamp of 15 naya paise each on the three letters addressed to the said three officers. Each of these letters bears the No. IGI/ASM/2470/57 of 18-10-1957. This is the number of the communication, and from the further correspondence we will show that a letter of this number has been received by the Chief Commercial Superintendent of the South Eastern Railway.

13. The witness further proves that a letter from the Chief Commercial Superintendent South-Eastern Railway, was received by Advocate Mirchandani and was handed over to him. That letter in its original appears at Ex. P-4 and is dated 12/17-7-1957. The cross-examination of this witness is very limited. He is first asked about his connection with the Claims Recovery Bureau and to be the sole proprietor of that Bureau. He admits that he has not power of attorney on behalf of the Indian Globe Insurance Company. He however adds that by a letter they authorised him to recover that claim but he was not in possession of that letter of authority when he gave evidence. He admits as a fact that the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act was not sent by him by registered post but the same was despatched by ordinary post. He is then asked about the handwriting of these entries in the despatch book and he says that his clerk made those entries. The last question whether he had any other documentary evidence to prove that the said notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act was despatched and his obvious reply was that he had no other document. This is all the cross-examination of this witness. If we look back in his examination-in-chief, we find that he is making a very important statement on oath that he despatched the notices addressed to the three officers concerned and he received them from Advocate Mirchandani for the purpose of despatch. He wants to prove the fact of despatch by producing the despatch book. Undoubtedly, there is no other document. There could be any other document if only the letters were despatched either under a certificate of posting or by registered post. In either case, some document in addition to these documents would have been available. When admittedly, the letters are sent by ordinary post, there could be no further evidence of the despatch. The despatch has got to be accepted or rejected on the oral testimony of the witness who says that he despatched those letters. The statement of witness Chetan in that behalf was therefore the most important statement in the examination-in-chief. We find that there is not even an attempt to cross-examine him in that behalf. From the manner in which a few questions are asked to this witness and no serious attempt is made to cross-examine him on the question of despatch, we think that there is nothing on the record which disentitles Chetan to be believed. In this state of the record and particularly the cryptic cross-examination, we are satisfied that Chetan is a witness of truth. When he stated on oath that he received three copies of the letter from Advocate Mirchandani and debited 15 naya paise against each of those letters in his despatch book showing the prepaid ordinary post and further adds that he despatched them, we think that there is direct evidence of the letters being carried up to the post office and put into the proper place where they are supposed to be placed for the purpose of despatch.

14. There are some other developments which may be taken into account and they will confirm the finding that we are inclined to give. At the stage when the claim was being merely notified to the authorities, Chetan could have no interest as a person recovering the claims to despatch one letter and not the others. His evidence can be accepted as a whole or rejected as a whole. There is no suggestion that this evidence of despatch may be good in respect of one of the letters and not in respect of the other two. We look at this evidence from this point of view because the record shows that at least one letter has been considered and dealt with by the officers of the South-Eastern Railway. We may now look Ex. P-4 in that behalf. This is a letter addressed by the Chief Commercial Superintendent of the Eastern Railway, to Advocate Mirchandani at Bombay. It refers to the subject-matter in identical terms as we find the description of the subject-matter in the letter Ex. A. The reference to which this reply is given is "Your letter No 1G1/2470/57 dt. 18-10-57 on behalf of your clients Messrs. Kalunga Textiles Private Ltd." This reference in the letter of the Chief Commercial Superintendent convincingly shows that the letter received by him and replied to is the same letter as Ex. A. Out of the three letters therefore, there is direct evidence that the Chief Commercial Superintendent of the South-Eastern Railway received that letter and has acted upon it.

15. There is also further evidence to show, though indirectly that the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay, must have also received this letter Ex. P-4 is the reply of the Chief Commercial Superintendent of the South-Eastern Railway Calcutta, to the plaintiff and that letter has been exhibited being original. However, a copy of that letter endorsed to the Superintendent of Claims Central Railway, Bombay, is also on record though it is not exhibited. We asked Mr Tambe whether this is the letter produced by the defendants but not being an advocate in the trial Court, he merely asked us to verify whether the record shows it to be so. We therefore searched the record but somehow do not find the list under which this document has come on record. In file D of the original record we found a letter issued by Mr P. E. Wani, Joint Civil Judge, Senior Division Akola, addressed to the Small Causes Court at Calcutta for the purpose of executing commission as certain witnesses were to be examined at Calcutta. This letter appearing at page 124 of the D file contains in it a list of witnesses to be examined and also a list of enclosures. At serial No 9 of the enclosures there is a remark that the letter dated 12/17-12-1957 filed by the defendants (one sheet) is enclosed. There is the description of other enclosures and among these enclosures we find at page 131 the copy which should be in the possession of the Central Railway. There is an endorsement with the usual rubber stamp of the Court that this is produced by the defendants. It is obvious that at that stage no particular attention was paid to the exhibition of that document, because the original of that was already on record as Ex. P-4. However, being a document which has the inward number of the Office of the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay, and a rubber stamp of the Court and a reference to it in the list of documents sent by the Court to the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, there is no doubt that this is the original document produced by the defendants. Since one copy of it is already exhibited, this copy could also be read in this case. The importance of this document is that having given a reply to the plaintiff no. 2 through Advocate Mirchandani, the Chief Commercial Superintendent of the South-Eastern Railway, forwards a copy of this letter to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, Bombay, for information in reference to his No. C-191-c-63/4079/58 dated 25-11-1957. The endorsement further says that he will please confirm the repudiation and accept liability for the consequences of repudiation.

16. When we told Mr Tambe the learned counsel for the railways that we wish to read this letter in a certain manner, he objected to the endorsement being interpreted in the absence of direct evidence. We told him that from the endorsement it is obvious that there was a communication by the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, to the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South-Eastern Railway, which letter is dated 25-11-1957. Since a copy of Ex. P-4 is endorsed to the Superintendent of Claims Central Railway, with a specific reference to his letter dated 25-11-1957, followed by a further direction that he should repudiate the liability and accept the consequences of such repudiation, it is clear to us that the earlier letter from the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, related to nothing else but the claim in question. Mr Tambe says that the correspondence may merely refer to a query of an accident. Since accident has taken place on the Central Railway which is an admitted position, we will not be wrong in assuming that the inquiry will be made by the Central Railway and not by the South-Eastern Railway. From this fact also, we think that it could be legitimately held that the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, was in correspondence with the Chief Commercial Superintendent, South-Eastern Railway, over the question of claim put in by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' claim lodged with either of these railways is nothing but the letter Ex. A. From this endorsement on the reverse of Ex. P-4 put at the copy of that letter at page 131 of the D file, we are satisfied that the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, also received the letter which was despatched by Chetan.

17. It is true that the letter Ex. A was not despatched under registered cover. The presumption which could be available to a party under Section 142 of the Railways Act is not available to the plaintiffs in this case. However, there is no legal bar to prove the receipt of these letters by the respective addressees if otherwise it could be done. We have pointed out by now that out of the three endorsees, two have received the letter. We have believed Chetan when he says that he despatched all the three letters himself. Normally, therefore, looking to the common course of business that has been followed in this case, it would be legitimate to presume that the letter addressed to the General Manager, South Eastern Railway, must have reached him in due course. In the case of letters which are sent through post, their Lordships of the Privy Council have the following observations to make in Harihar Banerji v. Ramshashi Roy, AIR 1918 PC 102:

"If a letter properly directed, containing a notice to quit, is proved to have been put into the post office, it is presumed that the letter reached its destination at the proper time according to the regular course of business of the post office, and was received by the person to whom it was addressed and that presumption would apply, with still greater force to letters which the sender has taken the precaution to register, and is not rebutted but strengthened by the fact that a receipt for the letter is produced signed on behalf of the addressee by some person other than the addressee himself."

We are concerned here not with a letter sent under registered cover but under ordinary post. Even in that behalf it is permissible to infer that in due course of the business of the post office, a letter which is properly addressed and actually despatched must have reached its destination in course of time.

18. It may be remembered that compliance with the provisions of Section 140 of the Railways Act will entitle a party to claim a presumption of service under Section 142. The moment the facts contained in Section 140 are proved, it shall be deemed that the said letter is served. Such a presumption, as a matter of right, is not available to a party under Section 114 of the Evidence Act. The Court also is not obliged to presume certain consequences or results. Section 114 of the Evidence Act is only an enabling section. If from the given facts and circumstances of a case, the Court thinks that a certain inference should be drawn, it is permissible to do so. When looked at from that point of view, we find that there is an additional circumstance which should be taken into account before a final conclusion with respect to the service on the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway is drawn. We may now refer to the written statement. Paragraph 7 of the plaint alleged that the plaintiffs sent on 18th October 1957 to the General Managers of the South-Eastern Railway and the Central Railway statutory notices under Section 77 of the Railways Act by the letter of Advocate Mirchandani, a copy of which was enclosed with the plaint. The reply given by the defendants is worth noting in their own words. Paragraph 7 of the written statement is as follows:

"As to para 7, the notices referred viz, under S. 77 Indian Railways Act are not traceable. The defendants therefore deny the same. The plaintiff is put to the proof of the same."

Occurring of damage to properties while being handled by the railways may be a common occurrence and the railways might be receiving several notices in that behalf. Even then, the notification of a claim under Section 77 of the Railways Act is an important type of document. When a letter of this type is alleged to have been posted and now we find that there is sufficient, believable and cogent evidence of its despatch, the plea of the defendants makes peculiar reading. They have not the courage to say that they never received such a notice. They merely give a non-committal reply that no such notice is traceable and hence it is denied. This is an additional circumstance which we think should be taken into account in considering the cumulative effect of the evidence regarding the service of notice. In view of the circumstances which we have detailed earlier, read with the written statement of the defendants, we are satisfied that in this case looking to the facts proved and existing circumstances, an inference should be drawn that the letter dated 18-10-1957 was received by the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway in due course of business. It must have been received at about the same time when the Chief Commercial Superintendent of that railway received that letter. The copy, Ex. A, shows that the appropriate name and the correct address of the addressee was there. We therefore hold in the circumstances of this case that a notice of claim under Section 77 by the plaintiff no. 1 was duly served upon the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway. We have already pointed out that admittedly no such notice has been served upon the General Manager of the Central Railway.

19. Before we go to the discussion of a further technical defence, we would point out that we are not deciding in this appeal a point raised by the learned counsel for the respondents, though that point was discussed at considerable length. The learned counsel for the respondents argued that a notice to the Superintendent of Claims, Central Railway, was sufficient notice to the Manager of the Central Railway or the Railway Administration itself. This position was hotly contested by Mr. Tambe, and the learned counsel for both the sides referred us to several decisions of various High Courts including some decisions of this Court. We are neither dealing with the point nor deciding it in this appeal, as we will presently point out that on the view of the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act served upon the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway which we are taking, it is not necessary to decide this question.

20. Even though we have found that the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway received a claim notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act, Mr. Tambe, learned counsel for the railways, argued that that cannot enable the plaintiffs to obtain any relief. The goods belonging to the plaintiff no. 1 were accepted by the Central Railway and they travelled over the routes of the Central Railway, as also of the South-Eastern Railway. The destination station was on the South-Eastern Railway and the delivery was effected by the South-Eastern Railway. However, it has been conclusively proved, which finding is accepted by this Court, that the damage took place on the lines of the Central Railway, and no part of the damage took place while the goods were being handled by the South-Eastern Railway. On these proved facts, he says that there are two distinct Administrations, namely, the Central Railway and the South-Eastern Railway. The liability of a railway administration for damages is now a matter of statutory provision. Section 80 of the Railways Act points out the railway that is to be held responsible. At present, section 80 stands amended in 1961; but we are dealing with a matter where the cause of action arose in 1957. As section 80 then stood, only two railways were answerable for the claim. The contracting railway administration was always liable to pay, but it was also open to a party to claim damages from that railway administration over whose routes the damage or loss took place. The railway administration which merely delivered the goods and on whose lines no part of the loss or damage took place was not answerable before the amendment of 1961. Taking that position into account and on the assumption that there are two distinct railway administrations concerned in this litigation, Mr. Tambe argued that there may be a notice to the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway. However, that railway is not liable to pay any damages because no part of the damage or loss took place while the goods were being handled by that railway. So far as the Central Railway is concerned, the loss occurred while they were in charge and they might have been answerable; but to them there is no notice under Section 77. In this manner, he says that even the finding given by this Court could not enable the plaintiffs to obtain a decree against either of the defendants.

21. According to Mr. Tambe, the notification of claim contemplated by Section 77 is to be made to each of such railway administrations which are sought to be held liable. Unless that is done it is not permissible to pass a decree against the particular railway administration. The opening clause of S 77 says that a person shall not be entitled to a refund or damages etc. until he does what is prescribed by the latter part of that section. Even if therefore damage has been caused and the claim is otherwise good, the person concerned who does not observe the provisions of Section 77 shall not be entitled to recover any damages or refund from the railways. This being an imperative section, it must be strictly observed. According to him the provisions of Section 80 of the Railways Act must be read in conjunction with Section 77 for understanding the relevant railway administrations which are to be served with notices. Since section 80 of the Railways Act permitted a party to claim damages from the contracting railway, or where the goods travelled over the lines of other railway administrations and which traffic is described as through traffic, from the railway administration over whose lines the damage took place there is an option to the party to sue either the contracting railway administration or the railway administration over whose lines the damage took place. Since Section 80 points out the railway administrations which are to become liable, unless the claim under Section 77 is notified to that railway administration which is to be held liable, there can be no proper notice at all. Having made out these premises, he says that each of these so-called railways of the Union of India like the Central Railway and the South-Eastern Railway are separate Railway administrations or administrations within the meaning of that expression contained in Section 3(6) of the Railways Act. There is considerable divergence of opinion among the High Courts over the correct meaning of Sections 77 and 80 and the sufficiency of notice under S 77 before a plaintiff succeeds in a suit for damages. Both the learned counsel therefore addressed us at great length over the correct meaning of the expression "railway administration" as used in Section 77.

22. Mr. Tambe for the appellants pointed out to us that the scheme of the Act must be taken into account in order to understand the definition of "Railway Administration" or "administration". About the ownership of the railways and the historical survey of the ownership and transfer of management of the railways to the Union of India, information was placed before us from the judgment of the Madras High Court in Narayan-swami v. Union of India, AIR 1960 Mad 58. Mr. Tambe admitted that substantially the references to facts were correct. However, he points out that the ownership of the railways by the Union of India has nothing to do with the definition of "railway administration" or "administration." Factually, it may be correct to say that the ownership of the large stock and property of the railways in the Central Government started in 1890. The taking over of the administration began in 1925 and was well-nigh complete in 1944 except for a few minor railways. Mr. Tambe added as a fact from the information that he had collected from the Department that the mileage of the state-owned railways stood at 56,923 kilometres, whereas the mileage covered by other railways not administered by the Union is hardly 818 kilometres. According to him neither the ownership of the railways nor the passing of the Indian Independence Act have any relevance while deciding the implication of the expression "railway administration" or "administration". These references appear in our judgment because in some of the judgments cited by the respective parties on which reliance is placed, there are repeated references to a position developed in law because of the passing of the Indian Independence Act. What exact difference the independence of this country makes to the interpretation of the expression "railway administration" or "administration" was not brought to our notice by either of the learned counsel.

23. In order to show that the ownership of the railways has nothing to do with that expression, Mr. Tambe points out that the definition may be properly analysed. The definition is as follows:

"3(6) 'railway administration' or 'administration' in the case of a railway administered by the Government means the manager of the railway and includes the Government and, in the case of a railway administered by a railway company, means the railway company;"

He says that another definition which may be looked into is that of "railway" contained in Section 3(4) which is as follows:

"'railway' means a railway, or any portion of a railway for the public carriage of passengers, animals or goods and includes—

(a) all land within the fences or other boundary marks indicating the limits of the land appurtenant to a railway;

(b) all lines of rails, sidings or branches worked over for the purposes of, or in connection with, a railway;

(c) all stations, officers, warehouses, wharves, workshops, manufactories, fixed plant and machinery and other works constructed for the purposes of, or in connection with, a railway; and

(d) all ferries, ships, boats and rafts which are used on inland waters for the purposes of the traffic of a railway, and belong to or are hired or worked by the authority administering the railway;"

24. Mr. Tambe argued that the essence of this definition of "railway administration" or "administration" is the administration of it and not ownership. Where a railway is administered by the Government, the definition says that the Manager of the railway shall be the administration, and it being an inclusive definition, it will also include the Government. Where a railway is administered by a company, it will mean the railway company. In the definition of "railway" itself we find references to various establishments, and ferries, ships, boats and rafts which may be hired by a railway for its own use and in that case, even that ferry, ship, boat and raft would be part of the railway under the definition. When a railway hires some of these vehicles or other property, undoubtedly the ownership rests somewhere else. The railway is a mere hirer. Even then that property so long as it is used for the purposes of the railway is included in the definition of "railway". When such a railway is administered by the Government, then the Manager of that railway which also includes the Government, becomes the administration. We think that looking to these two definitions, the ownership may not have particular relevance. However, in the various judgments referred to us, the reference to ownership has been made possibly because after 1925 the ownership as well as administration of all the major railways in this country have vested in the Government. The repeated references to the ownership therefore appear to be meant for the purpose of describing the fact of administration of the railway by the Government.

25. Mr. Tambe then pointed out to us that the Central Government has two different capacities. In one capacity, by the inclusive definition given in Section 3(6) it will also become 'railway administration' or 'administration.' In another capacity, it still remains the Central Government which has several functions to perform as the Central Government vis-a-vis the railway administration. For the purposes of convenience, it may be stated that the position of the Central Government while it discharges purely governmental functions is one, and the duties which the Government has to discharge as railway administration on its commercial undertaking of the railways are quite another. The commercial activity namely the railways, is only one wing of the Government of India, but the Central Government has a separate existence as Government. Thus, he says, is obvious if we look at the various provisions of the Railways Act.

26. Though Mr Tambe took us through the various provisions of the Act, we think that it is not necessary to refer to all of them. One or two instances would be enough to illustrate his argument. He referred us to the provisions of Section 17 of the Railways Act which lays down that subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), a railway administration shall, one month at least before it intends to open any railway for the public carriage of passengers, give to the Central Government notice in writing of its intention. Sub-section (2) of Section 17 authorises the Central Government to reduce the period of, or dispense with, the notice mentioned in sub-section (1). He therefore argues that this section contemplates the Central Government as something different from the railway administration which also includes the Government so far as the definition of that expression is concerned. Another instance which may be referred to is the provisions of Section 19. That section deals with the procedure in sanctioning the opening of a railway. This section in terms requires the railway administration to obtain the sanction of the Central Government for doing certain acts. Various other provisions were brought to our notice which clearly illustrate that the Central Government has two distinct capacities and therefore has two functions to perform so far as the Railways Act is concerned.

27. Having pointed out the difference between the different types of functions that the Central Government has to perform, he referred us to Chapter VII of the Railways Act which deals with the responsibility of railway administrations as carriers. Mr Tambe started his argument in this behalf by saying that the provisions of Chapter VII and particularly of S. 72, are a provision by which the responsibility of the railway administration is created. We find it difficult to accept this statement of the legal position. According to us the responsibility of the railway administration arises out of the contract of carriage it makes. Section 72 deals with the limits of that responsibility and does not speak of creating the responsibility. Sub-section (1) of Section 72 in terms says that the railway administration shall be responsible for loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the administration and that responsibility shall be that of a bailee under Sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. It also enacts that this responsibility of the bailee shall be subject to the other provisions of the Railways Act. The responsibility of the railway administration therefore has its origin in the contract of carriage and that responsibility is limited by two circumstances. It is first pointed out by Section 72 that the responsibility will be of a bailee under the appropriate provisions of the Indian Contract Act, and there is a further limitation that it will be subject to the other provisions of the Railways Act. This section, according to us, is a section which limits the responsibility but does not create it. However, that by itself may not be a serious difficulty in proceeding further with the argument of Mr. Tambe. Having pointed out that there is a certain type of responsibility on the railway administrations to make good the loss, he comes to the provisions of section 77, the non-observance of which would disentitle a party from claiming any refund or damages. Section 77 is as follows.

"A person shall not be entitled to a refund of an overcharge in respect of animals or goods carried by railway or to compensation for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to be so carried, unless his claim to the refund or compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the railway administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the animals or goods for carriage by railway."

So far as this section is concerned he emphasises the use of the Article "the" used before "railway administration" with which the claim is to be lodged. He says that the implication necessarily is that the claim must be preferred to that particular railway administration which is sought to be held liable for the loss or damage. In order to understand the correct meaning of Section 77, it is argued that it must be read in conjunction with Section 80. Section 80 deals with the liability of the several railway administrations, whereas Section 77 merely deals with the preferring of the claim before a legal remedy is resorted to. It is therefore necessary that the appropriate railway administration is to be first found out which is responsible for answering the claim. Section 80 of the Railways Act is as under:

of a railway administration with respect to traffic while on the railway of another administration, a suit for compensation for loss of the life of, or personal injury to a passenger, or for loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods where the passenger was or the animals or goods were booked through over the railways of two or more railway administrations, may be brought either against the railway administration from which the passenger obtained his pass or purchased his ticket, or to which the animals or goods were delivered by the consignor thereof, as the case may be, or against the railway administration on whose railway the loss, injury, destruction or deterioration occurred."

According to this section, only two railway administrations are answerable — the contracting railway as well as the railway on whose routes the loss or damage took place. Mr. Tambe argues that either of these railway administrations being answerable, the plaintiff or a claimant must first make up his mind as to against which railway administration he wants to make a claim. Having done so, he may prefer a claim to that railway administration under Section 77. Mr. Tambe further argues that in many cases of this type, several railway administrations are being joined, but strictly speaking, it is not necessary. The contracting railway being always liable, the purpose of the claimant would be served if he gives a proper notice to the contracting railway administration alone and sues it in due course if the claim is not settled. However, if the claimant chooses to serve a notice under Section 77 on some other railway administration than the contracting railway administration, then he cannot succeed unless that railway administration is shown to be responsible under Section 80.

28. Mr. Tambe also made some reference to Sections 79 and 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure also. According to him, the provisions of section 79 merely lay down the description of the Government concerned in case a suit is to be filed by or against the Government. It does not require that a claim against the railway should necessarily be filed against the Central Government. Section 80, according to him, in the same manner merely lays down how a notice shall be served upon the Government if a suit against Government is intended. Clause (b) of Section 80 merely tells a claimant that in the case of a suit against the Central Government where the suit relates to a railway, then the notice must be served upon the General Manager of that railway. According to him, the expression "that railway" after the words "the General Manager of" is also important.

This again indicates that a notice under Section 80, even though intended to make a Government a party defendant must be addressed to the General Manager of that railway which is sought to be made liable. The wording of Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure also gives the clue to the understanding of the real meaning of Ss. 77 and 80 of the Railways Act. He therefore argues that in the present case, the notice under Section 77 ought to have been addressed to the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway as well as the General Manager of the Central Railway.

29. According to Mr. Tambe, the definition of the word "railway" means not only the entire railway system but any portion of it. It is therefore possible to visualise that a railway administration could be one administration for all the railways or there could be separate administrations for portions of the railways. As even a portion of the entire system is a railway, a separate unit, by whatever name called, either a division or a zone, would constitute a separate railway administration. If this is so, then he says that the definition in Section 3(6) may again be closely seen. In the case of Government-administered railways the definition speaks of the Manager of "the" railway as being the railway administration. Primarily, therefore, it is the Manager of "the" railway. Where the entire railway system of the country is divided into parts or zones, and each part or zone has a separate Manager as is apparent from the present structure of the Indian Railways each part or zone would be "the" railway for the purposes of understanding the Manager thereof. He therefore says that the Manager of such a railway, namely, zone has all the rights of the Manager over that zone alone and not over the rest of the network of the Indian Railways. He says that so far as he knows, a General Manager for the entire country has not been appointed. What we therefore have is the division of the Indian Railways administered by the Government into zones, with each zone having a separate Manager of its own. Primarily, therefore, each such zone headed by a Manager is a railway administration or administration for the purposes of this Act. It is entirely different, he argues, that the definition being inclusive, in the case of each Manager, the Government would also be included in the administration. However, the Government being capable of discharging different functions in different capacities would be answerable as administration in respect of a certain part or zone when a claim relates to that particular zone. There is nothing inconsistent in the definition which requires any other meaning to be given to the expression "railway administration" or "administration". The inclusion of the Government in the definition cannot therefore be something which is decisive of the real meaning. Government, he says, has several parts to play, as Government, as railway administration etc., and therefore has been included in the definition as representing several zones.

30. Mr Tambe then pointed out as a mere historical fact that the definition of "railway administration" was amended twice. Before 1948 there were certain railways owned and managed by the Indian States. In the case of those railways, in the definition, along with the Government was also included a reference to the Native States. The word "Native" was omitted by the amending Act of 1948 and the reference to the "States" itself was omitted by the Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, after which the Indian States merged with the adjoining territories and the entire country emerged as the Union of India, with the ownership and administration of all the major railways vesting in the Union of India. The reference to the "Native States" or "States" therefore became unnecessary and was properly deleted.

31. According to Mr Tambe, even though the administration of all the major railways was transferred to the Central Government by about 1944, there has been no change or amendment made in Section 80 of the Railways Act. That section still conceives of more railway administrations than one and the responsibility of each one is fixed according as the administration is a contracting party or a party on whose lines the damage took place. This reference therefore could not be to any other administration than each of the separate administrations which are headed by a separate Manager. This is the only rational way in which the provisions of the Railways Act must be understood and interpreted. If that is done then it is obvious that in the present case the damage occurred on the lines of the Central Railway whose Manager has no notice at all under Section 77 of the Railways Act. The South-Eastern Railway, whose Manager had a notice according to the finding of this Court, is not liable because no part of the damage took place on its lines.

32. How Sections 77 and 80 of the Railways Act should be understood is therefore the main question that falls to be decided in this appeal. There are two distinct views which are subscribed to by the various High Courts and Mr Tambe relied upon a number of judgments which took the view which he is canvassing. The first case on which he relies is Dominion of India v. Firm Musaram Kishunprasad, AIR 1950 Nag 85. That judgment relates to a cause of action which arose on or about 8-5-1946 253 bags of dry coconuts were despatched from Rajahmundry Station on the M. S. M. Railway to the plaintiff firm at Howbagh station (Jubbulpore) on the B. N. Railway. As there was a short delivery, the plaintiff instituted a suit after serving a notice upon the Secretary to the Central Government "Commerce and Railway Department". The defence was that the loss did not occur on the B. N. Railway. The loading of the wagon was done at Rajahmundry and the consignment booked under a "said to contain" railway receipt. The wagon was received intact at Gondia but only 251 bags were found inside. The B. N. Railway authorities intimated this fact to Rajahmundry and transhipped the bags as found and later delivered the same to the consignee at Howbagh station. The main contention was that a notice ought to have been served upon the M. S. M. Railway and that railway ought to have been made a party. This contention of the B. N. Railway was accepted by the Division Bench of the Nagpur High Court on the footing that under Section 80 of the Railways Act, each railway administration is to be treated as a separate entity with a separate existence and personality. The injured party has the option to sue the railway administration with whom the contract was made or the railway administration on whose railway the loss has occurred. Merely suing the Governor General as representing the entire State-owned railways (at least before the Indian Independence Act was passed, which is (sic) the case here) is not a proper form of suit because that would render Section 80 otiose and meaningless. It was further observed that whatever may be the position after the Indian Independence Act, it is clear that the suit as laid ought to have been against one or the other railway administration or both. Suing the Governor General would not make the railway administration a party as it is not only contrary to the scheme of the Act but would also make Section 80 of the Act inoperative. This judgment has been followed subsequently by the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Central India Chemicals Private Ltd v Union of India Railways, AIR 1962 Madh Pra 301. It was held in that case that where a consignment reaches the consignee in a damaged form, it is for him to decide whether he is able to spot the particular railway administration over whose railway his goods were damaged. If he is sure of it, he need implead that administration only. If he is not, he should implead the administration which received the goods from the consignor. The choice given by Section 80 is not between suing one or more railway administrations and not suing any of them at all; it is between suing this or that out of two or more administrations involved. It is no answer to state that the Union of India having been impleaded, the non-joinder of one or more railway administrations is immaterial; it is a statutory requirement based on sound principles. The Division Bench based these observations upon the judgment to which we have referred earlier.

33. The next judgment relied upon is K. Virraju v. Southern Railway, AIR 1959 Andh Pra 594. According to the learned Judges, Section 77 read with Section 80 of the Railways Act makes it clear that Section 77 treats each of the railway administration as a separate entity with separate existence and personality, though they may now happen to be owned by the Central Government. The purpose underlying Section 77 is that the authorities concerned should be apprised of the loss or damage promptly in order to enable them to investigate into the matter quickly and get some information as regards the loss or damage. This interpretation of Section 77 of the Railways Act, according to the learned Judges, is reinforced by the terms of Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as also Section 140 of the Railways Act. Hence, according to the Andhra Pradesh High Court, any railway administration against whom relief is sought must be served with notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act and failure to do so will disentitle the aggrieved party to maintain a suit for any of the reliefs mentioned in that section. The Andhra Pradesh High Court was addressed on the point that Section 80 was enacted at a time when the different railway systems belonged to different owners and, therefore, such a provision was necessary. According to them, however, that does not alter the situation as otherwise Parliament would have amended Section 80 suitably. That section, as it stands, points to the conclusion that the individuality of each of the railway administrations is continued. Thus, Section 80 furnishes a clue to the interpretation of Section 77.

34. A similar view has been taken by a learned single Judge of the Orissa High Court in K. P. Cloth Stores v. Union of India, AIR 1960 Orissa 154. The learned Judge held that in case of through booking of goods where the goods consigned are carried over several railway administrations, notice of claim for the loss or damage to the goods has to be given to each of the railways concerned, and notice to one railway administration is not sufficient notice to the other railways in order that they may be made liable for the alleged loss or damage. The learned Judge referred to several judgments and prefers to follow the view of the Andhra Pradesh High Court and the Patna High Court in preference to the view of the Madras High Court.

35. Mr. Tambe then referred us to the judgment of the Patna High Court in Governor-General v. Sukhdeo Ram, AIR 1949 Pat 329, which takes a survey of a large part of the case law on the point. The facts of that case show that the suit was filed against the Governor-General-in-Council as representing the railway which delivered the goods. The evidence in that case showed that no part of the destruction or damage took place while the goods were being handled by the delivering railway. With reference to S. 80 of the Railways Act, the judgment proceeds to hold that it only gives a choice of claiming his remedy either against the railway administration to which the goods are consigned or against the railway administration on which the loss occurs. If the loss has not taken place on the railway which is sued, a suit against the Governor-General representing that railway could not succeed and the Governor General could not be held liable for the loss on the theory of agency or partnership. This judgment has mainly proceeded upon the construction of Sec. 80 of the Railways Act as giving the clue to the understanding the railway administration which is required to be apprised of the claim under Section 77. The learned Judges referred to the divergence of opinion between various High Courts before Section 80 of the Railways Act was enacted in 1890. Since that section was enacted for the purpose of settling at rest the controversy, the learned Judges held that that section must be read in conjunction with Section 77 in order to ascertain which railway administration is in fact liable. The notice of claim has got to be given to that Administration which is to be held responsible. On that view of the matter, the plaintiff there was non-suited because he brought a suit, may be, in the name of the Governor General but representing a certain railway administration which was not at all responsible for the loss.

36. Mr. Tambe also drew considerable support from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Jagannath Chetram v. Union of India, AIR 1966 Cal 540. In the case before the Calcutta High Court, the suit was laid against the Eastern Railway on whose routes no part of the loss or damage had occurred. On the basis of Section 80 of the Railways Act, the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court holds that the Union of India will be liable as carrying on business of railway administration provided the railway administration in respect whereof the liability arose is the railway administration to which liability can be fastened by virtue of the provisions of the Railways Act. In the case where the goods were accepted by the Western Railway for transhipment and the Eastern Railway merely delivered them, the Court at Calcutta could not be said to have jurisdiction on the ground that the Union of India carries on the business of one of its railways, namely, the Eastern Railway, at Calcutta. The proposition for which support is sought from this case is that the various zonal railways like the Eastern Railway, Western Railway etc., are recognised as separate entities and as such notice must be served upon that railway administration which is sought to be made liable.

37. In all these cases, the basis accepted for the particular interpretation is that each zonal railway is a separate administration. This conclusion is drawn on the basis that the definition of "railway administration" or "administration" speaks of the Manager of the railway where it is administered by the Government, and also included the Government. Since the Manager of a railway represents the administration as such, it is contended that the same meaning must be given to the expression "railway administration" when used in Section 77 of the Railways Act. It is further held that Section 80 of the Railways Act, which speaks of the railways that are answerable for a claim, conceives of different administrations, and only that administration is responsible which is either the contracting railway or the railway over whose routes the damage or loss took place. This section is supposed to control the provisions of Section 77 and gives a clue to the interpretation of that section. Since different administrations are involved in the case of what is known as "through traffic", the responsibility of each administration must be separately ascertained. Aid is also taken in furtherance of this argument from the provisions of Section 140 of the Railways Act, as also of Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under Section 140, the service of any document in the case of a railway administered by the Government is required to be made on the Manager. Emphasis is laid upon the article "the". It is stated that the Manager of the particular railway which is responsible either as the contracting railway or the railway on whose lines the damage took place, was in the view of the Legislature while making use of that article. Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure is also relied upon as furnishing a guide or clue to the interpretation of Sections 77 and 80 of the Railways Act. So far as Section 79 of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, it only deals with the description of the Government if it is required to be made a party either as a plaintiff or as a defendant in a suit. Section 80 of the Code has been recently amended in 1948. This amendment is particularly referred to as indicating the manner in which notice must be given to the Central Government where it is going to be a party defendant in a suit. The Union of India could be responsible to answer the claim of a party dealing with the Indian railways because of the definition of the expression "railway administration". Reference is made to clause (b) of Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires that in the case of a suit against the Central Government where it relates to a railway, notice is to be given to the General Manager of 'that railway' (the underlining (herein

') is ours). Emphasis is laid again on the expression "that railway". "That railway" means the particular railway which is either the contracting railway or is otherwise responsible as the railway on whose lines the damage took place. As a cumulative effect of reading the provisions together, it is held that unless the particular administration which is responsible or liable in damages is made aware of the claim by a notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act, there is no proper compliance with section 77. As a logical corollary it is assumed that Section 80, though enacted in 1890, has remained unamended till today despite the Government owning and administering all the major railways of this country. It therefore means that Parliament in terms continued the existence of this section in the same form, because the different zonal railways for which the Union of India appointed Managers are being treated as separate railway administrations which have a separate legal existence and are legal entities capable of suing and being sued. Even though the ultimate liability may be of the Union of India, it is assumed that the Union of India, as owning and administering the railway which may be a zonal railway according to the present set-up is responsible only as such and not in its ultimate capacity as the Union of India. This reasoning has been placed before us by Mr. Tambe and he relied upon the above-mentioned judgments for supporting the propositions canvassed before us.

38. According to us, the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act must be independently examined and effect must be given to them as they are found in that section. Section 80 of the Railways Act may have relevance in understanding which administration is liable. However, Section 80 must be understood in the manner in which it came to be introduced in the Act. The legislative history of Section 80 as also the history of ownership and administration of the various major railways in this country by the Union of India must be remembered for the purpose of understanding the import of each of these sections. There was considerable controversy before 1890 over the liability of the various company-owned and administered railways. Many company railways were in the habit of inserting a clause by which their liability was restricted to their handling of the goods and until they were travelling on their lines. In spite of such a clause, the contract of carriage was from one station to another, which many times fell upon the railway owned and administered by another company. The consignor or the consignee had not always the means to know where precisely the loss or damage occurred. In the circumstances, various shades of opinion were current in the decisions of the different High Courts. Some held that the contracting railway was an agent of the other administration over whose rails the goods were ultimately carried and delivered. Some held that the other administration was an agent for and on behalf of the contracting railway. The liability was accordingly being fixed either in the capacity of principal or agent. In order to set at rest this controversy, Section 80 came to be introduced in the Railways Act. The provisions of Section 80 are overriding provisions. That section opens with the clause "Notwithstanding anything in any agreement, etc." This means that whatever the contract of carriage, the liability in damages is statutorily fixed under the provisions of Section 80. Even if a clause of terminating the liability of the contracting railway after the goods are handed over to the other railway were to be introduced in the contract, after 1890 the provisions of Section 80 would override such a contract. Undoubtedly, the administration of the various company-railways vested in various companies when that section was introduced. Each company-railway was a separate railway administration in the eye of law. Each one of them was a separate legal entity capable of suing and being sued as such. This being the purpose for which section 80 was introduced even today that section has to serve the very purpose for which it was enacted.

39. According to an agreed statement of facts made before us, there is no doubt that most of the property belonging to the various railways became of the ownership of the Union of India or the erstwhile Government of India by about 1890. The process of taking over the administration of the various railways from the companies started in or about 1925 and continued till about 1944. The railways owned by the former princely States still remained of their ownership and those railways were merged with the Union-owned railways in or about 1950. By about 1950, therefore, a broad picture emerged where the Union of India was the owner as well as administering all the major railways in this country. A reorganisation of these railways started by 1-4-1951 and was completed by 1-4-1952. As a result of the amalgamation of the various company-railways and the State-owned railways and the reorganisation thereof, the railway system owned and administered by the Union of India came to be divided into six zones. Each of such railways was given a name, like the Western Railway, Central Railway, Southern Railway, etc. Even though the major portion of the railways began to be administered by the Union of India, still there were some railways owned and administered by private companies, as also owned and administered by District Boards. Mr. Tambe emphasised the fact that the mileage covered by such railways was very meagre. That may be so and it may be a correct statement of fact. How does it make any difference in principle? So long as there exist even today railways administered by the Union of India, as also railways administered by private companies, there may be occasions when goods have to travel over both these railways. Provision must continue to be made for a consignor who books goods which travel on both these railways. Section 80 is still the section to which resort must be had by such a party for holding either this or that railway responsible. The purpose and the intention for which Section 80 was enacted still subsist and the mere continuance of Section 80 in the form in which it was enacted cannot lead to the conclusion that the various zonal railways in which the Union railways are now divided became separate railway administrations with independent existence and legal status.

40. In the same manner, the provisions of Section 140 of the Railways Act, which merely speak of the manner of service of a document on the various railways cannot be of particular assistance in interpreting the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act.

41. According to us, in the matter of claim for damages, what is mainly relevant is the incident of these damages. In other words, who is really the contracting party and who is really responsible to a claimant? The claimant no doubt deals primarily with some portion of the railway which is known by one of the names given to the zonal railways. However, the definition of the expression

"railway administration" being an inclusive definition, it appears to us that the Manager of any of these railways always includes the Government. It may be noted that the expression "railway" means a railway or any portion of the railways. The entire system of Indian railways should be "railway", as also any portion of it. The expression "Manager of the railway" would mean the Manager of a particular portion which may have been separated for the purpose of administrative convenience. Even if there is a small unit which is also "railway", in the eye of law the Manager of any such smaller unit would always include the Government. The responsibility for loss, destruction etc. arises under the Indian Contract Act, as we have already pointed out and not under the Indian Railways Act. It is the Union of India or the Government which is included in all the Managers representing the various portions of railways, that is the contracting party and that is ultimately responsible for making good the loss due to destruction or otherwise. This basic fact, according to us, is the main factor which must be taken into account in understanding the function, purpose and sufficiency of notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act.

42. We think that the provisions of Sections 79 and 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure lend considerable support to the view we are taking. Section 79 merely describes how the Government shall be described as a party in a suit, whether as a plaintiff or as a defendant. Section 80 deals with a notice to be served upon the Government when a suit is contemplated against it. The amended section after 1948 lays down that when such a suit is contemplated against the Central Government where it relates to a railway, then a notice of the suit shall be served upon the General Manager of that railway. The expression "a suit against the Central Government where it relates to a railway" does indicate that in a case where a suit in respect of railway is to be filed, it is to be filed against the Central Government after complying with the provisions of Section 80 of the Code. The party that is therefore conceived of as responsible for making good the loss or damage is the Central Government. It is because the Central Government is required to be sued that a prior notice under Section 80 of the Code becomes necessary. In respect of that notice, the present section as it stands amended after 1948, speaks of a particular type of notice when the claim relates to a railway. We think that these provisions clearly indicate that the responsibility for making good the loss lies upon the Central Government and a suit for claiming such

43. With this background of the history of ownership and administration of the Indian railways, as also the legislative history of Section 80, the provisions of section 77 may now be examined. Undoubtedly, a notice of claim has got to be given within the period stated in that section, without which no person shall be entitled to a refund or claim. Even though there is a difference of opinion over the incidence of damages as we have already pointed out earlier, there seems to be unanimity of opinion among all High Courts over the purpose of Section 77. The Supreme Court in Jetmull Bhojraj v D H. Railway, AIR 1962 SC 1879 points out that in enacting Section 77 the intention of the legislature must have been to afford only a protection to the railway administration against fraud and not to provide a means for depriving the consignors of their legitimate claims for compensation for the loss of or damages caused to their consignments during the course of transit on the railways. The therefore pointed out that bearing the object in mind, the provisions of Section 77 should be liberally construed. It is true that in the case before the Supreme Court, the dispute was not as to which of the railways should be served but the dispute related to the contents of the notice. A notice undoubtedly was served upon the Manager of the railway concerned, but it was more or less a letter informing the Manager that certain packages were short-delivered and seemed to have been lost or misplaced. He should therefore make inquiries in that behalf. This was all that was stated and there was no claim as such for short delivery. The Supreme Court says that the purpose and object of Section 77 being to make the railway administration aware of a claim, so that stale and fraudulent claims may not be lodged against it, that purpose is already served by such a letter. In the circumstances, on a liberal construction of that section, the Supreme Court holds that that notice was sufficient notice under the provisions of Section 77.

44. Three questions seem to arise so far as the notice under Section 77 is concerned. One relates to the contents of the notice. In that behalf, we have now an authoritative pronouncement that information which would serve the purpose of bringing the claim to the notice of the railway administration is enough and the judgment of the Supreme Court is illustrative of one such incident.

45. The other two questions relate to the service of notice on a particular officer. On whom the notice should be served is also a question open to debate. We have already pointed out that in this appeal we are not deciding the question whether a notice upon a subordinate officer of a high rank but not upon the Manager himself is or is not sufficient notice. The third question is whether in the case of through traffic each of the Managers is entitled to a notice or in the case of railways owned and administered by the Union of India, preferring of such a claim to one of the Managers whose railway has dealt with the consignment is sufficient compliance with Section 77. So far as the last point is concerned, we have already pointed out the purpose and the intention of Section 77. We have also pointed out that today most of the major railways are owned and administered by the Union of India. It is the Union of India that is ultimately responsible in damages. With this background, if we look at the fact that the railways are administered by the Government, we find that there is nothing in the provisions of the Railways Act which gives each of the zonal railways which is headed by a Manager a separate legal existence. Neither the definition contained in Section 3(6) nor any other provision seems to give an independent legal existence to such separate zonal railways. According to us, emphasis must be laid on the unity of administration and unity of ownership of the railways. It may be that there are certain functions to be performed by the Manager of a railway administration which are laid down in the Act. For the purpose of carrying out those functions, a Manager has to be provided for and the fact that such a Manager is the head of each section of the railways which is styled as a zone does not give him any separate legal existence in the eye of law. We do not think that each such zonal railway can sue or be sued in its own name.

46. A claimant, who ultimately must file a suit against the Union of India for recovering his claim relating to loss or destruction during the course of the consignment being handled by the State-owned and administered railway, has to comply with two distinct provisions. He must prefer a claim under Section 77 of the Railways Act and he must again serve a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The purpose and function of both these notices is more or less similar. Section 77 is primarily meant to make the railway administration aware of the claim, so that immediate investigation is started. The notice under Section 80 of the Code is also meant to enable the Government to consider whether the claim is just and should be compounded. Both the sections conceive of the possibility of compounding of just claims and avoidance of unnecessary litigation. According to us, therefore, two important conclusions are now reached. One is that each zonal railway is not a separate legal entity and the other is that the purpose and functions of the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act, as also Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, are primarily to avoid fraudulent and delayed claims, and in the second place, to enable just claims being compounded.

47. We have also pointed out that so far as the content of the notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act is concerned, it is now accepted as a uniform rule that that notice has to be liberally construed. Whether the contents of a particular notice are sufficient compliance with the provisions of Sec. 77 may be, in the facts and circumstances of each case, a question to be decided independently. However, the principle on which that question has to be decided appears to be a settled one. If that is the primary purpose of Section 77 of the Railways Act, we think that the service of notice upon the Manager of any of the railways which have handled the goods would serve the purpose of Section 77 and would be sufficient compliance with it. Since all the railways are now owned and administered by the Government, the Manager of any of those railways which has dealt with the goods and gets enough particulars from the claimant about the number of the railway receipt, the nature of the goods and the date of booking etc. should be in a position to know from the record of his own section what has happened to the goods. It should be possible for him to immediately communicate with the Managers of other sections or zones on whose rails the goods have also passed. A notice to any of these Managers through whose railway systems the goods have passed is a sufficient notice to the Government which is administering all these railways. Emphasis is laid upon the Article "the" used before the expression "railway administration" in Section 77. Mr. Tambe for the appellants argued that the intention is that the particular railway which is responsible must alone be served. If more than one railways are sought to be made liable, then each one of them must be served with a notice. We think that the only import of the expression "the railway administration" used in Section 77 is to point out to the claimant that he must serve a notice upon that railway which has handled the goods. Any portion of a railway is also "railway" according to the definition contained in Section 3(4). Therefore, the reference in Section 77 is only meant to emphasise the fact that the notice must go out to some railway which has actually dealt with the goods and not to others. In this approach, we do not think that Section 80 of the Railways Act either furnishes a clue or controls the interpretation. Section 80 is an independent provision made to point out the statutory liability irrespective of a contract.

48. So far as Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, it was argued that the notice contemplated has got to be served upon the General Manager of "that railway". Here again, the argument was that it is that railway which is sought to be made liable that is conceived of by this section. According to us, this clause which is introduced after 1948 only illustrates that fact that the Central Government has multifarious activities, and so far as its commercial undertaking in the matter of railways is concerned, it wants the notice of suit against it to be addressed to the General Manager of the railway. If the notice relates to a railway and is addressed to the General Manager of that railway, the General Manager is in a position to report to the Central Government whether the claim is just or should be compounded or should be repudiated. The expression "that railway", according to us, only means that particular railway which has handled the goods and nothing more. If more than one zonal railways have handled the goods and the suit is contemplated against the Union, the General Manager of any one of the zonal railways would answer the description "the General Manager of that railway". Since there is now unity of administration and ownership, the General Manager of any of these zonal railways, through whose territories the goods have passed, would be in a position to make a report to the Union of India, as also be in a position to communicate with the General Managers of other zones over whose territory the goods have passed. We think the provisions of Section 80, clause (b), support the interpretation we are putting on the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act.

49. Mr. Thakar for the respondents relied upon a judgment of the Madras High Court in AIR 1960 Mad 58. In that case, a Division Bench of the Madras High Court has taken a survey of the case law relating to the provisions of Sections 77, 80 and 140 of the Railways Act. They have also considered the legislative history of Section 80, as also the history of ownership and administration of the major railways in this country. The implications of Sections 79 and 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure are also considered. The conclusion at which the Madras High Court arrived is that one notice under Section 77 to a General Manager of one Government railway concerned in the route over which through traffic passed will be sufficient because all the railways over which the traffic passed are owned by the Central Government. They also pointed out that in the absence of any specific enactment either in Section 77 or in section 140 indicating the particular General Manager, to whom notice ought to be given in a case of through traffic carried over more than one zonal unit of the Government railways, notice to any one such General Manager is sufficient compliance with these provisions. We are in respectful agreement with the conclusions arrived at in that judgment.

50. Another important judgment we must refer to is Union of India v. Landra Engineering and Foundry Works AIR 1962 Punj 262. This is a decision of a Full Bench to which the question was referred whether notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was required to be served on both the Eastern and Northern Railways or service on the Northern Railway alone is sufficient compliance with the provision of this section. That was not a case directly dealing with the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act. However, the facts in that case show that the goods travelled over two systems of railway, namely, the Eastern Railway and the Northern Railway. The notice to the Government was served upon the General Manager of the Northern Railway alone and not upon the General Manager of the Eastern Railway as well. It was also held proved in that case that no part of the loss or damage occurred on the route of the Northern Railway. It was being contended on behalf of the Union of India before the Punjab High Court that the reference in clause (b) of Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure being to a notice to the General Manager of that railway, the notice ought to have been served upon the General Manager of the Eastern Railway as the damage occurred over the lines of that railway. The General Manager of the Eastern Railway alone could answer the description of "the General Manager of that railway" within the meaning of that expression as used in Clause (b) of Section 80 of the Code. Negating this contention of the Union of India, the Full Bench held that the principle on which a single notice to any one of the General Managers of the zonal railways which handled the goods is to be given is the same which we have pointed out earlier. For construing the provisions of Section 80 of the Code, the Full Bench refers to Sections 77 and 80 of the Railways Act and concludes that in view of the unity of ownership and unity of administration and looking to the purpose and function of the notice under Section 80 making the Government aware of the claim through the General Manager of any of the railways owned and administered by it is sufficient notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are also in respectful agreement with the approach of the Full Bench of the Punjab High Court and we think that this approach lends considerable support to the conclusion to which we have arrived.

51. Though several other judgments were cited before us, we may refer to a judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Firm Deokishan v. Union of India, AIR 1966 All 16. This is a judgment of a single Judge dealing with the sufficiency of notice under Sections 77 and 80 of the Railways Act. The facts in that case show that the consignment travelled over the systems of various railways. The consignor was unable to locate the loss on a particular railway. The judgment holds that a notice to one of the railways meets the requirements of Section 77. What is important is that the learned Judge refers to the conclusion arrived at by a Division Bench of that Court in Dominion of India v. M/s. Madan Engineering Tool Products, First Appeal No. 161 of 1950, D/- 21-12-1962 (All). The learned counsel for the respondents made considerable search to find out whether this judgment was reported but he was unable to trace any report of this judgment. The passage quoted by the learned Judge is as follows:

"If, therefore, 'Railway Administration' includes the Government, and if notice of the claim under Section 77 of the Railways Act is served on the Government, could it be said that it has not been given to the 'Railway Administration'?"

Relying upon that reasoning the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge is that a notice upon Manager of any of the zonal railways that handled the goods is a sufficient and enough notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act.

52. We may point out that no specific judgment of this Court dealing with the question discussed above was cited before us except 1966 Mah LJ 555 decided by one of us (Deshmukh J.). Mr. Tambe said that he could not find any other reported judgment directly dealing with the point. He however made available typed copies of three decisions. One is a judgment of a learned single Judge in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 285 of 1957, D/- 17-3-58 (Bom) at the Nagpur Bench. Whatever the facts of that case, the judgment in the civil revision application dismissed the revision on the ground that the railway station Mahim was not on the Central Railway and the notice to the Central Railway was not a proper notice to the Western Railway. In fact, the Central Railway had not handled the goods at all. This judgment cannot be of any assistance in the present appeal.

53. The second judgment made available is a decision of another learned single Judge in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 425 of 1959 D/- 13-7-1960 (Bom). In that case, the plaintiff, who had filed the suit, had given a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Though two points are covered by the judgment, the judgment mainly dismisses the revision application on the ground that the plaintiff did not make out a case of himself being an assignee of the goods and as such entitled to give notice. A cause of action has got to be properly made out in the notice under Section 80 of the Code. Since that was not done, the suit was liable to be dismissed. Incidentally, it was observed that the other ground, namely, that one of the railways was not served, was also well founded. In this case, the question of sufficiency of notice under Section 77 was not discussed at all.

54. The third judgment is also of a learned single Judge in Second Appeal No. 351 of 1951, D/- 8-7-1953 (Bom). In that case also the sufficiency of notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act is considered, but the arguments addressed, as well as the trend of the judgment show that everybody assumed that notices to different railway administrations were necessary. The cause of action arose in June 1947 and the names of the railways are referred to as G. I. P. Railway etc. This is a case before the reorganisation of railways and the sufficiency of notice as we have dealt with has not been raised as a point of law at all. None of the judgments therefore covers the point which we have decided in this appeal.

55. So far as the factual position in the present appeal is concerned, we have already held that the notice under Section 77 issued by ordinary prepaid post to the General Manager of the South-Eastern Railway has been served upon him. That notice, according to us, is sufficient notice under the provisions of Section 77 of the Railways Act and it was not necessary for the plaintiff-claimant to serve separate notices upon the General Managers of the South-Eastern Railway and the Central Railway. If this is so, the appeal filed by the Union of India must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Defendant No 2 was Additional Collector Bombay in charge of Income-tax recoveries B was assessed to income-tax amounting to Rs 8,82,427 65 P. in realisation of the said amount of income tax, defendant No 2 had attached a property bearing city survey No 7/596 at Bhulabhai Desai Road Bombay Total area of land was 950 square yards Ground rent was Rs. 360/- per mensem. A alleged that the defendants had no right to attach or to continue the attachment of the said property for recovery of income-tax due by her husband She prayed for permanent injunction against them asking them to discontinue attachment. The suit was filed in Bombay City Civil Court who returned the plaint for want of jurisdiction and for presentation to proper Court. In appeal against the order

Held (1) that the prayer in the plaint was equivalent to a prayer for setting aside the attachment But even if it were not so, the prayer for setting aside the attachment would be implicit in the prayer in the plaint because without setting aside the attachment the Court could not ask the defendants to discontinue the attachment. Before the Court asked the defendants to discontinue the attachment, the Court must come to the conclusion that the attachment was liable to be set aside Thus, the suit fell under Section 6 (ix) of the Bombay Court-fees Act.

Hemendra K. Shah with B. J. Kapadia, Inst. by M/s. Ratilal Desai and Co.; Attorneys, for Appellant; V. H. Gumaste, Govt. Pleader and R. R. Jahagirdar, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT :— This is an appeal against an order dated 8th March 1967 passed by a Judge of the Bombay City Civil Court returning the plaint to the plaintiff for want of jurisdiction and for presentation to the proper court under the provisions of Order 7, Rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code.

2. The plaintiff has filed the suit from which the present appeal arises in the Bombay City Civil Court on the following allegations:

The plaintiff is the widow of one Chimanlal Chhotalal Desai who died on or about 22nd January 1965. The defendant No. 1 is the Union of India. The defendant No. 2 is the Additional Collector of Bombay in charge of income-tax recoveries. The deceased Chimanlal Desai, the husband of the plaintiff, was assessed to income-tax amounting to Rs. 8,82,427.65 p. In realization of the said amount of income-tax the defendant No. 2 had attached a property bearing city Survey No. 7/596 of Malbar and Cumbala Hill Divisions, situated at Bhulabhai Desai Road, in the compound known as 'Oomer Park', Bombay. The building on the land is known as 'American View'. The total area of the land is 950 square yards. The tenure is pension and tax (sic) and the ground rent is about Rs. 360/- per mensem. The plaintiff contends that by a deed of assignment dated 6th November 1950 she and her husband Chimanlal purchased the said property in their joint names and as joint tenants and that on the death of her husband she has become the absolute owner of the said property by survivorship. According to her, as the attachment of the property is after the death of her husband, the property is not liable to attachment because she is the absolute owner of the said property. The second contention of the plaintiff is that her husband left a Will under which he has wrongfully disposed of the said property as if the same belonged absolutely to him, giving to her a permanent right of residence in the said property during her life-time and enjoyment of all the rents and profits of the said property during her life-time. The plaintiff contends that her husband had no right to dispose of this property by his Will in the aforesaid manner. Her third contention in the alternative is that in any event she has the right of residence and maintenance for which the said property is charged.

Her fourth and the last contention is that she made an application to the authorities to investigate her claim but without any investigation the authorities are putting the property to sale which they are not entitled to do. The plaintiff contends that the defendants, had no right to attach or to continue the attachment of the said property in proceedings for recovery of income-tax due by her deceased husband. In the plaint, the relief prayed for is only for an injunction in the following terms:

"That the Defendants be decreed and ordered by a permanent injunction and order both by themselves and by their agents and servants, from attaching, or continuing to attach, or from selling or dealing with or disposing or taking any proceedings relating to or from interfering with the plaintiff's rights in relation to the said property, being 'American View', situated at Oomer Park, Bhulabhai Desai Road, Bombay 26, or any part thereof."

3. The plaintiff had valued the suit relief in para 13 of the plaint and states that the said relief is incapable of monetary valuation and that for the purpose of Court-fees the suit would fall under Art. 23 (f) of Sch. II of the Bombay Court-fees Act. After lodging the plaint the plaintiff took out a Notice of Motion for interim injunction and applied to the learned Judge for ex parte ad interim order, on 8th March 1967. Instead of granting the ad interim order, the learned Judge ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff. The order of the learned Judge is in the following terms:—

"Plaint returned for want of jurisdiction and for presentation to the proper Court as in my view, the "subject matter" of suit is beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court".

It is against the said order that the present appeal has been preferred.

4. Mr. Shah appearing for the plaintiff drew my attention to the provisions of Order 7 Rule 1 (i) of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that the plaint shall contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and court-fees, so far as the case admits. He contended that para 13 of the plaint did not set out the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction. He, therefore, asked me to remand the suit to the Bombay City Civil Court where he would amend para 13 of the plaint so as to put the valuation below Rs. 25,000/-. The result of this would be that the City Civil Court would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. I, however, did not accede to this request of Mr. Shah, because it appears to me on the face of it that the subject-matter of this litigation was land admeasuring 950 sq yds on Bhulabhai Desai Road, Bombay, with a building thereon which property would be of a value not less than Rs 5 lacs of which the land alone would exceed rupees three lacs in value. I asked Mr. Shah to make a statement as to the market value of the property according to the plaintiff. Mr. Shah was unable to make a statement in absence of any valuation by a qualified valuer, but he stated that at the previous attempted sale by the income-tax authorities the highest bid was Rs 35,000/-. In my opinion, this would not be the market value of the property. But even if it were, it would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court.

5 Coming to the form of the suit, the suit is so framed as to be a suit for an injunction. Under section 34 of the Specific Relief Act of 1963, a person may file a suit for a declaration as to any legal character, or as to any right to any property. This is a discretionary relief. Section 34 provides that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so. Section 37 pertains to injunctions. Sub-section (2) provides that a perpetual injunction can only be granted by the decree made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit, the defendant is thereby perpetually enjoined from the assertion of a right, from the commission of an act which would be contrary to the rights of the plaintiff. Section 38 prescribes when a perpetual injunction may be granted. The difference between Section 34 on the one hand and Sections 37 and 38 on the other hand is that the Court may not grant a declaration where the matter is capable of consequential relief. But there is no such restriction put on injunctions and the Court may grant an injunction as a substantive relief without any prayer for declaration, although in many cases a declaration may be implicit in the grant of a perpetual injunction.

6 In this appeal I am concerned with the valuation of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction under the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act. But for this purpose one would have to consider the relevant provisions of the Court Fees Act applicable to a suit of this nature. Prior to 1959 the court fees in this State were governed by the Court Fees Act VII of 1870, which is a Central Act, as amended in its application to the State of Bombay. Section 7 (iv) (c) provided for a declaration with consequential relief. Section 7 (iv) (d) provided for suits for injunctions only. In both these cases it was provided that the plaintiff may put any valuation on the suit. Under the Bombay amendment of Section 8A of the Suits Valuation Act, the valuation put by the plaintiff if inadequate could be questioned. With this however we are not concerned. Article 17 (iii) of Schedule II to that Act provided for a declaratory decree without consequential relief. Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act applies to suits falling under Section 7 (iv) (c) and (d) with the result that the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction was the same as the value for the purpose of Court-fees. The point to be borne in mind is that under the provisions of the Court Fees Act, 1870, in suits for declaration with consequential relief and in suit for injunction without declaration the plaintiff was allowed to put his own valuation on the suit, even though arbitrary, although in the State of Bombay arbitrary valuation could be questioned.

7. By virtue of the Bombay Court Fees Act XXXVI of 1959, the Court Fee Act, 1870 has been repealed in its application to this State. Mr. Shah appealing for the plaintiff contended before me that the present suit would fall either under Section 6 (iv) (d) first proviso or under Article 23 (f) of Schedule II to the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959. Section 6 (iv) (d) provides for suits for declaration in respect of ownership, freedom or exemption from, or non-liability to attachment with or without sale or other attributes, of immovable property. The first proviso to this clause states that if the question is of attachment with or without sale the amount of fee shall be the ad valorem fee according to the value of the property sought to be protected from attachment with or without sale or the fee of Rs 15/- whichever is less. If the suit had been for a declaration of freedom or exemption from or non-liability to attachment of the property which is the subject-matter of the suit, the suit would undoubtedly have fallen under S 6 (iv) (d), first proviso. In that case, the Court-fees payable would have been ad valorem fee according to the valuation of the property subject to a maximum of Rs 15/-. Although the Court-fees may not have exceeded Rs 15/-, for the purpose of jurisdiction under Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the valuation would have been the value of the property. But in my opinion, Section 6(iv)(d) has no application to the present suit, because this suit is not for a declaration. The plaintiff has chosen to bring the suit in the form of a suit for injunction only, and as I stated above under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act he is not compelled to seek a declaration.

8 The next contention of the plaintiff is that the suit would fall under Article 23 (f) of Schedule II of the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959, which provides fixed fee of Rs. 30/- in a plaint in a Civil Court not otherwise provided for and the subject-matter of which is not capable of being estimated in money value. Actually in the plaint, this is the provision relied upon by the plaintiff. Before I deal with this provision, I propose to deal with the contention of the learned Government Pleader appearing for the defendants.

9. According to the learned Government Pleader, the suit would fall under Section 6(ix) of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959. This provision pertains to suits to set aside an attachment of land or of an interest in land and states that the valuation shall be according to the amount for which the land or interest was attached. The proviso to this clause states that, where such amount, meaning the amount for which the land is attached, exceeds the value of the land or interest, the amount of fee shall be computed as if the suit were for the possession of such land or interest. If we examine the prayer in the plaint carefully, we find that the plaintiff has asked for a permanent injunction against the defendants restraining them from attaching or continuing to attach the property. This in effect would give to the plaintiff relief contemplated by the provisions of Section 6 (ix) of the Bombay Court Fees Act without using the exact words of that provision. That provision talks of suits to set aside the attachment of land. What the plaintiff wants the Court to do is to grant the plaintiff an injunction against the defendants asking them to discontinue the attachment. This is no more nor less than asking the Court to set aside the attachment. In my opinion, the prayer in the plaint is equivalent to a prayer for setting aside the attachment. But even if it were not so, the prayer for setting aside the attachment would be implicit in the prayer in the plaint because without setting aside the attachment the Court cannot ask the defendants to discontinue the attachment. Before the Court asks the defendants to discontinue the attachment, the Court must come to the conclusion that the attachment is liable to be set aside. I, therefore, hold that the suit falls under Section 6 (ix) of the Court Fees Act. Mr. Shah for the plaintiff invited my attention to a Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of 'Dayachand Nemchand v. Hemchand Dharamchand' (1902) ILR 4 Bom 515 (FB) where it has been held that the term "land" in Section 7 (viii) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, does not include a house. Whereas in this case what is attached is land with buildings thereon. Section 7 (viii) is in the same terms as Section 6 (ix) of the Bombay Court Fees Act. Mr. Shah therefore contended that Section 6(ix) was not applicable. However even if the building is not included, the value of land alone would far exceed Rs. 25,000/- and would put the suit outside the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court.

10. Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act in its application to the State of Maharashtra covers Section 6(ix) of the Bombay Court Fees Act. Accordingly, the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction shall be the same as the valuation of the suit for the purpose of Court-fees. If we take the amount for which the property is attached, the said amount is Rs. 8,82,427.65. But in case on a proper valuation being made of the attached property, it is found that the value of the suit property is less than the amount for which it is attached, by virtue of the proviso the Court will have to compute Court fees on the value of the land as if it was a suit for possession. Section 6(v) provides for suits for possession of land, houses and gardens and states that they shall be valued according to the value of the subject-matter and that such valuation would be deemed to be, where the subject-matter is a house or garden, according to the market value of the house or garden. In case where the subject-matter is land the valuation would be as provided in the said clause.

11. Now I come to the contention of the plaintiff that the suit would fall under Article 23(f) of Schedule II to the Bombay Court Fees Act of 1959, because the subject-matter of the suit, according to the plaintiff, is not capable of being estimated in money value. Assuming that the subject-matter is not capable of being estimated in money value for the purpose of the Court Fees Act, it may still be capable of valuation for the purpose of Suits Valuation Act and jurisdiction. The suit obviously relates to land or interest in land. The plaintiff seeks to avoid the attachment of the suit land for payment of income-tax due by her husband. Section 4 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887 provides that such interest in land is to be valued in accordance with the rules framed by the State Government under Section 3 of the Suits Valuation Act. It is conceded that no rules have been framed under Section 3 of the said Act. Under these circumstances, the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of 'Dayaram Jagjivan v. Gordhandas Dayaram, (1906) 8 Bom LR 85 provides that the valuation must be based on the market value of the land. The same question also came up for decision in the Patna High Court in the case of 'Jadunandan Gope v. Syed Najmuzzaman AIR 1957 Pat 560 where it is observed that suits relating to lands coming under the scope of Section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act are governed by Section 4 of the Suits Valuation Act, and, if no rules have been made under Ss 3 and 4 of the Suits Valuation Act for the valuation of an interest in land which is the subject-matter of a suit under Section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, the market value of the subject-matter has always been taken as the value for the purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction. Bearing the judgments of the Bombay and Patna High Courts in mind I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that where the suit related to interest in land prior to the coming into force of the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959, it would have fallen under Section 7(iv)(c) of the Court Fees Act, and would have been valued in accordance with Sections 3 and 4 of the Suits Valuation Act, and if no rules were prescribed by the State Government, the suit would have been valued in accordance with the value of the interest in land at the market rate prevailing at the date of the institution of the suit.

12. Section 4 of the Suits Valuation Act as applicable to the State of Maharashtra expressly makes the said Section applicable to suits falling under Art. 23(f) of Schedule II of the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959. Even if the contention of the plaintiff that her suit falls under that provision were correct, for the purpose of jurisdiction the suit would have to be valued at the market value of the property which would in any case exceed Rs 25,000/- and be beyond the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court.

13. If the suit fell under Article 23(f) of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act and it was incapable of being estimated in money value both for the purposes of Court Fees as well as for the purpose of jurisdiction under the Suits Valuation Act there would be another difficulty in the way of the plaintiff instituting this suit in the Bombay City Civil Court. In Bombay, by clause 12 of the Letters Patent the High Court in its original jurisdiction has been empowered to receive, try and determine suits of every description except those suits which fall within the jurisdiction of the Bombay Small Cause Court or the Bombay City Civil Court. The residuary jurisdiction vests in the High Court on its original side. It is not contended by the plaintiff that the suit falls within the jurisdiction of the Bombay Small Cause Court. In fact the suit has been instituted in the Bombay City Civil Court. We must see if the suit will fall within the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court. If it will not, it must fall within the residuary jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court on its original side.

14. Section 3 of the Bombay City Civil Court Act, 1948 provides that the City Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to receive, try and dispose of all suits and other proceedings of a civil nature not exceeding Rs 10,000/- in value and arising within the Greater Bombay except suits or proceedings which are cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The State Government is empowered to increase the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court by a notification upto a sum of Rs 25,000/-. The State Government has done so. The present jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court therefore is to try and dispose of suits of a civil nature not exceeding Rs. 25,000/- in value. If, according to the plaintiff, her suit is not capable of being estimated in money value, it cannot be predicted or stated that the suit will not exceed Rs. 25,000/- in value. In order to be able to state that the suit does not exceed Rs 25,000/- in value, the plaintiff should be able to estimate the money value of the suit. If she has not been able to estimate the money value the City Civil Court will have no jurisdiction and the suit must be filed in the Bombay High Court on its Original Side by virtue of the residuary jurisdiction under clause 12 of the Letters Patent.

15. A similar question arose before Allahabad High Court in the case of 'Paras Ram v. Janak Bai, ILR (1961) 1 All 932 = (AIR 1961 All 395) (FB). In an appeal from an order under Section 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 made by the Civil Judge, Kanpur, the question arose whether in view of the fact that the subject-matter was incapable of monetary valuation, the appeal would lie to the District Court which heard appeals in matters not exceeding Rs. 10,000/- in value or to the High Court. It was held in that case by a Full Bench of Allahabad High Court that when no value was fixed on the petition and when there was no law also under which a certain value or a value not below or not exceeding a certain sum ought to have been fixed, it cannot be said that the value of the petition did not exceed Rs. 10,000/-. The Full Bench further held that the appeal in that case would lie to the court of the District Judge only if it could be predicted that the valuation of the petition did not exceed Rs 10,000/-. In the case of a subject-matter not capable of pecuniary valuation it cannot be said that it does not exceed any particular sum of money. It further held that the residuary power to entertain an appeal vests in the High Court not only when the value of the suit exceeds Rs 10,000/- but also when the subject-matter of the suit is incapable of pecuniary valuation. As I have observed in this case, if the subject-matter of the plaintiff's suit is not capable of being estimated in money value, for the purpose of jurisdiction under the Suits Valuation Act, she cannot state that it does not exceed Rs. 25,000/- in value, and unless she could state this the suit will not fall within the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court and must inevitably fall within the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court on its Original Side.

16. Mr. Shah appearing for the plaintiff invited my attention to the judgments in AIR 1939 Pat 531, AIR 1959 Mad 253, 60 Bom LR 587 = (AIR 1959 Bom 517), 55 Bom LR 418 = (AIR 1953 Bom 382). In my opinion, none of these judgments has application to the facts of this case because these cases pertain to valuation under Section 7(iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, which permits the plaintiff to put arbitrary valuation on his plaint and they do not pertain either to Section 6(iv) (d) or Section 6(ix) or Article 23(f) of Schedule II of the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959.

17. At the end of the arguments, Mr. Shah appearing for the plaintiff, handed me a draft of a proposed amendment and applied that I should permit the plaintiff to amend the plaint in terms of the said draft. This amendment introduces a fresh prayer (a) which in terms seeks a declaration that the attachment levied by the defendants on the suit property is null and void. The amendment retains the prayer for injunction. This amendment, if granted, may also take the suit to Section 6 (ix) of the Bombay Court Fees Act, 1959, and would require the suit to be valued in the manner provided in the said provision. In this amendment, the plaintiff seeks to value the prayer at Rs. 300/- for the purpose of Court fees and jurisdiction as if the suit fell under Section 6 (iv)(d) first proviso. However, in view of the fact that I have already held that the suit does not fall under that provision and would not fall under that provision even if the amendment were allowed, I reject the plaintiff's application for amendment. If the contention of the plaintiff is that such amendment would take the suit to Section 6 (iv)(d), third proviso, viz. a suit for declaration that the property is not liable to attachment with consequential relief, the suit would still be beyond the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court because ad valorem fee leviable in a suit for possession would be charged. The plaintiff would be free to repeat the amendment application before the Court to which she re-presents the plaint.

18. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

19. The application for amendment to be treated as a civil application and the same is also dismissed with costs.
SSG/D.V.C. Appeal dismissed.

CHANDURKAR, J. The only question of law which arises in this Letters Patent appeal is whether a suit for possession on the basis of a possessory title by a person who was in the peaceful possession of the property and who was dispossessed by a trespasser without any title is maintainable against the trespasser

2. Field survey number 9/1B area 3 acres and 13 gunthas, of mouza Khanapur-najik, Rahmapur in Amrawati district originally belonged to the Ganusa Anusa. He executed a sale-deed Ex P 8 in respect of this field in favour of one Sadashioswami for an ostensible consideration of Rs 177/- On 1st May 1940 he executed a lease deed Ex. 2 D-11 in favour of Sadashioswami (Ganusa) which entitled him to cultivate the field on lease for the year 1940-41. Possession of the field thus continued to remain with Ganusa. It is not disputed that even after the expiry of this lease the field continued to remain in possession of Ganusa Sadashioswami who was a celibate Sanyam died about 6 months after the date of the sale-deed and Ganusa also died in July 1942. After Ganusa the field came in possession of his son Ambusa. Ambusa died in March 1943. Ambusa had 5 sons. Plaintiff Yeshwant is one of them. The field, however, actually remained in the cultivation of Ambusa's another son Khushal, who is defendant No 4. While Khushal was in possession of the field sometime in June 1948 he was dispossessed by defendant No. 1 Vishwanath, who claimed ownership of the field in two capacities. His main claim was as a Chela of deceased Sadashioswami and he claimed to have ascended his Gadi sometime in November 1947. His alternative claim was that he was an heir to Sadashioswami being the son of the sister of Sadashioswami.

3. After the defendant no 1 dispossessed Khushal, he sold the field to one Parashramsa Balkasansa by a registered sale-deed dated 12th February 1949 and handed over possession to the purchaser Parashramsa also parted with the field having sold it away by a sale-deed dated 24th January 1952 to the defendant no 2, who is the appellant in this appeal for a consideration of Rs 2,996-14-0. While thus defendant no. 2 was in possession of the field, the plaintiff, who is one of the sons of Ambusa, filed a suit for possession. His case was that contemporaneous with the sale-deed there was an agreement of reconveyance which was entered into by Sadashioswami with the deceased Ganusa and that Ganusa had all along been trying to get a reconveyance in his favour. It was contended that the transaction was really a loan transaction. An effort was made to obtain a reconveyance by publishing a notice on 14-4-1941 in a local newspaper named Uday, and accordingly he attended the office of the Sub Registrar at Amrawati on 30-4-1941 awaiting the real owner to come there in pursuance of the advertisement to execute the document of reconveyance. None, however, turned up. However, according to the plaintiff, the ownership of the field continued with Ganusa and thereafter with his heirs. A relief of possession was thus claimed. The pleading of the plaintiff in paragraph 8 of the plaint was as follows

"The plaintiff hence sues for possession of the field on the basis of his prior possession till the date of his dispossession"

The sale by Ganusa to Sadashioswami was also challenged on the ground of want of legal necessity and it was alleged that it was not binding on Ambusa who had half share in the field. The price of the field was alleged to be Rs. 1000/- at the time of the sale

4. The defence of the contesting defendants was that they denied the alleged agreement of reconveyance and title was claimed in the defendant no. 1 in two alternative capacities as already stated. The right of the plaintiff to file the suit was challenged on the ground that he had no subsisting title. It was also alleged that the plaintiff having allowed the claim to get a reconveyance to be barred by limitation the suit was liable to be dismissed. The defendant no 2 raised an additional plea that he was a transferee for value in good faith from an ostensible owner and he thus claimed protection under Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act.

5. The trial Court and the first appellate Court concurrently found that there was an agreement of reconveyance entered into by Sadashioswami by which he agreed to reconvey the field to Ganusa within a period of one year on payment of Rs 177/- The claim put forth by the defendant no 1, that he was either a Chela, or that he was entitled to succeed to the property of Sadashioswami by virtue of his being sister's son, was found against him. The plea raised by defendant no 2, appellant Sheshrao, that he was a bona fide transferee for consideration and was, therefore, protected under Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, was also negatived and it was found concurrently that the transferee had taken no steps to make any enquiry on the basis of which such a plea could be sustained.

The Courts of fact decreed the claim of the plaintiff and held that the plaintiff was entitled to file a suit claiming possession on the basis of possessory title from the defendant no. 1, who had forcibly ousted him from possession and who had no better title to the field.

6. Against the judgment of the first appellate Court, the defendant no. 2 filed an appeal. In that appeal it was contended before the learned single Judge that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable because the plaintiff had failed to prove any subsisting title and also that he was in possession within 12 years from the date of the suit. Another contention which was raised in second appeal was that the plaintiff's suit was barred by time, because the plaintiff had allowed his remedy for specific performance of the agreement of reconveyance contained in the Karanama to be barred by time. The learned single Judge held that the suit as framed was not one for specific performance of an agreement of reconveyance, and therefore, the provision of Article 113 of the Limitation Act, 1908, did not bar the suit of the plaintiff.

7. The more substantial contention which was raised before the learned single judge was whether merely by virtue of the fact that a person was in lawful possession of the property he could file a suit against a trespasser, without any title, who had dispossessed him. On this question the learned Judge after reviewing a number of authorities, held that the defendant no. 2 had no title whatsoever, that he was a trespasser, that the title of the plaintiff on the basis of possession of Ganusa, his son Ambusa and Khushal from 7th June 1933 to June 1948 was clearly established, and that such title was sufficient to fulfil the requirements of Article 142 of the Limitation Act. The learned single Judge also held that the suit having been filed on 26-9-1956 the plaintiff's possession within a period of 12 years from the date of dispossession which was in June 1948 was proved. It was held that the possession of Khushal could at least be held to be on behalf of all the sons of Ambusa who were co-owners of the field. The learned Judge also confirmed the findings of facts recorded by the first appellate Court that Vishwanath had failed to establish that he was a Chela of Sadashioswami, or that he was the son of sister of Sadashioswami. The learned Judge confirmed the finding that Sheshrao had not taken any steps to ascertain that his transferor had no power to make the transfer to him and that he had not acted in good faith as required by the provisions of Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed by the learned Judge. On leave under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent being granted by the learned Judge the appellant has filed this Letters Patent appeal.

8. In this appeal the learned counsel for the appellant fairly accepted the findings of fact that defendant no. 1 had failed to establish any title to the property. But the contention which he raised was that this was a dispute between two trespassers, namely, the defendant no. 1 and the plaintiff. According to him, the plaintiff had no kind of title to be in possession of the property after the expiry of the lease in favour of Ganusa executed by Sadashioswami and he must, therefore, also be taken to be a trespasser. The contention was that in such a case merely on the basis of prior possession a suit for restoration of possession on dispossession by a trespasser cannot be maintainable. According to the learned counsel, there was an additional factor in this case, namely, that the original owner Sadashioswami was dead and with the finding that the defendant no. 1 had no title to the property, the property was really without any owner against whom lawful possession could be claimed either by Ganusa or his heirs, and therefore, the possession of Ganusa and his heirs, namely, Khushal and the plaintiff, could not be said to be lawful possession to which they would be entitled to be restored.

9. We are unable to accept this contention. It is now well settled that the possession of a tenant after the expiry of the lease in his favour is juridical possession and is protected by law. If an authority for the proposition is needed it is to be found in a recent decision in Lallu Yeshwant Singh v. Rao Jagdish Singh, 1968 Mah LJ 496=(AIR 1968 SC 620). In this decision their Lordships of the Supreme Court, while dealing with the nature of possession of a tenant after his lease stands terminated, have observed as follows:—

"Under the Indian Law the possession of a tenant who has ceased to be a tenant is protected by law. Although he may not have a right to continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy, his possession is juridical and that possession is protected by statute. A lessor is not entitled to use force to throw out the lessee."

It will thus appear that after the lease in favour of Ganusa had terminated by efflux of time his possession and the possession of his heirs thereafter was a lawful and juridical possession which was protected by law. At the same time the defendant no. 1, who dispossessed Khushal, who was one of the co-owners being the heir of Ganusa, had no title to the property. He was, therefore, a trespasser who was not entitled to oust the person in lawful and juridical possession, much less dispossess him by use of force.

10. The question whether merely on the basis of a lawful prior possession the person, who was in such possession and has been dispossessed by another who has no right to dispossess or who has no right to be in possession can file a suit for possession has now been decided by the Supreme Court in a recent decision in Nair Service Society Ltd. v. K. C. Alexander, AIR 1968 SC 1165. The plaintiff in that case who had been in possession of land was dispossessed by the defendant and in a suit for possession filed by the plaintiff the question was whether the plaintiff could maintain a suit for possession (apart from a possessory suit under the Travancore Laws analogous to Section 9 of the Indian Specific Relief Act) without proof of title basing himself mainly on his prior possession. The High Court found in favour of the plaintiff. In appeal before the Supreme Court the same contention was raised by the defendant and it was alleged that a suit for ejectment cannot lie without title and that a prior trespasser cannot maintain the suit against the later trespasser. The plaintiff's suit was held to be maintainable. While deciding the contention of the defendant their Lordships after observing that Section 8 of the Specific Relief Act did not prohibit a suit based on prior possession filed after the period of six months prescribed by Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act have approved the decision in Mustapha Sahib v. Santha Pillai, (1900) ILR 23 Mad 179 in which Subramania Ayyar J. observes

"that a party ousted by a person who has no better right is, with reference to the person so ousting, entitled to recover by virtue of the possession he had held before the ouster even though that possession was without any title."

"The rule in question is so firmly established as to render a lengthened discussion about it quite superfluous. Asher v. Whitlock, (1865) 1 QB 1 and the rulings of the Judicial Committee in Mt. Sunder v. Mt. Parbat (1888-89) 16 Ind App 186 (PC) and Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) 20 Ind App 99 (PC) not to mention numerous other decisions here and in England to the same effect, are clear authorities in support of the view stated above. Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act cannot possibly be held to take away any remedy available with reference to the well-recognised doctrine expressed in Pollock and Wright on possession thus—Possession in law is a substantive right or interest which exists and has legal incidents and advantages apart from the true owner's title"

Their Lordships of the Supreme Court with reference to these observations have observed in paragraph 13 of the judgment as follows:

"We entirely agree with the statement of the law in the Madras case from which we have extracted the observations of the learned Judges"

After quoting these observations their Lordships have further observed in paragraph 14 as follows:

"The uniform view of the courts is that if Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is utilised the plaintiff need not prove title and the title of the defendant does not avail him. When, however, the period of 6 months has passed questions of title can be raised by the defendant and if he does so the plaintiff must establish a better title or fail. In other words, the right is only restricted to possession only in a suit under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act but that does not bar a suit on prior possession within 12 years and 'title need not be proved unless the defendant can prove one'. The present amended Articles 64 and 65 bring out this difference. Article 64 enables a suit within 12 years from dispossession, for possession of immoveable property based on possession and not on title, when the plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed. Article 65 is for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein based on title. The amendment is not remedial but declaratory of the law" (Underlining (herein ' ') is ours)

The position is further summarised in Paragraph 18 of the judgment after making a reference to two English decisions in (1865) 1 QB 1 and Burling v. Read, (1848) 11 QB 904 and their Lordships have stated

"The effect of the two cases is that between two claimants, neither of whom has title in himself the plaintiff if dispossessed is entitled to recover possession subject of course to the law of limitation. If he proves that he was dispossessed within 12 years he can maintain his action"

Thus it is clear that a suit for possession on the basis of a possessory title of the plaintiff who has been dispossessed by a person without any title is maintainable and the plaintiff is entitled to claim possession from the trespasser Gunusa and after him his heirs were entitled to be in juridical possession in spite of the expiry of lease and in fact were in such juridical and lawful possession, they were not liable to be ousted by the defendant no. 1, who was a trespasser. The present suit was, therefore, maintainable and was rightly decreed because the suit admittedly is brought within 12 years from the date of dispossession, and it has been found on facts that the plaintiff was in possession within the period of 12 years from the date of suit.

11. The contention, that the possession of Ganusa and his heirs could not be lawful because of the death of Sadashioswami, must also be rejected. Merely because the defendant failed to establish that he was the heir of Sadashioswami it could not be held that Sadashioswami did not have any other natural or religious heir and even assuming it to be so we fail to see how it can affect the nature of the possession of Gunusa and his heirs. The question whether he had any religious or natural heir does not arise in this case nor was the question as to who will become the owner of Sadashioswami's property in the absence of any such heir ever raised in these proceedings. It suffices, therefore, to say that the absence of any natural or religious or apparent heir of Sadashioswami coming forth to claim the property in suit cannot make unlawful the possession of Ganusa and his heirs, which was otherwise lawful.

12. The result, therefore, is that there is no reason to interfere with the judgment of the learned single Judge. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

(A) Panchayats — Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (5 of 1962), S. 27 — Scope — Election petition under S. 27(1) merely challenging validity of election of declared candidate — Judge can only declare that election of returned candidate was void — He cannot declare any other candidate to be duly elected in his place in absence of any prayer in election petition — Rule equally applies even in cases falling under second proviso to S. 27(5)(b). (Representation of the People Act (1951), Ss. 100 and 101).

If in a petition under section 27(1) the candidate or the voter who has filed the election petition seeks no more than a declaration as to the validity of an election of a Councillor and does not seek a declaration in favour of any candidate, the Judge has nothing more to do than to declare the election of the returned candidate to be void. He can only declare a candidate to be duly elected in his place provided in the petition of the candidate or the voter a declaration is sought in his favour and not otherwise.

S. 27(2) provides only for the holding of an inquiry and not for any declaration of results. Declaration of result is provided for in Section 27(5) clauses (a) and (b). Clause (a) applies in cases of corrupt practices and clause (b) applies in cases where there are no corrupt practices. In cases where there are corrupt practices the election of the person guilty of the corrupt practices is to be set aside and no one is to be declared to be elected in his place. Where there is no corrupt practice the Judge has the power to set aside the election of a successful candidate and to declare the person who secured the highest number of votes elected in his place, provided a declaration is sought in his favour in the petition and not otherwise. (Paras 13, 14)

S. 27(5)(b) second proviso merely provides for the contingency of a tie and as to what is to be done in the event of a tie. But it does not permit a declaration of being duly elected to be made in favour of a person who succeeds in the casting of lots. Before such a declaration is made, the Judge will have to see whether a declaration is sought in his favour or not. It can only mean that if in casting of lots a candidate in whose favour a declaration is not sought succeeds, he cannot be declared to be duly elected. Thus, even under the second proviso to Section 27(5)(b) of the Act a candidate who is a party to a tie or equality of votes cannot be declared to be elected if no declaration is sought in his favour in the petition. That being so, it is unnecessary for a Judge to cast lots between a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought or who has been declared to be elected and a candidate in whose favour no declaration is sought.

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 226 and 227 — Application challenging decision in election petition under S. 27 of Maharashtra Act (5 of 1962) — Scrutiny of votes is a question of fact — High Court is not sitting in appeal over Judge designated to hear election petitions and would not be justified in interfering with the finding of fact. (Para 17)

B. Y. Deshmukh, for Petitioners; S. B. Bhasme, for Opponent No. 1.

NAIN, J. :— This is a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India for setting aside an order dated 8th August 1968 made by the learned Assistant Judge, Kolhapur, in Miscellaneous application No. 76 of 1967 in an election petition and for declaring the petitioners to be duly elected as members of Panchayat Samiti Panhala from Wadiratnagiri constituency.

2. On 31st July 1967 election for Panchayat Samiti Panhala from Wadirainagiri constituency was held. It was a two-member constituency. The petitioners Nos 1 and 2 and respondents Nos. 1 to 3 were the candidates for these two seats. Respondent No 4 is the Returning Officer and respondent No. 5 is the learned Assistant Judge.

3. The votes were counted on 2nd August 1967 by the Returning Officer and he found that the petitioner No 1 polled 69 votes, respondent No 1 polled 69 votes and respondent No 2 polled 77 votes. Respondent No 2 having polled the highest number of votes was declared to be elected and as there was a tie between the petitioner No 1 and the respondent No 1, following the procedure prescribed by Sec. 26 of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961, Act No V of 1962, hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as the Act, the Returning Officer having been empowered in that behalf by the Collector decided by lots and as the lot fell for petitioner No 1, he was declared to be elected in the second seat.

4. Against the declaration of results by the Returning Officer, the respondent No. 1 filed an election petition under Section 27 of the Act. The learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal appointed a Commissioner for recounting the votes. Before the learned Commissioner 17 voting papers were in dispute. The learned Commissioner could not take a decision with regard to these 17 voting papers. The learned Commissioner therefore counted the remaining votes and made a report to the trial Court. The trial Court scrutinised these 17 voting papers and ultimately found the result of the election to be as under —

|----------------------|---------------|
| (1) Petitioner No 1 | ... 65 votes. |
| (2) Petitioner No 2 | ... 66 votes. |
| (3) Respondent No. 1 | ... 66 votes. |
| (4) Respondent No 2 | ... 68 votes. |
| (5) Respondent No 3 | ... 1 vote. |

5. There was no difficulty about respondent No 2 as he had secured the highest number of votes. He was, therefore, declared to be elected. The difficulty arose with regard to petitioner No 2 and respondent No 1 who had each secured 66 votes and there was a tie between them. The learned trial Judge came to the conclusion that as petitioner No 2 had filed no petition under Section 27 and had not even appeared in the proceedings, he could not be declared to be elected. He, therefore, declared the respondent No 1 to be elected. Accordingly, the learned trial judge declared the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 to be elected and he dismissed the petition of the petitioners. Against the said decision, the present petition has been filed.

6. As the case of the 1st and 2nd petitioners is on a different footing, Mr. Deshmukh appearing for the petitioners first dealt with the case of the petitioner No 2. No declaration had been made in his favour although he had secured the same number of votes as respondent No. 1 on the ground that the petitioner No 2 had filed no petition under Section 27 of the Act and had not appeared in the proceedings.

7. The first contention of Mr. Deshmukh on behalf of the petitioner No 2 was that the further or second proviso of Section 27 (5)(b) provided that if, after computation by the Court, an equality of votes is found to exist between any candidates and the addition of one vote will entitle any candidate to be declared elected, one additional vote shall be added to the total number of valid votes found to have been received in favour of such candidates selected by lot drawn in the presence of the Judge in such manner as he may determine. Mr. Deshmukh contended that as there was a tie between the petitioner No 2 and the respondent No 1, the learned Judge ought to have followed the procedure prescribed by the second or the further proviso and should have cast lots between these two candidates and added one vote in favour of the person selected by lot and on the basis of such addition he should have declared the result. The contention of Mr. Deshmukh was that as the learned Judge had not followed this procedure, the declaration of election in favour of the respondent No. 1 was void.

8. In order to appreciate this contention, it is necessary to set out the provisions of the first five sub-sections of Section 27 of the Act. They read as under:

"27(1) If the validity of any election of a Councillor or the legality of any order made or proceedings held under Section 26 is brought in question by any candidate at such election or by any person qualified to vote at the election to which such question refers such candidate or person may, at any time within fifteen days after the date of the declaration of the result of the election or the date of the order or proceeding, apply to the District Judge of the District within which the election has been held, for the determination of such question.

(2) An enquiry shall thereupon be held by a Judge, not below the rank of an Assistant Judge, appointed by the State Government either specially for the case, or for such cases generally, and such Judge may, after such enquiry as he deems necessary, pass an order confirming or amending the declared result of the election or the order of the officer empowered by the Collector in that behalf under Section 26, or setting the election aside. For the purposes of the said enquiry, the Judge may exercise any of the powers of a Civil Court, and his decision shall be conclusive. If the election is set aside, a date for holding a fresh election shall forthwith be fixed under Section 14.

(3) All applications received under sub-section (1) —

(a) in which the validity of the election of Councillors to represent the same electoral division is in question, shall be heard by the same Judge; and

(b) in which the validity of the election of the same Councillor elected to represent the same electoral division is in question, shall be heard together.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Judge shall not permit (a) any application to be compromised or withdrawn, or (b) any person to alter or amend any pleading, unless he is satisfied that such application for compromise or withdrawal or application for such alteration or amendment is bona fide, and not collusive.

(5) (a) If on holding such enquiry, the Judge finds that a candidate has, for the purpose of election, committed a corrupt practice within the meaning of sub-section (6), he shall declare the candidate disqualified for the purpose of that election and of such fresh election as may be held under sub-section (2) and shall set aside the election of such candidate if he has been elected.

(b) If in any case to which clause (a) does not apply, the validity of an election is in dispute between two or more candidates, the Judge, after a scrutiny and computation of the votes recorded in favour of each candidate, is of opinion that in fact any candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought has received the highest number of the valid votes, the Judge shall after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void declare the candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought, to have been duly elected;

Provided that for the purpose of such computation no vote shall be reckoned as valid if the Judge finds that any corrupt practice was committed by any person known or unknown, in giving or obtaining it;

Provided further that, after such computation if any equality of votes is found to exist between any candidates and the addition of one vote will entitle any candidate to be declared elected, one additional vote shall be added to the total number of valid votes found to have been received in favour of such candidate selected by lot drawn in the presence of the Judge in such manner, as he may determine."

Sub-section (1) of Section 27 provides that if the validity of any election of a Councillor is brought in question by any candidate at such election or by any voter such candidate or voter may at any time within 15 days after the date of the declaration of the result file an election petition. It will be observed that the election petition may be filed either by a candidate or by a voter and the election petition may bring into question the validity of an election of a Councillor. The candidate or the voter who files the petition need not seek a declaration of election in favour of any candidate. He may rest content with challenging the validity of the election and seek no further orders with regard to declaration in favour of any candidate.

9. Sub-section (2) provides that on an election petition being filed, an inquiry shall be held by a Judge designated by the State Government and such Judge may after such inquiry as he deems necessary pass an order confirming or amending the declared result of the election or he may set aside the election.

10. Clause (a) of sub-section (5) provides that if on holding such inquiry the Judge finds that a candidate has for the purpose of election committed a corrupt practice, he shall declare the candidate disqualified for the purpose of that election and for a fresh election and shall set aside the election of such candidate if he has been elected. This sub-section does not provide that a person getting the next highest number of votes shall be declared to be elected in place of the disqualified candidate.

11. Clause (b) of sub-section (5) provides that in cases in which there is no corrupt practice, but the validity of an election is in dispute between two or more candidates, the Judge after a scrutiny of voting papers and computation of the votes recorded in favour of each candidate is of the opinion that in fact any candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought has received the highest number of the valid votes, the Judge shall after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void, declare the candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought, to have been duly elected. It will be observed that under Section 27 (5)(b) the Judge has power after setting aside an election to declare only a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought in the petition to be duly elected. If in a petition under Section 27(1) the candidate or the voter who has filed the election petition seeks no more than a declaration as to the validity of an election of a Councillor and does not seek a declaration in favour of any candidate, the Judge has nothing more to do than to declare the election of the returned candidate to be void. He can only declare a candidate to be duly elected in his place provided in the petition of the candidate or the voter a declaration is sought in his favour and not otherwise. If, for example, in a three-member-constituency, B is declared to be elected and the petition whether filed by candidate A or even by a voter seeks that A should be declared to be elected, A can only be declared to be elected if he has secured the highest number of votes. But candidate C can in no case be declared to be elected even if he has secured the highest number of votes, because he is not a person in whose favour a declaration is sought in the petition.

12 The second or the further proviso to clause (b) of sub-section (5) provides for the case of a tie between any two candidates and for casting of lots in the presence of the Judge. In our opinion this contingency would only arise if there is a tie between candidates in whose favour a declaration is sought or between such candidate and a candidate who has been declared to be elected. The contingency will not arise if the tie is between a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought or who has been declared to be elected and a candidate who has neither sought to file an election petition himself, seeking a declaration in his own favour nor has a voter sought a declaration in his favour. The learned Judge has obviously followed this view of the matter and has come to the conclusion that the contingency for casting lots between the petitioner No 2 and the respondent No. 1 did not arise as in the election petition there was neither a declaration sought in favour of petitioner No 2, nor did the petitioner No. 2 even care to appear in the proceedings.

13 Mr. Deshmukh contended that Section 27(1) does not provide that an election petition must necessarily seek a declaration in favour of any candidate and that an election petition can merely challenge the validity of the election of a Councillor. He contended that it is for the Court to declare any candidate to be elected whether a declaration is sought in his favour or not, because under sub-section (2) an inquiry is held with regard to the votes of all the candidates. There does not appear to us to be much substance in this contention, because sub-section (2) provides only for the holding of an inquiry and not for any declaration of results. Declaration of result is provided for in section 27(5) clauses (a) and (b). Clause (a) applies in cases of corrupt practices and clause (b) applies in cases where there are no corrupt practices. In cases where there are corrupt practices the election of the person guilty of the corrupt practices is to be set aside and no one is to be declared to be elected in his place. Where there is no corrupt practice the Judge has the power to set aside the election of a successful candidate and to declare the person who secured the highest number of votes elected in his place, provided a declaration is sought in his favour in the petition and not otherwise.

14. Mr. Deshmukh then contended that sub-section (2) of Section 27 gives power to the Judge, after an inquiry, to confirm or amend the declared result or to set aside the election. He contended that the power to amend would cover the power to declare as duly elected any candidate who had secured the highest number of votes even if no declaration was sought in his favour. There appears to be no substance in this contention also, because as we have stated above, sub-section (2) provides only for an inquiry being held and not for declaring any person to be elected in place of a person whose election is set aside. That can only be done only under sub-section (5)(b) which provides that such a declaration can only be made in favour of a person in whose favour a declaration is sought.

Sub-section (2) merely gives power to amend, but that power to amend would be subject to the provisions of sub-section (5)(b). The words of Section 27(5) (b) indicate that there must be dispute as to validity between two or more candidates. The dispute can only be between a candidate who files an election petition under Section 27(1) or on whose behalf a voter files an application and the candidate who has been declared to be elected. That a voter has filed petition on behalf of a candidate will be indicated by the fact that the voter seeks a declaration in his favour. If the voter does not seek a declaration in favour of any candidate, the only result will be that the election of a candidate may be set aside, but no one will be declared to be elected in his place. It is true that Section 27(5)(b) provides that votes recorded in favour of each candidate must be computed. But it then proceeds to provide that if in the opinion of the Judge a candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought has received the highest number of votes, the Judge shall set aside the election of the returned candidate and declare the candidate with the highest number of votes in whose favour a declaration is sought to be duly elected. There can be no manner of doubt that under clause (b) of sub-section (5) only a person in whose favour a declaration is sought by the candidate who has filed the petition or by the voter alone can be declared to be elected, and not any other candidate even if he secures the highest number of votes.

15. The next contention of Mr. Deshmukh is that the second or the further proviso to Section 27(5)(b) is an independent provision and it is not necessary under that proviso that a declaration should be sought in favour of a candidate in order to enable that he should be delared elected. His contention is that this is an independent provision which carves out an exception out of section 27 (5)(b) and the limitation imposed by clause (b) of a declaration only in favour of a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought does not apply to the proviso. There appear to us to be two objections to this contention. The first objection is that the proviso while it provides for casting of lots in case of a tie does not provide that the Judge shall declare the candidate who succeeds in the casting of lots to be duly elected. If, as is contended by Mr. Deshmukh, the proviso were an independent provision of law, it would provide that the person successful in the casting of lots would be declared to be duly elected by the Judge. In absence of any such provision in the proviso after the casting of lots, the Judge has to go back to the main provision of clause (b) for declaring any person to be duly elected. Here he will have to meet with the difficulty that he can only make such declaration in favour of a person in whose favour a declaration is sought. This by itself would negative the contention of Mr. Deshmukh that the proviso is an independent provision of law. In our opinion, proviso merely provides for the contingency of a tie and as to what is to be done in the event of a tie. But it does not permit a declaration of being duly elected to be made in favour of a person who succeeds in the casting of lots. Before such a declaration is made, the Judge will have to see whether a declaration is sought in his favour or not. It can only mean that if in casting of lots a candidate in whose favour a declaration is not sought succeeds, he cannot be declared to be duly elected. The second objection to such interpretation would be that it would create an anomaly. While the candidate in whose favour no declaration is sought could not be declared to be elected even if in a two-member constituency where there are three or more candidates he secures the highest number of votes, there would be a chance of his being elected on casting of lots in case of a tie even if he secures a smaller number than the highest. The interpretation that we propose to put on the proviso will leave no room for such anomaly. In our opinion, the proviso must be so construed, as to harmonize with the main provision of clause (b); such construction will also be consistent with the legal maxim "vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt" — Laws come to the assistance of the vigilant and not of those that are sleeping.

16. We are, therefore, of the opinion that even under the further or the second proviso to Section 27(5)(b) of the Act a candidate who is a party to a tie or equality of votes cannot be declared to be elected if no declaration is sought in his favour in the petition. That being so, it is unnecessary for a Judge to cast lots between a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought or who has been declared to be elected and a candidate in whose favour no declaration is sought. In this particular case, no useful purpose would have been served by the learned Judge casting lots between petitioner No. 2 and respondent No. 1 who secured equal number of votes, because no declaration was sought in favour of petitioner No. 2. In our opinion, the learned Judge was right in declaring the respondent No. 1 to be elected.

17. On behalf of the petitioner No. 1 Mr. Deshmukh invited us to scrutinise the result of the learned trial Judge scrutinizing the 17 disputed voting papers and to come to a conclusion different from the one to which the learned trial Judge had come. He contended that as a result of our scrutiny the petitioner No. 1 who gets 65 votes, that is one vote less than the petitioner No. 2 and the respondent No. 1 and three votes less than the respondent No. 2 would be found to secure the highest number of votes. Scrutiny of votes is, however, a question of fact and in a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India, we would not be justified in sitting in appeal over the learned Judge designated to hear election petitions under Section 27 and to come to a different conclusion on a finding of fact. We have, therefore, declined to accede to this request on behalf of the petitioner No. 1.

18. In the result, the petition fails and is dismissed with costs.
KSB Petition dismissed.

VIMADALAL J. :- These are three References under Section 61 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959, by the applicants who are a sole proprietary concern carrying on business as photographers and photographic dealers in Bombay, which were heard together, and may conveniently be disposed of by a common judgment. These References arise on three specimen bills which are typical of the three types of transactions entered into by the applicants, with their customers in the course of their business. The transaction which is the subject matter of 1st bill No 60293 dated 9th August 1960 is one to prepare enlargements of a certain size from negatives given by the customer. The second type of transaction which is to be found in specimen Bill No 95198 dated 18th August 1960 relates to developing the customer's film roll and taking out prints from the same. The third type of transaction which is to be found in specimen Bill No 16531 dated 23rd August 1960 relates to the taking of a photograph, and supplying the negative thereof with three prints of a certain size to the customer. On an application under Section 52 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959 by the Applicants, for the determination of the question as to whether any tax was attracted on the transactions which were the subject-matter of the said three bills, and, if so, at what rate, the Commissioner of Sales Tax in his Order dated 17th August 1961 took the view that the transactions embodied in all the said bills amount to sales except that part of the transactions which is the subject-matter of Bill No 95198 which related to the developing of the customer's film roll, which he held would not amount to a sale. The applicants appealed from the decision of the Commissioner of Sales Tax to the Sales Tax Tribunal at Bombay in respect of each of the three specimen bills. The tribunal by its Order dated 28th June 1963, confirmed the decision of the Commissioner of Sales Tax on all points, and dismissed those appeals on the ground that the gist of the business of a photographer is to practice the photographic process commercially in order to produce an article which would be brought and would yield profit, and that the essence of the contract, therefore, was not work and labour, but was sale of goods. The applicants then applied to the Sales Tax Tribunal for a Reference under Section 61 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959, and the Tribunal by its Order dated 15th January 1964 referred the following question for the determination of this Court which is identical in each of the three References in respect of the three specimen bills referred to above —

“Whether having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, the transactions which were the subject matter of determination by the Commissioner amount to sales?”

These references were heard together by us and were argued with characteristic thoroughness by the learned counsel on either side.

2. In Benjamin on Sale (8th Edition), the observations of Martin B in the English case of Clay v Yates (1856) 156 ER 1123 at p 1125=108 RR 461 at p 464 have been quoted (at p 160) in which contracts have been divided into three broad classes; (1) contracts "for labour simply"; (2) contracts for work and materials; and (3) contracts for goods sold and delivered. In another passage in the same book (at p. 168), it has been stated that where the passing of property is merely ancillary to the contract for the performance of work, such a contract does not thereby become a contract of sale. In a classic passage in Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Edition), Vol. 34, pp. 6-7, Paragraph 3, which has been quoted in most of the leading decisions on the subject, it has been laid down as follows:—

"A contract of sale of goods must be distinguished from a contract for work and labour. The distinction is often a fine one. A contract of sale is a contract whose main object is the transfer of the property in, and the delivery of the possession of, a chattel as a chattel to the buyer. Where the main object of work undertaken by the payee of the price is not the transfer of a chattel qua chattel, the contract is one for work and labour. The test is whether or not the work and labour bestowed end in anything that can properly become the subject of sale: neither the ownership of the materials, nor the value of the skill and labour as compared with the value of the materials, is conclusive, although such matters may be taken into consideration in determining, in the circumstances of a particular case, whether the contract is in substance one for work and labour or one for the sale of a chattel."

The leading case on the subject of contracts which involve both the transfer of property in some material, as well as the performance of work and labour, is the case of State of Madras v. Gannon Dunkerley & Co. (Madras) Ltd., (1958) 9 STC 353=(AIR 1958 SC 560). The Respondents in that case were doing the business of construction of buildings, roads and other works, and one of the items to which the reference in the said case related was the value of the material used by the respondents in the execution of their contracts. The Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1939, contained certain provisions, whereby tax was imposed on the supply of materials in the execution of works contracts. The sole question which arose before the Supreme Court in that case was whether there was a transaction of sale in respect of those goods, and the power of the Madras Legislature to impose a tax on sales under Entry 48 in List II of Schedule VII of the Government of India Act, 1935 extended to imposing a tax on the value of the materials used in works. After an exclusive review of the relevant case law, the Supreme Court held (at pp. 377-78 of STC)=(at p. 573 of AIR):—

"It has been already stated that, both under the common law and the statute law relating to the sale of goods in England and in India, to constitute a transaction of sale there should be an agreement, express or implied, relating to goods to be completed by passing of title in those goods. It is of the essence of this concept that both the agreement and the sale should relate to the same subject-matter. Where the goods delivered under the contract are not the goods contracted for, the purchaser has got a right to reject them, or to accept them and claim damages for breach of warranty. Under the law, therefore, there cannot be an agreement relating to one kind of property and a sale as regards another. We are accordingly of opinion that on the true interpretation of the expression "sale of goods" there must be an agreement between the parties for the sale of the very goods in which eventually property passes. In a building contract, the agreement between the parties is that the contractor should construct a building according to the specifications contained in the agreement, and in consideration therefor receive payment as provided therein, and as will presently be shown there is in such an agreement neither a contract to sell the materials used in the construction, nor does property pass therein as movables. It is therefore impossible to maintain that there is implicit in a building contract a sale of materials as understood in law."

The Supreme Court held that the expression "sale of goods" in Entry 48 is a nomen juris, its essential ingredients being an agreement to sell movables for a price, and property passing therein pursuant to that agreement. The Supreme Court further held that, in a building contract which was, as in that case, one, entire and indivisible—and that was its norm—there was no sale of goods, and it was not within the competence of the Provincial Legislature under Entry 48 to impose a tax on the supply of the materials used in such a contract, treating it as a sale. The Supreme Court, therefore, came to the conclusion that there was no sale, as such, of materials used in a building contract, and that the Provincial Legislature had no competence to impose a tax thereon under Entry 48. In arriving at that conclusion, the Supreme Court rested its decision also on the principle of accretion (at pp. 385-86 of STC)=(at p. 577 of AIR), holding that the property in the materials used in a building contract does not pass to the other party to the contract as movable property, but the construction embedded on the land becomes an accretion to it, and it vests in other party, not as a result of the contract, but as the owner of the land. The Supreme Court observed (at p 386 of STC)=(at p 577 of AIR) that the theory that a building contract can be broken up into its component parts, and as regards one of them it can be said that there was a sale must fail on the ground that there was no agreement to sell materials as such, and that property in them does not pass as movables. In order to avoid misconception, the Supreme Court has made it clear (at pp 387-88 of STC)=(at p 578 of AIR) that their conclusion in the said case had reference to works contracts which were "entire and indivisible", as in the case before them. The Supreme Court then proceeded to observe that contracts could, however, take several forms and further stated (at p 388 of STC)=(at p. 578 of AIR) as follows—

"It is possible that the parties might enter into distinct and separate contracts, one for the transfer of materials for money consideration and the other for payment of remuneration for services and for work done. In such a case, there are really two agreements, though there is a single instrument embodying them, and the power of the State to separate the agreement to sell from the agreement to do work and render service and to impose a tax thereon cannot be questioned, and will stand untouched by the present judgment"

In the case of transaction for work and labour done, and materials furnished, the first question that has, therefore, to be considered is the contract in question "Entire and indivisible", or does the transaction embody two distinct and separate contracts, one for the sale of goods as such, and the other for work and labour that is precisely what has not been considered at all in the cases reported in (1957) 8 STC 370 at p 375=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76 at p 78), (1961) 12 STC 151 at p 156=(AIR 1961 Pat 272 at p 273), (1965) 16 STC 441 at p 445 (Mad) (second point) and (1965) 16 STC 1021 at pp 1028-1030 (Guj), or in the Australian case reported in 53 Com WLR 69, which have been strongly relied upon by the taxing authorities in the present case, which I will presently discuss. In the first of those cases, severability was assumed whilst the learned Judges who decided each of the remaining cases appear to have assumed that the transactions which they were considering were entire and indivisible, which is the primary question that must be decided in all such cases. I am, therefore, unable to follow the decisions in those cases. It is only in the case of contracts that are "entire and indivisible" that the tests laid down in the passage from Halsbury quoted above and by the Supreme Court in Gannon Dunkerley & Co (Madras) Ltd.'s case, 1958-9 STC 353=(AIR 1958

SC 560) have to be applied for the purpose of determining the real nature of the transaction. In the case of transactions that are distinct and severable, on the other hand, as the Supreme Court itself has indicated at the end of its judgment (at p 388 of STC)=(at p. 578 of AIR) in Gannon Dunkerley's case, 1958-9 STC 353=(AIR 1958 SC 560) it is only the activity which results in a sale that can be taxed to sales tax.

3. It is the contention of Mr. Mehta on behalf of the applicants that, in the case of the transactions embodied in all the three specimen bills in the present case, the intention of the parties is not to effect a sale of goods, but to enter into a bargain for rendering service which involves the exercise of the artistic skill of the photographer concerned. In support of his contention that the assessee's work involves skill and labour, he has relied upon certain photographic publications which show the highly technical nature of the operations of a photographer in the matter of taking a photograph, developing the film and preparing the prints and/or enlargements. It is, on the other hand, contended by Mr. Khambatta on behalf of the Department that the essential feature of the business of a photographer is the production of goods for sale, and that, with the advance that has been made in the manufacture of cameras, and even in the matter of the subsequent process of developing, printing and enlarging in the studio, there is very little scope for the exercise by the photographer of skill of any nature, everything being regulated by mechanical gadgets in the camera itself, or by other scientific precision processes. In support of that contention, Mr. Khambatta has relied strongly on four reported decisions of various High Courts in the country, and also on a reported decision of the High Court of Australia, which, he has contended, are directly in point. I must, therefore, proceed to deal with each of those decisions.

4. The first is a decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in the case of D Masanda & Co v Commissioner of Sales Tax, 1957-8 STC 370 at p 375=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76 at p 78). The facts of that case were that, during the year 1952-53, the assessee imported photographic materials of the value of Rs 37,550/-, of which materials of the value of Rs 11,900/- were utilised by him in taking photographs and supplying copies thereof to the order of his customers on payment. Before the taxing authority, the assessee contended that he could not be assessed to sales tax on the value of the materials used by him in taking photographs, as there was no sale of those materials when, with the aid of those materials, he took photographs for his customers and supplied to them copies of the photographs on payment. That contention was rejected by the taxing authorities, and the petitioner was assessed to sales tax on the value of the photographic materials imported by him and utilised by him in his business as a photographer. The assessment made by the Sales Tax Officer was upheld in revision by the Commissioner of Sales Tax and on a Reference to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, that decision was confirmed. The question referred to the Madhya Pradesh High Court in that case actually was whether the photographic material consumed in photographic work could be treated as a sale, and the assessee could be said to be a dealer vis-à-vis such material. The High Court answered both parts of the question in the affirmative and there could really be no quarrel with that decision. No question arose in Masanda's case, 1957-8 STC 370=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76) of levying sales tax on the photographer's charges for taking the photographs, or on the charges for developing or for preparing the prints or enlargements of the photograph for his customers. Those are the questions that arise in the present case, and the decision in Masanda's case 1957-8 STC 370 = (AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76) cannot, therefore, be considered to be an authority in regard to the same. There are, no doubt, observations contained in the judgment in the said case (at p. 375 of STC)=(at p. 78 of AIR) to the effect that the essential feature of the applicant's business as a photographer was the production of goods for sale, but those observations go further than was necessary for the purpose of answering the question that was referred to the Madhya Pradesh High Court. Moreover, though the earlier decision of the same High Court in the case reported in 1955 6 STC 255 (Nag) which was followed in Masanda's case, 1957-8 STC 370=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76) had proceeded specifically on severability, and only the sale part of the transaction had been held liable to tax in that case, severability was assumed and the question of severability was not considered at all in Masanda's case, 1957-8 STC 370=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76).

5. The next in point of time is the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of M. Ghosh v. State of Bihar, 1961-12 STC 154 at p. 156=(AIR 1961 Pat 272 at p. 273). The facts of that case were that the petitioner carried on the business of a professional photographer, and was the proprietor of a shop and a photographic studio in Patna, and he was assessed to sales tax for the period from 1-1-1952 to 31-3-1955. The contention of the petitioner before the sales tax authority was that sales tax could not be lawfully levied on finished articles like photographs, as the action of the petitioner in taking photographs of customers and developing and printing negatives was not tantamount to sale of goods within the meaning of the Bihar Sales Tax Act. Having failed at all stages of the proceedings before the Revenue authorities, the question as to whether, in the circumstances of the case, the petitioner was liable to pay sales tax with regard to the sale of photographs of customers taken by him for the purpose of supplying printed copies of photographs to them on payment was referred to the Patna High Court. The Reference was answered by the High Court against the assessee, and he was held liable to pay sales tax on the same. As was done in Masanda's case, 1957-8 STC 370=(AIR 1957 Madh Pra 76) a professional photographer was distinguished from a portrait painter in Ghosh's case, 1961-12 STC 154=(AIR 1961 Pat 272) and the distinction sought to be drawn in the latter case was that the petitioner was practising a photographic process commercially in order to produce an article which would be bought and produce a commercial profit (at p. 155 of STC)=(at p. 272 of AIR). I fail to see how that observation would be inapplicable to a commercial artist who paints the portraits of any customer who chooses to walk into his studio and delivers it to the customer for a certain amount. The Patna High Court took the view that the essence of the contract between the petitioner and the customer was the supply of finished goods, and there was not a mere agreement for the exercise of skill and labour for the production of the photographs, but, with respect to the Patna High Court, the question as to whether the transaction which a photographer enters into with a customer is severable or not has not even been touched in the judgment in the said case.

6. The third decision in chronological order which was relied upon by Mr. Khambatta was the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of B. V. Bhatia v. State of Madras, (1965) 16 STC 441 at p. 445 (Mad) (second point). The said case related to two distinct types of transactions, the first relating to sales of radios, and the second relating to, what has been called in the said case, "Photo House Studio receipts" amounting to Rs. 2,023,30 for the assessment year 1959-60. We are concerned in the present case only with the second type of transactions. As in the present case, it was contended on behalf of the assessee in Bhatia's case, (1965) 16 STC 441 at p. 445 (Mad) that the supply of photos and photo-copies by a professional photographer to his customer is really the execution of a work of art and that the bargain by the photographer with his customers is really a bargain for work and labour, and not for the sale of specific goods or chattels. In rejecting that argument, it was observed in the judgment of the Madras High Court in Bhatia's case, (1965) 16 STC 441 at pp 447-48 (Mad) that when a customer goes into a photographer's studio and engages his services to take a picture, he is bargaining, not merely for the special skill which the photographer has, to produce a negative, but also to supply from that negative as many copies of the finished positive as the customer may require. In that connection, the Madras High Court relied (at p 449) on the fact that a professional commercial photographer does not surrender his negative, as showing that the bargain was for the supply of copies therefrom as finished goods and was, therefore, not a contract of labour. I fail to see how the fact as to whether a photographer surrenders the negative or retains it could make any difference in deciding upon the real nature of the transaction. Though the Madras High Court has in Bhatia's case, (1965) 16 STC 441 (Mad) discussed several authorities on the point, I do not find anything in the judgment of the Madras High Court in that case by way of reasoning to commend itself to me. Moreover, in the judgment in that case also the question as to whether the transaction was severable or not seems to have completely escaped the attention of the Madras High Court.

7. The next case to which I must refer is the decision of the Gujarat High Court in the case of Chelaram Hasomal v. State of Gujarat, (1965) 16 STC 1021 (at pp 1023-1930) (Gui) which, in my opinion, is clearly distinguishable on facts. The assessee in that case prepared photographs of gods, saints, public men, and even private individuals and transferred them by a certain process on enamelled copper plates. The question referred to the High Court, however, related only to enamelled photographs of individuals. In holding that that amounted to a contract of sale the Court no doubt proceeded on the analogy of a photograph, but in my opinion, the real nature of the transaction in question in that case was clearly distinguishable from the normal transaction of a photographer. Moreover, in Chelaram's case (1965) 16 STC 1021 (Gui) also, the question of severability was not considered at all in the judgment of the Gujarat High Court.

8. I must now proceed to consider the decision of the High Court of Australia in the case of the Federal Commissioner of Taxation v. Riley, (53 Com WLR 69). The assessee in that case had refused to pay sales tax in respect of photographs, tinted or untinted, taken of, and supplied to, clients for reward in the course of his business as a photographer though certain general observations were made in regard to the nature of the business of a portrait photographer which have been relied on in the four cases of our High Courts which have been discussed above; the questions which were "reserved for the opinion of the Court" in that Australian case were, however, quite different. As stated in the majority judgment of the Court in the Australian case, "that the transaction is a sale is not, and doubtless could not be disputed. What is in question is whether photographs are goods manufactured in Australia" within the terms of the Sales Tax Assessment Act (No 1) 1930-1935. In holding that photographs are goods manufactured in Australia within the meaning of their Sales Tax enactment, it was observed as follows in the judgment of three of the four judges who constituted the majority:—

"In the present case, it is the element of 'manufacture' or 'production' which the tax payer says is not present. The argument in support of his contention is, in effect, that the photographer is employed to exercise his art to obtain a portrait possessing the qualities that are demanded by the taste it is his purpose to consult, and that the end of his labours is not the production of so many material objects regarded as vendible articles. The contention is open to the observation that it does not strictly adhere to the question in the special case, which assumes the sale of the photographs as goods, and inquires, are they produced or manufactured? . . . In any case, we think the contention cannot prevail. The end of the organised business of a portrait photographer is to produce as many copies of a picture as his customer will buy, and to sell them to him with a view to profit. It differs from many other productive arts in the fact that its products must be designed in each case for one individual, and in its attempt to secure some aesthetic value. But it is a process practised commercially to produce an article which will be bought. A tailor must attempt to fit his individual customer and the manufacturer of ornaments might claim that his designs had an aesthetic purpose."

Starke J who was the fourth judge constituting the majority however, confined his judgment strictly to the question as to whether photographs taken by a photographer and supplied to clients are goods manufactured in Australia, and based his decision only on the comprehensive terms of the Act in question. The fifth Judge Evatt J., in his dissenting judgment, took the view that the service which the photographer performs for his clients is finally embodied in the photograph, and payment has to be made "for the actual chattel delivered as well as for the service rendered," that what the photographer did was "in the nature of an artistic service of a personal character," that the service was so confidential that, without the client's consent, the law prevents the further reproduction of the photograph, and that "the application of the words 'goods manufactured' to cases like the present is unreal and almost whimsical."

9. Neither the question of severability of the transactions into which a photographer enters, nor the question as to whether, if a transaction be held to be indivisible, it is in essence a "sale" arose for decision, or could be said to have been decided in that case. All that could be said is that certain general observations were made in regard to the nature of the business of photographer. As far as those observations are concerned, in my opinion, it is Evatt J. who has taken a correct view of the same. I, however, do not think the said Australian case can be regarded as authority in regard to either of the two points mentioned above which arise for decision in the present case, or can even be regarded as being of any assistance in deciding the same.

10. In my opinion, as already stated above, the primary question that arises for consideration in the case of transaction which is neither a pure contract of sale nor a pure works contract, but which is of a mixed nature, is whether the transaction is entire and indivisible, or whether it is severable into more than one distinct contract. As pointed out by me above, that question has not been considered at all in any of the four decisions of our High Courts discussed by me above, or in the Australian case cited therein. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion that, with respect to the learned Judges who decided those cases, the same do not afford any assistance in deciding the present case, and I am unable to accept the view expressed therein.

11. I must, therefore, proceed to discuss the principles that should be applied for the purpose of deciding the question of severability. In the case of Sundaram Motors (Private) Ltd. v. The State of Madras, (1958) 9 STC 687=(AIR 1959 Mad 33), the facts were that the assessee Company which carried on business in selling and distributing motor vehicles also dealt in motor parts and accessories, and maintained a workshop where reconditioning or repairs of motor vehicles were undertaken. The Court was, however, concerned in the said case mainly with transactions in the workshop department of the Company in which the turnover would represent not only the labour charges as such, but the cost of spare parts or materials supplied or used in the effecting of the repairs. The Madras High Court in deciding that case, held that there was no evidence of any anterior agreement between the parties in regard to the transaction, and the only evidence available consisted of the account books of the assessee-company, as well as the bills issued by it to the customers. It was pointed out in the judgment in the said case that, in the accounts, the assessee had made a distinction between cases of sales as such and cases of charges for labour and work, but the entries in the books and the bills issued showed that there was no agreement or intention to sell moveables, namely, king pin bushes, as such, whilst charging for the repairs of the car. It was, therefore, held that the charges for the fabricated material should be treated as charges in respect of the works contract, and not independent sales of those materials, and that, subject to the liability of the petitioner in regard to parts supplied and in respect of which tax was levied on the customers, and the tax on such taxes collected, there was no other liability on the part of the assessee in regard to the workshop transactions. After referring to the decision of the Supreme Court in Gannon Dunkerley's case, (1958) 9 STC 353=(AIR 1958 SC 560) which had been given only a few months earlier, the Madras High Court observed (at p. 695 of STC)=(at p. 36 of AIR) that a mere passing of the property in the particular chattel was not decisive of the question whether the component parts of that chattel were sold or not. It further observed that if a particular motor part, for example, king pin bushes, is put in the car while reconditioning and repairing it, it is undoubted that title to that motor accessory passed when the repairers delivered the car to its owners. It was however, also observed that to constitute sale of that part, it is necessary that there should have been an agreement between the parties for the sale of that accessory. The Madras High Court then formulated the test to be applied in such cases as follows:—

"There is no doubt that the property in those materials would eventually pass to the customer, but the question, would be whether the agreement between the parties was that such parts should be treated as sold separatim or were they merely supplied in the course of carrying out a works contract of repair and charged as such.

Therefore whether in a particular case, there is a contract of sale of materials as distinct from a pure works contract would depend upon the agreement between the parties and on proof of an intention to sell the materials as such." (at p 696 of STC)=(at p. 36 of AIR).

12 With regard to the question of severability, reference may also be made to the decision of the Gujarat High Court in the case of A. A. Jariwala and Brothers v State of Gujarat, (1965) 16 STC 942 at p 953=(AIR 1965 Guj 253 at p 257) in which the assessee used to get sari-pieces from their customers for getting embroidery work done on them according to the specific instructions of the customers. The assessee, in their turn, delivered the sari-pieces to embroidery workers who were to be paid piece-rates according to the work done by them, the Jari material being supplied by the assessee to these workers, and after the embroidery work was completed, the saris were returned to the customers. The cost of the Jari materials used in the embroidery work came to about 30 per cent of the total charges charged by the assessee to their customers for which one consolidated bill was sent by the assessee, which also showed the rates per sari. On an application by the assessee under Section 27 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1953, the revenue authorities held that the contract in question was, firstly, a contract for the supply of materials for a price, and, secondly to get embroidery work done by workmen, and that the property in the materials passed to the customer before the materials were affixed to the saris. At the instance of the assessee, the following question was then referred to the Gujarat High Court :—

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the agreement with Messrs Pacific Traders (the customers of the assessee) was works contract, or was a composite agreement, one for the sale of jari materials and another for doing work."

The Gujarat High Court answered that question in favour of the assessee holding that the agreement was a contract of work, and not a composite one which included a sale of Jari Materials. After an exhaustive review of the authorities on the subject including Sundaram Motors' case, (1958) 9 STC 687=(AIR 1959 Mad 33), which I have discussed above (at pp 950-51 of STC) = (at p 256-257 of AIR), Shelat, C. J (as he then was) summed up the legal position (at p 953 of STC)=(At p. 257 of AIR) in the following terms—

"Thus the principles that emerge from these decisions, are, (1) that the question whether a contract in question is for work and labour or is a composite one, depends upon the intention of the parties and whether there is an agreement, express or implied, of sale of materials used in producing the articles in question (2) that mere passing of property in the materials used is not enough unless the passing of such property takes place as a result of an agreement for sale."

It was observed (at p. 956 of STC)=(at p 258 of AIR) that the burden of proving that it was a composite contract was upon the Revenue, and that the contract in the said case was one and indivisible, and was not severable into two contracts, one for service and the other for sale of Jari materials. The learned Chief Justice came to that conclusion on a consideration of the modus operandi followed between the assessee and their customers, and the intention of the parties in regard to the question of severability or otherwise as appearing therefrom. It was held in that case (at p 957 of STC) = (at p 258 of AIR) that, taken as a whole, the contract in question was essentially one for work and labour and the supply of Jari materials in the execution of the embroidery work was merely ancillary. I respectfully agree with the principles enunciated by the learned Chief Justice in regard to the same. On the facts of that case, there can be no quarrel with the conclusion arrived at by the Gujarat High Court that the contract in question in that case was one and indivisible, and was essentially one of service and work.

13. The tests laid down by the Madras High Court in the Sundaram Motors' case, 1958 9 STC 687=(AIR 1959 Mad 33) and by the Gujarat High Court in Jariwala's case, (1965) 16 STC 942=(AIR 1965 Guj 253) for the purpose of determining the severability or otherwise of a transaction which involves work and labour as well as the supply of materials, therefore, are whether there was an agreement, express or implied, between the parties that the materials should be treated as sold separately, and whether the intention to sell the materials, as such, has been proved.

14. Applying these tests to the transactions which are the subject-matter of each of the specimen bills in the present case in respect of the transaction embodied therein, in my opinion, the parties intended to enter into more than one contract, viz, for the sale of materials as well as for work and labour to be done, and those contracts are distinct and easily severable though they form part of one transaction under each of the said three bills. It is not possible to say that any of those transactions embodies a pure contract for the sale of goods, or a pure contract for work and labour to be done. Each of these three transactions is in the nature of a transaction relating to work and materials, such as would fall within the second of the three broad categories into which they have been classified in the passage from the English case of Clay v. Yates, (1856) 156 ER 1123 quoted in Benjamin on Sale at page 160, to which I have referred earlier in this judgment.

15. It would be convenient at this stage to consider separately each of the three types of transactions which fall for consideration in the present case. Turning to the first type of transaction, which is for the preparation of enlargements from an already developed negative given by a customer, and which is to be found in Bill No. 60293 in the present case, there is no doubt whatsoever that what the customer, as well as the photographer bargain for, is for two separate contracts: (1) for work on the part of the photographer in subjecting the negative supplied by the customer to proper processes requiring considerable technical skill so that the enlargement is not disproportionate or distorted or inartistic in any manner; and (2) for sale of the enlarged photograph as reproduced on paper of a particular quality and size. In such a transaction, there is an implied agreement between the parties that the enlarged photograph, as reproduced on paper of that quality and size, should be sold separatim and a clear intention to sell it as such. The fact that these two activities are distinct and severable is apparent, not only from the nature of the transaction, but also from the fact that the payment in respect of each of these activities is clearly ascertainable. Each photographer has his own rates for the reproduction of a photograph of a particular size, whether it be an enlargement or a mere print, on paper of a particular quality, and there would therefore be no difficulty in separating the two contracts, though they form part of one transaction, as embodied in the said bill No. 60293.

16. Turning to the second type of transaction which is to be found in Bill No. 95198, and which involves developing the customer's film roll and taking out prints from it, for the same reasons as in the case of the first type of transaction, this is also a transaction in which two separate contracts are implied one for developing the film roll furnished by the customer, which the Commissioner of Sales Tax as well as the Sales Tax Tribunal have held to be not in the nature of a sale of goods but in the nature of a contract for work and labour, and the other for taking out prints therefrom on paper of a particular quality and size. What is called the "negative is nothing but the film roll supplied by the customer himself after it has been subjected to certain technical process which are known as "developing" process. The first part of the transaction has, therefore, rightly been held by the Commissioner as well as the Tribunal not to be a contract of sale. There is however, a clear intention to sell the prints as such, or as many copies of the prints as the customer may require, and an implied agreement that they should be sold separatim. These two contracts are distinct and severable parts of the transactions embodied in Bill No. 95198, and the charges thereof are also clearly ascertainable, and are actually stated separately in the Bill in question.

17. Turning to the third type of transaction which is the subject matter of Bill No. 16531 and is of the most comprehensive nature, involving as it does the taking of the photograph in the studio, the developing of the film, and the furnishing of three prints thereof, there can be no doubt that the intention of the parties in respect of this transaction also was to enter into three distinct contracts. It is impossible to say that the first part of the transaction, viz., the taking of a photograph, is even as a matter of plain language, a contract for sale. It is clearly a contract for the use of the artistic skill and labour of the photographer who takes the photograph. There can be no doubt that considerable technical skill is required in taking a good photograph, and I have no hesitation in rejecting the contention of Mr. Khambatta that, with modern technique, the taking of photographs is almost mechanical. A person who wants his photograph taken does not walk into any shop, but discriminates between a good photographer and a bad photographer, and also takes into account the charges for the same which vary considerably according to the skill and reputation of each individual photographer. The second part of this transaction is the developing of the film into a negative which has been held by the Commissioner of Sales Tax and by the Sales Tax Tribunal not to amount to a sale in regard to the transaction embodied in Bill No. 95198. The Commissioner of Sales Tax as well as the Sales Tax Tribunal have, however, apparently come to the conclusion that the transaction comprised in Bill No. 16531 is not severable, and have held the whole transaction embodied in the said Bill No. 16531 to be a contract for sale of the photographs to the Customer. I fail to see why the lower authorities have taken that view, in view of the fact that, not only are the three activities involved in the transaction which is the subject matter of the said Bill No. 16531 distinct and severable from their very nature, but the charges in respect of the same are clearly ascertainable. Every photographer has his own charges for subjecting films, whether taken by himself or supplied by the customer, to the process of developing into, what is called a negative, as well as for making out prints on paper of a particular quality and size. In this connection, reference may be made to Bill No. 95198 in the present case itself, in which the charges for developing and printing are stated separately. If the developing and printing charges are deducted from the amount mentioned in Bill No. 16531 what is left will be the charges of the photographer for the skill and labour of taking the photograph in question. Though, as stated in the passage from Halsbury quoted by me above, the value of the skill and labour as compared with the value of the materials is not conclusive the same can be taken into consideration. A reference to Bill No. 95198 would show that developing and printing charges would be a negligible part of the amount of Rs. 4 which has been charged in Bill No. 16531. By far the major part of it, therefore, relates to the photographer's skill and labour and had I come to the conclusion that the transaction comprised in Bill No. 16531 was "entire and indivisible", I would have held it to be in essence, a works contract, and not a contract of sale. In my opinion the dominant intention of the parties in regard to this type of transaction is not to buy or sell the negative, or the prints. That is apparent from the fact that, even as a matter of plain language, no person who walks into a photographic studio to have a photograph taken of himself says "I am going to buy my photograph". What the parties really intend to do would be correctly expressed by the customer's saying to the photographer, "I want to have a photograph taken and to buy 3 prints of it which you must give me along with the negative". In such a case, what the parties, therefore intend to do is to enter into three separate contracts which are distinct and severable, though they form part of one transaction. The first is a contract for the use of the labour and the artistic skill of the photographer in taking good photograph in the appropriate pose, the second is a contract to use the work and labour of the photographer in developing the same into a negative and the third is a contract to sell the prints thereof as taken out on paper of a particular quality and size. There is, in my opinion, an implied agreement between the parties in such a case that the prints should be sold separately and a clear intention to sell the prints as such or as many copies of the prints as the customer may require. The State would, therefore, be entitled to levy Sales Tax only on the last of the three severable contracts embodied in Bill No. 16531.

18. On behalf of the assessee, reliance was also placed on the provisions of the Indian Copyright Act, 1957, for the purpose of showing that it is impossible in law that there could be any sale of a customer's photograph, either to the customer himself or to anybody else. It is contended that, in view of the fact that, under Section 17 of the Copyright Act, the copyright in a photograph vests in the customer whose photograph it is, there can be no sale of the photographs to the customer who is already the owner of that photograph under the relevant provisions of the Copyright Act. It is further contended that there could be no sale of the photograph of the customer to anybody else, in view of the fact that the customer, whose photograph it is, is the sole owner of the copyright therein. In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived on the question of severability, it is not necessary for me to consider the argument advanced on behalf of the assessee in the present case based on the provisions of the Copyright Act. Suffice it to say that I agree with the view taken by Shelat, C J (as he then was) in Chelaram's case, (1965) 16 STC 1021 (Guj) cited above, in which that very contention was rejected by the learned Chief Justice (at p. 1030) on the ground that the restrictions contained in the Copyright Act had no bearing on the question as to whether a particular transaction was taxable to Sales Tax as a sale of goods.

19. In the result, I have come to the conclusion that the parties to the transactions which are in the subject-matter of the said Bills Nos. 60293, 95198 and 16531 intended to enter into, and have, in fact, entered into, distinct and separate contracts as stated above, though the same form part of the single transaction that is embodied in each of the said three bills. In the case of each of the said three bills, therefore, as the Supreme Court has observed in Gannon Dunkerley and Co (Madras) Ltd's case, (1958) 9 STC 353 = (AIR 1958 SC 560) though there is a single instrument, there is more than one agreement embodied therein which can be, and should be, separated, and only such part of each of the said transactions as amounts to a sale of goods is liable to sales tax under the Act.

20. I, therefore, answer the question that has been referred to this Court in each of the three References as follows:

21. Each of the transactions which is the subject-matter of determination by the Commissioner of Sales Tax embodies more than one contract, and only the following are liable to sales tax:

(1) In the case of transaction embodied in Bill No. 60293, only the contract for the supply of the enlarged photographs as reproduced on paper of the particular size mentioned therein, excluding the work of preparing the enlargements which is a contract for skill and labour, amounts to a sale.

(2) In the case of the transaction embodied in Bill No. 95198 only the contract for the supply of prints on paper of the particular size mentioned therein, excluding the work of developing the negative from the film roll of the customer which is a contract for skill and labour, amounts to a sale.

(3) In the case of the transaction embodied in Bill No. 16531 only the contract for the supply of prints of the particular size mentioned therein, excluding the contract for the taking of the photograph, as well as the contract for the developing of the negative which are contracts for skill and labour, amounts to a sale.

22. As in the view which I have taken above, the applicants have substantially succeeded in these References, I would order that the Department must pay the applicant's costs of the References fixed at Rs. 250/- in one set for all the three References, since they were heard together.

S. N. Naik with K. H. Bhabha, for Appellant; M. R. Mody with Paralkar, for Respondent No. 1.

K. K. DESAI, J.: — This is an appeal on behalf of the original Opponent No. 1 in the chamber summons dated May 31, 1967 whereby the 1st respondents-original plaintiffs sought directions for delivery of physical Khas possession of a certain portion of land bearing new S. No. 217 of village Kurar by removal, inter alia, of the appellant and two other Opponents viz., Gajrabai Lalu and Rama Lalu. The substance of the case of the plaintiffs was that decree for delivery of possession of the whole of the land bearing new S. No. 217 was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. For execution of that decree for possession, along with the plaintiffs' representatives, the Sheriff was to proceed on May 8, 1967. On May 7, 1967, the defendant in the suit removed the entire wire fencing round about the land. Three hutments on the land were within the above wire fencing enclosing S. No. 217. As the barbed wire fencing was removed by the defendant and as the marks thereof had been obliterated, on May 8, 1967, when the Sheriff proceeded to the locality for taking possession, an attempt was made by the appellant on behalf of the Government to make a claim that one of the three huts lying on S. No. 217 was on the adjoining land bearing new S. No. 218 belonging to the Government. In this third hut opponents Nos. 2 and 3 Gajrabai Lalu and Rama Lalu were found. The Sheriff, made a report dated May 8, 1967, which is annexed as Ex. "A" to the affidavit of Shringarpure in rejoinder. As regards this third hut, the Sheriff stated that Gajrabai Lalu and her son Rama Lalu were staying in the hut. The occupants of the other two huts delivered possession but the appellant Tarabai came and claimed the land and fencing of small round piece of land in occupation of Gajrabai as belonging to the Government. The physical possession of this part of the land was, therefore, not taken. The plaintiffs thereupon took out the above chamber summons dated May 31, 1967, for the reliefs already described above.

2. By her affidavit in reply, the appellant stated that she was the Principal of Physical Training Institute and was residing at Kandivli. The Government was the owner of land bearing new S. No. 218, Malad, and the Government was running an Institute for physical training on the land. There were several buildings on the land. As regards this third hut and the small part of the land for which the summons was taken out, she stated that this part of the land was given by the Government to the contractor who had put up buildings on S. No. 218 for cultivation of vegetables and the contractor had built a small hut on the portion of the land. When the Sheriff had come for execution on May 8, 1967, she had claimed that the hut was in the boundary of the Government land. She repeated that the hut was much inside the Government property. In affidavit in rejoinder all these facts were denied on behalf of the Plaintiffs.

3. Mody, J. by his order dated July 31, 1968, held that there was nothing on the record to show that the appellant (opponent) was in physical possession of the shed. The possession was that of the opponents Nos. 2 and 3 viz. Gajrabai and her son Rama Lalu. The opponent No. 1 had only arrived at the scene after the Sheriff had contacted her and then alleged that this hut which was occupied by Gajrabai and Rama Lalu was situate on Government land. On the record before the learned Judge it was not possible to reach the conclusion that the appellant was even constructively in possession of the hut and a small part of the land in question. That was so because opponents Nos 2 and 3 Gajrabai and Rama were in fact in possession and because, according to the appellant herself, she did not claim to be in possession except on behalf of the Government. The learned Judge formed the view that as the appellant went to the land at the time when the decree was being executed against the person in possession of the shed, the appellant was not in possession. For these reasons, the learned Judge thought that it was not necessary to investigate the claim of the Government and/or the appellant to the land in question and made the summons absolute in terms of prayers (a) and (b) with costs.

4. At the commencement of the hearing of this appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs Mr. Mody submitted that the order made by the learned Judge was not a judgment within the meaning of Clause 15 of the Letters Patent and appeal did not lie against the same. Mr. Naik for the appellant controverted that submission and made certain arguments in that connection. On the merits of the case he submitted that the fact that the land S. No. 218 was of the ownership of the Government was admitted on the record. The claim made by the appellant that the Government had put their contractor in possession of part of the land bearing S No 218 to cultivate vegetables should have been accepted by the learned Judge. He should have accepted that the third hut in respect whereof the present chamber summons was taken out was on the land bearing S No 218. In that connection, he relied upon some of the statements made in paragraphs 2 and 5 of the affidavit of Shringarpure in rejoinder. He submitted that the appellant had made a bona fide claim in respect of the third hut and that the land was part of S No 218 and the summons should have been dismissed.

5. Now, in connection with all these arguments, it first requires to be noticed that we are not prepared to interfere with findings made and orders passed on applications for delivery of possession which are made and heard under the provisions of Order 21, Rules 97 to 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this connection it always requires to be emphasized that the procedure prescribed under these rules is a summary procedure and not intended for decisions to be made by hearing oral evidence tendered on behalf of the parties. Rule 103, therefore, provides that the conclusions arrived at and the orders made under the above rules will always be subject to the result of a suit which either party against whom the orders are made would be entitled to file. In our view, having regard to the provisions in Rule 103, it would not be right for a Division Bench of this Court to investigate into findings made by a single Judge of this Court on chamber summons in applications for possession under Rules 97 to 102 of Order 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge were not intended to be final and could be treated by the appellant at their own option as tentative and could be challenged in a substantive suit. It is, therefore, curious that in a matter of this kind an appeal has been filed on behalf of the appellant.

6. Having regard to the facts which we find from the affidavits on the record in this appeal, we do not propose to decide the question whether the learned Judge's order can be described as an appealable judgment within the meaning of that phrase in Clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

7. The plaintiffs' case was that the hut in question was within the wire fencing which enclosed the land S No 217 belonging to the plaintiffs. That fencing had been removed by the defendant in the suit on May 7, 1967. If this was a true fact the allegation of the appellant that the hut and the land belonged to the Government may not be correct. She has made an extraordinary case that a contractor had been permitted to put up a hut on the land belonging to the Government and to cultivate the land for the purpose of growing vegetables. The claim, prima facie, appears to be curious and, therefore, such as might have been rejected by the learned single Judge, (sic) to the procedure prescribed is summary, it was permissible on these facts for the learned single Judge to hold that the claim made by the appellant for continuing in possession was not a claim made in good faith and that accordingly the plaintiffs were entitled to the reliefs claimed in the chamber summons. These being the facts, we see no reason to set aside the order made by the learned Judges.

8. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Liberty to the attorneys of the Respondent 1 to withdraw the amount deposited for costs to the extent necessary.

file suits. The pending suits, says the petitioner's Counsel, would be taken up on appeal: from the suits that may be filed there would be appeals; and it is exactly to prevent such a situation that the Court assists the share-holders in expressing their wishes at a meeting called by the Court.

69. I am not saying that this point is altogether without substance; but one should also consider that suits and appeals could be filed as a matter of right whether there was any foundation for them or not; but when pending suits or appeals and the possibility of further suits and appeals form the basis of an application under S. 186, the Court, to my mind, has a duty to see if there is a prima facie case. In the present application I can see that there are disputes which are not perhaps frivolous regarding the positions of B. K. Roy, Anil Thakur, Sukumar Roy and Sookamal Kanti Ghose vis-a-vis the Board of Directors of the Company; but I have not found a prima facie case against H. R. Bhesania, the Chairman of the Board of Directors, F. R. Bhesania, F. M. Bhesania and Dali Ruttonjee that they have ceased to be directors. I do not want to repeat what I have said earlier on this point. This Company requires a minimum of two Directors only to constitute a Board. And there are at least 4 Directors against whom, in my opinion, no prima facie case exists at this moment. If I could come to the conclusion on the facts stated before me that there were doubts as to whether the Bhesanias also were still the directors of the Company, I might have been inclined to exercise my powers under Section 186; but no materials have been placed before me to reach that conclusion except that certain persons are contending that they have ceased to be directors. Contentions alone would not do if the facts stated by Dali Ruttonjee in paragraph 5(k) of his affidavit-in-opposition, go practically unchallenged.

70. In concluding my views on the facts of this case, I intend to reiterate that from the relevant paragraphs in the petition and the various affidavits in these proceedings, it seems to me that the Mallia group is determined to throw out the Bhesania group who took the initiative in bringing this company into existence without any positive complaint against them or without giving them an opportunity to answer the charges, if any, against them by a brute majority of votes in the general meeting. The Court has a discretion under Section 186 and that discretion, in my opinion, should not be used in favour of the petitioner with these facts in the background.

71. Numerous decisions were cited at the Bar. I need not refer to all of them. I would only discuss the cases decided by our Court and an English case in which the facts leading to impracticability of calling a general meeting were considered.

72. In re Lothian Jute Mills Co. Ltd., (1951) 55 Cal WN 646 Sinha, J., as he then was, had to consider the provisions of Section 79 (3) of the Companies Act, 1913, which were the same as in Section 186 of the new Act. There were disputes between two rival groups of directors. His Lordship has laid down certain general principles to be observed in applying Section 79(3). These principles are as follows:

1. The Court would not ordinarily interfere in the domestic management of the Company which must be conducted in accordance with the powers contained in the regulations of the Company.

2. But where the meeting can be called only by the directors and there are serious doubts and controversy as to who are the directors and where there is possibility that one or other or both the meetings called by the quarrelling groups of directors may be invalid, the shareholders should not be exposed to the uncertainties flowing from the situation and the consequent litigation and it should be held that a position has arisen which makes it 'impracticable' for the meeting being called in accordance with the articles.

3. The Court should exercise its powers where it cannot say with reasonable approach to certainty, or even prima facie that the meeting called in exercise of the powers contained in the regulations will be valid.

73. This is the first case of this Court cited before me. Sinha, J., on the facts of the case upon considering the disputes raised by the rival groups did exercise his powers under Section 79(3) "in order to resolve the conflict and uncertainty" which had arisen. With respect I agree with the broad principles enunciated by the learned Judge; but by applying those principles to the instant case, I am finding it difficult to invoke my powers under Section 186. I cannot with reasonable approach to certainty or even prima facie, say that a meeting called in accordance with the articles of this Company, will not be valid. There is no challenge here to the appointment of directors ab initio. So far as the Bhesanias are concerned, the allegation is that by reason of some specific act after a valid appointment they have ceased to be directors. Such an allegation has to be examined to see if there is a prima facie case. The Bhesania group's contention before me is, that money was received for the specific purpose of payment of excise duty: it was received entirely for the benefit of the Company; it would be realised by the Company out of the sale proceeds; and it was not repayable by any of the directors at all. As a matter of fact until now no suit has been filed for the recovery of any alleged loan. It is also stated that the money did not belong to the Company at all; it was paid in cash by some one else as the Company had no money. On these facts I cannot prima facie hold that the four Bhesanias have ceased to be directors, and then draw the conclusion that it is 'impracticable' to call a general meeting in the ordinary way.

74. The next case to which my attention was invited, was the case of Mathali Tea Syndicate Ltd reported in (1951) 55 Cal WN 653. Here also there were disputes as to whether there was a valid Board of Directors. At page 655 Banerjee J observes "It is difficult for me on this application and it would be inexpedient having regard to the pending suits, to decide which of the directors have been validly appointed. I am not satisfied on the facts of this case that there is a Board of Directors who can call a meeting in the manner in which a meeting of the Company may be called. Meetings held otherwise than under direction of the Court under Section 79 in the circumstances of this case, would lead to interminable troubles and prejudice the interest of the Company."

75. On the same grounds which I have advanced in discussing the Lothian Jute Mills Co Ltd's case the judgment of Banerjee J is also distinguishable.

76. We next come to the case of the Indian Shipping Mills Ltd v. M S J Bahadur Rana AIR 1953 Cal 355. This is a judgment of the Appellate Court by Harries, C J sitting with Banerjee, J. The question arose as to whether it was impracticable to hold an extraordinary general meeting. The Trial Court made an order calling a meeting under Section 79 (3) at the 1913 Act. One A C Roy Chowdhury had been elected Chairman of the Board of Directors but disputes arose and eventually the other directors challenged his position on the Board, and he was requested "to vacate from the Board of Directors . . .". Roy Chowdhury was thereafter excluded from the Board and another shareholder was co-opted in his stead and a new Chairman was appointed. The contesting respondents contended that the entire proceedings excluding Roy Chowdhury and appointing a new Chairman were illegal and of no effect. The position of Roy Chowdhury also became the subject-matter of two suits in which the contestants aforesaid tried to assert their respective positions. In one of the suits there was a prayer for a declaration that an extraordinary general meeting which had been called on September, 9 1950 was improperly convened, and further that any directors appointed at that meeting should be declared to have been invalidly appointed. It appears that a requisition was served on the directors to call an extraordinary general meeting but they did not comply with the requisition and when the requisitionists themselves proceeded to call the meeting, the suit was filed to defeat it.

77. The facts of this case clearly point to the impracticability of calling a general meeting in the usual way and the Appellate Court affirmed the decision of the Trial Court calling a meeting under Section 79 (3). Harries, C. J. observes in paragraph 18 at page 356 "The learned Judge rightly refused to decide the matters which are in issue in the suit and I do not think it will be right for us to express any opinion upon these matters. However it is clear that there is serious dispute between the parties as to whether Mr. Roy Chowdhury was qualified to act as a director and whether or not he was wrongly excluded from the Board. If it transpired in the suit that he was wrongly excluded from the Board difficulties might arise concerning any meeting which the requisitionists might call under Section 78 (3). In fact it seems fairly clear that if such a meeting was called it would be the cause of considerable litigation". In paragraph 19 at page 357 Harries, C. J. says "If the meeting was called, difficulties would undoubtedly arise as to the conduct of the meeting. In an extraordinary general meeting the parties might elect their own Chairman, but the probabilities are that objection would at once be taken to Mr Roy Chowdhury either acting as Chairman or even voting or being concurred in the proceedings at all. It seems to me that if the requisitionists were allowed to conduct this meeting and less difficulties would arise and therefore I think the learned Judge was right in holding that it was impracticable to hold such a meeting."

78. Harries, C. J. supports the meaning of the word 'impracticable' given by Banerjee J in the case of the Mathali Tea Syndicate Ltd, (1951) 55 Cal WN 653 ibid. Banerjee, J adopted the meaning which the Judicial Committee gave to the word 'impracticable' in Commissioner Lucknow Division v. Deputy Commissioner of Paritagarh, reported in 41 Cal WN 1072 = [AIR 1937 PC 240]. According to the Privy Council 'impracticable' means 'impracticable from a reasonable point of view, and Banerjee J has aided in the case of the Mathali Tea Syndicate Ltd (1951) 55 Cal WN 653 that "the Court takes a commonsense view of the matter and acts as a prudent person of business."

79. I have discussed this judgment of the Appellate Court slightly in details with a view to point out the meaning that should be given to the word 'impracticable' in Section 186 of the Companies Act 1956. The Court in every case has to look at the facts from a reasonable commonsense point of view and act as a prudent person of business to decide whether it has become 'impracticable' to call a general meeting. That is one of the reasons why I have been saying that a prima facie case against the Bhesanias should have been established in the instant case to enable the Court to decide upon the impracticability of convening a general meeting in the ordinary manner.

80. I would now come to a case recently decided in England. It is the case of El Sombrero Ltd. reported in (1958) 3 All ER 1. The provisions of Section 135 (1) of the English Companies Act, 1948 are similar to those of Section 186 of our Act. The applicant in this case held 90 per cent. of the shares of Private Company incorporated in March, 1956. There were two Directors and each of them held 5 per cent. of the shares. The quorum for general meetings was two members present in person or by proxy, and, if within half an hour from the time appointed for a meeting a quorum was not present, the meeting, if convened on the requisition of members, was dissolved. No general meeting of the Company had ever been held. On March 11, 1958, the applicant requisitioned an extraordinary general meeting, for the purpose of passing resolutions removing the two directors and appointing two other persons as directors. The existing directors failed to comply with the requisition. The applicant himself convened an extraordinary general meeting for April 21, 1958. The directors deliberately did not attend the meeting either in person or by proxy, and, as a quorum was not present, the meeting was dissolved. On April 29, 1950, the applicant served a special notice, under Section 142 of the Act of 1948, of his intention to move the same resolutions, under Section 142 and Section 184, at the next extraordinary general meeting of the Company. On the same day he took out an originating summons asking for a meeting to be called by the Court, under S. 135 (1), for the purpose of passing the resolutions, and for a direction that one member of the Company should be deemed to constitute a quorum at such meeting. The directors opposed the application. Wynn-Parry, J., has held: (i) as a practical matter the desired meeting of the Company could not be conducted in accordance with the articles of association and the Court had jurisdiction under Section 135 (1) of the Companies Act, 1948, to order a meeting to be held notwithstanding opposition by the share-holders other than the applicant and (ii) an order for meeting to be held and that one member present should constitute a quorum would be made because (a) to refuse the application would be to deprive the applicant of his statutory right under Section 184 to remove the directors by means of an ordinary resolution, and (b) the respondent-directors had failed to perform their statutory duty to call an annual general meeting for the reason that, if they had convened a general meeting they would have ceased to be directors.

81. It is apparent that the facts of the case before Wynn-Parry, J., were much stronger than the facts here. In the English case the facts established that there was an impracticability to which the directors themselves had contributed. In our case it cannot be said that the directors have failed to call any annual general meeting. In our case there has been no requisition as yet which the directors have not complied with and it is also not yet in evidence that the Bhesania group has deliberately refrained from attending any extraordinary meeting so that the quorum may not be present. I do not think that the decision of Wynn-Parry, J. can be applied to the facts of the present case.

82. Reliance was also placed on Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, Third Edition, Vol. 2, at page 1377. It says: "The words 'impracticable to conduct a meeting' in Section 115 (2) of the Companies Act, 1929 — see now Companies Act, 1948, Section 135 covers the case where it is impracticable owing to the terms of the articles and the state of share-holding in the company to get a quorum present: Re Edinburgh Workmen's Housing Improvement Co., 1935 SC 56." Learned Counsel for the petitioner has urged that having regard to the state of the share-holding in this Company it is impracticable to get a quorum. I have already said that on the facts of the case the proposition at present appears to be hypothetical. In the case of El Sombrero Ltd., (1958) 3 All ER 1 as we have seen, the dissenting group deliberately chose not to attend the meeting to frustrate the purpose of the meeting due to lack of quorum. We do not yet know what the Bhesania group is going to do if an extraordinary general meeting is requisitioned. Until that is known I do not see how the Court in the exercise of its judicial discretion, can call a meeting under Section 186.

83. I would now come to the case of Bengal and Assam Investors Ltd. v. J. K. Eastern Industries Private Ltd. reported in AIR 1956 Cal 658. P. B. Mukharji, J. refused to call a general meeting in this case under Section 186. The facts, inter alia, were that a notice had already been issued calling an extraordinary general meeting of the company. The learned Judge in paragraph 5 at page 660 observes: "The resolutions that are intended to be passed at the meeting demanded by the requisitionists are set out in the notice itself." The learned Judge thought that there was, therefore, no impracticability in the matter of calling the meeting. The ground on which the assistance of the Court was sought, was that one K. L. Jatia, the Chairman of the Board of Directors, might not act impartially because his removal was sought in one of the proposed resolutions for the extraordinary meeting. P. B. Mukharji, J. in paragraph 13 at page 661 says: "I am satisfied that K. L. Jalia cannot decide on the resolutions proposed in that meeting because the resolutions will have to be voted by the share-holders. It is the share-holders who will be in control of the meeting."

"If the applicant has on its side 55 per cent of the votes of the share holders, I do not see why they should be at all frightened. The Chairman's power is very limited. He has a vote as a share holder and director. That gives him no special position to control the meeting. He has, in the event of an equality of votes between two rival groups, a casting vote. But on the applicant's own showing there is no question of equality of votes in this case because the applicant's group is much larger than the respondent's group."

84. It is no doubt true, as the petitioner's Counsel has contended that the facts in this case were entirely different from the facts we have to deal with. And this case does not give us much assistance in deciding whether this application should be refused; but P. B. Mukharji, J. in paragraphs 17 and 18 of his judgment has discussed certain general principles that are to be applied to S 186 of the Companies Act. The petitioner's Counsel says that these observations are in the nature of obiter, but, to my mind, they are useful observations and some of them lay down the basic principles that are to be followed by Courts while considering an application under Section 186. P. B. Mukharji, J. has expressed his concurrence with the meaning given to the word 'impracticable' by Banerjee, J. in the case of Malhi Tea Syndicate Ltd. (1951) 55 Cal WN 653, ibid. (Banerjee, J.'s view as we have already seen, has also been accepted by the Appellate Court); and has developed the points still further in this case of Bengal and Assam Investors Ltd., AIR 1956 Cal 658.

85. Upon considering the relevant authorities on this subject and examining the language of the Statute the main principles involved in trying an application under Section 186, are to my mind, as follows:—

1. The Court would not ordinarily interfere with the domestic management of a company which should be conducted in accordance with its articles.

2. The discretion granted under S 186 should be used sparingly and with caution so that the Court does not become either a share holder or a director of the company trying to participate in the inter-necine squabbles of the company.

3. The word 'impracticable' means impracticable from a reasonable point of view.

4. The Court should take a commonsense view of the matter and must act as a prudent man of business.

5. A prudent man of business has not a sensitive, officious view of intervention in case of every rivalry between two groups of directors. Prudence demands that the Court ordinarily keep itself aloof from participating in quarrels of rival groups of directors or share-holders.

6. But where the meeting can be called only by the directors and there are serious doubts and controversy as to who are the directors or where there is a possibility that one or other or both the meetings called by the rival groups of directors may be invalid, the Court ought not to expose the share holders to uncertainties and should hold that a position has arisen which makes it 'impracticable' to convene a meeting in any manner in which meeting of the Company may be called.

7. The Court should exercise its powers under Section 186, when upon considering all the facts and circumstances of a case, it can say with a reasonable approach to certainty or even prima facie that a meeting called in the manner in which meetings are ordinarily called under the Act or under the articles, would be invalid.

8. Before the Court exercises its discretion under Section 186 the Court must be satisfied, when a director or a member moves an application, that it has been made bona fide in the larger interests of the Company for removing a deadlock otherwise irremovable.

86. When I apply the principles enumerated above to the facts of this case it seems to me that this is not a case which falls for the Court's interference under Section 186 of the Companies Act, 1936.

87. Numerous other points have been urged before me. Mr. S. C. Sen, learned Counsel for one of the contesting respondents, has also dealt with the history of Company Jurisprudence in relation to the provisions of Section 186, but having regard to the conclusions I have already reached, I do not think it necessary to consider any other point raised in this application.

88. The result is that this application is dismissed. The petitioner will pay to the respondents one set of costs. Certified for Counsel.

ORDER:— This is a petition under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure against the judgment and decree passed by the court of appeal below in a suit for money where no appeal lies.

2. The defendant is the appellant. The plaintiff repaired certain boilers and tendered a bill on 5th July 1957. On 7th August 1958 notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was served. On 10th June 1961 the suit was filed.

3. The first point is that no notice under Section 146 of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act was served and so the suit is not maintainable. But S. 146 refers to a suit which relates to "any act done by a person under the authority of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act." But if a District Engineer sends his road roller for repair that is not something which is done under this Act. In the ordinary course of his duty he sends it for repairs and not because the authority under the Local Self-Government Act directs him to send the same for repair. There is no provision in the Act itself as far as I am aware which authorises the district engineer to send it for repair. We cannot say that this act of sending the road roller for repair was an act contemplated under the provisions of this statute. Hence, the first objection is overruled.

4. The second objection is that a notice should have been served and a suit instituted as under the third part of Section 146 of the Act. If Section 146 does not apply third part also does not apply.

5. In the third point there is some substance. The boiler was sent for repairs. The work was done and a bill was sent. It was served. But ultimately as the road roller includes the boiler it had to be tested by the boiler inspector. Hence the work could not have been deemed to have been done until the repair is accepted by the district engineer and the fitness of the boiler tested by the inspector of the boilers.

6. The result, therefore, is Art. 56, of the Indian Limitation Act 1908 would not apply.

7. The next point urged is that in that case the suit is premature. The answer is it is the District Board which has not allowed the boiler inspector to inspect. In every letter they have said it is not ready for inspection. If it was really repaired I do not find any reason why it should not have been considered to be ready for inspection. But whatever it may be, because of the fault of the District Board, the defendant, the boiler inspector could not inspect it. I cannot, therefore, say that the work was done. Because doing of the work means completion of the work to the satisfaction of the person to whom the work is done. But that satisfaction could not have been there, except when a fitness is granted by the boiler inspector. Therefore, I cannot say Art. 56 would apply. But still the plaintiff has done the work as the court below found and as the letter of the district engineer shows. Therefore, he is entitled to payment. As there is no specific article to such matters it should be governed by the general Article 120 and the suit is maintainable within six years and, therefore, I cannot say that the suit is barred by limitation.

8. The order of cost passed by the court below is set aside. Each party will bear its own cost.

9. The Rule is discharged.

(C) Tenancy Laws — West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), Ss. 6(1)(h) and (i), 27, 28, 29 — Expression “directly worked by him” in Section 28 — Means directly worked by intermediary himself — Provisions of S. 28 are contrary to provisions of S. 6(1)(h) and (i) and would prevail over them — (Words and phrases — “directly worked by him” in S. 28).

The provisions of Section 6, sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) are to be understood with reference to the provisions of Sections 27 and 28 of the Act. As the provisions in Section 28 in regard to a mine directly worked by an intermediary are contrary to the provisions of Section 6 sub-section (1) clauses (h) and (i) of the Act the provisions of Section 28 would prevail over the provisions of Section 6 sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) of the Act. (Para 15)

The word “directly” used before the word “worked” followed by the words “by him” in Section 28 leaves no room for holding that if the intermediary had worked the mine either through a lessee or a licensee, it would be the intermediary’s directly working the mine. That the possession of the mines remained with the intermediary would not alter the meaning of the expression “directly worked by him” meaning directly worked by the intermediary. If the intermediary by making installations in the mine engaged labourers and worked the mine, he could be then considered to have had worked the mine directly. Accordingly, when the intermediary interest is vested in the State of West Bengal, the intermediary not having been then directly working the mine, the provisions of Section 28 would come into operation in respect of the mine and the intermediary, has no right to recover mine from the lessee who had been directly working the mine and who could therefore, be placed within the terms of Section 29.

Ranjit Kumar Banerjee Subhas Chandra Bhattacharyya and Prasanta Kumar Bando-pallava, for Appellants, Bijay Bhose, Dilip Kumar Banerjee and Balin Kumar Basu, for Respondent

JUDGMENT: This Second Appeal is at the instance of the defendants in Title Suit No 37 of 1960 of the Court of the Second Munsif, Chandernagore. The plaintiff proceeded with the following cause. The plaintiff is Sri Sri Iswar Thakreswar Sib Thakur Jiu respectively (sic represented?) by Shebait Mubani Srimat Damiswami Urishikesh Asram. The defendants are Bar, Das, Dey & Co proprietors of the same being Gou Chandra Bar, Balakrishna Dev and Bijay Basanta Das. The defendants are alleged to have executed an agreement in favour of the plaintiff to take out sand up to 1365 B S from plot Nos 589, 797, 539, 563/1106 comprising 8.86 acres equal to 27 bighas of land situate in Mouza Baligari recorded in Khatai Nos 27, 23 and 24. The right to take the sand from the aforesaid land under the agreement was to be effective up to 1365 B S on payment of the plaintiff Rs 66 per annum sand to be the license fees. The defendants shall have no other concern with the land which shall always remain the property of the plaintiff. So soon as the plaintiff would claim any right the defendants would immediately withdraw themselves from the act of taking sands after 1365 B. S. The license fees for the period 1362 to 1365 B. S remained unpaid at Rs 66 per annum amounting in total to Rs. 330. The plaintiff served a notice on the defendants withdrawing the said defendant’s license by revoking the license, and the license expired with the expiry of the notice. The defendants did not vacate the land. Hence the suit for recovery of the land and for arrears of license fees.

2. The defendants resisted the suit by a written statement. The defendants asserted that in view of the provisions of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act the plaintiff’s interest as intermediary in the land had vested in the State of West Bengal wherefor the plaintiff lost any right to sue against the defendants. The defendants are tenants in respect of the land in dispute under the State of West Bengal that has already realised rent in respect of the disputed land from the defendants. It is further contended in the written statement that the interest of the defendants in the land in dispute has been correctly recorded in the finally published revisional record of rights. From 1347 Baisakh, the defendants came into occupation of the disputed land upon an oral settlement as tenants under the plaintiff at an annual rental of Rs. 54. On 10-7-41, there was confirmatory lease in respect of the defendants' tenancy in the land in dispute. Since Baisakh 1347 B. S., the defendants have been in occupation of the disputed land as tenants, and as such, have acquired a non-ejectable right therein. It is further asserted in the written statement that upon 1361 B. S. the defendants possessed the disputed land as tenants under the plaintiff, and that from 1362 B. S. the defendants had been possessing the disputed land as tenants under the State of West Bengal. The defendants contended in the written statement that when the plaintiff threatened to enhance the rent of the tenancy and coerced the defendants to execute a document said to be an agreement, the defendants did execute in 1350 B. S. one agreement under undue influence and coercion. The defendants disputed the sufficiency of the notice determining the alleged licence in respect of the land in dispute.

3. Six issues were framed by the learned Munsif upon the pleadings. The learned Munsif in his judgment found that the intermediary interest of the plaintiff in the land in suit vested in the State of West Bengal from 1st Baisakh 1362 B. S., and that the plaintiff was not entitled to retain possession of the disputed land under the provisions of Section 6(1) clauses (h) and (i) of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act. The learned Munsif found that in the disputed land the defendants have acquired a tenancy right. The learned Munsif found also that the plaintiff had no right, title and interest in the disputed land, and as such, had no right to get arrears of the licence fees from 1362 to 1365 B. S. Accordingly, the learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff went in appeal before the learned District Judge at Hooghly. The learned Judge found that a deed of lease was executed vide, Ext. A, but he considered this Ext. A through utter confusion of law only as a license for extracting sand from suit land being a unilateral document, and not a valid lease. The learned Judge proceeded however to interpret Ext. A upon a mistaken view of law as being a lease in respect of the disputed land for the period of 9 years from 1347 B. S. to 1355 B. S. creating a liability in the defendants to pay annual rent of Rs. 54 to the plaintiff. The learned Judge found that the option of renewal of the lease (Ext. A) was not exercised by the defendants on the expiry of the lease and held that after the expiry of the term of the lease it stood determined under Section 111 clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. Then the learned Judge proceeded to interpret Ext. 1 dated 27-4-50 registered on 8-8-50. This document, according to the learned Judge, was an agreement whereby the right to extract sand from the suit land for another period of 9 years from 1357 B. S. to 1365 B. S. was created with the defendant's liability to pay Rs. 67 as licence fees under Ext. 1. Then the learned Judge held that the document (Ext. 1) was a licence not a lease, and that the plaintiff realised licence fees of Rs. 66 though granting receipts in the form of rent receipt (Ext. 'B' series). The learned Judge relying on Ext. 1 and 'B' series came to the conclusion that the presumption arising out of the revisional survey khaltians, Exts. F and Fi had been rebutted by Ext. 1 which is binding upon the parties. The learned Judge further found that the plaintiff held the suit land as intermediary within the meaning of Section 2 Cl. (i) of the Estates Acquisition Act. He held that under S. 6 Cl. (i) of the Estates Acquisition Act debuttar of the deity being an endowment, both charitable and religious, would be entitled to retain in khas, in spite of the vesting of the intermediary interest in the disputed land in the State of West Bengal. Further the learned Judge found that the plaintiff's interest in the suit land had not been vested in the State wherefor the plaintiff was not required to submit 'B' Form. The learned Judge then held that he is entitled to get the land in khas upon evicting the defendants therefrom and also granted a decree for arrears of licence fees. Ultimately the learned Judge decreed the suit after setting aside the judgment and decree passed by the learned Munsif and allowed the appeal.

4. The defendants have now come up in appeal before this Court which was resisted by the plaintiff.

5. For the defendants-appellants Mr. Ranjit Kumar Banerjee, learned Advocate, appeared, and for the respondent Mr. Dilip Kumar Banerjee, learned Advocate, gave reply.

6. First, I am to observe that neither of the Courts below found it to be their duty to look into the plaint. The plaint schedule speaks of khatian Nos. 22, 23, 24 and plots Nos. 589, 797, 330, 563 and 1109. The total area of the plots, according to the plaint schedule, page 3, is 8.86 acres equal to 27 bighas. The revisional khatian that was finally published & marked & exhibited in the lower Court, as Exts. F and Fi had not been looked into by the plaintiff's legal advisers. The khatian Nos. are 807 & 808 not khatian Nos. 22, 23, 24 relate to the suit property. In khatian No. 807 (Ext. F) in the first column under the heading "superior interest" there are three groups, 22 Darpattani, 23 Darpattani, 24 Darpattani — Dandi Swami Hrishikesh Asram. These three numbers caused a confusion in him who had drafted the plaint. The plot No. 589 area 3.84 acre is a balukhad and plot No 597 is a danga. Plot No. 563 is 1.07 acres but in Khatian No. 808 the entire plot is not there. The entire plot is 6.36 acres but in Khatian 808 plot No. 563 being one 2 as 13 gds 3 karas 1 karanti of sixteen annas only covers 1.07 acres. Plot No. 607/1109 is a balukhad. It is a part of the total area, being 2.63 acres. The plot containing the part of the entire plot, is 14 as 10 gds 3 karas 1 karanti of sixteen annas covering an area of 2.39 acre. (Ext. F1) So the remaining portion of the two plots, 563 and 607/1109 belongs to some other person who is not a party, as the plaint shows. In the suit in the plaint schedule two plots are there—dag No. 563, 1.07 acre in area and dag No. 1109, 1.39 acres in area. But there is no plot in Khatian No 808 bearing plot No 1109. Plot No 670/1109, as I have already pointed out, is a part of the entire plot 2.63 acres. There is no plot No 797 either in Khatian No. 807 or in Khatian No. 808.

7. Mr. Banerjee for the respondent submitted that in view of these errors clarification was necessary. I think that he had the idea that the suit should be remanded for "clarification". I pointed out to him that clarification is there in the record itself, and that is the reason why I have analysed the Khatian vis-a-vis the plaint schedule. Mr Banerjee for the respondent further submitted that there is no Khatians Nos. 22, 23 and 24 but the Khatians are 807 and 808 (Exts. F and F1). I pointed out by my analysis the error in the drafting of the plaint. It referred to Khatian Nos. 22, 23 and 24, an error of the draftsman, who should mention Khatian Nos. 807 and 808 but mistakenly mentioned the superior Darpatni interests as were recorded in the relevant Darpatni Khatian of 22, 23 and 24 under the paltanidar. The suit properly covers an interest under the Darpatanidar, and that interest has been recorded in Khatian Nos 807 and 808. For the error in the number in the plots and their areas vis-a-vis left out portions of the plots as described in the plaint schedule, Mr Banerjee had no point to reply. I have pointed out that if the Courts below would have looked into the Khatians (Exts F and F1) and would have compared the plaint schedule with such Khatians they would not have proceeded with the suit and the appeal respectively, and would have called upon the plaintiff to justify the claim as laid in the plaint, when in the plaint, the presumption of correctness of the revisional record of rights (Exts. F and F1) had not been challenged a whit. The defendants relied on the presumption of correctness of the record-of-rights. The plaintiffs in the plaint did not challenge the presumption of correctness of the record-of-rights. The learned Judge in the Court of appeal below found that the Ext 1 overthrew the presumption of correctness of the record-of-rights without looking and analysing what the record-of-rights say and how it tallied with the plaintiffs' claim as laid in the plaint, describing erroneously in the plaint schedule the land said to be in dispute. The learned Judge did not notice that in Khatian No 807 there are two plots (Ext. F) plots 589 and 597 and in the plaint schedule there is only plot 589, but not plot 597. Therefore, the learned Judge's finding that Ext. 1 rebutted the presumption of correctness of the record-of-rights (Ext. F) had no legs to stand upon. Then the learned Judge did not also look to Khatian No 808. Khatian No 808 consists of two plots—plot 563 and 607/1109. In the plaint schedule I find there is plot 563, but there is no plot, being number 607/1109. If the learned Judge would have compared the plaint schedule with the Khatian Ext. F-1, he would not have said that Ext 1 rebutted the presumption of correctness of the said record-of-rights. Therefore, the learned Judge's finding on that point cannot also stand. In the face of the plaint schedule and the two Khatians. Accordingly, when there is no case in the plaint challenging the correctness of the record-of-rights, containing the plots as held by the defendants, said to be dakhlikar as recorded in those Khatians in respect of the lands claimed by the defendants as appertaining to their tenancy under the plaintiff, it shall be presumed, as the contrary has neither been pleaded, nor proved in regard to the plots, as recorded in those Khatians with all their incidence, that the lands have been correctly recorded. Therefore, the finding of the learned Judge that Ext 1 overthrew the presumption of correctness of the record-of-rights pertaining to the land in actual physical occupation of the defendants-appellants cannot stand, and I, therefore, disagree with that finding.

8. The learned Judge found Ext. A to be an agreement creating a license. It is to be observed that the plaintiff blacked out this story of agreement in the plaint. The defendants pleaded that from 1347 Baisak, they had entered into the land now in their actual physical occupation upon an oral agreement to pay rent to the plaintiff at Rs 54 per annum. The defendants asserted that while they were in occupation under that oral agreement, a document of lease was created on 10-7-1941, being a conformatory lease as it were. The defendants further contended that during the continuance of their occupation of the land to which they were induced in terms of the oral settlement as well as of the confirmatory lease Ext. K, the plaintiff, by coercion, induced the defendants to execute the other document (Ext. 1). Now, let us see in the light of the documents themselves Ext. 1 is the certified copy. In this agreement there are two parties. It reads in the preamble as follows:

दोलिदा दाता। वर, दास, दे अण्ड को, द्वितीय पक्ष
गिहिला।”

The recitals would show that on 27-4-1950 corresponding to 14th Baisak, 1357 B. S. a right was created as it were for the first time between the parties. The recipient of the document, Ext. 1 was permitting as it were the other party to the document that means the defendants' right to extract sand from 27 bighas of land within plots 589, 597, 563 and 1109 of Khatians 22, 23 and 24 of mouza Baligari. This document, as the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar shows, was executed by one Hermabal Sanyal of Tarakeswar, a service holder and an agent of Dandiswami Ashram under the power of attorney. On the top of the document in the right hand side the executant is Dandiswami Jagannath Ashram. The execution was not admitted by Dandiswami Jagannath Ashram but was admitted by one power of attorney-holder of Dandiswami Jagannath Ashram. The cause title of the document, Ext. 1 would not show that it was the deity through Shri Dandiswami, or the deity represented by Dandiswami was executing the document (Ext. 1). The executant of the document was not Shiv Thakur represented by Dandiswami but by Dandiswami himself. Admission of execution was not by Dandiswami as the shebait of the deity but by one holding power of attorney from Dandiswami. A licence requires no such document as Ext. 1. But, for and on behalf of the deity the document (Ext. 1) was not executed by its shebait. Ext. A, however, which was within the knowledge of the plaintiff's shebait was not mentioned in the plaint. From the plaint, it would appear (vide paragraphs 2 and 3) that the property described in the plaint schedule managed by the shebait Dandiswami is covered by an agreement (Ext. 1) which was executed by the defendants for extracting sand up to the end of Chaitra, 1365 B. S. In their written statements the defendants referred to Ext. A and the circumstances under which it came into existence. In Ext. A, there are two parties as mentioned in the preamble. The executant of Ext. A is Dandiswami Jagannath Ashram and the recipient of Ext. A is Bar. Das Dey & Co., i.e. the defendants. Ext. A as the preamble shows is an agreement. It is dated 26th Ashar, 1348 B. S. corresponding to 10th July, 1947. But the terms in Ext. A at page 2, amongst other things, recite:

“वर्तमान सन १३४७ सालेर वैशाख मास होई ते
आगामी सन १३५५ सालेर चैत्र मास पर्जत पूर्ण नै
बक्कर मेया दे जमा कराया, दिया . . .।”

9. So, before the execution of the document Ext. A on 26th Ashar, 1348 B. S., the properties described in schedule of Ext. A had already been in occupation of the defendants. Therefore, the defendants' contention that before 1347 B. S. they had come into occupation of the disputed land on an oral agreement between the plaintiff-deity and themselves creating a liability to pay a rent of Rs. 54 per annum is amply supported by the recitals in the document, Ext. A. No explanation was given as to why the time of commencement was fixed from Baisakh 1347 B. S. to Chaitra 1355 B. S. when the document itself came into existence in Ashar 1348 B. S. There cannot be any third case. If I am to accept the plaintiff's case under Ext. 1, then for the first time the defendants were inducted into the land in dispute as a licensee at work under Ext. 1 on and from 14th Baisak 1357 B. S. = 27-4-50. But Ext. A in its recitals shows that the defendants came into occupation in Baisak 1347 B. S., and supports the defendants' contention that they had come into occupation of the disputed land not as trespassers but as tenants under the plaintiff on an oral agreement from Baisak 1347 B. S., being liable to pay Rs. 54 as rent per annum. Ext. A again was executed by Dandiswami Ashram not by the deity-plaintiff through Dandiswami Ashram, or being represented by Dandiswami Ashram. The law is well established by a Bench decision of this Court in the case of Banku Behari Mondal v. Banku Behari Hazra, 47 Cal WN 288 = (AIR 1943 Cal 203). The execution of the two documents (Exls. 1 and A) in the manner as has been done in the present case would not bind the deity but the Dandiswami in his individual capacity. Therefore, neither by Ext. A nor by Ext. 1 the deity bound himself to be under any obligation. So, we cannot look into the terms of either of Ext. A or of Ext. 1.

10. Ext. A was a unilateral document. Therefore, it is not a lease under Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, but it is a monthly lease i.e. monthly tenancy, as it were, as such a tenancy under Section 106, but not under Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act AIR 1952 SC 23, Ram Kumar Das v. Jagdish Chandra Deo. Ext. 1, though a bilateral document, was not executed by and on behalf of the deity, and is not binding on the deity. Be that as it may, Ext. 1 came into existence during the “continuance” of the tenancy created under the oral agreement, which was confirmed by Dandiswami, although not by the deity. Therefore, the position is this that the defendants claim that they are holding the land in dispute from 1347 B. S. not adversely against the deity but as tenants. The deity did not accept such position when the plaint was filed. The deity came with the story as if for the first time the deity inducted the defendants into the disputed land under Ext. 1. But that fact cannot be accepted in the face of Ext. A which at least contains an admission by the Shebait of the deity to this extent that the defendants had been in occupation of the disputed land in 1347 B S i.e. from before Ext A had come into existence. This position is unassailable. Moreover, as the plaintiff's shahait knew this fact, the suppression of such a material fact in the plaint clearly tells against the plaintiff and this Court is put in a position to accept that under Ext. 1 for the first time the defendants were brought into occupation of the land in dispute.

11 Mr. R Banerjee the learned Advocate for the appellant submitted that his clients would go so far as to accept this position in respect of the land in their occupation that they were licensees under the plaintiff. But he contended that even then Chapter IV of the Estates Acquisition Act, particularly Section 28 would stand against the plaintiff's claim for khas possession of the mine in the sand-deposit. Mr R Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the appellants, further submitted that both the Courts below overlooked Chapter IV of the Estates Acquisition Act and that the Court of appeal erroneously held that Section 6(1) clauses (h) and (i) of the Estates Acquisition Act entitled the plaintiff to get the reliefs prayed for. Mr Banerjee's argument raises several important questions both of law and fact.

12. Now let me examine the settlement khata (Ext F). Plot 589 is a balukhad, plot 597 is a danga and plot 563 is a danga. Plot 607/1109 is a balukhad. According to the plaintiff and the defendants all these four plots are balukhad meaning deposits of sand in the subsoil. Chapter IV of the Estates Acquisition Act deals with these words "Mines and Minerals". Section 27 reads as follows:

"27.—Provisions of Chapter IV to override other provisions of the Act. The provisions of this Chapter shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary elsewhere in this Act."

13. Section 28 reads as follows:—

"28.—Right of intermediaries directly working mines. So much of the land in a notified area held by an intermediary immediately before the date of vesting (including subsoil rights therein but excluding rights in hals and hazars not in the khas possession of the intermediary and lands comprising forest if any) as was comprised in or as appertained to any mine which was being directly worked by him immediately before such date shall with effect from such date be deemed to have been leased by the State Government to such intermediary. The terms and conditions of such lease shall be as agreed upon between him and the State Government or in default of agreement as may be settled by the Mines Tribunal."

Provided that all such terms and conditions shall be consistent with the provisions of any Central Act for the time being in force relating to the grant of mining leases."

14. Section 29 sub-section (i) clause (II) reads as follows:

"(II) In other cases, — that if the holder of the lease has developed or done any prospecting work in respect of any part of the land included in the lease but has in the opinion of the State Government, failed to do any prospecting or development work within three years from the date of vesting in respect of the remaining part of the land included in the lease, the State Government shall be entitled to resume the whole or any portion of such remaining part of the land together with the minerals lying thereunder, after giving three months' notice in writing, but in so resuming the State Government shall have regard to the reasons for such failure and by the requirements as appear to it to be reasonable for the future development of the mining concern of the lease."

Section 27 lays down that provision of Chapter IV of the Estates Acquisition Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary elsewhere in this Act. Now Mr Banerjee, for the respondent submitted that as nothing in the provisions of Chapter IV were contrary to the provisions of Section 6(1) clauses (h) and (i) of the Act the provisions of Section 6 Clauses (h) and (i) would prevail. Mr. Banerjee, learned advocate for the appellants on the other hand, contended that the contention of Mr. Banerjee, learned advocate for the respondent, was not sound. The expression "anything to the contrary elsewhere in this Act" in Section 27 shall have to be read as an explanation to Sections 28, 29 of Chapter IV. Section 28 amongst other words says "So much of the land in a notified area held by an intermediary immediately before the date of vesting . . . as was comprised in or as appertained to any mine which was being directly worked by him immediately before such date be deemed to have been leased by the State Government to such intermediary." For the definition of the word "Mine" we are to look into the Mine Act of 1952 since that expression has not been defined in the Estates Acquisition Act and for definition of the word "mineral" in Chapter IV of the Estates Acquisition Act we are to look into the definition of mineral in the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act 1957 and Mines Act of 1952. The Mine in clause J of Section 2 of the Mines Act 1952 is defined as follows:

"Mine means any excavation where any operation for the purpose of searching for or obtaining mineral has been or is being carried on and includes . . ."
Mineral has been defined by the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1957 in Section 3 Clause (a). It includes all minerals except mineral oils. In Clause (e) of Section 3 "minor minerals" have been defined as building stones, gravel, ordinary clay, ordinary sand and other than sand used for prescribed purposes and any other mineral According to both the parties 27 bighas of land said to be in dispute formed a subsoil deposit of sand. Therefore, the disputed subsoil deposit of sand is a mine and sand is mineral.

15. The provisions of Section 6, sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) of the Estates Acquisition Act are to be understood with reference to the provisions of Sections 27 and 28 of the Act. In Section 28, the two expressions "mine" and directly worked by "him" are of much importance. As the provisions in Sec. 28 of the Estates Acquisition Act in regard to a mine directly worked by an intermediary are contrary to the provisions of Section 6, sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) of the Act, the provisions of Section 28 would prevail over the provisions of Section 6, sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) of the Act. Therefore, in regard to the present case, the provisions of Sections 27 and 28 of the Estates Acquisition Act would get better of the provisions of Section 6, sub-section (1), clauses (h) and (i) of the Act.

16. The next question is whether on the date of vesting, that means on the 15th April, 1955, the mine which according to both parties is a "ballykhad" was being worked directly by the plaintiff as a mine by extracting sand, — a mineral, — therefrom. It is clear from the evidence that the mine in the disputed land has been worked by extracting sand therefrom from Baisakh, 1347 B.S. by the defendants, and the plaintiff did not, during the period from Baisakh, 1347 B.S. to the date of vesting of the plaintiff's intermediary interest therein, and after, worked the mine directly. Mr. Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the respondent submitted that the defendants did not work the mine directly by extracting sand from the mine, but they worked the mine as licensees of the plaintiff. Mr. Ranjit Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the appellant, submitted that the expressions in Section 28 are "directly worked" and "by him", and that the two expressions clearly indicated that the intermediary was required to work the mine himself but not through any other agency of whatsoever description it might be, such as a licensee or a lessee. Mr. Ranjit Banerjee rightly submitted that the word "directly" used before the word "worked" followed by the words "by him" left no room for holding that if the intermediary had worked the mine either through a lessee or a licensee, it would be the intermediary's directly working the mine. If the intermediary by making installations in the mine engaged labourers and worked the mine, he could be then considered to have had worked the mine directly. I accept Mr. Ranjit Banerjee's contention to be correct.

17. From Baisakh 1347 B. S. the mine in the disputed land has been worked by extracting sand therefrom by the defendants. It is immaterial whether they are licensees or lessees. Mr. D. Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the respondent, submitted that the possession of the mines remained with the plaintiff while the working was done through the defendants as licensees. But that argument would not alter the meaning of the expression "directly worked by him" meaning directly worked by the intermediary in the manner I have already expressed hereinbefore in this judgment. I am not required to determine what exactly is the status of the defendants in law vis-a-vis the plaintiff in respect of the mine in the land in dispute. The defendants may be lessees or licensees in respect of the mine in the disputed land. What I find is that from Baisakh 1347 B. S. the mine in the disputed land has been worked not directly by the intermediary but through another agency i.e. the defendants. Accordingly, when the plaintiff's intermediary interest in the disputed land which is a mine vested in the State of West Bengal, the plaintiff had not been then directly working the mine in the disputed land. Therefore, the provisions of Section 28 of the Estates Acquisition Act would come into operation in respect of the mine in the disputed land.

18. It was argued by Mr. D. Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the respondent that the defendants were not lessees and that the plaintiff being an intermediary, should be considered to be the lessee of the mine directly under the State Government. Here again, the two expressions "directly worked" and "by him" with the reference to the date of vesting of the intermediary interest of the plaintiff in the mine would stare at the face of the plaintiff. If the mine was directly being worked by the plaintiff at the date of vesting of his intermediary interest, Mr. D. Banerjee's contention could have prevailed.

19. Mr. D. Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the respondent, submitted that though the learned Munsif held that the defendants were lessees, the learned Judge in the Court below held that the defendants were licensees, and that as such, the defendants should be held as licensees and not as lessees and that they would not, therefore come within Section 29 of the Estates Acquisition Act. I could not accept Mr. D. Banerjee's contention as sound. The plaintiff suppressed a very material fact being that from Baisakh 1347 B. S. the mine in the disputed land had been worked not directly by the plaintiff but by the defendants. The defendants came into occupation of the mine from Baisakh 1347 B. S. as has been admitted by Dandiswami. As the position is this that since Baisakh, 1347 B. S., the defendants have been working the mine in the disputed land but not the plaintiff, a tenancy in favour of the defendants, not under a document of lease as under Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, but under an oral agreement came into existence, confirmed by Ext. A. So, from Baisakh, 1347 B. S. under Ext. A. the defendants have become monthly tenants in respect of the land in dispute which is a mine, and as such lessees of the mine but not licensees. The defendants' tenancy in the disputed land which is a mine is one under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, but not under Section 107 of the Act, vide Ext. A. Both the documents, Exts. 1 and A being not a lease as under Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, gave rise to a monthly tenancy since Baisakh 1347. B. S. In respect of the disputed land which is a mine, created by an oral agreement and so admitted by Ext. A. In the finally published record of rights the defendants have been recorded as Dakhalkar in respect of the disputed land which is a mine. So, from Baisakh 1347, B. S., the defendants have been in occupation of the disputed land which is a mine by extracting sand therefrom on payment of Rs 54/- as rent p a to the plaintiff. After intermediary estate of the plaintiff vested in the State of West Bengal, the defendants have been recorded as Dakhalkar of the mine and the State has accepted this much that the defendants had been working the mine but not the plaintiff on the date of vesting of the plaintiff's intermediary interest in the mine in the State of West Bengal. Accordingly, the plaintiff had not, at the date of vesting of his intermediary interest in the mine, worked the mine directly. As lessees at least of the character of a monthly tenant as under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, the defendants have been working the mine and as such have been in exclusive possession of the mine from before and at the date of vesting of the intermediary interest of the plaintiff in the State. So, the defendants may well be placed within the terms of the Sec. 29 of the Estates Acquisition Act.

20. In Roads v. Overseers of Trumington, reported in (1871) 6 QB 56, the question was whether excavation of a mine and the occupation for the purpose of excavation of a mine carried with it the idea of exclusive occupation of the mine when grantor of the right had also reserved to himself the right to enter into the mine if and when necessary. It was held that the agreement created the right of exclusive possession of the land even though grantor of the right reserved to himself the right to enter into the land if and when necessary. The revisional record of rights finally published Exts. F and F-1 and the oral agreement under which the defendants had been brought into occupation of the mine as well as the evidence adduced by the parties amply lead to one and only one conclusion that during the period from 1347 B. S. till to day the defendants have been in exclusive occupation of the mines by extracting sand and there is no evidence that during the period the plaintiff ever entered into the land. Therefore, the defendants have been in exclusive occupation of the mine by extracting sand therefrom from 1347 B. S. and have been recorded as "Dakhalkar" in the finally published record of rights. The plaintiff never directly worked the mine and had never been in exclusive possession of the mine at any time after Baisakh 1347 B. S. till date. Therefore, apart from the question whether the defendants are lessees or licensees, though I hold them to be lessees, under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act being monthly tenants, they have been in exclusive occupation of the mine directly working the mine and the plaintiff-respondent had never been in exclusive occupation of the mine directly working it during the period from Baisakh 1347 B. S. to 1st Baisakh, 1362 B. S. when his intermediary interest vested in the State of West Bengal. Accordingly Section 28, of Chapter IV of Estates Acquisition Act, would stand in the way of the plaintiff-respondent's getting the mine as a lessee directly holding it under the State of West Bengal. The defendants have paid rent for the mine to the State of West Bengal. Therefore, the State of West Bengal has accepted the defendants as "lessees of the mine" within the meaning of Section 29 of the Estates Acquisition Act. Mr. D. Banerjee contended by rent decrees and by Ext. 1 the defendants were estopped from challenging the plaintiff's right to occupy the mine in khas. There can be no estoppel against law. If by law, the mine did vest in the State of West Bengal and if the mine was not in fact directly worked by the plaintiff no amount of admission in Ext. 1 or in Ext. A contrary to law nor surference of rent decrees would create any estoppel against law. Therefore Mr. D. Banerjee's contention as above also fails.

21. Finally I hold that the plaintiff had no right to institute the suit as framed. Therefore, the learned District Judge erred both in fact and in law in granting a decree to the plaintiff-respondent. The suit could hardly be maintained as framed.

22. Accordingly, the appeal must be allowed and it is hereby allowed. The judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge be and the same are hereby set aside. The plaintiff's suit be and the same is hereby dismissed on contest. Since those who are responsible for the carriage of the suit and the appeal before the Courts below had themselves erred in law, the duty should not be made responsible for cost since it is a perpetual minor who had rested its confidence in its guardian shebait as it were whose legal advisers did not perform their lawful duties in the manner they should have done. Therefore, there would be no order for costs either in the suit or in the Court of Appeal below or in this Court to the appellant.

23. Leave to appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is prayed for by Mr. D. K. Banerjee, and is refused.

P. N. MOOKERJEE AND S. K.

CHAKRAVARTI, JJ.

Sunil Kumar Chowdhary and another, Appellants v. Sm. Satirani Chowdhary and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 598 of 1966 and A. F. O. O. No. 663 of 1967 D/- 12-3-1969.

(A) Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 10 — Desertion — Meaning of — Factum of separation and intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end — Two essential conditions to prove desertion — (Words and Phrases — Desertion).

In essence desertion means the intentional permanent forsaking and abandonment of one spouse by the other, without the other's consent and without reasonable cause, it is a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage. In a case of desertion there must be two conditions — namely, (i) factum of separation and (ii) the intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end. (Para 7)

(On facts it was held that the husband had failed to prove desertion by the wife so that he was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation.) (Para 8)

(B) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), Ss. 17, 19 and 25 — Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act (1956), S. 13 — Hindu minor boy aged more than five years in custody of mother — Claim by father for custody — S. 19 of former Act to be read as subject to S. 13 of latter Act — Welfare of minor should be prime and sole consideration — Change in law so far as Hindus are concerned pointed out.

Per Chakravarti, J.:— Though under Section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act, if the father is not unfit to be the guardian of the person of a minor aged more than 5, the father should be the guardian, (Vide (1961) 65 Cal WN 1138) still under Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, the prime and sole consideration will be the welfare of the minor. Section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act will have, therefore, to be read subject to Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, so far as Hindus are concerned.

(Para 10)

Per Mookerjee, J.:— Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act has brought about a material change, so far as Hindus are concerned. It makes it quite clear that, in all cases, irrespective of the status of the person, claiming the guardianship, the welfare of the minor would be the paramount consideration.

Under Section 19 Guardians and Wards Act so far as the father is concerned his claim for guardianship in the case of a boy of more than 5 years of age would be the paramount consideration. In regard to other persons, claiming guardianship Section 17 of the said Act puts the welfare of the minor in the forefront and makes it the paramount consideration. Although the welfare of the minor may not be the paramount consideration under Section 19, while it is of paramount consideration under Section 17, even in cases, coming under Section 19, the said aspect is not altogether without significance. It will be one of the considerations or one of the facts, to be considered in the matter of the claim of guardianship, even of the father, and as one of such considerations, it may, in the ultimate result outweigh the otherwise paramount claim of the father.

The father applied under Section 25, Guardians and Wards Act for the custody of his minor boy of 5 years from the custody of the mother whom he had driven out of the house 4 years back without caring to know how they were living or making any serious efforts to bring them back.

Held that in the circumstances of the case it would be to the welfare of the minor to remain with his mother and it would be against his welfare to turn him over to his father. The application should be dismissed as not being bona fide since no attempt had been made under S. 26 Hindu Marriage Act to obtain the custody of the child during the pendency of suit for judicial separation and the application was filed only after the suit had been dismissed with costs. Dasi v. Bhagirathi Shahu 13, 15

In A. F. O. D. No. 598/66:—

Rabiranjana Das Gupta and Ganganendra Krishna Deb, for Appellant; Ranjit Kumar Banerjee and Sakinath Mukherjee, for Respondent.

In A. F. O. O. No. 663/67:—

Ranjit Kumar Banerjee and Saktinath Mukherjee, for Appellant; Rabiranjana Das Gupta and Ganganendra Krishna Deb, for Respondent.

S. K. CHAKRAVARTI, J.:— These are two appeals, one by the husband against an order of the learned Additional District Judge, Alipore by which he dismissed the petitioner appellant's application for judicial separation from his wife the respondent and the other by the wife against an order passed by the learned District Judge, Howrah by which he allowed the application of the husband for custody of the child of the marriage

2. The parties are Hindus and were married on April 22 1960 according to Hindu religious rites and a male child was born on February 9 1961 They lived together till the 1st of March 1962 since when they have been living apart.

3. The petitioner husband's case is that his wife the respondent was haughty and temperamental as her parents were wealthy and she wanted him to live in her father's house at Salfia and as the petitioner refused to do it, she ultimately left his house on the 1st of March 1962 without any cause whatsoever His further case is to the effect that in spite of repeated requests she has not returned to him and has completely deserted him He, therefore filed an application praying for judicial separation

4. The respondent categorically denied all these allegations Her case is that she does not belong to a wealthy family and never expected her husband to live with her at her father's place On the other hand the petitioner wanted money from her father and as her father could not procure the same and offered him only half of that amount he grew angry and began to practise cruelty upon her and drove her away sometime in September 1961 12 days thereafter her father-in-law died and she was called an evil woman and was held responsible by the members of her husband's family for the death of the father-in-law In spite of that, on hearing the sad news she came over to her husband's place with her father but she was given a cold reception and was driven away on the next day She however, along with her father came to attend the Sradh ceremony and after the Sradh was over, there was some sort of reconciliation effected between them and she came over to live with her husband at his place of work at Nubati. The petitioner, however, on some excuse took away her ornaments and have refused to return the same to her She was then given medicines brought by her husband for an illness not known to herself, and when she met the Doctor, namely Dr Bejny Bose, who gave the prescription, he told her not to take the medicines and thereafter the respondent discontinued taking medicines The petitioner there upon became displeased and began to press upon her to quit his residence and began to ill-treat her and even stopped her food. On 26-2-1962 the petitioner wrote a letter to the respondent's father to come positively on 1st of March 1962 for some urgent consultation When the father came, the petitioner abused and insulted him, and drove the respondent away She denies that any attempt was made by her husband to take her back She, however, reiterated that she had been and is always willing to go back to her husband, provided he gives some sort of guarantee that he will not ill-treat her

5. The learned Additional District Judge on the evidence accepted the respondent's case in toto and held that there has not been any desertion by the wife of the husband He further came to the conclusion that it was rather the petitioner who was responsible for the separation and that he made no attempt to bring her back He therefore dismissed the application

6. In this appeal by the husband it is contended that the learned Additional District Judge erred in holding as above

7. It is well settled now that in essence desertion means the intentional permanent forsaking and abandonment of one spouse by the other, without the other's consent and without reasonable cause, and that it is a total repudiation of the obligations of marriage In a case of desertion there must be two conditions, — namely, (i) factum of separation and (ii) the intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end

8. Now, so far as the present case is concerned it is an admitted position that at least since the 1st of March 1962 the petitioner and the respondent have been living apart. It is now to be seen as to whether the respondent intentionally abandoned the husband without any reasonable cause with the intention of bringing cohabitation permanently to an end Both sides have adduced evidence in this case We ourselves have been led through the entire evidence, both oral and documentary, and on a careful analysis of the same, we are not in a position to find that the learned Additional District Judge has erred in the conclusions he had arrived at As a matter of fact the evidence is quite clear to show that the only conclusions possible therefrom are those which have been arrived at by the learned Additional District Judge (After discussion of the evidence his Lordship concluded) Thus on a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, we agree with the findings of the learned Additional District Judge to the effect that there has not been any desertion by the wife of the husband and that if the wife has been living separately, she has been compelled to do so, on account of the conduct of the husband. The suit, therefore has been rightly dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge, and F A 598 of 1966 must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, hearing fee being assessed at five gold mohurs.

9. Now with regard to F. M. A. 663 of 1967. This appeal is by the wife, as we have stated already. The husband Sunil Kumar Chowdhury was the petitioner before the learned District Judge Howrah and this petition was under Section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, by which he prayed for the custody of the child born of the wedlock. His case was that the boy who was born on the 9th of February 1961 was taken away by his wife on 1-3-62 from his place at Naihati and the boy is living with his mother (the respondent) at her father's house and he is not being given proper education commensurate with his age and family reputation and he is being pampered in such a way that there is every likelihood of his being spoilt. As the wife has not returned the child to him in spite of demands, he filed this application. The application was contested by the present appellant (respondent), the mother of the child, and she controverted all the allegations made by the husband. The learned District Judge held that ours is a patriarchal society and the father being the head of the family, more consideration is to be given to his wishes and he would be more able and better fitted to control, regulate and train the children in accordance with the rules of discipline, etiquette and morality by reason of his age, experience and firmness. He accordingly held that the child should be returned to the father, and as the child did not know the father at all, he directed that during the Puja holidays and Christmas holidays and Summer Vacation the boy should be sent to his father for spending some of his holidays with his father and his environments, and that after the completion of one year from that date the petitioner shall have the custody of the minor boy.

10. The application is under Section 25 of the Guardians & Wards Act. The child is aged more than 5 now. Though under Section 19 of the Guardians & Wards Act, if the father is not unfit to be guardian of the person of a minor aged more than 5, the father should be the guardian, (Vide 65 C. W. N. 1138) still under Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, the prime and sole consideration will be the welfare of the minor. Section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act will have, therefore, to be read subject to Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, so far as Hindus are concerned. We, therefore, have to consider whether in the facts and circumstances of this case, it would be to the welfare of the child, to take him away from his mother, and make him over to his father who is a total stranger to him. The boy is reading in the Don Bosco School at Lilooah and has got good grades in the School. It is well known that this School, run by the missionaries, is a very good one. There is nothing to show that the teaching he is getting there, is contrary to the teachings of the Hindu Shastras, or that he is being pampered or being taught to live in a foreign way. It is well-known that in such institutions, it is very difficult to get admission for boys, and if a boy can get an admission in such an institution, he is a very lucky one. The petitioner has been living alone in his quarters at Naihati. He has been living away from the son barely after the son has reached the age of one. If the learned District Judge has commented on the fact that the boy does not know the father at all, it is necessary that such a young boy should be under the care and control of a female relation. Sensing this, the petitioner had suggested that he would bring his mother down from Bishnupur to his house at Naihati to look after the boy. The mother is, admittedly, an aged person, and there is nothing to show that she would agree to come to Naihati to look after this young boy. The petitioner has further suggested that he would have the boy educated at the Ramkrishna Mission institution either at Narendrapur or at Rahara. It would not be possible for the petitioner to send the boy daily to such institutions from Naihati, and the boy will have to be kept in the boarding provided for boys of such institutions. On the other hand, at the Don Bosco School he attends daily from his residence. It is absurd to suggest, that in the circumstances, it will be to the welfare of the boy to be uprooted from his mother's house, and planted either at Naihati or at Narendrapur or at Rahara where he would not have the loving care of either of his parents or near relations. There is absolutely no reason to hold that the boy is being pampered or is being brought up in a different way. The father of the boy's mother has even provided for a private tutor for this boy. If the father is so very averse to having his son educated in an institution run by non-Indian missionaries, it cannot be understood as to how he himself is so very anxious to go over to England and have his training there. It is also interesting to observe that the father's sudden attraction for his son or realisation of his own responsibilities as a father and a Hindu, has grown up, not when he filed the suit for judicial separation from his wife, but only after this Court had imposed on him the penalty of paying costs of the litigation borne by his wife, and the alimony to be paid by him to his wife. If his intention had been a bona fide one, it was within his competence to ask for the custody of his child under Section 26 of the Hindu Marriage Act. He did not choose to do so, and there is no satisfactory explanation for the same. In the circumstances, we hold that it would be to the welfare of the child to remain with his mother, and it would be against his welfare, to turn him over to his father. Moreover, our findings in the other appeal would show that the present petitioner would be totally unfit to be in control or charge of the minor son, when he could go so far as to drive them out from his own house, without taking any care to know as to how they were living or making any serious attempts to bring them back.

11. In the result, this appeal has to be allowed and is allowed with costs, bearing-fee being assessed at five gold mohurs; the order passed by the learned District Judge, Howrah in Misc Case No 42 of 1966 is set aside and the application of the petitioner under Section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 is dismissed.

12. The above order for costs has been made after taking into consideration the litigation costs paid to the appellant by the Respondent under the orders of this Court.

13. P. N. MOOKERJEE, J.:— I agree with my Lord in his conclusion and also with his reasonings but I would like to add few words as, on an analogous matter, I delivered a judgment, sitting with my learned brother Niyogi, J., as he then was, under Sections 17 and 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Section 13 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act has brought about a material change, so far as Hindus are concerned. As held in the said decision which is reported in Bimala Bala Das v Bhagtrathi Shahu, 65 Cal WN 1138, so far as the father is concerned, he has a paramount claim of guardianship in the case of a boy of similar age to the boy, with whom we are concerned in this appeal and, under the said Act, in view of Sec. 19, the father's claim would be the paramount consideration. In regard to other persons, claiming guardianship, Section 17 of the said Act puts the welfare of the minor in the forefront and makes it the paramount consideration. In the aforesaid decision, I have pointed out that, although the welfare of the minor may not be the paramount consideration under Section 19, while it is of paramount consideration under Section 17, even in cases, coming under Section 19, the said aspect is not altogether without significance. It will be one of the considerations or one of the facts, to be considered in the matter of the claim of guardianship, even of the father, and as one of such considerations, it may, in the ultimate result, outweigh the otherwise paramount claim of the father, as will appear from the said decision. Under the present law, namely, the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act however, so far as this matter is concerned, Section 13 of the said Act makes it quite clear that, in all cases, irrespective of the status of the person, claiming the guardianship, the welfare of the minor would be the paramount consideration. In view of this distinction, in particular, there can be no question that the father, in the instant case, would not be entitled to the guardianship of the minor boy concerned. Even apart from that, having regard to the facts and circumstances before us and the findings, already made by My Lord, with which I entirely agree, there can be no doubt whatsoever that it will hardly be in the interest or for the welfare of the minor boy concerned to place him in the father's custody.

14. Indeed, by his act of driving out the minor boy along with the mother, he must be held to have lost or forfeited his claim to guardianship and custody of him, even if his claim to such guardianship and custody was otherwise paramount. I, therefore, respectfully agree with my Lord that this appeal should be allowed, the order of the learned District Judge should be set aside and the respondent father's application for guardianship and custody of the minor boy concerned should be dismissed with costs, as ordered by my Lord.

15. I may just add by way of explanation and clarification, that in the decision, 65 Cal WN 1138, the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act did not arise for consideration, as, even though the said Act had been passed during the pendency of the said proceedings, it having the consequence of affecting substantive rights, and there being nothing in the statute concerned to indicate that it would have retrospective effect or would apply to pending proceedings, the same could not apply to the said proceedings, and, accordingly no reference is to be found in the said decision to the said new statute or to its Section 13.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 16 (4) and 335 — Reservation of seats for the scheduled castes candidates for recruitment — For promotion to higher grade merit alone considered — No violation of Constitution.

The special provision in Article 16 (4) has to be read with the provision in Article 335 so that no reservation or special provision in favour of members of the Scheduled Castes can be carried to the length of impairing the efficiency of the administration. The Government does not violate the Constitution in providing that merit would be the only consideration for promotion to the higher grade even though there was reservation for Scheduled Castes for recruitment to the lower posts. Arun Prokas Chatterjee, for Petitioner; Ajoy Kumar Bose, for Respondent.

ORDER:— The petitioner is admittedly a member of a Scheduled Caste and was appointed, as such, as a typist, on April 24, 1956, against the quota reserved for Scheduled Castes and was confirmed, in Grade III, on the same basis on March 21, 1957 (scale of Rs. 110/- = 180/-).

2. The petitioner's grievance is that though in the Seniority List prepared by the Respondent Eastern Ry., in 1961 (Ann. A, p. 12 to the Petition), the Petitioner was given the 75th place, this was revised by the impugned order of 1963 (Annexure A, p. 13), by which the Petitioner was reduced, by giving him the serial number 194-A. As a result of this reduction in the seniority list, the Petitioner alleges, he has lost a chance of being promoted to the higher scale of Rs. 130/- — 300/- (vide Annexure G), which he would have had if his 75th position had been retained.

3. Petitioner's case has been argued on the following points:—

- (a) That the Circular No. 4960 (Ann. F) on the basis of which the reduction in seniority has been ordered, does not apply to the non-selection post of a typist;
- (b) That it cannot be given retrospective effect;
- (c) That it offends Art. 16 of the Constitution.

(a) The first contention of the Petitioner is not correct because para (ii) of the letter at Annexure F of August 2, 1962 lays down the principle to be followed in the matter of 'promotion to higher non-selection grades.'

(b) The seniority of the petitioner for the purpose of promotion to the next non-selection grade has been revised by the application of the principle laid down in para. (ii)

of Annexure F. The contention of the Petitioner is that it could not be given retrospective effect. But the concluding para of Annexure F makes it clear that while confirmations made prior to the issue of this circular should not be disturbed, the seniority position of existing staff should be 'recast' in the light of the instructions contained in this circular. If so, Respondents have not given any retrospective effect not contemplated by the circular.

(c) The strongest ground urged by Mr. Chatterjee on behalf of the Petitioner is that of violation of the guarantee under Article 16 of the Constitution.

4. Owing to the provision for reservation of certain posts for members of the Scheduled Castes, the Petitioner got his confirmation earlier than other non-Scheduled caste persons recruited prior to him. This seniority according to the date of confirmation has been denied by the revision of the seniority list complained of by the Petitioner. The Circular in question, with the connected documents, provides that there would be no reservation for Scheduled Castes for promotion to the next grade and that the seniority for such promotion will be computed not from the respective dates of confirmation, but according to the seniority position on merit as determined by the Public Service Commission or on the results of the Training tests. The Petitioner does not claim any seniority by virtue of these latter tests but contends that his seniority by virtue of earlier confirmation cannot be destroyed, without offending the guarantee under Article 16 (1) of the Constitution.

5. The argument of Mr. Chatterjee is that since the equality of opportunity for 'appointment' in Article 16 (1) has been held to include 'promotion', General Manager v. Rangachari, AIR 1962 SC 36, once confirmed, the Petitioner's right to be promoted to the higher grade must be determined not on merit, but on the basis of the confirmation, and no discrimination can be practised against a person such as the Petitioner who has been confirmed earlier.

6. This argument, however, overlooks the fact that it has been held not only in Rangachari's case, AIR 1962 SC 36 but also in Devandasan v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 179 at p. 188 that the special provision in Article 16 (4) must be read with the provision in Article 335, so that no reservation or special provision in favour of members of the Scheduled Castes can be carried to the length of impairing the 'efficiency of the administration'. The Respondents have not, therefore, violated the Constitution in providing that merit shall be the only consideration for promotion to the higher grade even though there was reservation for Scheduled castes for recruitment to the lower posts.

7. Apart from that, it should be pointed out the circular at Annexure F does not really intend to take away what had been conferred upon the Petitioner. It appears that as early as April 5, 1962, the Board had clarified what it had meant in its earlier letter of 1960. Prior to this, there had been misunderstanding on the part of the General Manager in following the implications of the earlier letter of the Board and that is why the position of 75 had been assigned to the Petitioner according to the date of his confirmation. Since this was due to a misapprehension of the administrative circular, it did not create any legal right in favour of the Petitioner of which he can complain when it is sought to be revised. No discrimination has been made against the Petitioner merely because of his membership of a Scheduled Caste.

8. It has also been rightly pointed out on behalf of the Respondents that the Petitioner cannot maintain this Petition without impleading other employees who would be affected if the revised list at Annexure A is disturbed.

9. From all standpoints thus this Petition must fail. The Rule is discharged, but without any order as to costs.

MOVJ/DVC

Petition dismissed.

Calcutta National Bank Ltd (In Liquidation) Appellant v Rangaroon Tea Co Ltd and others Respondents

Extra Ord. Suit No 2 of 1951; A F. O D No 222 of 1966 D/- 13.6.1968

(A) Defence of India Rules (1939), Rule 94-A (1) — Word 'charge' in Rule 94-A (1) — Would used in generic sense — It embraces mortgages within meaning of words "instrument creating a charge on the assets of Company"

A mortgage is within the ambit of Rule 94-A(1) of the Rules

The word charge in the Rule is used in generic sense of incumbrance and it embraces mortgages within the meaning of the words "instruments creating charge on the assets of the Company". In the case of a charge as well as in case of mortgage two elements are common. First that there is loan and secondly that there is security for repayment of loan. The only difference between a charge and a mortgage is that in case of mortgage there is transfer of interest but in case of charge there is no transfer of interest. So it cannot be said that a mortgage, which has all the attributes of a charge and has in addition the character of transfer of interest in land is outside the purview of Rule 94A(1). The meanings ascribed to mortgage and charge under Sections 58 and 100 of Transfer of Property Act indicate that an instrument creating a mortgage upon assets of the company is an instrument falling within the mischief of Rule 94A(1). (Paras 32, 34)

Per S K Mukherjea; J :

It is true that the Rule does not speak of mortgage but only of charge. It cannot be disputed that every mortgage creates a charge and, in its generic sense a mortgage must, and it does include a charge. A statute must be given the meaning that its language permits so as to carry out and not frustrate its object. It will be unreasonable to construe the expression 'charge' in a restricted sense, as confined to a transaction not amounting to mortgage as contemplated under Section 100 of T. P. Act and not in its wider and generic sense. To do so will be to hold that under Rule 94A although a company cannot lawfully create a charge by an instrument on its assets except with the consent of the Central Government it can create a mortgage by an instrument in the absence of such consent. Such construction is not tenable. Having regard to the object of the Rule and the principle that every mortgage necessarily creates a charge it must be held that the expression 'charge' in Rule 94-A includes a mortgage. It is more than likely that Rule 94-A made no mention of mortgage because the framers of the Rule thought that as a mortgage necessarily creates a charge it is not necessary to make specific reference to mortgage in the definition. (Para 46)

It cannot be said that the word "issue" in the Rule is not used in the sense of 'executed' or 'created' in relation to mortgage or hypothecations and that mortgages and hypothecations are not hit by the Rule. It is true that in popular parlance or in commercial language one does not speak of issuing of mortgage, but then one does not speak of issuing a charge either; and yet the rule contemplates issue of instruments creating a charge or lien. It is clear that in Rule 94A the expression issue has been given an extended and wider significance. The rule contemplates issue of mortgages. In the context of legislative enactments or statutory orders, it is permissible to speak of issue of mortgages. Case law discussed. (Paras 52, 53, 54)

(B) Defence of India Rules (1939), Rule 94A — Instrument creating charge — Interpretation of — Rule including within its ambit diverse things — No genus is discernible — Principle of ejusdem generis cannot be applied. AIR 1957 Trav-Co 6, Dissented from. (Paras 20, 31)

Agreement is instrument creating charge — Needs registration — Time factor of making agreement is immaterial.

The question as to whether the deposit of title deeds is made by a memorandum as an instrument creating an interest in immovable property would depend on the fact as to whether the parties intended to reduce their bargain regarding the deposit in the form of document. The time factor of making the instrument would not be decisive whether it is made prior or subsequent to the deposit of title deeds. The document may be handed over to the creditor along with the title deeds and yet may not be registrable or it may be delivered at later date and nevertheless be registrable. Therefore, if the deposit of title deeds and documents form integral part of the transaction, the instrument then would be creating charge and would require registration.

An agreement was entered into between the mortgagor a company; and a mortgagee bank reciting that the mortgagor has already deposited with the bank the title deeds of properties free from all encumbrances, with intent to create a security on the same, by way of mortgage by deposit of title deeds in favour of the mortgagee bank for due repayment of the sum which the bank has lent and advanced to the mortgagor. The terms and conditions on which the loan was advanced were also set out in the memorandum of agreement in great details. Even the right of mortgagee instituting a suit against the mortgagor was also reserved. Thus the parties themselves considered and made the memorandum in writing the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. In the circumstances, it could be said that the mortgage was created not merely by deposit of title deeds but also by the instrument described as memorandum of agreement. Case law discussed. (Paras 23, 25)

(D) Defence of India Rules (1939), Rule 94A, sub-rules (2), (7), (10) — Mortgage by deposit of title deeds — Mortgage created in contravention of Rule 94A(2) — Transaction is illegal — Mortgagee cannot recover money from mortgagor.

Where a mortgage created by a company by depositing title deeds of a estate with a bank has been created in contravention of Rule 94-A (2), then it cannot be said that though the transaction fell within the mischief of Rule 94-A as an illegal transaction the bank will yet be entitled to recovery of money. No suit can be brought to enforce an illegal contract and the Court will not recognise any action founded upon it. The illegality inherent in the transaction prevents the bank from relying on it either for the enforcement of rights under the instrument or for the recovery of consideration money for the transaction. (Para 35)

Per S. K. Mukherjea, J. :—

By the combined operation of Sub-rules (7) and (10) not only the transaction be held illegal but the consideration given by the bank must also be held to be an illegal consideration and is irrecoverable as the entire transaction is tainted with illegality. (Para 55)

(E) Defence of India Rules (1939), Rule 94-A (9) — Notification No. D. 4114-E. C. I. 144 issued under—Exemption under notification — Claim for exemption — That transaction has been entered in ordinary course of normal business and it is strictly and solely for the purpose of that business, must be established. (Para 37)

(F) Companies Act (1913), Section 109 — Non-registration of mortgage under — Effect of — Mortgage will be void against liquidator and creditors even if mortgage is valid mortgage. (Para 38)

A. N. RAY, J.: This appeal is from the judgment of S P Mitra J. dated 17th August, 1966

2. The plaintiff is the appellant. The plaintiff instituted this suit against the respondent company Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd and Ranjit Bose. During the pendency of the suit Ranjit Bose died and his widow and minor son were impleaded as parties to the suit.

3. The plaintiff's case in short is that on 30th August 1944 the plaintiff lent and advanced to Ranjit Bose a sum of Rs. 2,75,000 with interest thereon at the rate 6 per cent per annum which was subsequently increased to 6 per cent (sic) per annum with effect from 1947. To secure the repayment of the said loan the plaintiff alleged that the said Ranjit Bose deposited with the plaintiff the documents of title relating to the properties known as Rangaroon Tea Estate belonging to Ranjit Bose and situated in the district of Darjeeling. In paragraph 3 of the plaint it was alleged that on 30th August 1944 a registered memorandum of agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and Ranjit Bose at Calcutta evidencing the deposit of title deeds. As further security for the said advance Ranjit Bose charged and hypothecated by way of first charge in favour of the plaintiff the plants, machinery, furniture and other movable assets appertaining to the said Rangaroon Tea Estate. On 30th August 1944 Ranjit Bose, it is alleged, executed in favour of the plaintiff a deed of hypothecation on tea crops of Rangaroon Tea Estate to secure a cash credit account not exceeding Rs 20,000. In para 6 of the plaint it is alleged that on 20th December 1944 by a deed of transfer executed by Ranjit Bose in favour of Rangaroon Tea Estate to which the plaintiff was a party Ranjit Bose relinquished all right, title and interest in Rangaroon Tea Estate in favour of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd and transferred and assigned the Rangaroon Tea Estate, the movable properties and tea crops to Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. subject to the aforesaid mortgage by deposit of title deeds, hypothecation of movables and tea crops in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that a sum of Rs. 1,70,365/12/- was due up to 30th January 1950. The plaintiff claimed preliminary mortgage decree in form 5-A of appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure and other reliefs. In the schedule of the plaint the description of the property in respect of which the preliminary mortgage decree was asked for was set out.

4. Written statements were filed by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd and Ranjit Bose. Additional written statement was filed by the heirs of Ranjit Bose.

5. The issues raised at the trial will indicate the defences broadly stated. The defences were whether there was a mortgage of the tea estate by Ranjit Bose in favour of the plaintiff and whether there was relinquishment of right, title and interest of the tea estate by Ranjit Bose. Another question was whether the property in suit was purchased by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd in the name of Ranjit Bose. The third question was whether Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd created a mortgage on the properties in favour of the plaintiff or Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd acquired the properties subject to mortgage in favour of the plaintiff created by Ranjit Bose. The fourth question was whether the object or consideration of the documents dated 30th August 1944 and 30th December 1944 was forbidden by law. Another question was whether the mortgage was void or illegal by reason of the provisions of the Defence of India Rules. There was a question as to whether the mortgage was void by reason of non-registration under the provisions of section 109 of the Indian Companies Act.

6. The learned Judge came to the following conclusions. First, the property in suit was purchased by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd in the name of Ranjit Bose and further that the mortgage was created by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd in the name of Ranjit Bose and the plaintiff bank was all along aware of the transactions effected. Secondly, Rule 94A of the Defence of India Rules was mandatory and the mortgage in the present case was void or illegal by reason of the provisions of the Defence of India Rules. Thirdly, the plaintiff could not enforce the illegal contract and the Court would not recognize any cause of action founded upon it. Fourthly the plaintiff's plea that the transaction was covered by the exemption order under the Defence of India Rules was not sustainable. Fifthly the mortgage was void by reason of want of registration under Section 109 of the Companies Act. The learned Judge was pleased to dismiss the suit with costs.

7. I shall first deal with the question as to whether the mortgage transaction was of Ranjit Bose or of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. This question is covered by issues Nos. 1A and B and 2A and B. Counsel on behalf of the appellant contended that the transaction was of Ranjit Bose for six reasons. First, that the conveyance exhibit B (page 203), secondly, the receipts, exhibit D (pages 227-228), thirdly, the hypothecation agreement, exhibit C (pages 12, 20), fourthly, the certificate of incorporation, exhibit 1 (page 253), fifthly the memorandum of deposit, exhibit A (page 6) and sixthly, the oral evidence of Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee and in particular questions 5, 150, 159, 202 and 330 would indicate that the transaction was of Ranjit Bose. Exhibit B is the conveyance dated 30th August 1944 between Robert Stanley Seymour Treanor and Ranjit Bose. The receipts, Exhibit D are signed by R. S. Treanor and are both dated 30th August 1944. One of the receipts acknowledges the receipt of Rs. 32,282-2-6 from Ranjit Bose and the other receipt is for the sum of Rs. 2,50,000 received from Ranjit Bose. It may be stated here that both the sums were paid by cheques drawn by M/s. Dutt and Sen in favour of Treanor. The hypothecation agreement, exhibit C is dated 30th August 1944 and made between Ranjit Bose described as a borrower and the appellant described as a bank. The certificate of incorporation is dated 18th May 1944. The reason why reliance was placed on the certificate of incorporation was that the conveyance referred to the agreement dated 30th January 1944 between Treanor on the one hand and Ranjit Bose on the other for purchase of Rangaroon Tea Estate and it was said that in view of the incorporation of the company in the month of May 1944 there could not be an agreement between the company and Treanor for purchase of the Tea Estate prior to its incorporation. The memorandum of deposit, Ex. A was relied on to show that it was a memorandum between Ranjit Bose described as the mortgagor on the one hand and the appellant Calcutta National Bank Ltd. described as the mortgagee on the other. The oral evidence of Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee was that M/s. Dutt and Sen were the solicitors of Calcutta National Bank and the loan was taken by Ranjit Bose.

8. It appears that the total price that was paid for Rangaroon Tea Estate was the sum of Rs. 4,32,282-2as-6p. It is an admitted feature that the appellant Calcutta National Bank advanced Rs. 2,75,000. Exhibit B at page 203 to which reference has been made shows that the Rangaroon Tea Estate was purchased at the price of Rs. 1,50,000. The conveyance was in respect of land and immovable property. It should be stated here that out of the sum of Rs. 1,50,000, Rupees 20,001 was received as earnest money which was paid in the month of February 1944. Exhibit D at page 228 is the receipt dated 30th August 1944 for the sum of Rs. 2,50,000 representing the price of machinery, furniture, live & dead stock and other movable assets of the Rangaroon Tea Estate. The other receipt also marked as exhibit D dated 30th August 1944 at page 227 for the sum of Rs. 32,282-2as-6p. represents the price of all stocks of tea and stores at the estate. The natural question which arises is that if the bank had advanced Rupees 2,75,000 where did the balance come from? This was put to Nirmal Kumar Pal in questions 53 to 56 and some of the questions were of the court. The witness stated that the total amount that was received from the persons who purchased the shares was about Rs. 2,00,000 and the deficit amount was taken from the bank. In other words, the total price paid for the purchase of Rangaroon Tea Estate was met by the advance of Rs. 2,75,000 from the bank and the other sums of moneys raised by issue of shares or representing share capital. This indicates that the portion of the purchase price was admittedly paid by the tea company out of its share capital and the balance came from the advances from the appellant bank.

9. At this stage reference may be made to exhibit 15B which contains entries in the cash book of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. These entries are under the date 28/30th August 1944. A sum of Rs. 1,45,191-10as-6p. appears to be paid to M/s. Dutt & Sen on account of consideration money for Rangaroon Tea Estate. The other entry headed 'mortgage account' indicates that a sum of Rs. 2,75,000 was received from the Calcutta National Bank against the mortgage of Rangaroon Tea Estate. The third entry for the sum of Rs. 3,89,999-3as-6p. represents the amount paid through M/s. Dutt and Sen, Solicitors to R. S. S. Treanor in payment of the balance price of Rangaroon Tea Estate including interest of Rs. 10,000. The other entries are amounts paid to M/s. Dutt and Sen representing their costs and charges in connection with the conveyance and stamp for the deed of conveyance. These entries indicate that the Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. paid moneys representing consideration money for the purchase of Rangaroon Tea Estate. These entries further indicate that Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. paid to M/s. Dutt and Sen costs and charges for conveyance and stamps for the conveyance. These entries also indicate that the amounts mentioned in the entries were paid through M/s. Dutt and Sen to Treanor in payment of the balance price of Rangaroon Tea Estate. It is the oral evidence of Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee that M/s. Dutt and Sen acted as solicitors for the bank. These entries are also in the handwriting of Ranjit Bose.

10. The next document which merits consideration is exhibit 14 being the voucher dated 9th October 1944. This document is also in the handwriting of Ranjit Bose. This voucher represents payment of Rs. 239-11-6 to Ranjit Bose for expenses incurred for visiting the garden on 31st August 1944 with M/s. M. Biswas and N. Bose for taking formal delivery of possession of the properties. Exhibit 15 (a) which is an entry in the cash book of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. and bears date 9th Oct. 1944 shows payment of Rs. 239-11as-6p. to Ranjit Bose for travelling expenses for visiting garden as per voucher. These exhibits numbered 14, 15 (a) and 15(b) which are all in Ranjit Bose's handwriting are documents of great importance to show the real character of the transaction.

11. To my mind it appears that these aforementioned documents completely repel the case that the purchase of the Rangaroon

Tea Estate was made by Ranjit Bose. These documents have unmistakable and unimpeachable evidence that the purchase of Rangaroon Tea Estate was made by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd.

12. Payment of Rs 20,000 as earnest money which was made by Ranjit Bose as mentioned in exhibit B was refunded to Hindusthan Planters of which Ranjit Bose was the managing partner. Exhibit 41b which is an entry under the date 20th June 1944 shows allotment of shares to Hindusthan planters for the sum of Rs 20,000. Nirmal Kumar Pal in his oral evidence (qq 11, 148 and 152) said that the sum of Rs 20,000 which was advanced to Treanor before the formation of the company was returned to Hindusthan Planters by allotment of shares. This evidence again indicates that the consideration money was paid by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd.

13. An important document is exhibit 3 being the letter dated 3rd August 1944 written by M/s Dutt and Sen who acted as solicitors for the appellant bank and also as solicitors for Rangaroon Tea Company Limited. It may be stated here that this letter was brought in aid by both parties in support of their rival contentions. The contention on behalf of the appellant was that the letter would indicate that the transaction was really of Ranjit Bose. The contention on behalf of the respondent on the other hand was that the letter revealed the real nature of the transaction that it was the mortgage of Rangaroon Tea Estate by Rangaroon Tea Company Limited. The solicitors stated that the mortgage to be effected by the company would require the previous sanction of the examiner of capital issues, and the solicitors understood that the Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd did not want to spend. Therefore, M/s Dutt and Sen as solicitors for both the appellant bank and Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd advised that the conveyance might be taken in the name of Ranjit Bose and that the latter should execute a mortgage in favour of the bank and thereafter the estate would be transferred by Ranjit Bose as the trustee of the company. This letter, in my opinion, shows that the real transaction was that Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd was the purchaser and the mortgagor.

14. Counsel for the appellant placed emphasis on the document dated 30th December 1944 being exhibit E. The contentions on behalf of the appellant were that exhibit E would indicate that the transaction was of Ranjit Bose's because the property had been purchased by Ranjit Bose. There are some recitals in exhibit E which was made between Ranjit Bose of the first part, Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd of the second part and Calcutta National Bank Ltd of the third part. Calcutta National Bank Ltd. the appellant did not sign exhibit E. It was signed by Ranjit Bose and Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. It was also registered in book No 1. In exhibit E Ranjit Bose is described as transferor and Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd is described as transferee. One of the recitals is that the transferee company being short of funds negotiated with Calcutta National Bank Ltd for advance of Rs 2,75,000. The second recital is that by a resolution dated 3rd August 1944 the transferor was authorized to act as trustee of the transferee in the matter of purchase. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that since the appellant bank was not a party to the deed the appellant was not bound by it. Reliance was placed on Norton on Deeds, second edition at pages 213 and 214 and the decision in Doe v Shelton reported in (1835) 111 ER 413 and the observations at page 420 of the report in support of the contention that the recital would be binding if it was a statement of party to the deed. In Norton on Deeds it is said that it is a question of the construction of the whole deed, whether any of the recitals is to be taken as that of all parties or of some or one of them only, and the estoppel limited accordingly. In other words, when a recital is intended to be the statement of one party only the estoppel is confined to that party and the intention is to be gathered from the instrument. In (1835) 111 ER 413 there is an observation that the deed in that case which recited the bankruptcy was not executed by the defendant and there was consequently no direct estoppel. In (1835) 111 ER 413 the question for consideration was whether the statement in a former deed would bind a party recognizing and adopting the former deed by executing the second deed.

15. There are some significant features in exhibit E dated 30th December 1944. In the first place this is described as a deed of relinquishment and not of transfer. This feature of relinquishment is consistent with the entries in the books of account and also other features attending the transaction of purchase. Secondly, the recital that Ranjit Bose was to act as trustee in the matter of the purchase for and on behalf of the company and to acquire the same for and on behalf of the company and also for the mortgage will show that the transaction was of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. Thirdly, the deed states that the transferee company called upon the transferor to transfer the Rangaroon Tea Estates including all movable and immovable estates subject to the mortgage and there is another recital that in the transaction of the mortgage the transferor acted for the company. This document exhibit E is in my opinion binding on the appellant bank for these reasons. First, this deed is accepted by the plaintiff and the object with which it was tendered as an exhibit was for imposing liability on Rangaroon Tea Company Limited. Secondly, Ranjit Bose is described in the cause title of the plaintiff as a trustee under the deed dated 30th December 1944. Particularly in paragraph 6 of the plaintiff there is reference to this deed and the appellant bank the plaintiff in this suit is described as a party to the deed. It should be stated here that counsel appearing for the appellant submitted that it was a mistake and it should be read that the plaintiff was not a party to the deed. The plaintiff was not amended. The learned Judge at the time of hearing of the suit called upon the parties to explain this feature of the case. The learned Judge in his judgment rightly came to the conclusion that paragraph 6 as it stood indicated beyond any measure of doubt that the appellant was bound by the deed. Fourthly, the appellant acted upon exhibit A and transferred the loan account. Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee, a witness on behalf of the appellant, stated in q. 81 that when Ranjit Bose made a transfer deed in the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Limited and the deed was sent to the appellant, the name of Ranjit Bose was struck off and the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Limited was substituted. Again, in questions 161 to 165 and 267 to 276 the same witness stated that the document dated 30th December 1944 was sent to the appellant bank and when it was put to the witness that the bank acted on the basis of the document the witness answered that there was nothing in writing to show that. But the evidence establishes the fact that the appellant bank acted upon the deed exhibit E. Finally, the witness stated that the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Limited was substituted. Counsel for the respondent rightly contended that if the appellant bank had any grievance regarding the recitals the bank should have sued for setting aside the deed. On the contrary, the appellant bank relied on the deed.

16. The most important documents are exhibits F/1, G/1 and H/1. Exhibit F/1 is the loan register. Exhibit G/1 is the loan ledger and exhibit H/1 is also the loan ledger subsequent to exhibit G/1. While discussing exhibit F/1, reference may also be made to exhibit 2/b which was tendered by the respondent. Exhibit 2/b is at page 126 of the loan register and exhibit F/1 is at page 127 of the same book. Exhibit F/1 shows the account in the name of Ranjit Bose. The particulars there are loans against mortgage Rangaroon Tea Estate and hypothecation of all movables and the loan is described as loan No. 1519. It should be stated that in the particulars at page 127, Exhibit F/1 the writing as it stood was loan against mortgage Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. The words 'company limited' were struck out and the word 'estate' was written thereafter. The date '30th August' appears to be re-written. The importance of exhibit 2/b at page 126 is based on the suggestion which was made that the entry at page 126 was in the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. in respect of the same loan No. 1519. To the naked eyes loan No. 1519 is apparent in exhibit 2/b. Loan No. 1519 is also stated in exhibit F/1. It was rightly contended by counsel for the respondent that exhibit F/1 was brought into existence to make out the case that the transaction was of Ranjit Bose and not of Rangaroon Tea Company Limited. The learned Judge referred to the exhibits aforementioned and rightly came to the conclusion that the documents prior to 30th August 1944 were in the name of the company and at the earliest possible opportunity on 30th December 1944 when exhibit E was received the entries were made in the name of Ranjit Bose and described it as an example of how a transaction was entered into before a company was floated. This feature of the case again indicates that the transaction was really of Rangaroon Tea Company Limited and Ranjit Bose acted in the matter of arrangement of the advance and other allied work. Exhibit G/1 which is the loan ledger was in the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. and the address was Block E, 3 Clive Buildings, 8 Clive Street, Calcutta, the loan was described as loan No. 1519. On top of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd., which is in symmetry with the printed word 'account' appears in writing the words 'Mr. Ranjit Bose' and then that name is struck out and there is a signature made by the witness Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee. The words 'C. O.' appears to be written as a prefix to Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. and again the words 'C. O.' are struck out. Exhibit H/1 which is the loan ledger shows the account in the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. These documents when studied at close quarters will indicate that the learned Judge came to the correct conclusion that the account was in the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. There appears the strongest evidence of mutilation in exhibit 2/b at page 126 of the loan register and the creation of exhibit F/1. If Ranjit Bose was the party then one would expect the address of Ranjit Bose to be entered in the account. The significant absence of the address, counsel for the respondent rightly contended, leads to the inescapable conclusion that the insertion of the entry of the name of Ranjit Bose was for the purpose of giving semblance to the case of the appellant bank.

17. Annexure 'D' to the plaintiff which was also tendered and marked as exhibit 16 in my opinion completely nullifies the case of the appellant bank. Annexure D as it stood prior to amendment showed the name of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. and the address 285/F Bowbazar Street. By amendment the words "A/c Mr. Ranjit Bose" and "Particular loan against mortgage Rangaroon Tea Estate and hypothecation of all movables" and the address Block E, 3 Clive Buildings, 8 Clive Street, Calcutta were introduced but the most important feature of exhibit 16 is that the certificate given by the Manager of the appellant bank is that the entries are true copy of the entries made in the loan account of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd of 285/F Bowbazar Street, Calcutta, with Calcutta National Bank Ltd kept in the usual and ordinary course of business and that the ledger is in the custody of the bank. After such a certificate there cannot be any vestige of truth in the alleged version of the appellant bank. The learned Judge referred to exhibit 16 and rightly expressed the opinion that it was necessary for the court to know from which of the books of the bank the statement was copied and that the book was not shown in the learned Judge. Any bank worth its name when certifying any account to be the true copy of the entries made in the account must disclose the original when there is controversy and dispute about the account and establish the case. The non-production of such an account in the original leads to the irresistible conclusion that exhibit 16 is unworthy of credence and should be rejected as baseless. The learned Judge rightly commented on this feature of the case and I have no doubt in my mind that the absence of any explanation as to how and from which book exhibit 16 came to be copied and the fact that exhibit 16 does not tally with exhibit F/1 leave no doubt in my mind that the account described as in the name of Ranjit Bose is utterly unbelievable.

18. Exhibit 16 was the subject of cross-examination of Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee and in questions 170 to 185 the witness was asked to find out the book of which exhibit 16 was a copy and the witness said that exhibit 16 was a copy of exhibit F/1. It has only to be stated to be rejected. The witness was asked by the court to find out the heading of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. in any of the books. But the witness referred to exhibit H/1. The witness was asked as to why it was written "loan against mortgage Rangaroon Tea Company Limited" and the witness said that it was written by mistake and a limited company could not be kept by way of security and therefore the security was Tea Estate. In question 212 it was suggested to Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee that the heading had been deliberately tampered subsequently to make it appear that the account was of Ranjit Bose. The witness denied the suggestion but I have no hesitation in accepting the suggestion to be proved beyond any measure of doubt by intrinsic evidence contained in exhibits F/1 and 2/b and the other documents to which I have made reference.

19. There are two letters at pages 277 and 291 of the paper book marked exhibits 5 and 11 respectively which will throw light on this question. Exhibit 5 is dated 13 January 1948 and is addressed by the appellant bank to Rangaroon Tea Company Limited informing the "interest due on your loan account dated 30-8-44 for Rs 2,75,000/-" Exhibit 11 at page 291 is dated 18 November 1948 and is written by the appellant Calcutta National Bank Ltd to Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. and headed "loan against deposit of title deeds of Rangaroon Tea Estate and Hypothecation deed of movable assets of the Company". In exhibit 11 the appellant bank wrote to Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd "We are sorry to point out that you have not arranged to liquidate your loan taken from us on 30th August 1944." These letters as also exhibit 6 dated 30th March 1949 written by Calcutta National Bank Ltd to Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd whereby the appellant bank called upon Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd to repay "your liabilities to the Bank" leave no doubt whatever that the transaction of loan was between the appellant bank on the one hand and the respondent Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd on the other. I am therefore of opinion that the learned judge for the reasons given in the judgment came to the correct conclusion that the company purchased the Tea Estate and that the loan was taken by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd and the mortgage was also made by Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd.

20. A short question which arose was as to the date of possession. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that Ranjit Bose took possession on 1st February 1944. The oral evidence of Nirmal Kumar Pal was that Ranjit Bose had been going to Darjeeling from time to time before 30th August 1944. When the attention of Nirmal Kumar Pal was drawn to exhibit 14 which is the voucher dated 9th October 1944 Nirmal Kumar Pal said that Ranjit Bose went to the gardens after the incorporation and the expenses were paid by the tea company. Exhibit 3 which is dated 3rd August 1944 being a letter of M/s Dutt and Sen indicates that there was great urgency in regard to the transaction. It is true that Kanak Nath Bhattacharjee in his oral evidence said that Ranjit Bose came to the appellant bank in the months of March and April 1944 and that evidence was adduced for the purpose of introducing possession. In my opinion counsel for the respondent rightly contended that it was unbelievable that Treanor would part with possession in the month of February 1944 before he was paid the purchase price. The document, namely, exhibit B dated 30th August 1944 being the conveyance indicates by intrinsic evidence that the vendor Treanor was seised and possessed of the Tea Estate. The consideration was for the purchase of land and movables. I am unable to accept the contention that Ranjit Bose was put in possession in the month of February 1944.

21. Counsel on behalf of the appellant contended that if the transaction was not of Ranjit Bose's but of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. the transaction would not be within the mischief of Rule 94-A of the Defence of India Act for two broad reasons. First, that mortgage would not be within the mischief of Rule 94-A and secondly, there was no instrument creating charge within the meaning of Rule 94-A. The relevant provisions of Rule 94-A for appreciating the rival contentions in the present appeal are as follows:

(1) For the purpose of this Rule —

(a) securities shall mean the following instruments issued or to be issued by or for the benefit of a company, viz. (i) shares, stocks and bonds, (ii) debentures, (iii) other instruments creating a charge or lien on the assets of the company, and (iv) instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company and guaranteed by a third party or entered into jointly with a third party;

(b) a person shall be deemed to make an issue of capital who issues any securities whether for cash or otherwise.

(2) (a) No company, whether incorporated in British India or not, shall except with the consent of the Central Government—

(i) make an issue of capital in British India;

(ii) make in British India any public offer of securities for sale;

(iii) renew or postpone the date of maturity or repayment of any security maturing for payment in British India.

(10) If any person contravenes the provisions of this rule he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years or with fine or with both."

22. It was first contended that the provisions contained in Rule 94-A were not mandatory and the arguments which were made in the trial court were again advanced. The learned judge, in my opinion, correctly came to the conclusion that the provisions contained in Rule 94-A were mandatory. The most important question is whether there is an instrument creating a charge in the present case. The contention on behalf of the appellant was that there was an equitable mortgage for deposit of title deeds and the instruments which came into existence were subsequent to the creation of equitable mortgage and therefore were not instruments creating a charge. The decision in Kedarnath Dutt v. Shamlall Khettry, reported in (1873) 11 Beng LR 405 deals with the question as to the creation of equitable mortgage by an instrument. In that decision the test with regard to writings was laid down as follows: "If this memorandum was of such a nature that it could be treated as the contract for the mortgage, and what the parties considered to be the only repository and appropriate evidence of their agreement, it would be the instrument by which the equitable mortgage was created." In Kedarnath Dutt's case, (1873) 11 Beng LR 405 the instrument was as follows: "For the repayment of the loan of Rs. 1,200 and the interest due thereon of the within note of hand, I hereby deposit to the plaintiff as a collateral security by way of equitable mortgage, title-deeds of my property." It was held that the mortgage was complete without the memorandum and the memorandum was not in writing which the parties had made as the evidence of their contract but only a writing which was evidence to the fact from which the contract was to be inferred.

23. This question again came up for decision before the Judicial Committee on three occasions. These are the decisions in Subramonian v. Lutehman, reported in 50 Ind App 77 = (AIR 1923 PC 50), Sundarachariar v. Narayan Ayyar, reported in 58 Ind App 68 = (AIR 1931 PC 36) and the case of Sir Hari Shankar Paul v. Kedar Nath Saha, reported in 66 Ind App 184 = (AIR 1939 PC 167). The test laid down in (1873) 11 Beng LR 405 was referred to in those cases. Lord Carson in 50 Ind App 77 = (AIR 1923 PC 50) said that "if the memorandum in question was a bargain between the parties, and that without its production in evidence the plaintiff could establish no claim, it would require registration." Lord Tomlin in Sundarachariar's case, 58 Ind App 68 = (AIR 1931 PC 36) also referred to the same test as to whether the memorandum embodied all the particulars of transaction of which the deposit formed part. In 66 Ind App 184 = (AIR 1939 PC 167) the document along with the title deeds was delivered at a later date and yet it was held to be registrable, the entire law is now summed up in the Supreme Court decision in Rachpal Mahraj v. Bhagwandas Daruka, reported in 1950 SCR 548 = (AIR 1950 SC 272). The Supreme Court said that the question as to whether the deposit of title deeds is made by a memorandum as an instrument creating an interest in immoveable property would depend on the fact as to whether the parties intended to reduce their bargain regarding the deposit in the form of a document. The Supreme Court said that the time factor would not be decisive and the document might be handed over to the creditor along with the title deeds and yet might not be registrable or it might be delivered at a later date and nevertheless be registrable. The Supreme Court said "the crucial question is: did the parties intend to reduce their bargain regarding the deposit of title deeds to the form of a document. If so, the document requires registration." In other words, if the deposit of title deeds and the documents form integral parts of the transaction the instrument theo would be creating charge and it would require registration.

24. In the present appeal there is no aspect of registration under the Indian Registration Act. But these decisions are of importance to show as to whether charge was created by any instrument to the present case or not. In the case before the Supreme Court, 1950 SCR 548 = (AIR 1950 SC 272) the memorandum was as follows: "We write to put on record that to secure the repayment of the money already due to you from us on account of the business transactions between yourselves and ourselves and the money that may hereafter become due on account of such transactions we have this day deposited with you the following title deeds in Calcutta at your place of business at No 7 Sambhu Mallick Lane relating to our properties at Samastipur with intent to create an equitable mortgage on the said properties to secure all moneys including interest that may be found due and payable by us to you on account of the said transactions." The Supreme Court referred to the decision in 66 Ind App 184 = (AIR 1939 PC 167) where the essential terms of the transaction stated as "hereby agreed" and reference to the moneys as "hereby secured" were held by Lord Macmillan to amount to the parties professing to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds contemporaneously entering into a contractual agreement in writing making the same an integral part of the transaction and itself an operative instrument and not merely evidential.

25. In the present case exhibit A dated 30th August 1944 would show in the recitals that the mortgagor has deposited with the mortgagee the title deeds and thereafter these words occur "now it is hereby agreed and declared by and between the mortgagor and the mortgagee." There are three important clauses. The first clause relates to the amount and obligation to repay with interest and the dates of repayment. The second clause states that so long as the principal sum remains due and outstanding the mortgagor shall pay to the mortgagee interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the 15th day of each month. The third clause is that the mortgagor has already deposited with the mortgagee the title deeds relating to the land garden and premises known as Rangaroon Tea Estate with intent to create a security thereon by way of mortgage by deposit of title deeds for the due repayment of the principal sum and all interests and all costs of realization. In the same memorandum it is thereafter stated as follows: "the mortgagor doth hereby covenant with the mortgagee." Five covenants are thereafter set out. In those covenants it is stated that the mortgagor shall during the subsistence of this security duly pay all government revenue, cesses, taxes, rates. It is further stated that if the mortgagor fails to carry out covenants or if it appears to the mortgagee that the value of the security created as aforesaid has depreciated the entire amount then shall at once become due and payable. It is also stated that for the realisation of its dues the mortgagee will be entitled to appoint a nominee to be receiver. These features in the light of the observations of the various decisions indicate that the parties in the present case entered into the transaction of mortgage by the instrument in writing which created the mortgage and that the written instrument was an integral part of the transaction and was itself the repository of the agreement and an operative instrument of the bargain regarding the deposit.

26. Reference may be made to exhibit B which is the deed of hypothecation. That is the hypothecation of movables dated 30th August 1944. This deed is necessary to be considered in relation to another contention that if the mortgage is unenforceable by reason of non compliance with the provisions contained in Rule 94-A whether the appellant plaintiff can realise the sums claimed in the plaint. I shall deal with that question later on.

27. The next question is that if there is an instrument of mortgage whether a mortgage would be an instrument creating a charge. Counsel on behalf of the appellant contended that there was a distinction between mortgage and charge and relied on the decision in K J Nathan v S V. Maruthi Rao, reported in AIR 1965 SC 430 and in Shiva Prasad Singh v Beni Madhab, reported in AIR 1922 Pat 529. In the Patna case it was said that a charge only gave right to payment out of a particular fund or property without transferring that fund or property and a mortgage was in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. Relying on that definition counsel for the appellant contended that since the Defence of India Act referred to charge a mortgage would not be within the mischief of the provisions. Reliance was placed on Craies on Statutes 6th edition at pages 168 to 174 in support of the proposition that ordinary meaning should be given to the word 'mortgage'. It was also said that the legislature should be presumed to know of the distinction between 'mortgage' and 'charge' and therefore since the word used was 'charge' mortgage should not fall within the scope and intent of Rule 94-A. In support of that contention reference was made to certain other provisions of Defence of India Rules namely Rules 90 and 94 in support of two propositions that Rule 94 spoke of mortgages and Rule 90 referred to several expressions and those expressions were said to mean matters stated in those rules. It was therefore contended that when Rule 94-A said that securities should mean the instruments mentioned there the meaning was exhaustive and no higher content should be given to the word 'charge'. Reliance was placed on the decision in Ittiavira Thomas v. Joseph Tile Works Ltd., reported in AIR 1957 Trav-Co 6 for two reasons first that the words 'instruments creating charge' were to be used ejusdem generis and secondly that the securities in order to come within the mischief of Rule 94-A would have to be issued and not executed. In the Travancore Cochin case it was said that since shares, stocks, bonds and debentures under the Companies Act were issued and the word 'issue' was used in relation to shares in various sections and in S. 109 of the Companies Act the word used was 'created' and not the word 'issued', "instruments executing or creating charge" in the Defence of India Rules would not be within the meaning of securities issued by or for the benefit of the company. The other finding in the Travancore Cochin case is that the rule of interpretation is that the general word which follows particular and specific words of the same nature takes its meaning from that and is presumed to be restricted to the genus in those words.

28. In the case of Anderson v. Anderson, reported in 1895-1 Q.B. 749 a voluntary settlement came up for consideration as to whether the deed of settlement would include the horses, carriages, harness and stable furniture which were in the stable in the coach house at the time of the settlor's death. By a settlement made by a husband upon the wife a leasehold messuage described in schedule was assigned to the trustees in these words "all the house-hold furniture, plate, linen, glass and tenant's fixtures, wines, china spirits and other consumable stores and other goods, chattels and effects in or upon or belonging to" the leasehold messuage. In the Schedule the leasehold premises were described as a piece of ground "with the messuage tenement or dwelling house, back buildings, coach-houses, stable buildings and all other erections thereupon." The question was whether the general words 'other goods, chattels and effects' there would pass to the trustees carriages, horses, harness and stable furniture in or upon the coach house and stable building. The question was answered in the affirmative. Lord Esher M.R. said "Nothing can well be plainer than that to shew that prima facie general words are to be taken in their larger sense, unless you can find that in the particular case the true construction of the instrument requires you to conclude that they are intended to be used in a sense limited to things ejusdem generis with those which have been specifically mentioned before." Rigby L.J. said: "The main principle upon which you must proceed is, to give to all the words their common meaning: you are not justified in taking away from them their common meaning, unless you can find something reasonably plain upon the face of the document itself to show that they are not used with that meaning and the mere fact that general words follow specific words is certainly not enough." In S. S. Magnhild v. McIntyre Brothers and Co., reported in 1920-3 KB 321 the question for consideration was the meaning of the words "or other accident". McCaigie J. said relying on the observation of Vaughan Williams L. J. in Tillmanns v. S. S. Knutsford, 1908-2 KB 385, that if a common genus was not to be found the necessary consequence would be that the words 'or any other cause' could not be limited by the doctrine of ejusdem generis. In Tillmanns' case, 1908-2 KB 385, Farwell L. J. said that "unless you can find a category there is no room for the application of the ejusdem generis." Kennedy L. J. said in Tillmanns' case, 1908-2 KB 385 that "the genus must first be found, and then you must find whether the words that follow are applicable to the species enumerated belonging to the one genus."

29. In the present case, the words in R. 94-A are to be found in sub-rule (1) in four separately numbered categories: shares, stocks, bonds in the first category, debentures in the second category, instruments creating charge or lien on the assets of the company in the third category and instrument acknowledging loan or indebtedness of the company and guaranteed by a third party or entered into jointly with the third party in the fourth category. Counsel for the respondent, in my view, rightly contended that there was no occasion for application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis. First, there is no genus and there is no category. The words 'shares, stocks, bonds, debentures, instruments creating a charge and instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company do not form a genus. Secondly, shares, stocks and bonds do not create a charge. Thirdly, debentures may not create a charge there could be secured and unsecured debentures. Fourthly, Rule 94-A was introduced in 1943. Categories 3 and 4 in Rule 94-A (1) were introduced in the month of June 1944. Counsel for the respondent, in my view, rightly contended that when all the four categories were not enumerated at the inception the intention was to introduce something new. Finally, the fourth category namely instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company and guaranteed by a third party entered into jointly with a third party shows that the third category representing instruments creating charge or lien on the assets of the company should not and could not be read ejusdem generis.

30. Reliance was placed by counsel for the respondent on the Bolton Insurance case reported in 1943 AC 166 where Lord Wright said that the ejusdem generis rule is merely a rule of construction not a rule of law and it presupposes a genus. The word workman was there defined in the statute to mean "any person who has entered into or works under a contract with an employer, whether the contract be by way of manual labour, clerical work or otherwise, be expressed or implied, oral or in writing" etc. Lord Wright further said that in that case the only genus was a contract with an employer and the contract would constitute the person a workman male or female. Clerical work was added later. Therefore, the words 'or otherwise' were held by Lord Wright to be intended to embrace the entire range of wage earning or salaried employment.

31. In the present case counsel for the respondent, in my view, rightly contended that there was no common feature in the four categories enumerated in sub-rule 1 of Rule 94-A. Counsel for the respondent rightly submitted that ordinary meaning should be given to the words 'instruments creating charge' and hypothecation or mortgage instruments creating charge or lien on the assets of the company would be within the scope of Rule 94-A (1). For these reasons I am unable to accept the contention of counsel for the appellant that the words 'instruments creating charge' would not embrace hypothecation or mortgage instruments. With respect, I am unable to agree with the view expressed in the Travancore Cochin decision.

32. The contention on behalf of the appellant that mortgage was something different to charge and since the word used in Rule 94-A (1) was only charge, the mortgage would be exempted from the operation of the rule is also, in my view, unacceptable. The word 'charge' here is used in the generic sense of incumbrance. Counsel for the respondent referred to the meaning of charge in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary, Wharton's Legal Lexicon, Osborn's Legal Dictionary and Jowett's Legal Dictionary to show that the primary meaning would be a liability to pay money laid upon any estate or upon an obligation imposed upon property or when applied to property it would be security for payment of debt or performance of an obligation. In other words, it would be a formal security for payment of debt or performance of obligation and payment would be out of the specific funds or out of realisation of proceeds of property. Counsel for the respondent contended that in a charge the right to sell the property was contractual and could be defeated by a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Whereas, in the case of a mortgage the right to sell would consist of interest in the property being transferred to mortgagee and as such it was a right in rem and for properties valued at Rs. 100/- or more there was no distinction because of compulsory registration. In my opinion, this distinction correctly sums up the legal position. In the case of a charge as well as in the case of a mortgage two elements are common. First, that there is a loan and secondly that there is a security for the repayment of the loan. The only difference between a charge and mortgage is that in the case of mortgage there is transfer of interest but in the case of a charge there is no transfer of interest. That is how in the Patna decision reported in AIR 1922 Pat 529 a mortgage was described as a jus in rem and the charge was described as a jus ad rem. Counsel for the respondent relied on the decisions in Srinivasa Raghava Iyenger v. K. R. Renganatha Iyengar, reported in AIR 1919 Mad 528 and in Chhaganlal Sakham v. Chunilal Jajmal, reported in AIR 1934 Bom 189. In the Madras case there was a promissory note and thereafter a security bond was given on the same day. The security bond amounted to a charge on immovable property according to one party and it amounted to a mortgage according to another party. The distinction between a mortgage and a charge was referred to. At page 530 of the report Sadasiva Aiyar J. said that every mortgage document created also a charge but conversely a charge might not amount to a mortgage in all cases. Where the charge is created over specific immovable property though it might not be a simple mortgage it was held to be a mortgage though of an anomalous kind mentioned in Section 98 of the 1882 Act. In the Madras case reference was made to the Bench decision of this Court in Royzuddin Sheikh v. Kali Nath Mookerjee reported in (1906) ILR 33 Cal 985 and it was said that the Calcutta view of the effect of the document creating a charge on specific immovable property was too narrow and even where there was no covenant to pay the document creating such a charge was a mortgage and not a mere charge liable to be defeated by a subsequent mortgage deed or sale deed.

33. The decision in AIR 1934 Bom 189 was also relied on by counsel for the respondent on the observation appearing at 190 of the report that every mortgage includes a charge and it would be a difficult question to find out if a charge amounted to a mortgage. No court will favour an endeavour to give to an identical transaction another name with the object of bringing about the particular legal results in question without observing the formalities specified by the law. If the transaction was exactly of the nature contemplated by law which the law described or otherwise referred to as mortgage, if it has the same incidents, so that it cannot be distinguished from a mortgage, then the transaction cannot be treated as otherwise than a mortgage merely by calling it a charge.

34. In the light of these decisions it will appear that the meanings ascribed to mortgage and charge under Ss. 58 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act indicate that an instrument creating a mortgage upon assets of the company is an instrument falling within the mischief of Rule 94-A (1) of the Defence of India Rules. It cannot, in my opinion, be said that a mortgage which has all the attributes of a charge and has in addition the character of transfer of interest in land is outside the purview of Rule 94-A (1). Counsel for the respondent rightly contended that the attribute of the element of security gave the real clue to the meaning of the charge. The word 'charge' here is used in the generic sense and it embraces mortgages within the meaning of the words "instruments creating a charge on the assets of Company."

35. Counsel for the appellant contended that if the transaction fell within the mischief of Rule 94-A as an illegal transaction the plaintiff appellant would yet be entitled to recovery of money. In aid of that argument it was also contended that at the trial an amendment was asked for the recovery of Rs. 1,75,000/- and that amendment should have been allowed. The learned judge came to the conclusion that as no suit could be brought to enforce any illegal contract the courts would not recognise any action founded upon it. Reliance was placed upon Anson on Principles of the English Law of Contract 21st Edition at page 313 and the decision in Holman v. Johnson, (1775) 1 Cowp 341. In my opinion the learned judge came to the correct conclusion. In the present case there is an additional feature which is to be found in sub-rule (7) in R. 94-A of the Defence of India Rules; namely, "No person shall accept or give any consideration for any securities in respect of an issue of capital made or proposed to be made in British India or elsewhere unless the consent or recognition of the Central Government has been accorded to such issue of capital." The result is that both the acceptance and the giving of consideration for any of the securities mentioned in Rule 94-A is prohibited by the Statute. It should be stated here that the Travancore Cochin case, AIR 1957 Trav-Co 6 does not refer to sub-r. (7). It may be that the particular sub-rule was not placed for consideration in that case or it may be that it was not necessary to go into the question by reason of the conclusion that the hypothecation in that case was not within the mischief of Rule 94-A. Cheshire in the Law of Contracts, 6th edition (page 312) states that the effect of the two maxims Ex turpi causa non oritur actio and in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis is that neither can maintain, an action against the other if he requires any aid from the illegal transaction to establish his case. See 1915 AC 106. If a plaintiff cannot maintain his cause of action without showing as part of such cause of action that he has been guilty of illegality then the courts will not assist him in his cause of action. This was the opinion of A. L. Smith L. J. in Scott v. Brown Doering McNab and Co., (1892) 2 QB 724. Counsel on behalf of Ranjit Bose's heirs contended that the plaintiff appellant asked for preliminary mortgage decree and Ranjit Bose was sued as a trustee and also for self. In view of my conclusion that the mortgage transaction is of the company there is no liability of the heirs of Ranjit Bose. In my view the illegality inherent in the transaction prevents the plaintiff appellant from relying on it either for the enforcement of rights under the instrument or for the recovery of the consideration money for the transaction.

36. Counsel for the respondent Tea Company, in my view, rightly contended that the consideration of Rs. 2,75,000/- in the present case was the entire consideration for the mortgage by deposit of title deeds. Apart from the mortgage there was exhibit C which created a charge on movables. The consideration was the same for both the deeds. It was one entire integral consideration. The result is that the illegality of the transaction prevents the plaintiff appellant from relying upon the same consideration for recovery of the same.

37. A contention was advanced by counsel for the appellant that the appellant bank was entitled to exemption. The exemption was based on the notification No. D. 4114-E. C.I./44 in exercise of the power conferred by sub-r. (9) of R. 99-A of the Defence of India Rules. The exemption in short is that "the Central Government is pleased to exempt issue of securities (other than debentures) by persons in the ordinary course of their normal business and strictly and solely for the purpose of that business to a person carrying on the business of banking or his nominee in respect of advance made or to be made or over-draft granted or to be granted by that person from time to time". The learned judge rightly came to the conclusion that there was no pleading to that effect and that no issue was raised. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff-appellant was not entitled to exemption for three broad reasons. First, there was no pleading. Secondly, there was no issue. Thirdly, there was no evidence. Counsel for the appellant relied on oral evidence of Nirmal Kumar Pal in questions 5, 6 and 7 where the deponent said that Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd. was incorporated for doing tea business and the tea business was done by purchasing a tea estate. In my opinion, this evidence is utterly useless in aid of the appellant's contentions. In order to succeed on exemption there is to be specific pleading and there is to be evidence that the exemption is available by reason of the transaction having been entered into in the ordinary course of normal business and secondly that it is strictly and solely for the purpose of that business. There is no evidence to establish such a case of exemption.

38. The last question was whether the transaction of mortgage satisfied the requirements of registration under S. 109 of the Companies Act. If the transaction was of the company and if there was no registration under Section 109 the result would be that any person who fails to register it would rank as unsecured creditor. This would be so in case of valid transactions. In the present case irrespective of the illegality under Rule 94-A of the Defence of India Rules the plaintiff appellant did not have the mortgage registered in accordance with Section 109 of the Indian Companies Act.

39. For these reasons, I am of opinion, that the contentions advanced on behalf of the appellant fail. The judgment is affirmed. The appeal is dismissed. The order as to costs made by the learned judge in the trial court is set aside. This being a transaction which is illegal neither party should, in my opinion, be entitled to costs against the other and each party should pay and bear its own costs of this appeal and of the trial court. The liquidator will retain his costs as between attorney and client, certificate for two counsel, out of the assets including the assets lying with the official receiver in the case of Rangaroon Tea Company Ltd and including the assets lying with the court liquidator in the case of Calcutta National Bank Ltd.

40. S. K. MUKHERJEE, J : The main question which has to be decided in this appeal is whether having regard to the provisions of Rule 94-A of the Defence of India Rules a company could create a valid mortgage by an instrument for its own benefit except with the consent of the Central Government.

41. The relevant portions of the Rule provide

94-A Control of Capital Issues — (1) For the purpose of this Rule —

(a) securities shall mean the following instruments issued or to be issued by or for the benefit of a company, viz. (i) shares, stocks and bonds, (ii) debentures, (iii) other instruments creating a charge or lien on the assets of the company, and (iv) instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company and guaranteed by a third party or entered into jointly with a third party;

(b) a person shall be deemed to make an issue of capital who issues any securities whether for cash or otherwise,

(2) (a) No company, whether incorporated in British India or not, shall except with the consent of the Central Government —

(i) make an issue of capital in British India,

(ii) make in British India any public offer of securities for sale;

(iii) renew or postpone the date of maturity or repayment of any security maturing for payment in British India.

X X X X

(7) No person shall accept or give any consideration for any securities in respect of an issue of capital made or proposed to be made in British India or elsewhere unless the consent or recognition of the Central Government has been accorded to such issue of capital.

X X X X

(10) If any person contravenes the provisions of this rule he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years or with fine or with both.

42. The Rule expired over two decades ago but it has lost none of its importance as it still rules from its grave through the Capital Issues (Control) Act 1947, by which its material provisions have been re-enacted with slight modifications.

43. The learned trial judge has found and so have we, that on or about August 30, 1944, the respondent company by its trustee or benamdar one Ranjit Bose, deposited title deeds of Rangaroon Tea Estate with the appellant bank with intent to create a security on the said estate. It transpires that Ranjit Bose, the trustee or benamdar, was the ostensible owner and the respondent company, the real owner of the property.

44. On August 30, 1944 an agreement was entered into between the appellant bank and Ranjit Bose which was recorded in a Memorandum of Agreement subsequently registered with the Registrar of Assurances. It is recited in the Memorandum that the mortgagor has already deposited with the appellant bank title deeds of properties which are free from encumbrances, with intent to create a security on the same, by way of mortgage by deposit of title deeds in favour of the appellant bank for due repayment of the sum of Rs. 2,75,000/- which the mortgagee has lent and advanced to the mortgagor. The terms and conditions on which the loan has been advanced and on the basis of which the mortgage has been created are set out in the memorandum in great detail. No instrument avowedly creating a mortgage could have been more elaborate and complete. Even the right of the mortgagee to appoint a receiver in the event of the mortgagee instituting a suit against the mortgagor has been reserved. There is no question that the parties themselves, in the language of Sir Richard Couch, C.J., considered and made the Memorandum in writing the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. The intention of the parties is amply borne out not only by the nature of the document and the terms of the agreement but also by the fact that the parties themselves, assisted by their Solicitors, thought it necessary to register the agreement. In these circumstances, it must be held that the mortgage was created not merely by deposit of title deeds but also by the instrument described as Memorandum of Agreement in the light of pronouncements made in a series of decisions from (1873) 11 Beng LR 405 to 1950 SCR 548 = (AIR 1950 SC 272).

45. The question then arises whether the mortgage created by the Memorandum of Agreement is a charge created by an instrument within the meaning of Rule 94-A. It is said that a 'charge' as defined in Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, is not a mortgage. In fact, the section provides that where an immoveable property of one person is made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property. Relying on the Section, Mr. Das contended that the same meaning is to be given to the expression 'charge' in Rule 94-A as in Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. He also drew our attention to the use of the word 'mortgage' in Rule 94 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. If the framers of the Rules intended to extend the operation of Rule 94-A to mortgages, the Rule, he argued, should have clearly said so. He also referred to the definition of 'Security' in Rule 92-A where mortgage is not spoken of at all. He submitted that as the definition of 'Security' in R. 94-A is exhaustive, in the absence of any reference to mortgage, mortgages are outside the scope of the Rule.

46. The definition of 'Security' in Rule 92-A is, in my opinion, not relevant because 'Security' is defined again in Rule 94-A specifically for the purpose of that Rule. It is true that the Rule does not speak of mortgage, but only of charge. It cannot be disputed that every mortgage creates a charge and, in its generic sense, a mortgage must, and does, include a charge. A statute must be given the meaning that its language permits so as to carry out and not to defeat its object. The object of the Rule, as is provided by Section 2 (xxii) of the Defence of India Act, 1939, is to control the possession, use or disposal of, or dealing in Securities. It will be unreasonable to construe the expression 'charge' in a restricted sense, as confined to a transaction not amounting to mortgage as contemplated under S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and not in its wider and generic sense. To do so will be to hold that under Rule 94-A although a company cannot lawfully create a charge by an instrument on its assets except with the consent of the Central Government it can create a mortgage by an instrument in the absence of such consent. In my opinion, such a construction is not tenable. Having regard to the object of the Rule and the principle that every mortgage necessarily creates a charge, it must be held that the expression 'charge' in R. 94-A includes a mortgage. It is more than likely that R. 94-A made no mention of mortgage because the framers of the Rule thought that as a mortgage necessarily creates a charge, it is not necessary to make specific reference to 'mortgage' in the definition.

47. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that a mortgage is within the ambit of Rule 94-A (1) and (2) of the Defence of India Rules.

48. In construing Indian Statutes of the British period, it is often useful to refer to corresponding English Statutes by which they were directly inspired. R. 94-A was inspired by Clause 6 of the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, the relevant provisions of which are as follows:—

(6) Control of capital issues. — (1) Subject to such exemptions as may be granted by order of the Treasury, it shall not be lawful, except with the consent of the Treasury, to make an issue of capital in the United Kingdom, to make, in the United Kingdom, any public offer of securities for sale, or to renew or postpone the date of maturity of any security maturing for repayment in the United Kingdom.

(2) Subject to such exemptions as may be granted by order of the Treasury, it shall not be lawful to issue any prospectus or other document offering for subscription, or publicly offering for sale, any securities which does not include a statement that the consent of the Treasury has been obtained to the issue or offer of the securities.

(3) For the purposes of this Regulation a person shall be deemed to make an issue of capital who —

(a) issues any securities (whether for cash or otherwise), or

(b) receives any money on loan on the terms express or implied that the loan will or may be discharged or secured wholly or partly by the issue of any securities or by the transfer of any securities issued

after the making of the loan, or will or may be repaid wholly or partly out of the proceeds of any securities issued after the making of the loan.

(4) A security shall not be invalid by reason that the consent of the Treasury has not been given to the issue thereof, or that any conditions imposed by the Treasury in relation to the issue thereof have not been complied with, but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as modifying the liability of any person to any penalty in respect of any failure to obtain such consent or to comply with such conditions.

(5) In this Regulation, references to securities and to the issue of securities respectively include, references to any mortgage or charge whether legal or equitable, and to the creation of, or the increasing of the amount secured by, any such mortgage or charge, and the expression "security" includes shares, stocks, bonds, notes, debentures, debenture stock, Treasury bills, a bill of exchange other than a bill payable on demand or at a fixed period not exceeding six months after date or after sight, a promissory note of a local authority, a promissory note payable more than six months after date, a deposit receipt for money lent, issued, by a local authority or by any person carrying on a business other than the business of banking, and a unit or sub-unit of a unit trust, but does not include any other security — Butterworth's Emergency Legislation—The Defence (Finance) Regulations 1939

49. In the Defence Regulations, mortgages created by instruments are specifically included in the definition of securities. In this connection, it may be pointed out that the legal position in India has been made clear by the Capital Issues (Control) Act 1947 as amended by an Act of 1957, which re-enacted the provisions of Rule 94-A. In the Act of 1947, the expression 'securities' has been defined so as to include 'mortgage deeds' 'instruments of pawn,' 'pledge' or 'hypothecation' The argument that Rule 94-A does not contemplate mortgage because there is no express mention of mortgage in the definition of securities is, in my opinion, not tenable.

50. It seems to me that the Defence (Finance) Regulations 1939 and the Capital Issues (Control) Act 1947 specifically speak of mortgages ex abundanti cautela and even apart from any reference to mortgage in the definition of 'securities', mortgage is included in the expression 'charge' in those statutes. Many instances are found of provisions put into Statutes merely by way of precaution — Craies on Statute Law, 5th Edition, p 98

51. It was contended on the basis of the decision in AIR 1957 Trav-Co 6, that

'instruments creating a charge on the assets of the Company' should be read ejusdem generis with shares, stocks, bonds and debentures. To dispose of this argument it is only necessary to point out that on a fair reading of the sub rule which includes within its ambit things so diverse as shares, bonds, debentures, instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company and guaranteed by a third party and instruments creating a charge or lien on the assets of the company, no genus is discernible. Most of the instruments contemplated under sub-rule (1) (a) of Rule 94A do not and some may not create a charge. In certain events, share capital may have to be restored to the shareholders out of the assets of a company but it cannot be said that a shareholder has a charge on the assets. A debenture, again, may be an unsecured debenture. Some of the instruments referred to in the sub-rule do not even create a liability or a debt, e.g. the category of instruments contemplated in paragraph (iv) of sub-rule (1)(a), that is to say, instruments acknowledging loan to or indebtedness of the company entered into jointly with a third party. They do not create any liability but are only evidence of liability. I am unable to hold that the ejusdem generis principle has any application in construing Rule 94A(1)(a) of the Defence of India Rules.

52. It was also submitted on the basis of the Travancore-Cochin case that the expression 'issue' is singularly inapt in relation to mortgage. A mortgage is created or executed, not issued. A company issues shares or debentures. The term 'issue' is a mercantile term and has a specific meaning in trade and commerce which it has acquired by long usage. One does not speak of issuing mortgage. Therefore, it is contended, mortgages are not contemplated under Rule 94A which relates to control of capital issues. It is true that in popular parlance or in commercial language one does not speak of issuing a mortgage; but then, one does not speak of issuing a charge either, and yet the Rule contemplates issue of instruments creating a charge or lien. After all the Defence of India Rules cannot be described as a piece of commercial legislation although commerce and trade come within its scope. The expression 'issue' has a special meaning given to it by the character and scope of the Rules themselves. That the term is not used in a popular or mercantile sense is clear from the fact that the Rule provides that a person shall be deemed to make an issue of capital who issues any securities for cash or otherwise. When a company borrows money on a deed of hypothecation or any other instrument creating a charge on its assets, it does not issue capital, in fact typical balance-sheets will make it clear that although monies raised on debentures are sometimes characterised as capital loan, loans taken by a company on hypotheation of its stock-in-trade or other assets are never treated or specified as capital; and yet the Rule provides that a person shall be deemed to make an issue of capital who issues any security whether for cash or otherwise.

53. It is clear that in Rule 94A the expression 'issue' has been given an extended and wider signification. The Rule in my judgment, contemplates issue of mortgages. To set all reasonable doubts at rest that in the context of legislative enactments or statutory orders, it is permissible to speak of issue of mortgages, reference may be made to an order of the British Treasury dated June 1, 1943 made under The Defence (Finance) Regulations 1939 by which it was directed that "no mortgage shall be issued or renewed on terms providing for repayment before a date seven years after the date of issue or renewal". (Butterworth's Emergency Legislation, Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939).

54. In the view I have taken I am unable to agree with the learned judges who decided the Travancore-Cochin case, AIR 1957 Trav-Co 6 that the word 'issue' is not used in the sense of 'executed' or 'created' in relation to mortgages or hypothecations and that mortgages and hypothecations are not hit by the Rule.

55. The mortgage created by the respondent company has in my opinion been created in contravention of sub-r. (2) of R. 94-A. By the combined operation of sub-rules (7) and (10) the mortgagor and the mortgagee in such cases are liable to penalty. The transactions, namely, creation of the security and the giving and taking of consideration for the security are prohibited by Rule 94-A. Not only must the transaction be held illegal but the consideration given by the appellant bank must also be held to be an illegal consideration having regard to sub-rule (7). In this connection reference may again be made to The Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, Cl. (6) paragraph 4 of which provides: "A security shall not be invalid by reason that the consent of the Treasury has not been given to the issue thereof, or that any conditions imposed by the Treasury in relation to the issue thereof have not been complied with, but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as modifying the liability of any person to any penalty in respect of any failure to obtain such consent or to comply with such conditions." No similar provision is to be found in Rule 94-A. In the context of the Statute it must be held that not only the mortgage is invalid but the consideration given for the mortgage is also irrecoverable because the entire transaction is tainted with illegality.

56. Having regard to the finding that the mortgage is invalid and that the consideration given for the mortgage is not recoverable in law, it is not necessary to go into other questions. However as an issue was raised before the learned trial judge with regard to the effect of non-registration of the mortgage under Section 109 of the Companies Act, I propose to deal very briefly with that aspect of the matter. As the mortgage was created by the company in respect of its properties, the mortgage is registrable under Section 109 of the Companies Act. It appears that the mortgage has been registered under Section 109-A within the time extended by an order of S. B. Sinha J.: That order was presumably made on the basis that it was a case of registration of charge on properties acquired subject to charge as contemplated under Section 109-A of The Indian Companies Act of 1913. It is the case of the respondent company that the mortgage is a benami transaction. It is not in dispute that the name of the company nowhere appears on the mortgage instrument. According to the tenor of the instrument, the company is neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee. In fact the name of the company appears nowhere in the instrument itself. Be that as it may, if the mortgage has been created by the company as is the case here, and the property on which the mortgage is created is the property of the company, the mortgage, if it has not been registered under S. 109 is void against the liquidator and the creditors of the company. In the result the mortgage must be held to be void against the liquidator and the creditors of the company for non-registration under S. 109 even if it be held that the mortgage is a valid mortgage. In saying so, I do not intend to mean that I have decided that a benami mortgage created by a company by an instrument through a benamidar or a trustee is contemplated under Section 109 of the Indian Companies Act 1913. If the declarations made in the prescribed form are at complete variance with and are not related to the tenor of the instrument and if the Registrar of Companies cannot receive any notice of trust under Section 33 of the Indian Companies Act, it is more than doubtful whether he is competent to register the charge under Section 109. However, as it is not necessary to decide that question for the purpose of this appeal, I do not propose to decide it but I consider it only proper to express the gravest doubt which I entertain on the subject. It may not be out of place to mention that the learned trial Judge has also expressed the same doubt in his judgment where he says. "I can visualise that there could be initial difficulties in effecting registration but there is no evidence that the company requested the Registrar to register the mortgage"

57. On the question whether the appellants are entitled to the benefit of the relevant exemption order. I agree that there is total lack of evidence on this question. It is not, therefore, possible for the Court to hold that the appellant company is entitled to exemption-

58. In the view I have taken, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed and I concur in the order my Lord has made BNP/DVC Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1969 CALCUTTA 504 (V 56 C 102)
N C TALUKDAR, J.

Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal on behalf of the State of West Bengal Petitioner v D Surya Rao and another, Accused, Opposite Parties

Criminal Revn. Case No 1294 of 1968, D/- 18-7-1969

(A) Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act (29 of 1966) Ss. 3, 5 and 8 — Institution of case for offences mentioned in the Act is no complaint — Section 173 (4) Criminal P. C. need not be complied with — Criminal P. C. (1898) Ss. 173(4), 190(1)(b), 251(b) and 4(p).

In view of the nature of the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act 1966, cases instituted thereunder are not on a police report but on a complaint attracting the provisions of Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure making it ultimately unnecessary on the part of the prosecution to conform to the provisions of Section 173 (4) of the said Code and serve copies of documents and statements as enjoined thereon upon the accused (Para 7)

Although Section 3 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act 1966 lays down a quantum of sentence making of fence cognizable the provisions of Section 5 of the Act clearly and categorically enjoin that offences under the Act are not cognizable. Merely because an officer of the R P F holding an enquiry under the Act "may exercise the same powers and shall be subject to the same provisions as the officer in charge of a police station may exercise and is subject to under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (5 of 1898), when investigating a cognizable case" the same would not convert him into "a police officer properly so called" within the meaning of Section 190 (1)(b) of the Code and convert his report into a police report. The enquiry referred to in Section 8 of the Act is not tantamount to an investigation held under Chapter XIV of the Code and unless and until such an investigation is held, leading on to the submission of a charge sheet, cognizance is not taken by the learned magistrate on a police report. Such an officer, under Act 29 of 1966, will have to make a complaint under Section 190(1)(a) of the Code if he wants the magistrate to take cognizance of an offence under the Act and consequently the case that is ultimately started is "any other case" within the meaning of Section 251(b) under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Para 5)

The concept of liberal interpretation cannot be introduced for interpreting the provisions of the special Act (29 of 1966). Procedure is the handmaiden of law and the two are so interrelated that the one cannot be separated from the other and any deviation from the procedure laid down by law on a purported liberal interpretation is not only unwarranted and untenable but is also illegal and is fraught with undoubted prejudice being caused to one of the parties to the proceedings, vitiating the ultimate trial Justice, after all, is in accordance with law (Para 8)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908) Pre.—Precedents—Obliter dicta of Supreme Tribunal are entitled in considerable weight — (Constitution of India Art. 141). (Para 9)

Mrs. Mukti Moitra, for the Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W. B.; Prasun Chandra Ghosh as amicus curiae.

ORDER: This Rule is at the instance of the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal and is against an order dated the 11th September, 1968 passed by Shri A. K. Sen, Magistrate, 1st Class, Midnapur (S) in case No. 164 (S) of 1968/T. R. 1929/68 under Section 3(a) of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, allowing the prayer made on behalf of the defence for granting copies of the documents and statements upon which the prosecution wanted to rely and rejecting the objection made on behalf of the prosecution in that behalf.

2. The facts leading on to the Rule can be put in a short compass. At about 23 hours on 8-5-68 a General Diary was entered at the Nimpura R. P. F. Post Station stating inter alia that at about 9-30 p. m. during the course of their patrol duty, some members belonging to the Railway Protection Force, referred to in the said diary, noticed the two accused in the company of some others proceeding towards the Bombay Road through the maidan close to the Rakha Jungle and nearby the Marshall Yard. When challenged by the R. P. F. staff, they took to their heels and after a hot chase, the R. P. F. personnel managed to arrest the two accused while the others fled away leaving several fishplates. The said persons who were arrested failed to account for the possession of the Railway properties recovered from them nor could they produce any authority for carrying the same. They gave their names as D. Surya Rao and Masala Kameswara Rao. The articles were seized and seizure-lists were drawn up on the same date. A report followed on the basis whereof the above-mentioned G. D. No. 262 dated the 8-5-68 was entered in the Nimpura R. P. F. Post Station. The O. C. of the Railway Protection Force, Nimpura thereafter made an investigation and recorded several statements on 8-5-68, 8-6-68 and 9-6-68. Ultimately he submitted a report on the 11th June, 1968 to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Midnapur (S) mentioning the above-mentioned facts and also that a case of theft of some fish-plates from the railway track near the Arora Gate at about 5-30 hours on 7-5-68 was already reported, being Bankura F. R. P. S. case No. 5 dated 8-5-68 under Section 379, I. P. C. and prayed for a production warrant being issued on the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate (N) Bankura for producing the two accused, D. Surya Rao and Masala Kameswara Rao in connection with R. P. F. case No. 2 under Section 3(a) of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966. On the 31st July, 1969, the two accused persons were produced by the escort party and were taken in custody. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate (S), Midnapur thereafter by his order of the same date took cognizance upon the report referred to above and transferred the case to Shri A. K. Sen, Magistrate, 1st Class, Midnapur for disposal. On the same date, the learned transferee magistrate passed an order fixing 11-9-68 for the evidence of prosecution witnesses. On that date 5 witnesses were present, when the defence made a prayer for the copies of the documents and statements on which the prosecution wanted to rely but the prosecution objected thereto on the ground that this was a non-cognizable offence and that the defence was not entitled to the same. The learned Magistrate, however, was pleased by his order of the same date, to allow the prayer of the defence for copies and overruled the objection made on behalf of the prosecution, directing the latter to arrange for the delivery of such copies by the 9th October, 1968. This order has been impugned and forms the subject-matter of the present Rule.

3. Mrs. Mukti Moitra, Advocate, appearing for the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal, on behalf of the State of West Bengal, had made a two-fold submission. The first contention of Mrs. Moitra is one of law and relates to procedure. She has contended that in view of the nature of the provisions of the Railway Properties (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 (Act 29 of 1966), cases instituted thereunder are not on a police report but on a complaint, attracting the provisions of section 252 and the following sections under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure and ruling out the necessity to furnish to the accused the copies of the documents and statements referred to under Section 173(4) of the Code. The steps of Mrs. Moitra's reasoning are that (a) the officer of the R. P. F. holding an enquiry under Section 8 of Act 29 of 1966 may exercise "the same powers and shall be subject to the same provisions as the officer-in-charge of a police station may exercise and is subject to under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (5 of 1898) when investigating the cognizable case" but is nonetheless not a police officer properly so-called within the meaning of Section 190(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure; (b) the inquiry made by such an officer is not an investigation held under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and that he has no power to submit a charge-sheet under Section 173 Cr. P. C.; (c) a R. P. F. officer under Act 29 of 1966 will have to make a complaint under Section 190(1)(a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure if he wants the magistrate to take cognizance of the offence thereunder and (d) the provisions of Section 173(4) of the Code are not applicable to a case under the said Special Act, where-to the provisions of Section 252 and the following sections under Chapter XXI of the Code would apply. An ancillary submission was made by the learned Advocate referring to the language of the order dated the 31st July, 1969 passed by Sbr A K. Dutt, Sub-Divisional Magistrate (S), Midnapur, viz., that "Seen the complaint of S I, R P. F., Nimpura Cognizance taken". In support of her contention Mrs Moitra also referred to several cases decided under different Special Acts as decisions pari materia and those will be considered in their proper context. The second contention of Mrs Moitra centered round the maintainability of the impugned order itself dated the 11th September, 1968, in view of the findings arrived at therein by the learned magistrate himself. Mrs Moitra submitted that the concept of liberal interpretation referred to therein has been wrongly introduced by the learned Magistrate for interpreting the provisions of a Special Act viz., of Section 8 of Act 29 of 1966, relating to procedure vitiating ultimately the resultant trial.

4. There is no appearance on behalf of the opposite parties, who are in jail, although notices appear to have been served on them in due course. The point involved being of some importance and also in the interests of justice this court requested Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh, Advocate, to appear as amicus curiae and he was good enough to agree. Mr Ghosh submitted in the first instance that the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act 1966 are quite clear and cogent, enjoining that cases instituted thereunder are on a police report, attracting the provisions of Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure and requiring the supply of copies of documents and statements to the accused as laid down under Section 173 (4) of the Code. In support of his contention Mr Ghosh submitted in the first place that Section 8 of Act 29 of 1966 consists of two parts as embodied in the two sub-sections. The first sub-section lays down that an officer of the Railway Protection Force shall proceed to enquire into the charge against a person arrested by him for an offence punishable under the Act or is forwarded to him under Section 7 of the said Act. The provisions of sub-section (2), however, along with those contained in proviso (a) make it clear that a report under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure is enjoined thereby and not a complaint so that the court can take cognizance. The provisions under Section 5 of the Act laying down that offences under the Act shall not be cognizable do not alter the position because of the quantum of sentence provided for by way of penalty under Section 3 of the said Act. Mr. Ghosh next contended that in Act 29 of 1966, there is no provision for cognizance as contained in the Essential Commodities Act, X of 1955 or in the Official Secrets

Act but on a proper interpretation of Sections 5 and 8(2) along with provisos (a) and (b) of the latter section of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 the report referred to in the said Act is to be deemed to be one under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure and as such the cognizance taken is on a report by a police officer under Section 190(1)(b), entailing the procedure provided for under Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to cases instituted on a police report. In this connection Mr Ghosh referred to Sections 5(2), 29 and the 2nd item of schedule II of the Code of Criminal Procedure and submitted that section 5 of Act 29 of 1966 is to be interpreted against the background of the said provisions and that the same makes the offence under the Act cognizable. Mr Ghosh further referred to the order dated the 11th June, 1968 wherein the expression 'report' has been mentioned clearly and categorically and naturally so because the same was sent by the officer-in-charge, R. P. F., Nimpura under Section 8(2). Mr Ghosh submitted that the word 'complaint' used in the order dated the 31st July, 1969 has been loosely used and really meant a report as referred to in the order dated the 11th June, 1968 and in the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 itself Mr Ghosh also referred to several cases in support of the above-mentioned proposition and further distinguished the principles laid down in the cases cited by Mrs Moitra. With regard to the second contention of Mrs Moitra, Mr Ghosh submitted that the question is not of any liberal interpretation but one of legal interpretation and that upon ultimate analysis on an interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Special Act, the order passed by the learned magistrate for granting copies of the documents to the accused is sustainable.

5. Having heard the learned Advocates appearing on behalf of the respective parties and on going through the materials on the record, I hold that there is a considerable force behind the submissions of Mrs Moitra. The first point raised by Mrs Moitra touching procedure, is an intriguing one and of some importance. Mrs Moitra has contended that in view of the nature of the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, cases instituted thereunder are not on a police report but on a complaint attracting the provisions of Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure and as such there is no obligation on the part of the prosecution to conform to the provisions of Section 173(4) of the said Code. In order to test the above-mentioned contention of Mrs Moitra, I will in the first instance refer to the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966. Section 3 of the said Act lays down the penalty for unlawful possession of railway property and under sub-section (a) imprisonment for a term which may extend to 5 years or a fine or with both is provided for in the case of a first offence and under sub-section (b) for a second or the subsequent offences, the imprisonment provided for is for a term which may extend to 5 years and also with fine etc. It would appear therefore that in view of the quantum of sentence the offence is cognizable. Section 5 of Act 29 of 1966 however lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, an offence under this Act shall not be cognizable. Therefore specifically it is provided for that offences under the Act shall not be cognizable. The provisions of Section 8 would also be material and are as follows:

“(1) When any person is arrested by an officer of the Force for an offence punishable under this Act or is forwarded to him under Section 7, he shall proceed to inquire into the charge against such person (2) For this purpose the officer of the Force may exercise the same powers and shall be subject to the same provisions as the officer in charge of a police station may exercise and is subject to under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (5 of 1898), when investigating a cognizable case; Provided that — (a) if the officer of the Force is of opinion that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the accused person, he shall either admit him to bail to appear before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, or forward him in custody to such Magistrate; (b) if it appears to the officer of the Force that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the accused person he shall release the accused person on his executing a bond, with or without sureties as the officer of the Force may direct to appear, if and when so required before the Magistrate having jurisdiction, and shall make a full report of all the particulars of the case to his official superior.” Section 9 of the Act lays down that an officer of the R. P. F. shall have power to summon any person whose attendance he considers necessary for giving evidence and for producing documents, and sub-section (4) enjoins that every such inquiry shall be deemed to be a “judicial proceeding” within the meaning of Sections 193 and 288, I. P. C. It is to be seen that although Section 3 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act 1966 lays down a quantum of sentence making the offence cognizable, the provisions of Section 5 of the said Act clearly and categorically enjoin that offences under the Act are not cognizable. This is a feature which cannot be overlooked in considering the later provision under Section 8 sub-section (2) and the two provisos mentioned thereunder. Merely because an officer of the R. P. F. holding an enquiry under the Act “may exercise the same powers and shall be subject to the same provisions as the officer-in-charge of a police station may exercise and is subject to under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (5 of 1898), when investigating a cognizable case” the same would not convert him into “a police officer properly so called” within the meaning of Section 190 (1)(b) of the Code and convert his report into a police report. The enquiry referred to in Section 8 of the Act is not tantamount to an investigation held under Chapter XIV of the Code and unless and until such an investigation is held, leading on to the submission of a charge-sheet, cognizance is not taken by the learned magistrate on a police report. Such an officer, under Act 29 of 1966, will have to make a complaint under Section 190(1)(a) of the Code if he wants the learned magistrate to take cognizance of an offence under the Act and consequently the case that is ultimately started is “any other case” within the meaning of Section 251(b) under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh, Advocate, has relied on the provisions of Section 3 of the Act and contended that in view of the quantum of sentence provided for thereunder by way of penalty, the offence is really a cognizable one. It is difficult for me to agree with the said proposition in view of the clear provisions of Section 5 of the said Act ruling out the same. Mr. Ghosh further contended that on a proper interpretation of Section 8(2) of Act 29 of 1966, along with the two provisos given thereunder, the report referred to therein is really one under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure as the result of investigation held thereunder and accordingly cognizance is ultimately taken on a report by a police officer under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Ghosh has submitted that a proper interpretation of Section 5 of Act 29 of 1966, enjoining that offences under the said Act would not be cognizable, can only be made in the light of the provisions of Sections 5(2), 29 and the second item of Schedule II of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is difficult for me to uphold the said contentions in view of the clear provisions of a special statute ruling out offences thereunder to be cognizable and the same cannot be deemed to be cognizable merely because of Section 3 of the said Act. I accordingly hold that the provisions of Section 173 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure will not be applicable to a case under Act 29 of 1966 making it necessary for the prosecution to supply copies of the statements and documents to the accused.

6. I will now pass on to the case law cited for the purpose of finding out whether the same lends assurance to the interpretation of the statute law as made above. Mrs. Moitra referred in the first instance to the case, not yet reported, of Ramendra Singh v Mohit Chowdbury, being Criminal Revn No 1018 of 1967 decided by Mr Justice A K Das and Mr Justice K K Mitra on 22-4-1969 (since reported in AIR 1969 Cal 535) wherein their Lordships held that "A trial under the Official Secrets Act will proceed under the provisions of Section 252 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ruling out thereby any necessity for serving copies of documents referred to under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the accused person" Mr Ghosh submitted that the facts in the above-mentioned case are distinguishable, that Section 13 of the Official Secrets Act uses the word "complaint," and that the decision of the Division Bench did not lay down any general principle but only one based upon the special provisions of that particular statute. A reference therefore to the relevant provisions of the Official Secrets Act is pertinent. Subsection (3) to Section 13 reads as follows "No Court shall take cognizance of any offence under this Act unless upon complaint made by order of or under authority from the Governor General in Council, the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf." Section 14 of the said Act again provides for the exclusion of the public from the proceeding and it enjoined inter alia that "If in the course of proceedings before a Court against any person for an offence under this Act, or the proceedings on appeal or in the course of the trial of a person under this Act, application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the proceedings would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the Court may make an order to that effect . . .". Therefore, it would become abundantly clear that the provisions referred to above invest the Court under the said Special Act with powers to hold trial in camera for reasons of State and under Section 5(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is the said procedure that shall prevail. Such a court accordingly takes cognizance of an offence under the said Act under Section 190(1)(a) and as a result, the procedure as laid down under Section 251(b) under Chapter XXI of the Code shall apply, ruling out the requirement to conform to Section 173(4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Their Lordships of the Division Bench accordingly observed in the said decision, not yet reported, (since reported in AIR 1969 Cal 535) in Criminal Revision Case No 1018/67 that "the Official Secrets Act provides for a special procedure of complaint and if it was upon a complaint by a person authorised under the Act, cognizance was taken under Section 190(1)(a) and not under Section 190(1)(b). The procedure for trial would, therefore, be under Section 252 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and not under Section 251A". I agree with the said observations but I hold that the decision in the above-mentioned case cited by Mrs Moitra does not constitute any precedent for determining the point involved in the present case which is against the backdrop of quite a different statute. The next case cited by Mrs Moitra is a decision, not yet reported, viz., Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v Sk. Rabamatulla, being Criminal Revn Case No 161 of 1969 decided by Mr. Justice R N Dutt and Mr Justice A P Das on 20-6-1969 (Cal). The said case is one under the Opium Act and cognizance was taken by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, of offences under Sections 9(a) and 9(c) of the said Act on the prosecution report submitted by an Excise Officer. The point that arose for consideration is whether in such a case the accused is entitled to the copies of the documents etc enjoined under Section 173 (4). After traversing several decisions under the Act and also under other Acts which are pari materia, their Lordships ultimately held that "even now the decision of this court in Premchand Khetry's case that a prosecution report submitted by an Excise Officer under Section 20G of the Opium Act after investigation under the provisions of that Act is that it is not a police report within the meaning of Section 173(1) of the Code and in that view of the matter we hold that the procedure to be followed in the instant case is the procedure as laid down in Section 252 onwards of the Code; and the result is that the accused is not entitled to copies of the statements recorded during investigation". Mr Ghosh contended that the observations made in the above-mentioned case should not determine the ultimate procedure applicable in the present case which is under an altogether different Act, containing different provisions. I agree with the submission made by Mr. Ghosh in this behalf and I hold that the decision in the case of Cri Revn Case No. 161 of 1969 D/- 20-6-1969 (Cal) which is against the background of a different Act containing different provisions, would not be applicable to the present case and as such the interpretation of Mrs Moitra put forward in this behalf fails. Mrs Moitra next referred to a recent Supreme Court case of Badaku Joti Svant v State of Mysore reported in AIR 1966 SC 1746. Mr Justice Wanchoo (as His Lordship then was) considered the material provisions of Section 21 of the Central Excises and Salt Act 1914 (Act 1 of 1914) and observed that "All that Section 21 provides is that for the purpose of his enquiry, a Central Excise Officer shall have the powers of an officer-in-charge of a police station when investigating a cognizable case. But even so it appears that these powers do not include the power to submit a charge sheet under Section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code for unlike the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, the Central Excise Officer is not deemed to be an officer-in-charge of a police station". His Lordship proceeded further to observe that "A police officer for the purpose of Clause (b) above can in our opinion only be a police officer properly so called as the scheme of the Cr. P. C. shows and it seems therefore, that a Central Excise Officer will have to make a complaint under Clause (a) above if he wants the magistrate to take cognizance of an offence for example under Sec. 9 of the Act." Mrs. Moitra relied on the above-mentioned observations and contended that the provisions of Section 21 of the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944 being similar to those of Act 29 of 1966, the decision of the Supreme Court would be a clear pointer to the procedure that should apply in a proceeding under the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, viz., one under Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Ghosh however, submitted that the facts of the aforesaid case are quite distinguishable inasmuch as it is not only under a different Act viz., the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944 but the point for consideration also as involved therein is a different one as to whether the statement made by an accused to the Deputy Superintendent of Customs and Excise will be hit by Section 25 of the Evidence Act and become inadmissible in evidence and that the Supreme Court ultimately held that such a statement would not be hit by Section 25 of the Evidence Act and would be admissible in evidence unless the accused can take advantage of Section 24 of the Evidence Act. The said case therefore, according to Mr. Ghosh, is in a different context. Mr. Ghosh further contended that the earlier decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Pravin Chandra Mody v. State of Andhra Pradesh reported in AIR 1965 SC 1185 which supports his contention, does not appear to have been cited and considered in the case of AIR 1966 SC 1746 and that the findings as to whether a cognizance of an offence under the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944 is under Section 190(1)(a), are in the nature of obiter dicta and as such are not really binding for determining the present point at issue. I do not agree with the submissions of Mr. Ghosh. The said observations though made in a different context are relevant for interpreting the provisions of Act 29 of 1966 in ascertaining the correct procedure and are not in any way obiter dicta. As has been held by some High Courts viz. in the case of Ram Surat v. Ram Murat, reported in AIR 1955 All 543 and in the case of Kai Khurroo v. State of Bombay reported in AIR 1955 Bom 220 (FB) the obiter dicta of the Supreme Court constitute "law" within the meaning of Article 141 of the Constitution of India. But even if it were otherwise, according to the ordinary rules relating to precedents, the obiter dicta of the Supreme Tribunal are entitled to considerable weight. A reference in this context may be made to the case of The Commissioner of Income-tax, Hyderabad, Deccan v. Vazir Sultan and Sons, reported in AIR 1959 SC 814 at p. 821. On a reference to the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944, I find that the provisions of Section 21 of the said Act are almost similar to those of Section 8 of Act 29 of 1966. There is in addition a clear and specific provision in Act 29 of 1966 viz., Section 5 whereby offences under the said Act have not been made cognizable. The fiction arising out of Section 3 of the said Act cannot do duty for a specific provision enjoining that offences under Act 29 of 1966 shall not be cognizable. The decision of the Supreme Court in Badaku Joti Svant's case, AIR 1966 SC 1746 therefore supports Mrs. Moitra's contention that the procedure that should ultimately obtain in a case under Act 29 of 1966, which is a similar Act, will be one under Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure, being not instituted on a police report within the meaning of Section 251-A under chapter XXI of the Code.

7. Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh, Advocate, also referred to several cases in support of his interpretation. He referred in the first instance to the case of Malay Banerjee v. State, reported in AIR 1967 Cal 352. The proceeding was under S. 7 (1) (a) (ii)/10 of the Essential Commodities Act and the learned trying magistrate directed the trial to proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 251-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, relying on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in, the case of Nanakrai Pandit v. State, reported in 1961 (1) Cri LJ 644 (Cal) as also an unreported decision of the said High Court in the case of Ramaprosad Gupta v. State of West Bengal, decided by Mr. Justice S. K. Sen and Mr. Justice Amaresh Roy on the 31st May, 1962 (Cal). Mr. Justice T. P. Mukherjee delivering the judgment in Malay Banerjee's case AIR 1967 Cal 352 observed at page 354 that "The present case was started for an offence constituted by contravention of Cls. 4 and 5 of the Iron and Steel Control Order, 1956 and the offences thus are covered by Section 7 (1) (a) (ii) of the Essential Commodities Act and would attract imprisonment for a term which may extend to 3 years, thereby making them cognizable offences. If so, they would be liable to be investigated under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code and the report that is submitted as result of that investigation would be a 'police report' within the meaning of Section 173 of the Code and there would be no difficulty in holding that the procedure prescribed in Section 251A of the Code would apply in the trial of the offences concerned". Mr. Justice Mukherjee further considered the Supreme Court decision in the case of AIR 1965 SC 1185 and observed that the said case "will serve as the authority for a finding that the procedure prescribed in Section 251A of the Code will be attracted to the trial of cases cognizable whereof is taken under Section 190 (1) (b) of the Code on the report of a police officer submitted under Section 11 of the Essential Commodities Act." Mr. Ghosh then referred to the case of Supdt & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Vimla Dassi, reported in AIR 1968 Cal 540 wherein Mr. Justice T P Mukherjee held that even when cognizance is taken on the basis of a complaint under Section 190, in a case which has been preceded by an investigation under Chapter XIV but wherein no report under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was filed the accused is entitled to the benefit of Section 173 (4) of the Code, in the shape of copies of documents referred to in the section being made available to him. The facts of the said case are distinguishable because the investigation that had taken place there was by the police and accordingly Mr. Justice Mukherjee held that the police officer without submitting a report under Section 173 of the Code, makes over the materials collected by him to some other authority or person to enable that authority or person to file a complaint that may be done if only the law permits. The law may permit the filing of a complaint by another authority or person in the case, but law would not permit remissness on the part of the police officer in the matter of submitting his report under Section 173 (1) of the Code. That is a mandatory duty of the police officer concerned. Even if the police officer does not do his duty, that would not take away the right of the accused to get copies". It is therefore abundantly clear that the facts are entirely different and that in the above-mentioned decision the case was investigated by the police unlike the instant case. Mr. Ghosh next relied on a Division Bench decision of this Court, not yet reported, viz. Sabu Jain Ltd. v. The State in Cri Rev Case No 401/67 with Cri Rev. Case No 680/64 decided by Mr. Justice H N Dutt and Mr. Justice A P Das on the 30th April 1969 (Cal). The said decision is also under the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 and in course of the same, their Lordships referred to the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Pravin Chandra Mody AIR 1965 SC 1185 and ultimately came to the conclusion that a prosecution report submitted under Section 11 of the Essential Commodities Act 10 of 1955 is in law a police report under Section 173 (1) of the Code and as such the procedure laid down in Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure will have to be followed in the case. Mrs. Moitra contended that the observations in the above mentioned cases are made in the context of a different Act, the provisions whereof are not similar to those of Act 29 of 1966 and as such the same would not apply to the facts of the present case. Mrs. Moitra in this context further contended that in Act 29 of 1966 there is no provision like Section 11 of Act 10 of 1955 relating to the cognizance of offences and that unlike Section 5 of Act 20 of 1966, there is no specific provision in the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 enjoining that offences under the said Act are not to be cognizable. For a proper determination of the submissions of Mr. Ghosh and the objection made thereby by Mrs. Moitra on the basis of the above-mentioned three cases, I will now proceed to consider the principles laid down in the case of AIR 1965 SC 1185. Mr. Ghosh relied on the observations made therein by Mr. Justice Hidayatullah (as his Lordship then was), who in delivering the judgment of the Court, doubted the principles laid down by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Prem Chand Khetry v. The State, reported in AIR 1958 Cal 213 and ultimately held that "In our opinion, the position is clear that such reports, if they are regarded as made under Section 190(1)(b), must attract the provisions of Section 251-A of the Code because if the fiction is given full effect they cannot be regarded as falling within complaint under Section 190(1)(a) or Section 190(1)(c)." Mrs. Moitra submitted that the observations made by the Supreme Court in the above-mentioned case do not apply to the facts of the present case, enjoining in any way a procedure under Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that this point relating to the procedure applicable, was not directly involved in Pravin Chandra Mody's case, AIR 1965 SC 1185 and that the observations made in that context by their Lordships of the Supreme Court should not be a pointer to the ultimate decision in the instant case. I have given the matter my anxious consideration and I hold that the observations made in the above-mentioned case are not ultimately applicable to the facts of this case. Though their Lordships of the Supreme Court have doubted the reasoning of the Division Bench in the Calcutta High Court relating to the creation of a fiction by the section whereby the report of an Excise or a Custom Officer was to be regarded as the report of the police officer but only for the purpose of Section 190(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, not making the report a charge-sheet under Section 173 of the Code and not attracting the provisions of Section 251A of the Code inasmuch as it contemplated only a report under Section 173 of the said Code, it cannot be overlooked that the above-mentioned point of procedure was not directly or categorically involved in the case of AIR 1965 SC 1185 wherein the Supreme Court in fact held that where the information discloses a cognizable as well as a non-cognizable offence, the police officer is not debarred from investigating any non-cognizable offence which may arise out of the same facts and that the police officer would be competent to include the offence under Section 7 of Act 10 of 1955 though non-cognizable, in the charge-sheet under Section 173 of the Code with respect to a cognizable offence under Section 420 of the Penal Code and the trial for the said offence would proceed under Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The point involved therefore in the case of Pravin Chandra Mody, AIR 1965 SC 1185 wherein the Supreme Court incidentally questioned the soundness of the ratio decidendi in Prem Chand Khettry's case, AIR 1958 Cal 213 is different and I accordingly hold that the observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the case reported in AIR 1965 SC 1185 having been made against the backdrop of a different Act, containing provisions not similar to the Act under consideration, in the instant case and not containing similar provisions relating to cognizance as also a specific provision like Section 5 of Act 29 of 1966, will not apply to the facts of the present case. Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh, Advocate, also referred to the case of Raghubans Dubey v. State of Bihar, reported in AIR 1967 SC 1167 wherein Mr. Justice S. M. Sikri delivered the judgment of the Court. The facts of the said case are, however, entirely different. The cognizance taken therein was under Ss. 149/302/201 of I. P. C. and the main point for consideration was as to what was meant by the expression "taking cognizance of". In the said case, it appears that investigation was made by the police officer and a charge-sheet was submitted under Section 173(1) of the Code and therefore the circumstances being not similar, the said case does not constitute any precedent to determine the procedure to be followed when an enquiry is made by an officer of the Railway Protection Force under Section 8 of Act 29 of 1966. Mr. Ghosh finally referred to the case of Ashiq Miyan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, reported in AIR 1969 SC 4 wherein Mr. Justice Vaidialingam delivering the judgment of the court held that there was no illegality in a trial held by the magistrate under Section 251A of the Code of Criminal Procedure when an offence was investigated in accordance with the provisions of the Opium Act by the police Sub-Inspector and a report was submitted by him under Section 20G of the said Act. Their Lordships, however, made it quite clear that "It is not really necessary for us to consider the large question, as to whether, when an Executive Officer makes a report under Section 20G of the Act, whether the trial, following it, in such a case, would be governed by Section 251A". The said decision therefore does not support the submission put forward by Mr. Ghosh. On a consideration therefore of the case law on the point cited by the learned Advocates, I hold that in view of the nature of the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, cases instituted thereunder are not on a police report but on a complaint, attracting the provisions of Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure making it ultimately unnecessary on the part of the prosecution to conform to the provisions of Section 173(4) of the said Code and serve copies of documents and statements as enjoined therein upon the accused. Accordingly, the first point raised by Mrs. Moitra succeeds.

8. The second point raised by Mrs. Moitra, is also quite tenable. The learned trying magistrate was clearly wrong in introducing the concept of a liberal interpretation for the purpose of explaining the provisions of a special statute vis-a-vis the mandatory provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. Ghosh has aptly submitted that the question is not of a liberal interpretation but of a legal interpretation and I may add that it is also of a proper interpretation. On an interpretation of the relevant provisions of the special Act and on a consideration of the case law on the point, I have already held that the cases instituted thereunder are not on a police report but on a complaint, attracting thereby the provisions of Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Procedure is the handmaiden of law and the two are so interrelated that the one cannot be separated from the other and any deviation from the procedure laid down by law on a purported liberal interpretation is not only unwarranted and untenable but is also illegal and is fraught with undoubted prejudice being caused to one of the parties to the proceedings, vitiating the ultimate trial. Justice, after all, is in accordance with law. I accordingly find that the concept of liberal interpretation has been wrongly introduced by the learned magistrate for interpreting the provisions of the special Act viz., Act 29 of 1966 and I uphold the contention made in this behalf by Mrs. Moitra.

9. Before I part with the case, I must place on record my appreciation of the assistance rendered to this Court by Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh, Advocate as amicus curiae. Mr. Ghosh has spared no pains in placing the possible views bearing on the points for consideration, and he has been of considerable help to this Court in coming to its decision.

10. In the result, I make the Rule absolute; set aside the impugned order dated the 11th September, 1968, passed by Shri A. K. Sen, Magistrate, 1st Class, Midnapur (S) in case No. U. R. 164 (S) of 1968/T. R. 1929/68 allowing the prayer made on behalf of the defence for granting copies of the papers upon which the prosecution wanted to rely and rejecting the objection made on behalf of the prosecution; and I direct that the case shall go back to the court below for being tried under the provisions of Section 252 onwards of the Code of Criminal Procedure, CWM/D.V.C. Rule made absolute

DAS J.: This contempt Rule is against Mr D Rudra, Mr B K Sarkar and Mr A K Dasgupta, Additional District Magistrates Alpore and the Officer-in-Charge, Betaghata

Criminal Appeal No- 86 of 1967 preferred
by Shyamsundar Pathak and Kapildeo Narayan Sharma, A S. I of Police Calcutta, against conviction under Section 414 of the Indian Penal Code was dismissed by this Court by an order dated July 18 1968 and this order was communicated and received by the District Magistrate on July 20, 1968

2. The order reads as follows

"We direct the accused-appellants, namely, Shyamsundar Pathak and Kapildeo Narayan Sharma be called upon to surrender forthwith to their bail to serve out the remainder of sentence imposed upon them"

3. This order was not, however, carried out by the contemners who functioned as Additional District Magistrates, Alpore, during the relevant period, as disclosed during hearing of an application under Article 134 (1)(c) of the Constitution filed in September

1968, and heard some time after long vacation in November, 1968-

4. Sub-rule (5) of Rule 43 of the Criminal Rules and Orders reads as follows.

"In the cases mentioned in clauses (3) and (4) above the Court by which the accused was admitted to bail shall forthwith call upon the accused to surrender, and issue a notice to the surety in Form No (P) 65 to produce the accused within three days after the receipt of the notice. If no surrender is made within the period a warrant of arrest shall issue, and at the same time the surety shall be called upon to show cause why his bail bond shall not be forfeited. No extension of the time to surrender or to produce the accused shall be allowed in any case"

5. In view of the above order by this Court and the relevant Rule, the learned Magistrates should have directed the surety to produce the two persons within three days and on the surety's failure to do that, issue warrants against convicts and forfeit the bailbonds of the surety. The ordersheet of the case does not however indicate that the learned Magistrates were conscious of their obligation to carry out the order of a superior court or that they ever applied their mind. They seemed to be prisoners in the hands of their Bench Clerk and signed whatever draft order was placed before them

6. The order of this Court was produced before the learned Additional District Magistrate on July 25, 1968 and he signed a routine order in the hand of the Judicial Peshkar directing production of the convicted persons on August 2, 1968, taking no notice of sub-rule (5) of Rule 43 of the Criminal Rules and Orders. On August 2, the convicted persons were not produced and then followed a series of adjournments at the instance of the surety for production of the convicted persons, apparently taking no notice of the order of this Court for taking them into custody forthwith or of the Rules regarding surrender. The contemners are holding responsible posts in the judicial administration as Additional District Magistrates and they exercise their supervising authority over the Magistrates at the station. Apparently they were never troubled over their authority to extend time on prayer of surety in clear violation of this Court's orders. The orders again did not disclose that they applied their mind but obviously they signed the draft orders placed before them by the Judicial Peshkar. This continued for several dates and the convicted persons were neither arrested nor the surety pulled up by way of forfeiture of bond. Warrant of arrest is ordered after four adjournments for appearance on 26th August, 1968. Next date is fixed a month ahead on September 20 1968 and in the meantime on September 10, an enquiry was made from this Court regarding surrender. This alerted the office and an order for drawing up proceeding under Section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is placed before the learned Magistrates and signed by them. This also appears to be a make-believe order, not meant to be carried out and a proceeding is really drawn up on 12-10-68, i.e. 22 days thereafter for showing cause on 25-10-68. On this date the surety filed a petition for time and time was allowed till 11th November, 1968. In the principal record the next date was fixed on October 25, 1968. It is recorded that warrant of arrest was received back with a prayer for extension of time and time was automatically allowed till 11-11-68. In the meantime, the application for certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court comes up before this Court for hearing on November 8, 1968. The convicted persons, however, surrendered one day before this, that is to say, on the 7th November, 1968. The entire matter appears to have been well planned and the only reasonable inference is that the adjournments were granted according to the plan, chalked out between the convicted persons and some officers in the office of the Additional District Magistrate responsible for assisting the Magistrate in the discharge of his duties. This is apparent from the paragraphs 4 and 5 of the explanation of Sri Sarkar, contemner, where he stated that he virtually signed whatever order was placed before him by the Judicial Peshkar who was earlier directed to place only routine orders, in view of his preoccupations in other urgent executive matters.

7. It is apparent from the state of the record that the Additional District Magistrates, Sri Sarkar and Sri Rudra, junior members in the Indian Administrative Service, had at no time any control over the case or the record and the Judicial Peshkar could get any order signed by them. Obviously, they did not know the correct legal position nor had any opportunity of ascertaining it and were completely inexperienced to deal with court cases and therefore had to rely upon the Bench Clerk. Added to this, there was extra work allotted to them as enumerated in the affidavit of Sri Sarkar. The Additional District Magistrate is in a pivotal position of the judiciary in the district, being the Additional District Magistrate in charge of the Criminal Administration, and such administration would obviously be in a quandary. We are prepared to accept that these officers did not wilfully override any order of this Court. But the entire trouble was due to the fact that it was not a case of the Additional District Magistrate controlling the Judicial Peshkar but the latter controlling the Magistrate. The blame in our view, should squarely rest on the State Government which puts such young officers without any experience whatsoever in judicial work, as Additional District Magistrates and burdens them with multifarious miscellaneous work, thereby betraying lack of appreciation of the importance of Administration of Criminal Justice. In olden times, Senior Deputy Magistrates with experience in judicial work were drafted for such position. But the old order has changed and we have now the rule of the Administrative Services with a nostalgic attitude towards Court and administration of justice and running of the judicial administration is left in the hands of inexperienced young officers who had neither the training in law nor the inclination and desire to learn the law but who carried on the work relying on the Judicial Peshkar for their law and for the administration of the departments.

8. The matter did not end here. This Court by an order dated November 15, 1968, asked for a report from the District Magistrate as to circumstances in which the Court's order for arrest of the two convict constables was not complied with and also for the record of the case to be submitted within seven days from the date of receipt of this order. No notice was taken of this order from this Court; neither was report sent, nor did the record arrive in this Court. The only alternative left for this Court in the circumstances was to issue on 11-12-68 a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why proceedings for contempt shall not be drawn up for failure to give effect to the order of this Court dated the 18th July, 1968 and subsequent orders calling for the record and report. Only thereafter, the contemner, Mr. D. Rudra, Additional District Magistrate, sent the record with the report asked for with a forwarding letter dated November 14, 1968. There was a formal expression of regret regarding the delay in submitting the report and the records. This report unfortunately is neither full nor does it disclose the entire facts correctly. The report does not disclose that even after the record was placed before him for orders on 25-7-68 as many as three adjournments for production of the accused persons were granted on bare petitions of the surety, often to enable the convicts to prefer appeal to the Supreme Court. It was stated that proceedings under Section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the sureties were drawn up. But here also, there was no clear disclosure as to when order for drawing up of proceedings was passed and when proceedings in fact were started. The record disclosed that the proceedings were actually drawn up 22 days after the order for drawing up proceedings was passed. Obviously this also was a report in the hands of the Judicial Peshkar, but it is unfortunate that Mr. Rudra did not personally care to check up the report to make sure that a full and complete report is sent to this Court.

9. The next stage comes when the warrant of arrest was issued. The Additional

District Magistrate has reported that the officer-in-charge, Beliaghata police station did not execute the warrant of arrest and returned the same and wanted extension of time. This order of arrest was passed on August 26, 1968 and it took 8 days to reach Beliaghata police station from Alipore. Eighteen days thereafter the warrants were returned unexecuted with a prayer for extension of time on the ground that the two policemen could not be traced. The explanation, in our view, is worse than the fault, namely, the failure to carry out the court's order. Shyam Narayan Pathak and Kapildeo Narayan Sharma are two policemen. Assistant Sub-Inspectors of Police and they were under suspension during the trial. It is unlikely that their whereabouts would be unknown to the police or that they would be untraceable while their sureties were applying for extension of time to produce, to enable them to appeal to Supreme Court. The time was extended and a report came only after these two men surrendered on November 7, one day before the date fixed for hearing of the application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court that they have surrendered. The warrant was, therefore, never executed and the entire thing was arranged in such a way that the two persons had no occasion to surrender before the application for certificate got ready for hearing. Here also either the Officer-in-Charge had no control over his men or he took lukewarm interest in discharging duties by way of arresting the two persons when the warrants were sent by the Additional District Magistrate, Alipore. This is hardly type of a man who makes out a good officer-in-charge of a police station in Calcutta, upon whom the peace in the area and life and property of the citizen can be entrusted.

10. Having considered all aspects of the matter we now proceed to consider the explanation offered by the contemners. So far as Mr. Das Gupta is concerned, we find that the only order passed by him is for drawing up of proceeding under Section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the surety and he, therefore, virtually played no part in the matter and he must be found not to have committed any contempt of the orders of this Court.

11. So far as Mr. Rudra and Mr. Sarkar are concerned, they have offered full apology and have candidly pointed out that they were neither aware of the implication of the orders which were put up before them for signature by the Judicial Peshkar, nor did they in any way mean to by-pass any order of this Court. From what we have pointed out earlier it also seems to us that there is something wrong in the subordinate staff there and that the young officers sent there as Additional District Magistrates can hardly exercise the type of control which one should expect them to do, for efficiently running the administration of justice. Both of them are junior officers still to pick up that type of experience which would be necessary in controlling the staff at Alipore and to saddle them with that responsibility for carrying on the judicial administration of the District and further to burden them with multifarious executive duties is hardly expected to yield better results. Naturally they depended too much upon the Judicial Peshkar who it seems, could get any order signed by them. They do not seem to have, for reasons explained by them any grip over the matter at any stage even in sending a report to this Court or in dealing with the delinquents after they found that they were misguided and landed into difficulty. The machinery assisting the Additional District Magistrates at Alipore—perhaps the same state of affairs will be found in other Districts too—require over-hauling.

11-A. Mr. Rudra and Mr. Sarkar are undoubtedly guilty of contempt of Court but we accept the apology tendered by them. The same observation will apply to the police officer, namely, officer-in-charge of Beliaghata police station, who neglected to execute the warrant of arrest sent by the Additional District Magistrate. Against him also, we do not proceed further in imposing any punishment, but warn him against recurrence of similar conduct in dealing with Court's orders.

12. Before we end we may, however, point out to the contemners and through them, to all concerned the recent observations of the Supreme Court in Criminal Appeal No. 55 of 1965, Debabrata Bandopadhyay v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1969 SC 189. The relevant portion reads as follows:

"We, however, caution all concerned that orders of stay, bail, injunctions received from superior courts must receive close and prompt attention and unnecessary delay in despatching or dealing with them may well furnish grounds for an inference that it was due in a natural disinclination to deal with the matter born of indifference and sometimes even of contumaciousness."

13. We have accepted the apology tendered by them and the matter is not, therefore, proceeded with any further and the Rules are disposed of accordingly.

Madhusudan Banerjee, for Petitioner;
Ajay Kr. Basu, for Respondent.

ORDER: Having been appointed as Assistant Inspector of Works in 1934, the Petitioner was, at the material time, working as Inspector of works at the Kanchrapara workshop of the Eastern Railway. There was a raid on the workshop by dacoits in November 1961, after which it was discovered that 657 steel tees were missing. After a fact-finding inquiry, the Divisional Engineer (Respondent No. 3) issued against the petitioner the charge-sheet at Ann. A to the petition, dated the 25th March, 1964 asking him to show cause why he should not be punished with removal or any lesser penalty for negligence of duty—

(i) for failure to ensure the proper locking and sealing of the godown under his charge, which caused loss of Rs. 6600 approximately to the Railway;

(ii) for failure to verify the stock every 6 months;

(iii) for failure to exercise casual check of the stock.

2. After the petitioner submitted his explanation to this charge, however, no inquiry was held but by the ex parte order at Annexure C, dated the 27th July, 1965, respondent No. 2, the Divisional Superintendent held the petitioner guilty of the charge and ordered that Rs. 6600 should be recovered from the petitioner "for the pecuniary loss caused to the Railway Administration by your negligence".

3. On the 2nd September, 1965, the petitioner preferred an appeal against the aforesaid order to the Chief Engineer, but, without disposing of that appeal, the order at Annexure D has been issued on the 16th September, 1965 for the recovery of the sum by monthly instalments of Rs. 125 from the salary bill of the petitioner commencing from August 1965.

4. In the present Rule, obtained on the 21st December, 1965, the petitioner challenges the validity of the order for recovery at Annexures C.D. The petition is opposed by an affidavit filed by respondent 2, on behalf of all the respondents.

5. The primary contention advanced on behalf of the petitioner is that having issued the charge-sheet at Annexure A, the respondents could not impose the penalty of recovery of a pecuniary penalty without holding an inquiry upon the charge in accordance with the Rules contained in the relevant Discipline Rules.

6. The various penalties which may be imposed upon a Railway servant, under Rule 1707 of the Railway Establishment Code, volume I, are divided into two categories, for procedural purposes; major and minor, and the two different sets of procedural rules applicable to the two categories of penalty are laid down in Sections V and VI, respectively, of Chapter XVII of the Code. Now, while removal is a 'major' penalty, recovery of pay of any pecuniary loss caused to the Government by negligence (Clause III of R. 1707 (1)) is a 'minor' penalty.

7. The result is that while for a major penalty, the procedure includes a charge followed by a full-fledged inquiry as laid down in Rule 1712, the procedure laid down in Rule 1716, for a minor penalty, such as recovery of loss, is—

(a) the railway servant must be informed in writing of the allegations against him and the action proposed to be taken against him;

(b) he must be given an opportunity to make any representation he wants to make against such notice;

(c) such representation must be taken into consideration by the Disciplinary Authority;

(d) the Disciplinary Authority must write an order, with the reasons therefor (Rule 1716 (2) (e)).

In this case, the requirements of Rule 1716 appear to have been complied with. Though the order reproduced at Annexure C is brief, the punishing authority gave a reasoned judgment as is to be found at Annexure R/2 to the counter-affidavit. Admittedly, there was a fact-finding inquiry anterior to the charge and several witnesses, including the petitioner (Annexure R/1) were examined there. The punishing authority has held the petitioner guilty of negligence on the basis of the evidence collected at that inquity and the value of the materials lost was Rs 6600 according to the petitioner's own initial report after the dacoity (Annexure R). The punishing authority held him guilty except on the third item of the charge.

8. It thus appears that the procedure for minor penalties was complied with. It is, however, contended on behalf of the petitioner that having once issued a charge-sheet in which the major penalty of removal was mentioned, the respondents could not shift to the procedure for minor penalties. From para 3 of the order of the punishing authority, at Annexure R/2 it appears that the Railway shifted to the minor penalty because it was useless to order removal from service inasmuch as the petitioner was already under re-employment and was due to retire from such re-employment in November, 1965.

9. Nevertheless the question of law raised must be answered namely whether it was open to the respondents to resort to the procedure for minor penalty after having started a proceeding for a major penalty.

(a) On behalf of the petitioner, reliance is placed on the Supreme Court decision in the case of Akshaibar Lal v Vice-Chancellor, AIR 1961 SC 619 at p 626. In that case it was laid down that the general rule when alternative remedies were open to a person or authority was that "one or the other or both can be invoked unless one remedy is expressly or by necessary implication excluded by the other." To this an exception was engrafted by the Court, namely that where there was a general as well as a special remedy, the authority, if it has initiated action under the special procedure must pursue that course and cannot, in case of failure to comply with that procedure fall back upon the general remedy. This decision has no application to the instant case where both the remedies major and minor penalties, — are provided by the same code.

(b) To the same effect as in Akshaibar Lal's case, AIR 1961 SC 619 is the decision of the Supreme Court in Balakotiah v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 232 at p 236. That was also a case of a general and a special remedy provided by two different laws. Rule 148 of the Railway Establishment Code provides for the termination of the services of non-pensionable employees by notice. The Railway Services (Safeguarding of National Security) Rules 1949, on the other hand were made with the specific object of terminating the services of employees engaged in subversive activities, after following the special procedure prescribed therein. The Railway authorities started proceedings against an employee under the Security Rules in order to punish him for subversive activities but after proceeding to some length, eventually terminated the services of the employee by issuing a notice under Rule 148 of the Code. The Court held that the intention of the authorities was to take action against the employee under the special law of the Security Rules and that, accordingly, the validity of the order that was eventually made must be tested by the requirements of the Security Rules.

10. The decision in Balakotiah's case, AIR 1958 SC 232 also does not apply to the instant case inasmuch as no special law is involved in the instant case. Apart from that, the language of Rules 1708 and 1716 (1) of the Railway Establishment Code volume I, shows that under these Rules, it is not the intention or object of the Railway authorities at the commencement of the proceedings, but the nature of the penalty which is eventually imposed, that is to determine which procedure must be followed in order to render the order valid. Thus Rule 1708 says —

"Without prejudice to the provisions of the Public Servants (Inquiry) Act, 1850, no order imposing on a railway servant any of the penalties specified in cls (iv) to (vu) of sub-rule (1) of Rule 1707 shall be passed except after an inquiry held in the manner provided in Rules 1709 to 1715."

11. It is abundantly clear that the procedure prescribed for major penalties has to be followed only if eventually a major penalty is imposed. On the other hand, Rule 1716(1) says—

"No order imposing any of the penalties specified in clauses (i) to (iii) of sub-rule (1) of Rule 2707 (sic) shall be passed except after."

12. It is clear that the procedure laid down by the Rules being safeguards prescribed to protect the employees from arbitrary action, the law will demand the more stringent safeguards to be complied with only in the case of the graver punishments. Since, in the instant case, only a minor penalty has been imposed, the respondents cannot be asked to justify the impugned order with reference to the requirements of the procedure laid down for 'major penalties'. The matter was not dealt with from this point of view by Banerjee, J in Civil Rule No 2307 of 1959 D/- 2-8-1961 which was referred to before me.

13. This contention must also fail accordingly.

14. No other point having been urged at the hearing this Rule is discharged but without any order as to costs. I should also observe that though no legal relief is available to the petitioner, nothing herein stated will stand in the way of the respondents' giving any relief to the petitioner administratively, having regard to the circumstances of the case and also in view of the fact that he must have left the service by this time. AIR 1969 CALCUTTA 607 (V 56 C 105)

A. K. SINHA, J.

Jiban Krishna Chatterjee, Petitioner v. State Transport Authority. W. B. and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 263 (W) of 1965, D/- 9-1-1969.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 60 (1) (a), 31 (1), 59 (3) — Cancellation of permit — Breach of rights and privileges does not warrant cancellation — Person holding permanent stage carriage permit allowing bus being operated by another person — Cancellation of permit on ground of breach of condition of Section 60 (1) (a) — In absence of condition under Section 59 (3) and contingency under Section 60 (1) (c), cancellation held to be erroneous.

Kashi Kanta Moitra and Nripendra Nath Bhattacharyya, for Petitioner; Ranjit Kr. Banerjee and Amal Kr. Basu Chowdhury, for Respondents.

ORDER: In this Rule the petitioner prays for quashing certain orders made by the respondents Nos. 2 and 3 cancelling the petitioner's permanent stage carriage permit. Briefly the facts are as follows:

The petitioner was granted a permanent stage carriage permit in respect of Bus No. WBR 396 on Route No. 84 granted by the respondent No. 3. By a show cause notice dated 19-9-1963 the petitioner was asked to submit his explanation against the proposed order of cancellation of his said permit on the ground that the said bus was being operated upon by another person named Tarapada Saha. The petitioner submitted his explanation but the respondent No. 3 not being satisfied cancelled the petitioner's permit under Section 60(1)(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. Against this order the petitioner preferred an appeal to the State Transport Authority. The appeal was heard and dismissed by the Appellate Sub-Committee, the respondent No. 3 by its order dated 27-7-64. That is how the petitioner felt aggrieved and obtained the present Rule.

3. Upon these facts several grounds were taken but Mr. Moitra on behalf of the petitioner contended in the first place that there was no transfer of vehicle or the permit by the petitioner and, therefore, the order of cancellation on the ground of such transfer was bad in law. In the second place, he contended that even assuming that there was such transfer, the Regional Transport Authority or the Appellate Authority had no power or jurisdiction to cancel such permit as restriction on transfer was not a condition on breach of which the permit was liable to be cancelled.

4. In support of the first contention it was submitted that the order of the respondent No. 3 (annexure B to the petition) would show that the permit was cancelled under Section 60 (1) (a) on the view that the permit-holder allowed the vehicle to be operated by another person in flagrant disregard of the fundamental condition of the permit. The Appellate Authority also took the view that the Power of Attorney executed by the petitioner in favour of his Manager and Financier was a complete abdication in his favour from all the rights and privileges the petitioner was entitled under the permit held by him. This view was patently erroneous. In any event, by virtue of the Power of Attorney the petitioner did not cease to own the vehicle. Mr. Moitra also drew my attention to Section 31(1) of the Act and contended that the transfer of the vehicle could be made only in the manner laid down there.

5. I think the first question for consideration really in this case is whether the petitioner who is the holder of the permit ceased to own the vehicle covered by such permit as contemplated under Section 60(1) (c) of the Act. The relevant portion of the order made by the Appellate Authority runs thus:

"We found that the power of attorney executed by the appellant was a complete abdication in favour of his Manager and Financier from all the rights and privileges to which he was entitled under the permit held by him. We accordingly hold that the R. T. A. acted rightly in cancelling his permit."

6. From the above order it seems to me quite clear that the real question in controversy before such cancellation order could be made was not at all decided. There is no finding that by virtue of the power of attorney executed in favour of the petitioner's Manager and Financier the petitioner ceased to own the vehicle. What was stated was that by virtue of such a document there was a complete abdication from all rights and privileges to which he was entitled under the permit. These are entirely vague and unspecific and in any case, cannot be treated as a decision on the material question. There are number of rights and privileges attached to the permit contained in several provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act but breach of any of these rights and privileges does not warrant cancellation of the permit. The permit may be cancelled or suspended only under certain breach of conditions specified under sub-section (3) of Section 59 or of any condition or several contingencies contemplated under sub-clauses (b) to (f) under Section 60(1) of the Act. In the instant case, the notice to show cause upon the petitioner was issued on grounds contained under Section 60(1)(a) and (c). Although such is the notice, it appears that the respondent No. 3 cancelled this permit by a resolution on the only ground that the permit holder allowed the vehicle to be operated by fundamental and flagrant breach of the condition of the permit under Section 60 (1) (a) of the Act This is neither a condition under Section 59 (3) nor a contingency contemplated under Section 60 (1) (c) of the Act. Such a resolution seems to be wholly inconsistent and on the face of it erroneous

7 There is again no condition either under the Act or any condition attached to the permit prohibiting operation of a stage carriage by another person It is only in case of transfer of permit without the consent of the Authorities concerned operation of such a stage carriage by transferee is prohibited under Section 61 (1) of the Act. Nevertheless in such a case it is doubtful whether such a transfer of permit will entail cancellation of the permit on grounds enumerated under provisions of Section 60 (1) and sub-clauses (a) to (f) Be that as it may, in the instant case one of the proposed grounds for such cancellation as noticed earlier was that the petitioner ceased to own the vehicle as provided in Section 60 (1) (c) of the Act

8. Mr Banerjee on behalf of the respondents sought to contend that on the petitioner's own showing he ceased to become the owner of the vehicle on the basis of the hire-purchase agreement embodied in the so-called power of attorney executed by him in favour of his Manager. For this, he relied on definition of 'owner' under the Act which means also a person in possession of the vehicle on the basis of the hire purchase agreement This may or may not be correct For, in the affidavit-in-opposition on behalf of the respondents it has been stated in paragraph 8 that the power of attorney had already been revoked by the petitioner. So this becomes primarily a disputed question of fact which cannot be conveniently decided by this Court In any event, if it is for the Appellate Sub-Committee to decide as to whether in fact the petitioner ceased to be the owner of the vehicle taking into consideration all these material documents along with surrounding circumstances It is only on a proper decision on this question of fact will depend further action by the respondents Considering, therefore, the matter from this aspect the impugned order passed by the Appellate Sub-Committee cannot be sustained as valid.

9. In the above view of the matter it is unnecessary to examine the correctness of the second contention raised by Mr Moitra and I do not express any opinion on it

10. The result is, the petition succeeds in part The impugned order passed by the Appellate Sub-Committee is quashed The matter will now go back to the Appellate Sub-Committee for a fresh decision in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made above All other objections are left open

11. The Rule is made absolute to the extent indicated above But there will be an order as to costs.

12. Let a writ both in the nature of mandamus and certiorari issue accordingly confusion into the working of the system."

There are further pertinent observations in Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 11th Edition, at pages 17 and 18, which are also worth noting. They are as below:—

"The equivocation or ambiguity of words and phrases, and especially such as are general, is said by Lord Bacon to be the great sophism of sophisms (Lord Bacon, Advancement of Learning, b. 2). They have frequently more than one equally obvious and popular meaning. Words used with reference to one subject-matter or set of circumstances may convey a meaning quite different from that which the same words used with reference to another set of circumstances and another subject-matter would convey. General words admit of indefinite extension or restriction, according to the subject to which they relate, and the scope and object in contemplation."

This is why the general words "belonging to" have only the particular meaning of "being constituted in and functioning in" a particular area in the context of our case. The suggestion that the words "belonging to" must mean that the Police Force must be employed by a Provincial Government is not, therefore, admissible in the context noted above. Another observation in Maxwell at pages 19 and 20 is also apposite. It says:

"Extrinsic evidence of the circumstances or surrounding facts in which a will or contract has been made, so far as they throw light on the matter to which the document relates, and on the condition and position and course of dealing of the persons who made it or are mentioned in it, is always admitted as indispensable for the purpose not only of identifying such persons and things, but also of explaining the language, whenever it is latently ambiguous or susceptible of various meanings or shades of meaning, and of applying it sensibly to the circumstances to which it relates."

External evidence in our case is the existence of a Central Government Police Force prior to the enactment of the Act of 1946. As the Act does not say that the said Police Force was thereafter to be a Provincial Force, the expression "belonging to" cannot be interpreted to mean that the said Police Force must thereafter belong to a Provincial Government. To the same effect is the observation of Lord Halsbury in Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners, (1892) AC 498, 502, which runs as follows:—

1969 Delhi/22 XII G-26

"The subject-matter with which the Legislature was dealing and the facts existing at the time with respect to which the Legislature was legislating are legitimate topics to consider in ascertaining what was the object and purpose of the Legislature in passing the Act."

The state of things existing at the time of the passing of the Act as showing the circumstances in which it was passed was taken into account as a relevant consideration in several other cases such as R. v. Dean of Hereford, (1870) LR 5 QB 196, in Green v. The Queen, (1876) 1 AC 513, 531, and Mayor Alderman, Citizens of the City of Manchester v. Lyons, (1882) 22 Ch D 287 (302).

10. How the existence of a fact preceding the legislation influenced the interpretation of the legislation is further illustrated by the Supreme Court decision in Messrs Bridge and Roof Co. v. Union of India, AIR 1963 SC 1474. In that case, the contribution to the Employees Provident Fund by the Company was to be a certain percentage of the "basic wages" paid by it to its employees. The definition of 'basic wages' excluded 'bonus'. On behalf of the employees, it was argued that 'bonus' meant only the profit bonus, that is to say the share in the profits which is given by the employer to the employees by way of bonus. It was, however, brought to the notice of the Court that when the Employees Provident Funds Act, 1952, was passed, several other kinds of bonus were known as being paid by employers to the employees. The kinds of bonus other than the profit bonus then being paid were the production bonus, the festival bonus and the customary bonus. The Supreme Court observed that the legislature could not have been unaware that the different kinds of bonus were being paid when it passed the Act in 1952. Therefore, the contention of the employees that the word 'bonus' used in the Act would mean only the profit bonus could not be accepted. In the context of the circumstances and the facts in which the legislation was passed, the word "bonus" must have applied to all kinds of bonus which were being paid at the time the Act of 1952 was passed. On the same reasoning it must be said that the Delhi Special Police Establishment as a Central Government Police Force was known to the Central Legislature as existing prior to the passing of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946. The Central Legislature, therefore, must have regarded it as a police force belonging to a part of British India within the meaning of entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act.

11. The nature and the subject-matter of the Act is the extension of the jurisdiction and powers of the Special Police Force to other areas of British India. The offences to be investigated by the Delhi Special Police Establishment are to be notified by the Central Government under Section 3. Similarly, the extension of these powers and jurisdiction to other areas in British India outside the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi was to be done by the Central Government under Section 5(1). The fact that the exclusive power in these respects is given to the Central Government would show that the Delhi Special Police Establishment was always intended to be a Central Government Police Force. If, as argued for the petitioner, the Delhi Special Police Establishment was to be in the employment of a Provincial Government, then it is not understood how the Central Government could be expected to issue a Notification under Section 3 and an Order under Section 5(1) in respect of a police force which is of a Provincial Government. Under Section 4(1) the Superintendence of the Delhi Special Police Establishment is also vested in the Central Government. This also negatives the argument that this special police force was intended to belong to the Provincial Government or to the Government of a Chief Commissioner's Province which is not the Central Government if any such thing was at all possible under the Government of India Act in view of Sections 94(3) and 100(4) thereof. Further, the jurisdiction and powers of the said Special Police Force could not be extended outside the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi except with the consent of the Provincial Government concerned. This would also show that the Delhi Special Police Establishment was not to belong to any Provincial Government or any other Chief Commissioner's Province other than the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. The external circumstances as well as the internal evidence of the provisions of the Act itself would show that the expression "belonging to" in entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List did not mean that the police force contemplated therein must be under the employment of a Provincial Government or of a Chief Commissioner as distinct from the Central Government.

12. Under Section 2 of the Police Act, 1861, the entire police establishment under a Provincial or State Government shall be deemed to be one police force. The Central Legislature in 1946 was, therefore, aware that the use of the word "under" showed the employment of the police establishment by the Provincial or the State Government. This concept may perhaps be said to be embodied in entry 3 of the Provincial Legislative List but entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List did not describe the police force as being "under" the Provincial Government. On the other hand, it used the words "belonging to any part of British India". Apparently, therefore, the concept of being employed by a particular Government was not to be the basis of entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List. The use of different words shows that the basis was also to be different. For the reasons stated above, the most appropriate meaning to be given to the words "belonging to" would be "constituted in and functioning in" a part of British India. These words leave the question as to who was to be the employer of the police force open. The circumstances existing before 1946 were however, that the police force was actually employed by the Central Government. The Ordinance and the Act of 1946, therefore, dealt with the Central Government Police Force on the footing that it could be constituted and be functioning as a police force contemplated by entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List. Another consideration in construing the Legislative List is that they have to be construed broadly and not in a narrow or pedantic sense. This rule has been established by the Federal Court decision in re. C P & Berar Sales of Motor Spirit and Lubricants Taxation Act, 1938, AIR 1939 FC 1, and has been reiterated by the Supreme Court in several decisions including the decision in Waverly Jute Mills Co. v. Raymon and Co. India (P) Ltd., AIR 1963 SC 90. All that is necessary, therefore, is to consider whether the words "belonging to a part of British India" were capable of bearing the meaning "constituted in and functioning in" a part of British India. If they were capable of being so construed and if this construction fitted with the existing fact, we are left with no option but to hold that this was the meaning of the said words. The final consideration is the presumption in favour of the constitutionality of a legislative enactment.

The Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, is now 22 years old and its validity has never been doubted though thousands of investigations and prosecutions must have taken place thereunder. If the argument for the petitioner is to be accepted, then, from the very inception, it was illegal for the Central Government to employ a Special Police Force and such a police Force could not be constituted in and could not function in Delhi. We see no reason at all to give our support to such an astounding proposition leading to such absurd results. In Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Justice S. R. Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538 at p 548 Das, C. J. observed as follows:—

into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation." In Mahomed Hanif Quareshi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1958 SC 731, where the Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of various State legislations banning slaughter of certain animals, references were made to religious books, reports of committees, five year plans, memoranda etc. and the above observation in Dalmia's case was reiterated at p. 741. In Hamdard Dawakhana v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 554 the above observation was reiterated and the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the legislation under consideration were taken into account in determining its constitutionality. We, therefore, find that the Delhi Special Police Establishment, from its very inception, was a Police Force belonging to a part of British India within the meaning of Entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act, 1935.

POINT NO. (2):—

13. The matters considered under the first point very much reduce the discussion under the second point. On the commencement of the Constitution, entry 80 of the Union list in the 7th Schedule of the Constitution took the place of entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the 7th Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935. In the place of the Governors' Provinces and the Chief Commissioners' Provinces of the Government of India Act, 1935, were substituted Part A and Part C States, by the Constitution. Therefore, the word "State" came to replace the words "Governor's Province" and "Chief Commissioner's Province" in entry 80 of the Union List. This change was merely nominal. In substance, entry 80 of the Union List is the same as entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act. To bring the provisions of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946 along with other enactments in accord with the provisions of the Constitution the Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, was issued under Article 372 of the Constitution. This substituted the words 'Part A States' for the 'Governor's Province' and the words 'Part C States' for the 'Chief Commissioner's Province' in the Act. This was not meant to be a substantial difference at all. Then we come to the amendment in the Act effected by Act No. 26 of 1952. The amendments were:—

The substitution of the words for "the State of Delhi for the investigation of certain offences committed in connection with matters concerning Departments of the Central Government" by the words "in Delhi for the investigation of certain offences in Part C States."

In Section 2, for the words "in that State" the words "in any part C State" shall be substituted. In Section 2(2) and 2(3) for the words "the State of Delhi" the words "any Part C State" shall be substituted. In Section 3 the words "Committed in connection with matters concerning Departments of the Central Government" shall be omitted.

14. Each of the amendments may now be considered. The first change was the substitution of the words "in Delhi" for the words "for the State of Delhi." It was argued for the petitioner that the words "for the State of Delhi" had meant that the Delhi Special Police Establishment were a police force of the State of Delhi which corresponded to former Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. While it is true that the Act of 1946 had constituted the Delhi Special Police Establishment for the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. It had never meant that the Delhi Special Police Establishment was a police force of the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. On the contrary, the Act of 1946 constituted a police force under the superintendence and control of the Central Government for the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. We have already stated that the Delhi Special Police Establishment was a Central Government Police Force. It, however, belonged to Delhi inasmuch as it was constituted and functioned in Delhi. In respect of its political or governmental character, it was under the control of the Central Government. In respect of its constitution and functioning, it was located in Delhi. Therefore, the words "for the State of Delhi" or "for the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi" which existed in the Act prior to the amendment of 1952 had never meant that the Delhi Special Police Establishment was a police force of the State of Delhi or of the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi in the sense that it was under the control of the Chief Commissioner of the Part C State of Delhi or of the Chief Commissioner's Province of Delhi. Therefore, the substitution of the words "in Delhi" for the words "for the State of Delhi" did not in any way change the constitution and the functioning or the nature of the Delhi Special Police Establishment. They remained the same.

14A. The reason for the above-mentioned change is to be found in the substitution of the words "the State of Delhi" by the Words "in any part C State". The purpose of the amendment was to give the Delhi Special Police Establishment the original jurisdiction and powers not only in the Part C State of Delhi but in all Part C States. As Parliament had plenary power of legislation for any matter whatever under Article 246(4) in respect of Part C States, this change was within the legislative competence of Parliament. Mithan Lal v State of Delhi AIR 1958 SC 682. Parliament could create a police force or a Special Police Force in addition to the existing police force for the Part C State of Delhi and for all the Part C States. So long as such a police force was given the original jurisdiction and powers only in respect of the Part C States, no objection could be taken to such a legislation. As the words "belonging to any State" in Entry 80 of the Union List have been construed by us as meaning "constituted in and functioning in any State" and as the original jurisdiction of the Delhi Special Police Establishment would after the amendment exist in all the Part C States instead of Delhi alone, the change cannot be considered to be contrary to entry 80 of the Union List in any way. For, the Delhi Special Police Establishment even after the amendment of 1952 continued to belong to Delhi in the sense that it was constituted in Delhi and was primarily functioning there and in other Part C States. It could function even as a State Police Force in the Part C States inasmuch as under Article 239 of the Constitution, the administration of the Part C States was to be carried on by the President and Parliament had full powers of legislation for Part C States under Article 246(4) of the Constitution. Thus is why according to Section 3(60) (a) and (b) of the General Clauses Act, "State Government" as respects anything done before the commencement of the Constitution or after the commencement of the Constitution but before the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, meant "in a Part C State," the Central Government.

15. The learned counsel for the petitioner has in this connection argued that the Part C States were legal entities distinct from the Central Government. In support of this proposition he relied on the Supreme Court decision in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Moulia Bux, (1962) 2 SCR 794 = (AIR 1962 SC 145) and in Saty Dev Bushahri v. Padam Dev (1955) 1 SCR 549 = (AIR 1954 SC 587). But it may be pointed out with great respect that the above-mentioned decisions were given in a totally different context and circumstances. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court were not considering the question whether for all purposes, a Part C State was a distinct entity separate from the Union of India. Further, the Part C States were to be administered by the President under Article 239(1) of the Constitution. Under Section 3 (3) (a) and

(b) of the General Clauses Act, the Central Government prior to the commencement of the Constitution meant the Governor-General-in-Council and after the commencement of the Constitution meant the President. In Jawantilal Amratlal v. F. N. Rana, AIR 1964 SC 648, the Supreme Court speaking through Shah, J., observed that there was a distinction between functions which vested in the Union of India and those which vested in the President as such and the latter were not the powers of the Union Government. It is to be noted that in the enumeration of the powers of the President as such in the paragraph (12) of the report, the Supreme Court did not mention Article 239 of the Constitution. The Court apparently regarded the powers of the President under Article 239 and the powers of the Union Government. Therefore, the powers to govern the Part C States were vested under Article 239(1) in the Union Government or the Central Government. It is unnecessary for the purpose of this case to consider whether the Central Government in administering Part C States had a different capacity than the capacity of the Central Government in administering the rest of India. Whatever its capacity the fact remains that the Central Government had the fullest executive and the legislative power in respect of the Part C States. Even when Parliament passed the Government of Part C States Act, 1951, creating legislative assemblies for them, Section 21 thereof provided that the legislative assembly of the State of Delhi shall not have power to make laws with respect to public order, police including railway police and the offences against laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in the State List and the Concurrent List. Similarly, under S. 39 of the said Act, the Consolidated Fund of the Part C States consisted only of revenues received by the State in relation to any matter with respect to which the legislative assembly of the said Part C States had power to make laws. The moneys out of the Consolidated Fund were to be appropriated only in accordance with the Act. It follows, therefore, that the executive, legislative and financial powers regarding the police in the Part C State of Delhi remained vested in the Central Government throughout. The Delhi Special Police Establishment could therefore be lawfully constituted and operated only by the Central Government.

16. Another change made by the Act of 1952 was that the functions of the Delhi Special Police Establishment were not restricted to offences committed in connection with Departments of the Central Government. No constitutional significance can be attached to this change. It was open to Parliament to enlarge the original jurisdiction and powers of the Delhi Special Police Establishment in the Part C States. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the Act of 1952 did not make any change in the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, which could be said to conflict with Entry 80 of the Union List of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution or with any other provision of the Constitution.

17. Point No. 3 arises only because of the changes made in the Constitution by the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956. Inter alia, the Part C States were abolished and their place was taken by the Union Territories. As Entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act, 1935, had referred to a police force belonging to any part of British India including not only the Governors' Provinces but also the Chief Commissioners' Provinces, Entry 80 of the Union List of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution should have, strictly speaking, referred to Part A and Part C States. Since all these were States, the word "State" was perhaps thought sufficient to denote the whole of India inasmuch as the Governor's Provinces and the Chief Commissioner's Provinces of the Government of India Act, 1935, were completely covered by the three kinds of States under the Constitution. However, the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, for the first time created two kinds of territories in India, viz., the territory of States and the territories of the Union, viz., the Union Territories. While the Part C States were at least in name "States", their successors were "Union" territories even in name. So far as the Constitution was concerned, a Union Territory was no longer a State.

In our recent Judgment in C. W. No. 543 of 1968 =(AIR 1969 Delhi 246) H. L. Rodhey etc. v. Delhi Administration etc. delivered on the 14th August 1968, we had occasion to point out that the General Clauses Act as adapted under Article 372 of the Constitution only applied to the interpretation of the Constitution. The changes introduced in the said Act by the subsequent adaptation made under Article 372-A consequent on the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, were not applicable to the interpretation of the Constitution. Consequently, the definition of a "State" in Section 358(b) of the General Clauses Act whereby a Union Territory is included in the definition of "State" after the commencement of the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, is not applicable to the interpretation of the Constitution. As pointed out by us, in our decision referred to above, this disinction between the adaptations made in the General Clauses Act under Articles 372 and 372-A of the Constitution was unfortunately not brought to the notice of the Supreme Court. This was why in T. M. Kannian v. Income Tax Officer, Pondicherry, AIR 1968 SC 637 relying on Ram Kishore Sen v. Union of India, AIR 1966 SC 644, it was assumed that the definition of the General Clauses Act in Section 3(58) (b) including Union Territories into "States" was applicable to the interpretation of the Constitution. We may, however, for the purpose of the case before us concede straightway in favour of the petitioner that the meaning of the word "State" used in Entry 80 of the Union List of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution excludes Union Territory. The learned counsel for the petitioner, therefore, urges that the Delhi Special Police Establishment is a police force now belonging to a Union Territory of Delhi and not to any State. Therefore, its continuance after the commencement of the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, is contrary to the provisions of Entry 80 of the Union List of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. The existence of the Delhi Special Police Establishment thereafter became unconstitutional with the result that it cannot exercise any powers under the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946.

In considering this argument we have to first remember that the change in the Act whereby "Union Territories" are substituted for "Part C States" has been brought about not by any legislation of Parliament but merely by the Adaptation of Laws Order (No. III) of 1956 promulgated by the President in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Article 372-A(1) of the Constitution which runs as follows:—

"For the purposes of bringing the provisions of any law in force in India or in any part thereof, immediately before the commencement of the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, into accord with the provisions of the Constitution as amended by that Act, the President may by order made before the 1st day of November, 1957, make such adaptations and modifications of the law, whether by way of repeal or amendment, as may be necessary or expedient, and provide that the law shall as from such date as may be specified in the order have effect subject to the adaptations and modifications so made, and any such adaptation or modification shall not be questioned in any Court of law."

The first question, therefore, is whether the change in the Act of 1946 was validly made by the Adaptation. It would be seen that the change had to be made to bring the Act into accord with the provisions of the Constitution as amended by the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956. For, the Part C States had been substituted by the Union Territories and, therefore, it was no longer possible for the Act of 1946 to refer to Part C States thereafter. This being the case the ending words of Article 372-A(1) ensure that "any such adaptation or modification shall not be questioned in any Court of law." We have, therefore, to consider whether the Act of 1946 so adapted is in any way in conflict with the provisions of Entry 80 of the Union List. At the outset, it may be stated that the very purpose of the Adaptation was to bring the Act into accord with the provisions of the Constitution as amended by the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956. We have also seen that the Part C States having been substituted by the Union Territories, the Adaptation was properly made and that cannot be called into question in any Court of law. It would, therefore, be strange and prima facie unacceptable contention that because of this very adaptation, the Act of 1946 now conflicts with Entry 80 of the Union List of the Constitution.

18. The contention of the petitioner is based on a fundamental confusion of thought which has to be clarified for the proper understanding of the correct legal position. The contention of the petitioner firstly ignores the whole history of the Constitution and the Act of 1946. We know that the Act of 1946 was validly enacted under Entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act. For, it constituted a police force belonging to a part of British India thereunder. We also know that on the commencement of the Constitution, the Act of 1946 continued to be valid in view of Article 372(1) of the Constitution. Even if the distribution of legislative power under the Constitution had been different than the one under the Government of India Act in this respect, nevertheless the Act of 1946 would have continued to be valid. It is now well established that the words "subject to the other provisions of this Constitution" do not refer to the distribution of the legislative powers in the three lists of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. However, the distribution of legislative powers in the Constitution in this respect remained the same inasmuch as Entry 80 of List 1 of the Constitution was in the same terms as Entry 39 of the Federal Legislative List of the Government of India Act, and therefore, the Delhi Special Police Establishment was also a police force belonging to a Part C State as contemplated by Entry 80 of the Union List of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. This is why Parliament was competent to legislate to amend the Act in 1952. It cannot be disputed, therefore, that the Act as amended in 1952, therefore, continued to be a valid enactment.

19. Secondly, it is necessary to remember that in 1956 Parliament did not amend the Act. The substitution of the words "Union Territories" in place of the words "Part C States" in the Act was made by the President acting under Article 372-A by the Adaptation of Laws (No III) Order, 1956. The adaptation had to be made as the words "Part C States" would have been meaningless and had to be substituted by the words "Union Territories" after the commencement of the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956. The adaptation actually brought the Act into accord with the Constitution and cannot, therefore, be challenged in any Court of law.

20. We must pause here to consider what is the grievance of the petitioner. Its grievance is that the Delhi Special Police Establishment is not entitled to exist and operate under the Act of 1946. To succeed in this contention, the petitioner was bound to prove that the legislation of 1946 enacting the Act and that of 1952 amending the Act were ultra vires the Constitution. The petitioner has not succeeded in doing so. The petitioner cannot validly contend that the continuance of the Delhi Special Police Establishment in any way depended on the adaptation made in 1956. The adaptation was made to bring the Act into conformity with the Constitution inasmuch as the Part C States were replaced by Union Territories in the Constitution. It can not be said, therefore, that this adaptation itself brought the Act into conflict with Entry 80 of List 1 of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. It is only if Parliament were in need of legislating to constitute a Special Police Force belonging to a Union Territory that such legislation would have met with the objection that Entry 80 of List 1 contemplates only a special police force belonging to a State and not to a Union Territory. But this question does not arise as Parliament had no occasion to legislate after the Adaptation of 1956 to constitute a special police force belonging to Union Territories. The Special Police Force already existed. Its existence and continuance is not invalidated by the fact that the Part C States to which it belonged were henceforth called Union Territories.

In S. I Corporation (P) Ltd v Secretary, Board of Revenue AIR 1964 SC 207 the Supreme Court had to consider the contention that an agreement which was validly entered into under Article 278 of the Constitution was automatically invalidated by the deletion of that Article and that the agreement was thereafter contrary to the Constitution, in particular to Article 277 thereof. The contention was repelled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the following words:—

"An obvious fallacy underlies this ingenious argument. The validity of an agreement depends upon the existence of power at the time it was entered into. Its duration will be limited by its terms or by the conditions imposed on the power itself. Article 278 conferred a power upon the Union and the B State to enter into an agreement which would continue in force for a period not exceeding ten years from the commencement of the Constitution. The agreement in question fell squarely within the scope of the power. That agreement, therefore, would have its full force unless the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, in terms avoided it. The said amendment was only prospective in operation and it could not have affected the validity of the agreement. We, therefore, hold that the impugned assessment orders were not validly made by the sales-tax authorities in exercise of the power saved under Article 277 of the Constitution."

21. In this connection, it would be instructive to refer to the following decisions. In Bihar Mines Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 887 the majority held that the mineral lease, though granted prior to the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1948, was not an existing lease within the meaning of that Act inasmuch as it vested in the State in 1949 and thereupon became a new lease. The majority did not, therefore, consider the further question whether the terms of the said lease could be modified under the Mining Leases (Modification of Terms) Rules, 1956 but the minority held that the lease continued to be an existing lease in spite of its vesting in this State. The minority, therefore, considered the question, whether the lease could be modified under the 1956 Rules. Counsel for the appellant had submitted that the 1956 Rules were invalid as they were laws with respect to acquisition of property for State purposes which could be made only by the State Legislature in view of Entry 36 of the State List as it stood before the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, and as they did not provide for payment of compensation. This contention was, however, repelled by the following observation (at page 892):—

"The Central Government professed to make the Rules in exercise of its powers under Section 7 of the pre-Constitution 1948 Act. The power to make the Rules was conferred on the Government by Section 7 of the 1948 Act and not by Entry 36, List II of the Constitution. As the Rules did not provide for payment of compensation in cases of reduction of the terms of the lease in conformity with Section 7(2)(b), they might not have been originally valid; but they purported to have been made under the 1948 Act. In view of Section 29 of the 1957 Act, the Rules, must now be deemed to have been made under the 1957 Act as if that Act was in force when the Rules were made. The validity of the Rules, must now be judged with reference to the 1957 Act. As the Rules are in conformity with the 1957 Act they must be regarded as validly made under it."

It would follow, therefore, that the Notifications issued by the Central Government under Sections 3 and 5 of the Act and the consent given by the State Governments under Section 6 of the Act are to be considered under the provisions of the Act which is valid and not with reference to adaptation made therein in 1956.

21A. In Inder Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1957 SC 510, the question was whether the Notification issued under Ordinance No. 9 of 1949 was valid. This Ordinance had been promulgated by the Rajpramukh whose power to legislate came to an end under Article 385 of the Constitution when the legislature of the State was constituted. On the date of the Notification, the Rajpramukh had ceased to have the power to make the Ordinance. The Supreme Court upheld the Notification in the following words:—

"It cannot be contended that the Notification dated 20-6-1953 is bad, because after the Constitution came into force, the Rajpramukh derived his authority to legislate from Article 385, and that under that Article his authority ceased when the legislature of the State was constituted. A Notification issued under Section 3 of the Ordinance was not an independent piece of legislation such as could be enacted only by the then competent legislative authority of the State, but merely an exercise of a power conferred by a Statute which had been previously enacted by the appropriate legislative authority. The exercise of such a power is referable not to the legislative competence of the Rajpramukh but to Ordinance No. IX of 1949, and provided Section 3 is valid, the validity of the Notification is co-extensive with that of the Ordinance. If the Ordinance did not come to an end by reason of the fact that the authority of the Rajpramukh to legislate came to an end neither did the power to issue a Notification which was conferred therein. The true position is that it is in his character as the authority on whom power was conferred under Section 3 of the Ordinance that the Rajpramukh issued the impugned Notification and not as the legislative authority of the State."

22. It is well established that a pre-Constitution law made by a competent authority will not become invalid after the Constitution merely because it could not have been enacted under the Constitution because of a change in the distribution of legislative powers. This is why numerous pre-Constitution Acts are still in force though under the distribution of legislative powers in the Constitution they could not have been enacted by the same legislative authority after the Constitution. Therefore, the validity of the Act of 1946 as adapted in 1956 is not to be judged by the test whether such legislation would now be competent to be undertaken by Parliament. The question is not whether Parliament can now enact such a legislation. The question is whether the legislation which has already been enacted validly prior to 1956 becomes invalid merely because of the adaptation made into it by the President under Article 372-A of the Constitution. So put, the question can have only one answer and that is, that the adaptation of 1956 cannot make the Act unconstitutional.

23. Alternatively, even as a matter of textual interpretation, the adaptation made in 1956 is not contrary to Entry 80 of List 1. It is true that Section 3(58)(b) of the General Clauses Act does not apply to the interpretation of the Constitution and hence the word "State" in Entry 80 of List 1 cannot be construed to include "Union Territories" relying on the definition of "State" introduced therein by the adaptation of 1956. But the said definition applies to the construction of the Act of 1946 as adapted in 1956. What is the effect? Even if the adaptation had not been made in the Act of 1946, the word "State" therein would have included 'Union Territories' because of the above-mentioned definition. If "States" according to Section 3(58)(b) of the General Clauses Act include the 'Union Territories', the converse also must be true and a Union Territory must be included in a State. Therefore, a Special Force belonging to a Union Territory would be construed as belonging to a State. So viewed, the adaptation does not conflict with Entry 80 of List 1.

24. That the converse use of definitions in the General Clauses Act, in the manner made above, is permissible will be shown by the following two decisions. In Union of India v A. L. Rallia Ram, AIR 1963 SC 1685 paragraph (12), the correspondence constituting the contract was in the name of the Government of India and was not expressed to be in the name of the Governor-General as required by Section 175(3) of the Government of India Act, 1935. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court held that the requirements of Section 175(3) were substantially complied with and observed as follows:

"The correspondence between the parties ultimately resulting in the acceptance note, in our judgment, amounts to a contract expressed to be made by the Governor-General and therefore, by the Governor-General, because it was the Governor-General, who had invited the tender through the Director of Purchases, and it was the Governor-General who through the Chief Director of Purchases accepted the tender of the respondent subject to the conditions prescribed therein."

The equation of the Government with the Governor-General was obviously based on the definition of the "Central Government" in Section 3(6) (a) of the General Clauses Act which stated that the Central Government in relation to anything done before the commencement of the Constitution meant the Governor-General. Similarly, in Ram Chander Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1968 Puj 178, the order was expressed to be in the name of the Governor as required by Article 166(2) of the Constitution. Nevertheless, the order was held to have substantially complied with the provisions of Article 166(2) apparently because the State Government is defined in Section 3(60) of the General Clauses Act to mean the Governor.

25. We, therefore, hold that the Act of 1946 continued to be valid in spite of the adaptation made therein by the Adaptation of Laws Order (No 3) of 1956.

POINT NO (4) —

26. The scheme of the Act of 1946 is that it would apply to only such offences as would be notified under Section 3 of the Act by the Central Government. Without such a notification, the Act would not have any real application at all. It is urged for the petitioner that the authority given to the Central Government is unfettered and unchannelled. It is pointed out that the original preamble of the Act of 1946 contained the words "for the investigation of certain offences committed in connection with matters concerning Departments of the Central Government." But, these words were omitted by the Amendment of 1952. Thereafter, there was no indication by the legislature as to what offences were to be notified by the Central Government under Section 3. The effect is that the Central Government can notify all possible offences thereunder and thus enjoy an arbitrary and unfettered power. This delegation, contends the petitioner, is excessive and, therefore, unconstitutional.

27. In reply the learned Counsel for the respondents pointed out firstly that Section 3 is an instance of conditional legislation as distinguished from delegated legislation and that secondly even if it is delegated legislation it is not excessive. In appreciating the precise nature of Section 3, it is to be remembered that the Act of 1946 creates a Special Police Force in addition to the ordinary police force which already existed. The ordinary police force had several functions to discharge under the Police Act of 1861. Out of these several functions, only one function, viz., investigation of offences is conferred on this Special Police Force. Even this function is not to extend to all the offences which the ordinary police force is to investigate but only to those offences which are notified by the Central Government under Section 3. It will be seen, therefore, that even in the Union Territories the investigation by the Special Police is limited only to the notified offences and that the Special Police is not concerned with any other functions of the ordinary police. As far as the States are concerned, the extension of the jurisdiction and powers of the police is dependent entirely on the consent of the State Government under Section 6. Such a consent can presumably be withdrawn by a State Government. The jurisdiction of the Special Police will not continue after the withdrawal of the consent. The power of the Central Government is, therefore, limited at both ends, viz., in conferring the initial jurisdiction and powers and in extending them to the States.

28. If, "in the case of conditional legislation the power of legislation is exercised by the legislature conditionally, leaving to the discretion of an external authority the time and manner of carrying its legislation into effect as also the determination of the area to which it is to extend" (Per Kapur, J. in AIR 1960 SC 554 at p. 567) then, the power given by the legislature to the Central Government in Section 3 relates to the manner in which the Act is to be applied. That is to say, it is for the Central Government to decide what offences should be investigated by the Special Police in the Union Territories and for the State Governments to decide what offences should be investigated by this Special Police in their respective States by giving consent to such investigation under Section 6 of the Act. In numerous instances, the Courts have upheld the grant of such a power to the executive by the legislature. In the State of Bombay v. Narothamdas, AIR 1951 SC 69, Section 4 of the Bombay

City Civil Court Act had empowered the Provincial Government to invest the City Court by notification with jurisdiction of such value not exceeding rupees twenty-five thousand as may be specified in the notification. The Supreme Court held it to be conditional legislation and as such valid.

It is true that the upper limit of rupees twenty-five thousand was laid down by the legislature in that case. But in our case also the Act of 1946 creates only the Special Police keeping the ordinary police intact. In the nature of things, therefore, only such offences would be notified for investigation by the Special Police as could not be equally well investigated by the ordinary police. This is a built-in limitation on the power of the Central Government. In the Delhi Laws Act case, AIR 1951 SC 332, the Central Government had been empowered to select such State laws as they might find suitable for application to Part C States and to apply such laws to the Part C States by notification. There was no indication in the Act as to what laws should be applied to the Part C States by the Central Government and apparently there was no limit on the power of the Central Government as to what laws should be so applied. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court upheld the power on the ground that the legislative policy underlying the Act was that Part C States were small areas which did not have constitutional legislatures and it would not be possible for Parliament to go on legislating for them in respect of subjects included in the State list. It was, therefore, more convenient to give the power to the Central Government to apply the Provincial laws to the Part C States.

It would be seen that the power given to the Central Government under Section 3 of the Act of 1946 is much more limited than the power given to the Central Government by the Delhi Laws Act. The powers to extend the life of an Ordinance given to the Rajpramukh was also held to be conditional legislation in AIR 1957 SC 510. In Basant Kumar v. Eagle Rolling Mills Ltd., AIR 1964 SC 1260, the Central Government was empowered by the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948, to decide to what factories the Act should apply in the same way as the Central Government is empowered under Section 3 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, to decide what offences should be investigated by the Special Police. The Supreme Court held that this was conditional legislation and was, therefore, valid. Assuming that there was an element of delegation, the Court held that there was enough guidance given by the relevant provisions of the Act and the very scheme of the Act itself. In The Empress v. Burah, (1877-78) 5 Ind App 178 (PC), the Lt Governor of Bengal was given the power to extend all or any of the provisions contained in a statute to a certain district at such time he considered proper. The Privy Council held that the proper legislature had exercised its judgment as to place, persons, laws, powers and result of that judgment had been to legislate conditionally as to those things. The legislation was, therefore, valid as conditional legislation. In Baxter v. Ahway, (1909) 8 CLR 526, the executive was given the power to notify to which goods the prohibition of imports was to apply just as the Central Government in our case is given the power to notify which offence would be investigated by the Special Police. This was held to be conditional legislation by the High Court of Australia.

29. Recently a Bench of seven Judges of the Supreme Court reviewed the whole case law on the subject of delegated legislation in the Delhi Municipal Corporation v. Birla Cotton Spinning & Weaving Mills Ltd. CA 1857 and 1858 of 1967 D/ 23-2-1968 (AIR 1968 SC 1232). The question was whether Section 150 of the Delhi Municipal Corporation Act suffered from the vice of excessive delegation. Chief Justice Wanchoo speaking for the majority stated that the safeguards against the arbitrary exercise of the powers under the said Section were to be found in various provisions of the Act itself. Such implied guidance was sufficient to validate the delegation of the legislative powers.

30. We are, therefore, of the view that firstly Section 3 of the Act of 1946 is an instance of conditional legislation. Secondly, even if it is assumed to be delegated legislation, the safeguards and limitations on the power of the Central Government to be exercised under Section 3 are to be found in the fact that the ordinary police already existed to investigate the ordinary offences and, therefore, the offences to be notified by the Central Government would only be such offences as cannot be well investigated by the ordinary police. Lastly, the investigation by the Special Police cannot be done in the States at all except by the consent of the State Governments. We, therefore, hold that Section 3 of the Act is valid.

31. The original jurisdiction of the Delhi Special Police Establishment under Section 2(2) extends throughout the Union Territories in connection with the investigation of offences committed therein. Under Section 2(3), the Investigating Officer is to exercise all the powers of the officer-in-charge of a police station in the area in which he is for the time being and he shall be deemed to be officer-in-charge of a police station discharging the functions of such an officer within the limits of his station. Under Section 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the original jurisdiction of an Investigating Officer is confined to the investigation of the offences taking place in the local area or having a territorial nexus to it in precisely the same way as the local jurisdiction of a criminal Court is restricted in accordance with the provisions contained in Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As distinguished from the jurisdiction, the powers of the Investigating Officer are not restricted to any such local area. Under Section 54, a Police Officer may arrest certain persons anywhere. Under Section 58, a Police officer may pursue an offender into other jurisdictions. Section 165 enabling search and seizure also does not restrict these powers of the Police to any local area. Under Section 166(1) and (3), the police can enter other local areas for investigation. Sections 160 and 161 also do not place any restrictions as to local areas on the power of the police to examine witnesses. Therefore, the Special Police operating under the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946 are already possessed of powers to investigate anywhere in India an offence taking place in or having territorial nexus with a Union Territory.

The enactment of Section 5 would not have been necessary if it had merely intended to give a power to the Special Police to go beyond the Union Territories to investigate an offence provided it is committed within a Union Territory or is connected with it. For, such powers were already available in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The language of Section 5 makes it clear that it enables the Special Police to investigate an offence which has been committed outside the Union Territory. For, Section 5 (1) says that the Central Government may extend beyond the Union Territories the powers and the jurisdiction of the Special Police to investigate an offence notified under Section 3. It does not say that the offence should have been committed within the Union Territories. Section 5 (2) says that when the jurisdiction and powers of the Special Police is so extended to any such area (meaning an area beyond the Union Territories) the Special Police may discharge the functions of a Police Officer in that area (meaning beyond the Union Territories) and shall while so discharging such functions be deemed to be a member of the police force of that area and be vested with the powers of a police officer belonging to that police force (that is to say, a police force belonging to an area outside the Union Territories). Section 5 (3) confers the powers of an officer-in-charge of a police station situated outside the Union Territories on the Special Police investigating an offence within the limits of such a police station. Nothing can be clearer to show that Section 5 confers the same powers on the Special Police as are enjoyed by the ordinary police of the local area outside the Union Territories in which the offence is being investigated including the power of an officer-in-charge of the police station. We have, therefore, no difficulty in rejecting the contention that Section 5 does not enable the Special Police to investigate an offence not committed within a Union Territory.

32. The Bombay Police Act, 1951, no doubt consolidates the police forces of the different parts of the State into one common police force. It could not, however, repeal the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, authorising the Special Police to go into the State of Maharashtra with the consent of the Maharashtra Government to investigate an offence which has been committed there. The consent given by the Government of Maharashtra under Section 6 of the Act is in the form of a letter dated 2nd July 1960 from the Government of Maharashtra acting through Shri J. C. Agarwal, Deputy Secretary to that Government in the Home Department. It is Annexure L at page 141 of the paper-book. It is addressed to the Secretary, Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs and says that the Government of Maharashtra consents to the Delhi Special Police Establishment exercising powers and jurisdiction in the State of Maharashtra for the investigation of offences specified in the Notifications of the Government of India issued under Section 3 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946. Out of the four notifications which are mentioned in the said letter, we are concerned with the very first Notification, viz., Notification No. 7-5-55-AVD dated the 6th November 1956, which is reproduced as Annexure R2/B at page 204 of the paper-book. The offences involved in the present case, viz., Sections 409 and 477-A of the Indian Penal Code, and conspiracies to commit those offences are all included in the Notification of the 6th November 1956 issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs under Section 3 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act. It is true that the letter of consent itself does not set out the offence to the investigation of which the consent was given. But it is a legitimate method of describing the offences to refer to the Central Government Notification under Section 3 of the Act dated the 6th November 1956 and to say that the offences described therein are the offences to the investigation of which the consent is given. In adopting this method of describing the offences, the letter of consent incorporated the description of the offences committed in the letter dated the 6th November, 1956 into the consent letter itself.

33. Learned counsel for the petitioner further argued that the said Notification issued under Section 3 has since then been repealed and superseded by another Notification though in the new Notification also all the offences which are being investigated in the present case are included. Learned counsel, however, argues that the repeal of the Notification under Section 3 which was referred to in the consent letter prevents the Special Police from investigating this case. We see no force in this argument. The principle of Section 8 of the General Clauses Act would apply here. The letter of consent referred to the Notification under Section 3 which was in force when the consent letter was issued. The repeal of the said Notification and the issue of a new one in supersession of it would be like the repeal and re-enactment of a statute. Under Section 8, the reference to the repealed enactment thereafter is to be construed as a reference to the re-enacted provisions. For the same reason, the reference in the consent letter would have to be construed as a reference to the Notification which has repealed the Notification referred to in the consent letter. It would be contrary to all principle to take the view that the State Government has to go on issuing new letters of consent merely because the Central Government chose to issue new Notifications under Section 3. In fact, the State Government may refuse to issue a new letter of consent on the ground that it wanted the consent to be restricted to the offences mentioned in the Notification referred to in the consent letter. The superseding Notification may contain additional offences to the investigation of which the State Government may not wish the consent. In our opinion, therefore, the letter of consent continues to be valid and it is so valid in the present case.

34. The giving of consent by the State Government was no doubt an exercise of the executive power of the Government. Ordinarily, such an order or instrument expressing the consent has to be expressed in the name of the Governor and has to be authenticated by an authorised person under Article 166(2) of the Constitution. Though the letter of consent is not expressed to be in the name of the Governor, it is expressed in the name of the Government of Maharashtra. A State Government is defined in Section 3 (60)(c) of the General Clauses Act to be the Governor. The provisions of Article 166(2) corresponding to the provisions of Article 77(2) have been held to be directory and not mandatory. The legal position on a review of the Supreme Court decisions on this point has been stated by a Division Bench of the Punjab High Court in AIR 1968 Punj 178 paragraph (25) as follows—

"The analysis of the law laid down by the Supreme Court in the various judgments referred to above would show that it is by now settled.

(1) That the provisions of Article 166 of the Constitution are directory and not mandatory. They are merely enabling provisions.

(2) That Clauses (1), (2) and (3) of Article 166 have to be read together. Clause (1) should not be read divorced from Clause (2) as an independent provision. The requirements of Clause (2) have to be fulfilled in accordance with the rules of business framed under Clause (3).

(3) When an order or instrument containing or referring to an executive action of the Government of a State complies with the requirements of Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 166, it would be immune from attack in Court of law on the ground that the order or the instrument had not in fact been made or executed by the Governor of the State

(4) That non-compliance with the provisions of either or both of first two clauses of Article 166 of the Constitution would only result in the order losing the protection contained in Clause (2) which it would have enjoyed if the order had been expressed in the manner required by Clause (1) and authenticated in accordance with the rules of business framed under Clause (3)

(5) That if the protection contained in Clause (2) of Article 166 of the Constitution is not available in respect of any particular order or instrument and the order or instrument is challenged in a Court of law on the ground that it was not, in fact, made by the Governor of the State, the burden of proof would shift to the State authorities to prove affirmatively that the order or instrument was, in fact, made or executed by the Governor, and

(6) That in order to see whether the requirements of Article 166 of the Constitution have or have not been satisfied in a particular case, it is the substance of the Article which has to be kept in view and if the substance of the requirements of the Article are satisfied, the protection given by that Article should be allowed to be invoked even though the expression used in the order or the instrument is not exactly identical in every respect with the wording of that Article."

35. Applying the above-mentioned principles, the Punjab High Court held that the order of the State Government, not expressed in the name of the Governor, but only in the name of the Government, was in substantial compliance with Article 166(2) of the Constitution. According to this reasoning, the consent letter dated 2nd July 1960 substantially complies with Article 166(2) and is valid. The respondents have, however, filed an affidavit by Shri S P Agashe, Under-Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, which is at page 211 of the paper-book, in which Shri Agashe stated as follows—

"In or about June, 1960, the then Chief Minister of the State of Maharashtra was in charge of the Home Department. The papers underlying letter No DPE 1260/6551-V dated the 2nd July 1960 regarding the consent under Section 6 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, of the State Government to the functioning of the Delhi Special Police Establishment in the State of Maharashtra, were placed before the Chief Minister, prior to the said letter being issued. After reading and careful consideration of those papers, the Chief Minister passed the order granting consent under the Rules of Business he was competent to pass the said order. Thereafter the said consent was conveyed to the Government of India under the above-said letter. The letter was signed by Shri J C Agarwal who was then Deputy Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra in the Home Department and was as such authorised to sign such letters."

36. It is contended for the petitioner that firstly the Rules of Business of the Government of Maharashtra have not been produced. The Rules of Business made under Article 166(3) of the Constitution would be statutory rules. Judicial notice would have been taken of the same. They are not a fact which has to be proved by primary evidence. Certified copies of the same also would have been admissible in evidence. Learned counsel for the respondents offered to produce a copy of the Rules. The respondents should have done this before the stage of the arguments. But we are not prepared to be so technical as to hold that the Rules of Business did not authorise the Chief Minister of the State to give the consent. We, therefore, accept the affidavit of the officer of the State Government that the Chief Minister was so authorised. On that view we do not think that the non-production of the Rules of Business should raise an adverse inference against the respondents that the Rules of Business either did not exist or that, if produced, they would be against the case of the respondents. Such an adverse inference could have been raised only if the affidavit of Shri Agashe would not have been filed. In view of the affidavit, we do not think that such an adverse inference can be raised.

37. The next contention of the petitioner was that the order of the Chief Minister himself or his noting on the file should have been produced. It is well known that the orders on the noting on the file are never produced either for public inspection or in Courts of law. What is produced is the orders or the letters which are meant to be communicated to the public. The letter dated 2nd July 1960 is the communication of the Maharashtra Government on the subject and it is sufficient that a copy of it has been produced. The affidavit of Shri Agashe says that Shri Agarwal was authorised to sign the consent letter. The authority is also given under Article 166 (2) of the Constitution by a Notification, which also being a statutory notification was a public document of which judicial notice could be taken. In view of the affidavit, no adverse inference can be drawn against the respondents for the non-production of the Notification under Article 166 (2) giving authority to the Deputy Secretary Shri Agarwal to authenticate an order on behalf of the Governor. It is well known that all officers from Under Secretary to the Secretary of the Central and State Governments are ordinarily authorised by Notifications under Arts. 77 (2) and 166 (2) of the Constitution to act on behalf of the President and the Governor in exercise of the executive power of the State. In view of this well-known position, we have no doubt that Shri Agarwal as the then Deputy Secretary must have been authorised to sign the consent letter on behalf of the Government of Maharashtra.

38. If the petitioner had really intended to take the stand that, in fact, no consent was given by the Government of Maharashtra or that Shri Agarwal was not entitled to sign the consent letter on behalf of the Government of Maharashtra then the petitioner should have made a definite pleading and sworn an affidavit to that effect. Without such a pleading and affidavit pointedly raising such an issue, the Court is not bound to go into it at all, as was observed by the Supreme Court recently in Ishwarlal v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 870. We, therefore, hold that the consent of the State Government has been properly proved.

39. A perusal of Sections 104 and 105 of the Insurance Act makes it clear that they are not identical with the offences punishable under Sections 405 and 409, Indian Penal Code, for which the petitioner is being prosecuted. In the State of Bombay v. S. L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578, the Supreme Court has also specifically held that the offence under Section 409, Indian Penal Code, is not identical with the offence under Section 105 of the Insurance Act. Further, the offence of conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code is not reproduced in the Insurance Act. The respondents could not, therefore, be expected to prosecute the petitioner under Section 105 of the Insurance Act rather than under Sections 405, 409 and 120-B of the Indian Penal Code, if the latter offences were more suitable to the facts of the case. There is nothing to show at all that the facts of the case are better covered by Section 105 of the Insurance Act and that they are not covered by Sections 405, 409 and 120-B of the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, the question of the respondents trying to by-pass the requirement of sanction under the Insurance Act does not arise at all. We find so.

40. The learned counsel for the petitioner did not press the contentions regarding mala fides and discrimination. It is well known that the question of mala fides does not arise if the respondents have the power to investigate the offences against the petitioner and if there is nothing to show that they are influenced by irrelevant considerations in doing so. The question of discrimination also does not arise inasmuch as the Delhi Special Police Establishment is precisely in the same position as the ordinary police in investigating the offences against the petitioner. No prejudice is caused to the petitioner by the fact that the investigation is done by the Special Police rather than by the ordinary police. No question of discrimination, therefore, arises. In view of the above findings, we dismiss the writ petition with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 1000/-.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), S 115 and O. 39, Rr. 1 & 2 — Appellate court reversing Trial Court's order under O. 39, Rr. 1 & 2 — Revision against Appellate order — Power of High Court — Discretion in granting interim injunction not improperly exercised — No jurisdictional infirmity — No interference in revision.

On an appeal against the order of interim injunction granted by the Trial Court, the Appellate Court reversed it holding that the balance of convenience was also not in favour of the plaintiff. It also took into consideration other factors. The appellate order was challenged in the revision petition. It was not argued that the appellate court had no jurisdiction to make the order or that it committed material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction in reversing the order of the Trial Court.

Held, that in the absence of any jurisdictional infirmity in the impugned order, the High Court could not interfere with it in revision under Section 115 of Civil P. C. Whether or not the High Court, functioning as a court of first appeal, would have reversed the order of temporary injunction made by the original court was not the test. The test was a very much narrower one that of jurisdictional or similar infirmity envisaged by Section 115, Civil P. C. The granting of an injunction was purely within the discretion of the court, but this discretion has to be exercised in accordance with reason and on sound recognised judicial principles. The appellate court had jurisdiction to reverse the Trial Court's order, and on revision, the High Court had to be satisfied of an error in the appellate order which might attract revisional power. S L. Bhatia, for Petitioner; K. K. Mehra, for Respondents (Nos 1 and 2 only)

ORDER.— Six persons instituted a suit in the Court of Shri S C Ahuja, Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi for a declaration and permanent injunction. An application for temporary injunction under Order 39, Rules 1 and 2 read with Section 151, Code of Civil Procedure, was also filed praying that the defendants be restrained from interfering in the work of S Bhan Singh, plaintiff No 1, as Secretary of defendant No 1, the Prince Bus Service, during the pendency of the suit. It was alleged that S Kanwaljit Singh defendant was interfering with the work of plaintiff No 1 as Secretary of the Association. This prayer was contested and the learned Subordinate Judge trying the suit considered it proper to restrain defendant No 1 from interfering with plaintiff No 1 in the discharge of his duties as Secretary of the Association in question. The defendant was also restrained from disturbing the possession of plaintiff No 1 of the office located in room No 5 where, according to him, he acted as Secretary.

2. The matter was taken on appeal to the Court of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, who reversed the order of the trial Court and came to the conclusion that the balance of convenience was not in favour of the plaintiff. I consider it proper to reproduce the exact words of the lower Appellate Court.—

"In any case I am of the considered view that the balance of convenience was also not in favour of the plaintiffs. There is no doubt that majority of the members were with the appellants. Under such circumstances the comparative mischief or inconvenience which is likely to issue from granting injunction will be greater than that which is likely to arise from withholding it. Plaintiff No 1, in my view, would not suffer any irreparable injury if the temporary injunction was not granted. It is only a question of status for him. On the other hand, working of the Society is likely to be jeopardised."

Earlier, the lower Appellate Court had taken into consideration a copy of a resolution dated 9-10-1966 which showed that plaintiff No 1 had not been elected as an office-bearer and, therefore, was not entitled to any temporary injunction claimed. This factor also weighed with the lower Appellate Court. An objection was raised that this copy had not been produced in the Court of first instance and, therefore, could not be taken into consideration by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal. The Court below felt that the provisions of Order 41, Rule 27, Civil P. C., were not attracted in this case because the parties had not yet started leading evidence and there was, in the circumstances, no question of any permission to lead additional evidence. At the bar of the lower Appellate Court, it was stated that these documents had been filed earlier in some other suit instituted by the defendants and for this reason, they could not be produced in the trial Court in the present case. This explanation appealed to the lower Appellate Court and the documents in question were allowed to be produced and looked into.

3. Before me on revision, Shri S. L. Bhatia, the learned counsel for the plaintiff, has very strongly argued that the lower Appellate Court has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by allowing fresh documents to be placed on the record and to be taken into account. He has, in support of his submission, relied on Arjan Singh v. Kartar Singh, AIR 1951 SC 193, according to which, the discretion given to the Appellate Court by Order 41, Rule 27, to receive and admit additional evidence is not an arbitrary one, but is a judicial one circumscribed by the limitations specified in that rule. To allow additional evidence to be adduced contrary to the principles governing reception of such evidence is, according to this decision, a case of improper exercise of discretion and the evidence thus brought on the record deserves to be ignored.

In regard to the question of balance of convenience, the learned counsel has submitted that even though it be a question of status for the plaintiff, but if he is entitled as of right to claim that status, then his right cannot be defeated merely because the controversy centres round status. In this respect, the counsel argues, the Court below has again committed a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.

4. On behalf of the respondents, the impugned order has been supported on the ground that the majority of the members of the society in question, according to the lower Appellate Court, are with the defendants and on this part of the case, nothing has been urged by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-petitioner. If that be so, then, so argues Shri Mehra, the impugned order is substantially just and no interference on revision is called for. He has also submitted that merely because some documents have been taken into consideration by the lower Appellate Court on appeal from an interlocutory order, which may, from one point of view be not strictly covered by the first two clauses of Rule 27 of Order 41 of the Code, it cannot be described to be a jurisdictional infirmity or a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction justifying interference on revision. In any case, submits Shri Mehra, the trial has not yet started and during trial, these documents can very well be placed on the record. If, therefore, while dealing with an interlocutory application of the present nature, the lower Appellate Court has taken into account these documents, then it would amount to a mere technical objection to say that the Court has wrongly taken into account these documents. The decision of the Court below on this ground should not be upset on revision, says the counsel.

My attention has also been drawn by Shri Mehra to some kind of a dispute about the genuineness of the signatures of some of the plaintiffs in the Court below who are represented to be siding with plaintiff No. 1, but I do not think I would be justified in taking these submissions into account for deciding this revision.

5. It appears that when this revision was admitted by a learned Single Judge on 20-5-1968, notice in regard to the interim injunction prayed for was given to the respondents. On 31-5-1968, on a statement made by Shri S. L. Bhatia at the bar that Shri Mehra had been supplied with the necessary copies and that he had promised to put in appearance, but had not done so, the stay prayed for was granted with liberty to the respondents to apply for having it vacated, if they so desired. On 15-7-1968, both the counsel appeared before the learned Judge and after hearing them, an order maintaining status quo was recorded. As to what was the point of time for fixing the status quo was not clarified with precision in the order. Before me, there is a dispute at the bar as to what is the actual state of affairs at the present stage pursuant to this order of status quo as understood by the parties and what did the order precisely connote. Whereas Shri Bhatia says that his client asserts that he is working as Secretary, Shri Mehra denies it and according to him, someone else is working as a Secretary.

6. Keeping in view all the facts and circumstances of this case, in my opinion, it is not possible to hold that there is any jurisdictional infirmity in the impugned order. The granting of an injunction is purely within the discretion of the Court, but this discretion has to be exercised in accordance with reason and on sound recognised judicial principles. It is true that the trial Court's discretionary order has been reversed by the lower Appellate Court, but that Court has statutory jurisdiction to do so, and on revision, this Court has to be satisfied of an error in the appellate order which may attract revisional power. Whether or not this Court, functioning as a Court of first appeal, would have reversed the order of temporary injunction made by the original Court is not the test. The test is a very much narrower one: that of jurisdictional or similar infirmity envisaged by Section 115, Civil P. C. However erroneous the appellate order may be either on facts or in law, and I express no opinion on this aspect at this stage, I am not convinced — and indeed this aspect is not developed at the bar — that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to make the order it did or that it committed any material irregularity.

city in the exercise of its jurisdiction in reversing the order of the Court of first instance, which would attract Section 115, Civil P. C.

I am also unconvinced if the impugned order has resulted in any grave failure of justice I must not be understood to affirm the view of the Court below that Order 41, Rule 27, Civil P. C., is inapplicable to appeals against orders granting temporary injunctions I am not expressing any considered opinion on this point. I would dismiss this revision, but without any order as to costs.

I, however, direct that the trial Court should proceed with due despatch and attempt to dispose of the suit within three months from today. Cases of this nature demand priority and it is only in the fitness of things that business of the society in question is not allowed to suffer because of personal squabbles in such concerns. I am informed that the Court below has already fixed 7-12-1968 for awaiting the return of the record from this Court I direct that the record be immediately sent back and the parties should appear in the trial Court on 25-11-1968 and the Court would make suitable orders for further proceedings, including, if considered desirable, production of evidence on 7-12-1968, already fixed date. It does not lack pride of ancestry. It deals with substantive rights and obligations and their sources under Civil Law. It also deals with the rights acquired, such as, right of freedom, right of association, right of acquisition and so on. Succession and contracts in general and in particular; rights acquired by possession and prescription of immoveable and movable properties in particular and in general; positive and negative prescriptions, according to which, rights and also causes of action may be lost by prescription, the prescriptive period being generally 20 to 30 years, except in certain cases when such period is shorter in regard to movable property and other allied matters; 'Testamentos' (Wills) and some other matters of substantive nature, in addition, are dealt with in this Code. In short, the Code lays down the general law. The Commercial Code provides for the special rules applicable to merchants, covering the entire mercantile law. The Portuguese Civil Procedure Code regulate procedure in the conduct of civil suits. Article 529, as translated, reads as under :—

"When, however, the possession of immovables or "direitos imobiliarios" (immobile rights) as mentioned in the preceding section has lasted for 30 years, prescription will operate, regardless of bad faith or lack of title save what is provided under Article 510."

It speaks of what is known as acquisitive prescription. The prescription by which a right is acquired, as in the case of Section 25 of the 1963 Act, is called an acquisitive prescription. The prescription by which a right is extinguished, as in the case of Section 27 of the 1963 Act, is called an extinctive prescription. It prescribes a period of 30 years, on the expiry of which, not only the judicial remedy is barred but a substantive right is acquired or extinguished as the case may be. Article 510 has no application for the present purpose. Article 535, as translated, reads thus:—

"Whoever has assumed an obligation to do or give something to another stands relieved of the obligation if its performance is not demanded for a period of 20 years and the obligant stands in good faith, at the end of the prescription period; or when the performance is not demanded for a period of 30 years, regardless of good or bad faith, except where special prescriptions are provided in law.

Para unique : The good faith, in the case of negative prescription, consists in the ignorance of the obligation. This ignorance is not to be presumed in the case of persons who originally contracted the obligation".

This Article also speaks of prescription but extinctive in nature; it absolves the debtor or the person incurring an obligation from the debt or obligation if performance is not demanded within the specified period. According to Mr. M. S. Usgaokar, these Articles are part of substantive law and not adjective or procedural law and they are so special in their nature and source that they stand outside the scheme of the corresponding Articles 74, 31 and 65 of the Schedule to the 1963 Act. Let us see what these Articles provide. Article 74 prescribes the period of one year for suit claiming compensation for a malicious prosecution. The starting point of limitation is when a plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution is terminated. Article 31 prescribes a period of 3 years for a suit on a bill of exchange or promote payable at a fixed time after date. The starting point of limitation is 3 years from the date when the bill or promote falls due. There is no corresponding provision to Article 535 when the suit is not based on the bill of exchange or promote. Article 65 prescribes a period of 12 years for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein based on title. The starting point is 12 years when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. The argument of Mr. Usgaokar prima facie is not without substance. English law is committed to the view that statutes of limitation if they merely specify a certain time after which rights cannot be enforced by action, affect procedure, and not substance (Cheshire on 'Private International Law', 6th Edition, p. 685). The 1963 Act also seems to be committed to this view.

The Portuguese Civil Code has been adopted by Parliament and it is now our law, though based on the Continental system of law inspired by the Code Napoleon, 'Xec Ayub v. Goa Government' AIR 1967 Goa 102 at p. 110. It seems Articles 529 and 535 not only bar the judicial remedy but also seem to extinguish altogether the claim or right to sue. In substance, effect and application, these Articles are basically different from the corresponding Articles of the Schedule to the 1963 Act. A statute which ordains that actual ownership shall be obtained by long continued possession goes to the substance of a transaction (Cheshire p. 687). They are to be considered as special law, as they deal with special subjects or special class of objects in special circumstances in contradistinction to the general subjects and class of subjects dealt with in the 1963 Act. There may be some Articles in the Portuguese Civil Code (for example Article 504) which deal with the procedural law but by and large, they deal with substantive law. The Portuguese Civil Code gives rise to special causes of action for which special and exclusive remedies have been provided therein and, applying the principles enunciated in the aforesaid decisions, I am inclined to treat these Articles as a 'special or local law' for the purposes of section 29 (2) of the 1963 Act, standing in their own right, outside the scheme of the 1963 Act, and not forming a constituent part thereof. In this view of the matter the suits instituted are well within time. It is common ground that if these Articles apply then the suits are not barred by limitation.

7. The second question, namely whether the 1963 Act repeals Articles 529 and 535 of the Portuguese Civil Code was argued by learned counsel for the parties at length. The arguments were canvassed on the assumption that S 29 (2) is inapplicable. It is said that that there may be another view different from the view taken by the Court on the application of the section and, therefore, the Court may also deal with this question. I propose to deal with it so that this matter is finally disposed of so far as this Court is concerned. The 1963 Act is 'an Act to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and other proceedings and for purposes connected therewith'. The object of consolidation is to present the entire body of the statute law on limitation. The 1963 Act is in the main, a restatement of the provisions contained in the Limitation Act, 1908, with certain additions and amendments. It repeals the Limitation Act, 1908, in express terms, as will be clear from section 32. In 'Municipal Council, Palai's case AIR 1963 SC 1561, (supra), the Supreme Court observed.

"It is undoubtedly true that the legislature can exercise the power of repeal by implication. But it is an equally well settled principle of law that there is a presumption against an implied repeal. Upon the assumption that the legislature enacts laws with a complete knowledge of all existing laws pertaining to the same subject the failure to add a repealing clause indicates that the intent was not to repeal existing legislation. Of course, this presumption will be rebutted if the provisions of the new Act are so inconsistent with the old ones that the two cannot stand together. Of course, there is no rule of law to prevent repeal of a special by a later general statute and, therefore, where the provisions of the special statute are wholly repugnant to the general statute, it would be possible to infer that the special statute was repealed by the general enactment."

Mr M. S. Usgaokar, learned counsel for the respondents, argued — and not without substance — that Parliament having continued in force the Portuguese Civil Code under section 5 of the 1962 Act, Parliament was aware of its existence and the failure to repeal it expressly indicates that Parliament did not intend to repeal the Portuguese Civil Code. He also argued that the subject matter of the 1963 Act and the Portuguese Civil Code being different, the two sets of the Articles cited can co-exist and that they are not inconsistent or repugnant. As against these arguments, Mr. S. K. Kakodkar, learned counsel for the appellant, contended that the intention to repeal can be gathered from the interval gap between the publication of the 1963 Act and its enforcement in the territory. He also contended that Articles 529 and 535 of the Portuguese Civil Code must give way to the corresponding Articles in the 1963 Act, as both cannot co-exist. Mr. Bernardo Reis and Mr. S. V. Joshi contended similarly.

I shall consider these rival contentions, but before I do so, I may also refer to the provisions of sections 30 and 31 of the 1963 Act. They seem to supply an answer against repeal by necessary implication, of the Portuguese Civil Code. Section 30 (a) relates to provisions for suits etc., for which the prescribed period is shorter than the period prescribed by the Limitation Act, 1908, it provides that "any suit for which the period of limitation is shorter than the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, may be instituted within a period of 5 years next after the commencement of this Act or within the period prescribed for such suits by the Limitation Act, 1908, (9 of 1908) whichever period expires earlier". The period of grace in the two situations contemplated in this section is in relation to the 1908 Act only and not in relation to the suits for which the prescribed period may be shorter or longer under the Portuguese Civil Code. Section 31 (a) gives effect to the well-settled principle that the new law of limitation would not revive a barred debt on the date when the new limitation law comes into force, 'Govt of Rajasthan v. Sangram Singh' AIR 1962 Raj 43 (FB) and also the decision of the Supreme Court of Justice in Lisbon dated 11th June, 1941 published in "Revista de Legislaçao Jurisprudencia" — Ano 74 — no 2703 p 201, cited by Mr. Reis). In such a case no breathing time is given to the litigant. His remedy must continue to be governed by the old law of limitation. The reason is obvious. The object of limitation is to extinguish stale demands. In Story's 'Conflict of Laws' Edition, 8, p. 794, it is stated:

"Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose to quiet titles. . . They proceed upon the presumption that claims are extinguished or sought to be held extinguished whenever they are not litigated within the prescribed period. They quicken diligence by making it in some measure equivalent to right. They discourage litigation by burying in one common receptacle all the accumulations of past times which are unexplained and have now from lapse or time become inexplicable. It has been said by John Voet that controversies are limited to a fixed period of time, lest they should be immortal while men are mortal."

Article 31 (a) would not revive the debt barred under the Limitation Act, 1908. We are however not concerned with this situation in the present case. Article 31 (b) does not affect any suit instituted before, and pending at the commencement of the 1963 Act. The present three suits were all instituted after the 1963 Act came into force and, therefore, this provision also is not attracted. Articles 30, 31 (a) and 32 refer in terms to the Limitation Act 1908 only, but not to the Portuguese Civil Code or any other special or local law on limitation. Articles 529 and 535 being a part of the substantive law, submitted Mr. M. S. Usgaokar, they are not affected by the procedural law enacted in the corresponding Articles of the Schedule to the 1963 Act, and therefore the question of repeal would not arise. This also is the view of the learned Subordinate Judges.

Mr. Reis submitted, on the other hand, that Article 535 is of procedural nature but not Article 529. They are prima facie substantive law, but assuming they are procedural law, will the application of section 29 (2) be in doubt? I would for a moment go back to this aspect before I consider the arguments on interval or gap. As pointed out earlier, this section is attracted when any special or local law prescribes for any suit a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the Schedule to the 1963 Act. The possible contention may be that the Schedule to the 1963 Act containing the Articles cited does not provide for a period of limitation in suits identical with that for which the Portuguese Civil Code provides and, consequently, this section would be inapplicable. The answer to this contention may be that this section would still apply and, in this connection the decision of the Supreme Court in Vidyacharan's case AIR 1964 SC 1099 (supra) may serve as the sheet anchor of the respondents. The ratio, in that case, was that even where there was no provision in the Schedule for an appeal in a situation identical with that for which the special law provides, the test of prescription of a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the First Schedule to the Limitation Act 1908, is satisfied. The Supreme Court in stating this ratio relied on the observations of Chagla C. J., in 'Canara Bank Ltd. v. Warden Insurance Company Bombay' AIR 1953 Bom 35. This ratio, it is submitted, with respect, may also apply to the three suits instituted under the Portuguese Civil Code, assuming these Articles are procedural.

8. The scheme of the 1963 Act and the scheme of the Portuguese Civil Code are basically different. An essential requirement for the application of the principle of implied repeal is that there should be identity of the subject matter in the two Acts. There should be no difference as regards the objects, purposes, sources and scope. For my part, as I see this matter, there is really no conflict, repugnancy or inconsistency between the two sets of the Articles cited. Parliament, in its legislative wisdom, did not intend to affect the law enacted in Articles 529 and 535. In 'Municipal Council, Palai's case, AIR 1963 SC 1561' (supra) section 72 of the Travancore-Cochin Motor Vehicles Act (10 of 1125 M. E.), a later general law, was not construed as having repealed by necessary implication sections 286 and 287 of the Travancore-Cochin District Municipalities Act (23 of 1016 M. E.). The legislative intent, in that case, was to allow the two sets of provisions to co-exist because both were enabling provisions. The interval between the enactment of the 1963 Act and its coming into force was about 88 days.

Now, it is clear, that the enacting clause in section 1 (3) of the 1963 Act did not warn the litigants that they should institute the suits governed by the Portuguese Civil Code within a particular period. What it said in terms was that the Act shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may by notification in the official gazette appoint. This date may be a few days or a few months depending upon the Central Government, a delegated authority. Such a warning may have made the case of the respondents weaker. The 1963 Act also does not contain a provision on the lines of section 4 of the Goa, Daman & Diu (Laws) Regulation 1962, promulgated by the President on 22nd November, 1962.

Section 3 provides for extension of the Acts in force in other territories to the territory, subject to the modifications, if any. These Acts are specified in the Schedule to the said Regulation. Section 4 is repealing and saving clause, it repeals any law in force in the territory corresponding to any Act referred to in section 3, and, in addition, contains a saving clause on the lines of section 6 of the General Clauses Act, which applies to express repeals. Parliament was aware of the said section 4 but still left the Portuguese Civil Code untouched and confined itself only to the scheme of the Limitation Act, 1908. In this connection reference may also be made to sections 3 and 4 of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Extension of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Arbitration Act) Act, 1965, noted earlier. Mr S. K. Kakodkar cited 'Government of Rajasthan' case, AIR 1962 Raj 43 (FB) (supra) on implied repeal in the context of this interval or gap between the enactment of the 1963 Act and its enforcement. Mr Usgaokar referred me to 'Belgaum District School Board' case, AIR 1945 Bom 377 (supra) decided by the Bombay High Court, 'Joshi Maganlal Kunverji v. Thacker Mulji Budha' AIR 1951 Kutch 15, and 'Jethmal v. Ambusinh' AIR 1955 Raj 97 (FB) in support of his contention against implied repeal. I shall review these decisions briefly.

9 In the Belgaum District School Board case, AIR 1945 Bom 377 Chagla C J., observed.

"Considering these authorities, it is clear that as a rule statutes of limitation being procedural laws must be given a retrospective effect in the sense that they must be applied to all suits filed after they came into force. This general rule has got to be read with one important qualification, and that is that if the statute of limitation, if given a retrospective effect, destroys a cause of action which was vested in a party or makes it impossible for that party for the exercise of his vested right of action, then the Courts would not give retrospective effect to the statute of limitation".

The question urged before the learned Chief Justice was that the claim of the respondents who were teachers was barred except for the amount deducted within 6 months of the filing of the suit and the claim for injunction, and thus contention was based on the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1923, as amended by Act 12 of 1938. The latter Act provided a period of limitation for filing suits against the District Board, for anything done, or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the 1923 Act, and the period of limitation provided was six months from the date of the Act complained of. The 1938 Act was published in the Gazette on 27th May, 1938, and section 1 provided that it shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette appoint, and the date appointed by that Government was 1st July, 1938. There was thus an interval between 27th May, 1938 and 1st July, 1938, during which period, the operation of the Act as amended was suspended and the necessary intimation was given by the legislature to the public that the Act would come into force on 1st July, 1938, and that if they were not vigilant about their rights, they would be deprived of them. It is true that it was not open to the respondents in that case immediately to go to court on the Act being published on 27th May, 1938 because under section 26-E a notice of 30 days had to be given to the District Board; even so, if such a notice had been given and the necessary period had expired, still a few days would have been left to the respondents to file the necessary suits for claiming refund. According to the learned Chief Justice, this period was extremely short but he could not possibly hold that the respondents were deprived of an opportunity of exercising their right of action which had vested in them. In this view of the matter he 'reluctantly' came to the conclusion that the claim of the respondents except for a period of six months prior to the filing of the suit and for injunction was barred by limitation. In that case necessary intimation about the 1938 Act coming into force on 1st July, 1938, was given in no uncertain terms, but not in the present suits. There was no saving clause on the lines of section 30 (a) of the 1963 Act in that case, as in the case of AIR 1967 SC 1320 (supra) decided by the Supreme Court.

In this case, the suit for recovery of Wakf Property in Hyderabad was instituted by Mutwali on 3rd February, 1956, pleading that dispossession took place on 20th September, 1937. There was no period of limitation in such a suit under the Hyderabad Limitation Act, 1932. On 1st April, 1951, the Part B States (Laws) Act 1951 came into force in Hyderabad. By that Act the Limitation Act, 1908 was extended and the corresponding law in force stood repealed. Under Article 142 of the first schedule to the 1908 Act such a suit was barred. This Article for recovery of possession reckoned a period of 12 years from the date of dispossession. The Trial Court held that the suit was barred. The High Court, on appeal, held that the suit was governed by the Hyderabad Limitation Act and, therefore, was not barred. According to the High Court the application of the 1908 Act would bar and confiscate the existing cause of action, as the Part B States (Laws) Act while extending the 1908 Act to Hyderabad did not allow a reasonable time to the plaintiffs for enforcing the existing cause of action and consequently the 1908 Act could not affect the suit which was governed by the Hyderabad Limitation Act. Bachawat J., speaking for the Supreme Court, observed that the said 1951 Act was passed on 27th February, 1951, and was brought into force in Hyderabad on 1st April, 1951. Further, the 1908 Act was extended with the addition of section 30 prescribing a shorter period of limitation for the institution of the suits. Section 30 enabled the plaintiffs to institute the suit within a period of 2 years after 1st April, 1951, while extending the 1908 Act to Hyderabad. Parliament allowed the plaintiffs reasonable time to institute the suit for recovery of the property. The extension of the 1908 Act to Hyderabad and the consequential change in law prescribing a shorter period of limitation, according to their Lordships, did not confiscate the existing cause of action and must be regarded as an alteration in the law of procedure for the enforcement of the cause of action. In this view of the matter, it was held that since the plaintiffs did not institute the suit within 2 years from 1st April, 1951, therefore, they could not avail themselves of the benefit of section 30 and hence the suit for recovery of the Wakf property was barred.

The decision by Chagla C. J. cites 'Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra' AIR 1914 Cal 806 : 41 Cal 1125 (FB); 'Khusalbai v. Kabhai' (1881-82) 6 Bom 26; 'Reg. v. Leeds and Bradford Ry. Co.' (1852) 21 L. J. M. C., 193; 'The Yudan' (1899) 1899 p. 236; and 'Rajah of Pitapur v. Venkata Subba Row', AIR 1916 Mad. 912 (FB), where there was either no interval or a short interval, and the effect was to confiscate the right to sue or bring about alteration or improvement in the law of procedure. In the case at s. no. (1), the plaintiff was dispossessed by the assignee of the landlord in 1908. The suit was filed on 9th July, 1909. Under the law then in force, suits could be brought within 12 years after dispossession in such cases. On 11th May, 1907, an Amending Act was passed cutting down the period of limitation to 2 years. No interval was given for the Amending Act to come into force, and the question that arose for consideration was, whether the Amending Act should have retrospective effect. At p. 1132, in the course of the arguments, Jenkins C. J. observed:

"The tendency of the cases seem generally to be not to construe an Act so as to take away any existing right. But there is no objection to say that where the time for suing is cut down, but it does not amount to a confiscation of right, the new Act is applicable. That reconciles all cases".

It was held in this case that it was impossible for the plaintiff to comply with the provisions of the Act; that he had a vested right of suit; and that the Act could not be construed to mean that that vested right had been destroyed by the passing of that statute. There was no provision on the lines of section 30 (a) of the 1963 Act and further there was no interval for the Amending Act to come into force. In the case at s. no. (2), an important consideration that weighed with the Bombay High Court in refusing to give retrospective effect to the Amending Act of limitation was that it came into force at the moment at which it received the assent of the Governor General. In the case at s. no. (3) there was an interval of 6 weeks between the passing of the Act and its coming into operation. This concession indicated that the hardship in question was in the contemplation of the legislature, and had been provided for. The retrospective operation in this case was regarded as valid. In the case at s. no. (4), a sufficient interval was given by the legislature from 5th December, 1893, to 1st January, 1894, so that if the intending suitors were not vigilant their right of action would be barred. It was said in this case that:

". . . . It is clear that what must be taken to be an improvement in procedure is not to be considered as interference with a vested right of those who would have preferred the procedure to remain in its unreformed condition".

In the case at s. no. (5), the question arose whether sections 210 and 211 and Article 8 of Part A of the Schedule of the Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), should be given a retrospective effect. In that case the Act came into force two days after it received the assent of the Governor General; and as stressed by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court, it gave no opportunity to the plaintiff for the exercise of his vested right of suit. The claim for rent pleaded in the suit was not barred at the date of the passing of the Act, and the result of the passing of the Act, was to give no opportunity for the exercise of the plaintiff's vested right of suit. In the premises the learned Judges of the Madras High Court held that the effect of the amendment would be, if construed retroa-tively, to destroy the plaintiff's right of suit which was in existence when the Act came into force. In Maganlal Kunverji's case, AIR 1951 Kutch 15 (supra) the plaintiff had a vested right under the Limitation Act repealed to bring his suit when the new Limitation Act came into force. The effect of the new Limitation Act was to destroy this vested right outright. In such circumstances the new Act was construed prospectively. In reaching this conclusion the learned Judicial Commissioner relied on 'Gopeshwar Pal's' case (supra) decided by the Calcutta High Court. He cited the following observations from that case.

"The law as amended may regulate the procedure in suits in which the plaintiff could comply with its provisions, but cannot govern suits when such compliance was from the first impossible. The effect is to regulate and not to confiscate. There are two positions, where in accordance with its provisions a suit could be brought after the passing of the amendment it may be that the amendment may apply but when it could not then the amendment would have no application"

In Jethmal v. Ambisingh's case AIR 1955 Raj 97 (supra) the Rajasthan High Court dealt with the suit instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant on 23rd January, 1952. This was on the basis of an account stated on 15th December, 1947. The original period of limitation applicable was 6 years under Article 64, Marwar Limitation Act, 1945. The Marwar Limitation (Amendment) Act 1949 provided in section 4 a saving clause but there was no interval between its enactment and coming into force. It came into force from its publication on 27th March, 1949. The period of limitation under Article 64 was reduced from 6 years to 3 years under the 1949 Act. This reduced period was to start within 3 years after the commencement of the 1949 Act. The suit filed therefore was within time, as this period expired when compared to the 6 years period under the 1945 Act. The suit could have been filed up to 26th March, 1952. The period of grace was 3 years or 6 years under the 1949 Act, whichever period expired first. The saving clause was on the lines of section 30 (a) of the 1963 Act. Modi J., who delivered the leading judgment, stated that whether a saving provision exists or not, when an Amending Act of limitation cuts down the period formerly available and such Act comes into force at once, the true principle of limitation is, and must be, that the Amending Act should not receive a retrospective operation so as to 'destroy pre-existing and vested rights of suit in spite of the general principle that a law of limitation is procedural and, must therefore, receive retrospective effect. The learned Judge also referred to some of the cases reviewed by Chagla C J., in the above Belgaum District School Board case, AIR 1945 Bom 378.

The 1963 Act has a saving provision in relation to the 1908 Act only, and also it provides an interval in relation to the proceedings regulated by this Act only, before it came into force. Lastly, in AIR 1962 Raj 43 (FB) (supra) the Rajasthan High Court also reviewed, amongst other decisions, its earlier decision in AIR 1955 Raj 97 (supra). The learned Judges laid down propositions of law which are well settled. What was particularly emphasized was that in case the remedy to enforce a vested right is altogether barred on the date when the new law comes into force without providing any breathing time to the litigants, that remedy must continue to be governed by the old law of limitation.

10 It is true that breathing time of about 88 days was provided before the 1963 Act came into force in the territory, but this action, by itself, does not imply that the Portuguese Civil Code was repealed by necessary implication. As stated already, Parliament left the Portuguese Civil Code untouched when the 1963 Act was enacted. Parliament could have brought the Portuguese Civil Code within the sweep of the 1963 Act but in its legislative wisdom, and in order to avoid hardships to litigants governed by an entirely different system of law 'before the appointed day, Parliament confined itself only to the repeal of the Limitation Act, 1908. I have no hesitation in agreeing with Mr M. S. Usgaokar that the doctrine of implied repeal is not attracted. The situation in this case at bar differs widely from the aforesaid cases reviewed.

It is true as Mr. S. K. Kakodkar contends, that no person has a vested right in any course or procedure but it is equally true that where vested rights are affected prima facie it is not a question of procedure but of substance. A new procedure would not apply when its application would affect or prejudice rights acquired under old law. A new law ought to impose from 'on what is to follow, not on the past (nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet non praesentis). Settled things should not be unsettled except for good reasons. This is true of life as well as of law. If Articles 74, 31 and 65 of the Schedule to the 1963 Act were to be applied, the vested right to sue which the respondents had at the material time would be confiscated or destroyed, in absence of a saving clause on the lines of section 30 (a) of the 1963 Act. In the 'agravo' appeal, the respondent was acquitted on 6th April, 1960. In the very nature of the things compliance was from the first impossible. Parliament would not expect compliance with impossible situations, nor Judges would regard such situations as reasonable.

Finally, Mr. S. K. Kakodkar fell back on the argument of hardship and possible discrimination and he contended that if Articles 529 and 535 of the Portuguese Civil Code continue to hold the legislative field undisturbed, the litigants governed by the other Indian laws in the territory where the 1963 Act applies would be at a disadvantage. This is because of the long periods of limitation, irrational in their nature, under these Articles. Now, the arguments on discrimination, were not urged in the two courts below, nor in the memo of appeal in this Court. The Constitutional questions are to be properly pleaded, carefully argued and soberly considered. They are not to be decided on academic considerations. The question of discrimination, in the context of Article 14 of the Constitution, would be considered if and when it directly arises for consideration. As to the other argument, in the very nature of the things, there is something arbitrary about the periods of limitation (or prescription). The law is well settled that in considering statutes of limitation, considerations of hardship and anomaly are out of place.

In Boota Mal v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1716 at p. 1719, Wanchoo J., (as he then was), speaking for the Supreme Court, observed that equitable considerations and also considerations of great hardship are out of place in construing provisions of law limiting the periods of limitation for filing suits or legal proceedings. Fixation of these periods must always be to some extent arbitrary. I am not quite sure whether long periods under the Portuguese Civil Code are irrational in their nature, but assuming they are, it is for Parliament to rationalize the law on limitation in matters governed by the Portuguese Civil Code and other Portuguese laws still in force in the territory. To vindicate the policy of the law is not a necessary part of the office of a Judge. The view of the learned District Judge in the first appeal that the provisions of section 30 of the 1963 Act, as adapted, in pursuance of S. 8 of the Goa, Damam and Diu (Administration) Act, 1962, could also be invoked so as to save the present suits from being barred by limitation, with respect, is obviously untenable. Section 8 is not intended to apply in this case.

11. The facts and the arguments presented have been carefully considered. As I see this matter, the law is on the side of the respondents. In the second appeal there are concurrent findings of facts on the question of non-payment of the money due under the pronote. They are based on the evidence. The question of limitation is decided against the respondent, as in the other two proceedings. In this view of the matter section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not applicable, and therefore, this second appeal is dismissed. The 'agravo' appeal and the revision petition are also dismissed. The record and proceedings may be sent back to the learned Subordinate Judges with directions to proceed with the trial of the suits in accordance with the provisions of the law. Interim stay orders granted in these matters are hereby vacated. In the revision petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Mr. S. V. Joshi, learned counsel for the applicants, submitted that the respondents Jose Miguel Carmelino do R. Pires and his wife have filed the suit for declaration against the applicants Jose Paulo Santana Desiderio Lucas Teles, his wife and the other respondents with a view to harass them. The sale took place as early as 1954 and, inaction on the part of these respondents until October, 1966, indicates that the suit was filed with an ulterior object. The said submission of Mr. S. V. Joshi is to be considered by the learned Subordinate Judge and, if what is urged by him is correct, he will no doubt grant appropriate relief to the applicants. As to the costs in the two appeals and the revision application, in the special circumstances of the cases, I direct that they should be borne by the parties themselves. I also direct that preference should be given to the suits pending so that they are disposed of without further avoidable delay. The decisions in these matters will accelerate disposal of a number of cases pending where the 1963 Act has been pleaded as a bar to the suits instituted under the Portuguese Civil Code. Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No 3 of 1969,

Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 (3),
First proviso, Explanation — Applicability — Causes mentioned in explanation can be considered at the stage of an order under Sub-section (1) of Sec. 488 — Expression "may make an order under this section" in first proviso, interpretation of — Object of proceedings under Section 488 — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes). AIR 1968 Pat 139, Dissented from.

The object of the proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy and destitution by compelling the husband or father to support his wife or child unable to support itself. The explanation added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1949 to the first proviso enables the Magistrate to make an order of maintenance even when a wife refuses to live with her husband because of his second marriage or keeping a mistress. (Para 3)

It cannot be said that the Explanation to the first proviso is not applicable at the stage of making an order under sub-section (1) of Section 488. The first proviso envisages "an order under this section" and not under sub-section (3) only and, therefore, it would also apply at the stage of sub-section (1). The object of the legislature is to bring about reconciliation when the offer to maintain is bona fide. The object also is to promote domestic happiness and not keep a husband and a wife separate. The offer may be made before an order for maintenance is passed. The offer may also be made at the stage of enforcement of the order under sub-section (3). A husband may not have a mistress at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). He may have a mistress thereafter at the stage of enforcement, and this fact could be a just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him. He may also have a mistress before order is passed under sub-section (1). This too would be a just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him and if neglect or refusal is proved, an order of maintenance under sub-section (1) would be legal and proper. The conditional offer, in that case, would not come in the way of the Magistrate making an order under sub-section (1). By limiting the scope of the explanation to enforcement, the social object of the amendment would not be served. That object was removing the hardships suffered by a wife who refuses to live with her husband because he has kept a mistress or has another wife. The amendment sets at rest the controversy on the question whether such a ground constitutes sufficient reason to grant separate maintenance to the wife. Case law discussed AIR 1966 Bom 48 and AIR 1958 Mys 128, Rel on AIR 1968 Pat 139 Dissented from; AIR 1956 Cal 134, Explained. (Paras 5 and 6)

The expression "may make an order under this section" is to be construed so as to make it operative for the purpose of the entire section and not only sub-section (3). The word "section" is not used unnecessarily or superfluously by the legislature. The presumption is against such a use, and so effect must be given if possible, to all the words used, for the legislature is deemed not to waste its words or say anything in vain. It has to be given a sensible meaning. (Para 5)

S. K. Kakodkar with A. J. Kenkre, for Applicant; R. R. Kolwalkar, for Respondent. No 1, S. Tamba Govt. Pleader, for Respondent, No 2.

ORDER:— The short question for consideration in this revision petition is whether the explanation to the first proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies at the stage of making an order of maintenance under sub-sec. (1) of S. 488 (hereafter referred to as "the Code"). This explanation has caused some doubt or difficulty in its construction. It has led to difference of opinion in some High Courts.

2. The material facts which are few and simple may be set out before this question is examined. The respondent — Maria Luciana de Souza — married the applicant — Joao Francisco Coelho — in April, 1965. The applicant, his brother and his brother's wife were living in the house of the applicant at the time of the marriage. The brother of the applicant after some time left for abroad, but his wife continued to live with the applicant. The married life of the applicant and the respondent lasted for a few months when the respondent left the house of the applicant and went to reside with her mother. The reason for leaving the house was that she found the applicant on terms of illicit intimacy with his brother's wife. They shared the bed together but, as far as she was concerned, she was treated, in a manner of speaking, like a "hewer of wood and drawer of water". According to her, she was ill-treated and often beaten both by the applicant and his brother's wife. Efforts were made to bring about reconciliation but they proved abortive. The respondent ultimately filed the application for maintenance under Sec. 488 of the Code, in June, 1967. In that application, she claimed maintenance on the basis of the following allegations:— a) Ill-treatment; b) physical and mental cruelty which compelled her to leave the house of the applicant; and c) neglect by the applicant to maintain her. The applicant denied these allegations. It was his case that the respondent had left him, of her own accord, and that he is prepared and willing to receive her in his house and treat her as his wife. The learned Magistrate after examining the evidence adduced on behalf of the parties recorded the following conclusions:— 1) The evidence produced does not prove that the respondent had been ill-treated; 2) it is not proved that she was often refused food and other essential requirements; 3) that the applicant has illicit connections with his brother's wife and therefore the respondent has a good reason to leave the house of the applicant; and 4) that neglect or refusal to maintain her is implied in this case from the circumstances on the record. In this view of the matter, the learned Magistrate passed an order directing the applicant to pay to the respondent a sum of Rs. 70/- as a monthly allowance for her maintenance. The applicant felt aggrieved by this decision and later moved the Court of Session in revision. The learned Sessions Judge concurred with the learned Magistrate that the applicant has illicit connections with his brother's wife and, therefore, the respondent has a just ground for not living with the applicant. He also added that the applicant ceased to maintain the respondent from the day she left his house and that neglect or refusal to maintain her is established. He did not accept the argument at the bar, on behalf of the applicant, that the explanation to the first proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 488 applies at the stage of enforcement of an order under sub-section (3), and not at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). The applicant also felt dissatisfied with this decision and then moved this Court in revision under Sections 435 and 439 of the Code.

3. There are concurrent findings of fact based on the evidence that the applicant has been having illicit connections with his brother's wife. These findings of fact are based on the evidence and therefore have to be accepted. Mr. S. K. Kakodkar, learned counsel for the applicant, in this situation, confined himself only to the question of law set out in the opening paragraph. Learned counsel for the parties cited certain authorities which I shall consider but before doing so it may be worthwhile turning to the scheme of Section 488. This section is included in Chapter XXXVI of the Code under the heading "Of the Maintenance of Wives and Children". It consists of 8 sub-sections. The sub-sections (6) to (8) are not material for the present purpose and, therefore, it is not necessary to refer to them. The object of the proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy and destitution by compelling the husband or father to support his wife or child unable to support itself. Sub-section (1), for the present purpose provides for grant of a monthly allowance when, a husband having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife. Sub-section (2) mentions the respective dates when such allowance shall be payable. Sub-section (3) provides for enforcement of the order passed under sub-section (1). This sub-section is important and it reads thus:—

"If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, any such Magistrate may, for every breach of the order, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in manner hereinbefore provided for levying fines, and may sentence such person, for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid after the execution of the warrant, to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or until payment is sooner made

Provided that, if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under this section notwithstanding such offer, if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing

If a husband has contracted marriage with another wife or keeps a mistress it shall be considered to be just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him.

Provided, further, that no warrant shall be issued for the recovery of any amount due under this section unless application be made to the Court to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due." The substantive part of sub-section (3) relates to enforcement of an order of maintenance passed under sub-section (1). The first proviso is concerned with an offer of a husband to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him and her refusal to live with him. The explanation "if a husband has contracted marriage with another wife or keeps a mistress it shall be considered to be just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him" was added by Section 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1949, in February, 1949. It enables the Magistrate to make an order of maintenance even when a wife refuses to live with her husband because of his second marriage or keeping a mistress. The second proviso limits the period for recovering the amount due by way of maintenance. Sub-section (4) disentitles a wife from receiving a monthly allowance because of the causes mentioned therein. It operates as a bar on a wife to receive an allowance from her husband at the stage of the proceeding under sub-section (1) or thereafter. Sub-section (5) postulates cancellation of the order of maintenance on proof of the causes mentioned therein. It will be noticed that the causes mentioned in sub-sections (4) and (5) are the same, but sub-section (5) expressly provides for cancellation of an order under sub-section (1). A judicial order passed has to be cancelled on proof before it ceases to have effect.

4 Mr S K. Kakodkar, learned counsel for the applicant, cited 'Subhaga Devi v. Murlu Pradhan', AIR 1968 Pat 139, Sm. Bela Rani v. Bhupal Chandra, AIR 1956 Cal 134, M. Ponnambalam v. Saraswathi, AIR 1957 Mad 693, Ram Kishore v. Sm.

Bimla Devi, AIR 1957 All 658, and Ishar v. Soma Devi, AIR 1959 Punj 295, in support of the scheme of section 488 generally and in particular in support of his contention that the consideration of keeping a mistress or contracting a second marriage is relevant after an order for maintenance is passed under sub-section (1), and not at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). Mr R R Kolwalakar contended that this consideration is quite relevant at the stage of sub-section (1) and, in support of that contention, he relied on Maiki v. Hemraj, AIR 1954 All 30 and Syed Ahmad v. N. P. Taj Begum, AIR 1958 Mys 128. I shall review these decisions and endeavour to show that the said contention of Mr S K Kakodkar has not the support of Section 488. AIR 1968 Pat 139 is a judgment by a Single Judge. This decision is the sheet anchor of his argument. It was decided in this case that sub-section (3) including its two provisos comes into play only after the person has failed without sufficient cause to comply with an order passed against him under sub-section (1). It was also decided that it is not applicable at the very first stage when the Magistrate is called upon to pass an order under sub-section (1). The expression "may make an order under this section" which is to be found in the first proviso means that the Magistrate may issue a warrant for levying the amount due notwithstanding the offer of the husband to maintain his wife where he is satisfied that the wife has just ground for refusing to live with him. In the premises according to the learned Judge, what the Magistrate has to consider at the stage of passing an order under sub-section (1) is whether the husband though possessor of sufficient means has neglected or refused to maintain his wife and not whether the wife has just ground for refusing to live with the husband. In reaching this conclusion, the learned Judge relied on AIR 1956 Cal 134 but dissented from AIR 1954 All 30. In his own words:—

"Mr Ghose, however, relies upon the decision of a learned Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court (Lucknow Bench) in Smt Maiki v. Hemraj, AIR 1954 All 30 where it was held that the effect of the amendment made in Section 488 by Act 9 of 1949 is that no other ground for refusing to live with the husband need be looked into if he has taken a second wife or kept a mistress. But it is not clear from the report as to whether such a consideration must be applied at the stage when the Magistrate is called upon to decide as to whether an order of maintenance should be passed or not under sub-section (1). If, however, it was intended to lay down that even at that stage the Magistrate should have regard to the just ground for the wife's refusal to live with the husband, then, with respect, I am unable to accept the decision as correct, because under sub-section (1), the relevant question for consideration is whether or not there has been refusal or neglect to maintain the wife, and not whether the wife has or has not just ground for refusing to live with the husband.

In this view, I am supported by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in AIR 1956 Cal 134 to which I have already referred. There it was observed:

'In our view, it is not permissible to read into the explanation anything more than what it says in the context of proviso 1 to sub-section (3)'. There it was further held: 'The mere fact of a second marriage cannot ipso facto establish 'such neglect or refusal' within the meaning of sub-section (1) of Section 488, Cr. P. C., for, a man may marry a second time and still not refuse to maintain his first wife.'

In our view, the mere fact that a husband has contracted marriage with another wife or keeps a mistress cannot, without more, be said to amount to neglect or refusal on the part of the husband to maintain his wife within the meaning of sub-section (1) of Section 488, Criminal P. C.:

5. I am unable to agree, with respect, with the learned Judge, that the causes mentioned in the explanation are not to be considered at the stage of sub-section (1). The facts considered in AIR 1954 All 30 would seem to show that the explanation was relied upon at the stage of passing an order under sub-section (1) and not thereafter. The learned Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court said that the effect of the amendment in 1949 obviously is that the ground mentioned in this amendment which was sometimes accepted as a valid ground and sometimes not, should be accepted as a valid ground for the wife's refusal to live with her husband if he has taken a second wife or kept a mistress. He then went on to say that no other ground for refusal to live with the husband need be looked into if there is this good ground for the wife's refusal to live with her husband. With respect, I agree. The ratio of AIR 1956 Cal 134 is that the mere fact of a second marriage cannot ipso facto establish neglect or refusal for the purpose of sub-section (1), for, a man may marry a second time and still not refuse to maintain his wife. The mere fact that a husband has contracted marriage with another wife or keeps a mistress cannot, without more, be said to amount to neglect or refusal on the part of a husband to maintain his wife within the meaning of sub-section (1). This decision is by a Division Bench. The proposition of law enunciated by the learned Judges is well settled. The condition precedent for an order under sub-section (1) is that a husband having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife. This is the very foundation of an order under sub-section (1) and what the explanation stresses is that keeping a mistress or marrying another wife is a just ground for the first wife's refusal to live with her husband. It does not say that it is a just ground for awarding maintenance. This decision also stated:—

"At first sight it would appear that the effect of the explanation introduced by the amendment of 1949 would be material only after an order under sub-section (1) of Section 488 has been made, but the language of proviso 1 to sub-section (3) makes it clear that a Magistrate may consider such ground of refusal on a wife's part to live with her husband and make an order under the section, notwithstanding the husband's offer to maintain her on condition of her living with him".

The aforesaid observations, with respect, do not support the view that the explanation cannot be considered at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). In this case the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court dealt with the question of maintenance by a wife against her husband under sub-section (1), and the explanation to sub-section (3) was considered at that stage and not thereafter. In the absence of proof of neglect or refusal the learned Judges did not consider the factum of second marriage by itself as a ground for granting maintenance. This is so. I am afraid this case relied upon by Mr. S. K. Kakodkar does not support him. I agree with the learned Judge of the Patna High Court that the second proviso to sub-section (3) is not applicable at the stage of making an order under sub-section (1) but, with respect, I find it difficult to agree with him that the first proviso is not applicable at the stage of sub-section (1). The question of an offer by a husband to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him may arise at the stage of sub-section (1) or even thereafter depending upon the facts of each individual case. It is possible to conceive of a situation where a wife may leave home on account of legal cruelty on the part of her mother-in-law. A husband may be helpless against his powerful and domineering mother. In this situation he may neglect to maintain his wife or refuse to live separate from his mother. He may thereafter recover his lost independence and have a separate home. He could then offer to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him. The explanation and the first proviso are to be read in association with each other and not in isolation. The first proviso envisages "an order under this section" and not under sub-sec (3) only and, therefore, it would also apply at the stage of sub-section (1). The object of the legislature is to bring about reconciliation when the offer to maintain is bona fide. The object also is to promote domestic happiness and not keep a husband and a wife separate. It need hardly be emphasized that the proper place for a wife is with her husband. The offer may be made before an order for maintenance is passed. The offer may also be made at the stage of enforcement of the order under sub-section (3) (Tejabai v Shankarrao, AIR 1966 Bom 48). The expression "may make an order under this section" is to be construed so as to make it operative for the purpose of the entire section and not only sub-section (3). The word "section" is not used unnecessarily or superfluously by the legislature. The presumption is against such a use, and so effect must be given if possible, to all the words used, for the legislature is deemed not to waste its words or say anything in vain (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 36, Third Edition, p 390). It has to be given a sensible meaning. The construction placed by the learned Judge of the Patna High Court on this expression, if I may say so with respect, unduly narrows its scope. The sequence of this proviso may, at first sight, lend support to the view taken by him but, it is not to be considered in isolation.

6 In AIR 1958 Mys 128 relied upon by Mr R R Kolwalkar, the argument urged on behalf of the applicant husband in revision was that the explanation inserted by the amendment in 1949 applies during the course of the enforcement of the order under sub-section (1) and that it has nothing to do with the order to be made under sub-section (1). In other words, the explanation is not attracted at the stage of making an order under sub-section (1). This argument was repelled by K. S Hegde, J. (as he then was) in the following words:—

"If I accept the validity of the petitioner's argument, it would be necessary to come to the conclusion that the entire first proviso to sub-section (3) of S 488, Cr. P. C. will be relevant only when an action is taken under sub-section (3). It could have nothing to do with sub-section (1). To put it in other words no husband in proceedings under sub-section (1) of S 488 Cr P C. can take a plea that he is willing to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him. That plea will be only available to him when the order is being enforced. This would make the whole section look ridiculous. Courts have uniformly accepted the view that a husband could in an application under S 488, Cr P. C. take the plea that he is willing to maintain his wife if she lives with him. It is a good defence if it is a bona fide one. If the main proviso is available in proceedings under sub-section (1) then it necessarily follows that the amendment made to that proviso will also be applicable to such cases. If the husband can plead that he is willing to maintain the wife, she in her turn can plead that she is not willing to live with him on the ground that he has taken a second wife. I see no particular reason as to why the plea in question should be available only at the time of enforcement of the order and not at the time of its passing. The learned counsel for the revision petitioner has evaded this question. He seems to think that it is legislature's folly and nobody else's concern. I refuse to feel so helpless. The several sub-sections to S 488 Cr. P. C. have never been considered by Courts in isolation. They are an integrated whole. They must be taken cumulatively. When the legislature amended the first proviso to sub-section (3) of S 488, Cr P. C., it knew full well the scope of the first proviso as interpreted by decided cases. If the decided cases did not truly represent the legislative intention, the legislature would have certainly clarified its intention. But the fact that the legislature left the first proviso untouched excepting to provide an exception to it shows that there was no conflict between the intention of the legislature and the judicial interpretation. Judicial opinion has been uniform on this point. I unhesitatingly reject the contention of the revision petitioner".

The above reasoning, with respect, I adopt and follow. The legislature could not have intended that the explanation should apply only at the stage of the enforcement of an order under sub-section (1) and not before. A husband may not have a mistress at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). He may have a mistress thereafter at the stage of enforcement, and this fact would be a just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him. He may also have a mistress before order is passed under sub-section (1). This too would be a just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him and if neglect or refusal is proved, an order of maintenance under sub-section (1) would be legal and proper. The conditional offer, in that case, would not come in the way of the Magistrate making an order under sub-section (1). By limiting the scope of the explanation to enforcement, the social object of the amendment would not be served. That object was removing the hardships suffered by a wife who refuses to live with her husband because he has kept a mistress or has another wife. The amendment sets at rest the controversy on the question whether such a ground constitutes sufficient reason to grant separate maintenance to the wife. (For further statement of objects and reasons see Gazette of India Part V dated August 28th 1948 at p. 628). The legislature provided a clear answer in the explanation, so as to remove any doubt in this matter.

7. In AIR 1957 All 658, it was said that the proviso to sub-section (3) is added in the interest of the wife and not the husband. It is to stop a Court from too readily accepting the proposition that as soon as a husband offers to maintain his wife if she lives with him he ceases to 'neglect' or to 'refuse to maintain' his wife. This offer is to be carefully tested and if the wife gives adequate reasons for refusing to live with her husband, she is not to be deprived of her right to maintenance. The learned Single Judge then went on to add that it is only when her reasons are insufficient that her claim can be denied. This decision dealt with enforcement of the order of maintenance passed under sub-section (1). It did not deal with the question whether the explanation applies or does not apply at the stage of an order under sub-section (1). It was mainly concerned with the first proviso and its implications. It spoke of "maintaining the order passed by him". This may perhaps throw some light on the expression "may make an order under this section" in the first proviso. AIR 1957 Mad 693 dealt with the case of a wife's refusal to live with her husband on account of the tyranny of the stepmother, a virago by temperament. This decision is not helpful except for the fact that the first proviso and the explanation to sub-section (3) were applied at the stage of making an order under sub-section (1) as in Allahabad, Mysore and Calcutta cases. The explanation qualifies the proviso. This is not all. It also governs the proceeding under sub-section (1). AIR 1959 Punj 295 is the last case to be reviewed. This was also the case of contracting a second marriage as in the Patna, Allahabad, Calcutta and Mysore cases cited above. The learned Single Judge relied upon AIR 1956 Cal 134 in support of his conclusion that the fact of the second marriage cannot ipso facto establish neglect or refusal within the meaning of sub-section (1). This would furnish a just ground for the first wife to refuse to live with him, but neglect or refusal have to be proved independently. It may be added that the explanation was considered in this case, at the stage of making an order under sub-section (1) and not at the stage of its enforcement under sub-section (3). The learned Judge observed:

"From the respondent's act of taking another wife it may be possible to infer that he has no longer any intention to satisfy the expectations of the petitioner as regards her connubial or consortial rights. But neither denial of connubium in the sense of marital intercourse, nor refusal of consortium in the sense of avoiding society of the spouse can be considered a just ground for claiming relief under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Such an act may be proof of husband's neglect of the first wife, but not of 'neglect or refusal to maintain her'. The only want, which this provision of law purports to relieve, relates to providing of food, raiment, and shelter. The legislature has advisedly used two words 'neglect' and 'refuse'. 'Refuse' means a failure to maintain when asked to do so, while 'neglect' means a failure on the part of the party bound to maintain, even in the absence of a demand. A husband, therefore, without refusing to maintain his wife, may still be guilty of neglecting to maintain her. When there is avoidance or disregard of duty whether from heedlessness, indifference or wilfulness, it is a case of 'neglect'. The term 'neglect' includes disregard of duty wilfully as well as unintentionally. A person is said to 'refuse' when he denies or declines to do what is asked of him. 'Refusal' is always a wilful and deliberate act. On the other hand, the word 'neglect' imports an omission accompanied by some kind of culpability in the sense of a blameworthy conduct. Neglect is not always synonymous with omission. A person 'neglects' who is remiss in paying attention to or in discharging duty towards another. 'Neglect' is, therefore, not a mere omission without fault. It is an omission accompanied by some kind of censurable conduct on the part of the husband. But a husband cannot be said to have neglected or refused to maintain his wife who voluntarily lives apart from him".

8. This decision succinctly explains the meaning of the two expressions "refuse" and "neglect". Mr. R. R. Kolwalkar, learned counsel for the respondent, argued that the applicant is keeping his brother's wife as his mistress. It may be stated here that it is not necessary for the purposes of law that a mistress must always be a stranger. A woman illicitly occupying the place of a wife is a mistress in its ordinary sense. The wife of the brother of the applicant supplanted the respondent in the house of the applicant. According to the evidence, she slept in the same room with the applicant whereas the respondent was made to sleep alone in a separate room in the house. The brother's wife was a partner of the bed of the applicant. They were having illicit connections. The courts of justice can redress or punish legal wrongs, but they cannot go farther. They cannot make men virtuous. According to Mr S. K. Kakodkar, neglect or refusal has to be proved independently of the immoral act on the part of the applicant. This is so. The offer of the applicant to maintain the respondent on condition of her living with him has not been regarded as bona fide by the two courts below, and for good reasons. This offer makes me think of crocodile tears. It reminds me of "Lady doth protest too much". The respondent was made to leave the house of the applicant somewhere in April 1966 and thereafter up till the date of filing the application in June, 1967, the applicant refused or neglected to maintain her. This refusal or neglect was wilful. The conduct of the applicant is indeed blameworthy. He would take the respondent back but on his own terms; he would not give up his brother's wife nor, it seems, would she give him up. The applicant kept her back from the witness box for reasons best known to him. The trouble in this case arose because of the departure of the brother of the applicant for Kuwait. How true is the saying in this case "frailty thy name is woman."

9. I do not agree with Mr S. K. Kakodkar that the explanation does not apply at the stage of an order under subsection (1). The view of the Courts below that it applies at that stage is in conformity with the scheme of section 488 and has my approval. In this view of the matter, the answer to the question raised in the opening paragraph is in the affirmative. The revision petition is thus devoid of substance and is accordingly rejected. Order accordingly. The scope of revision petition is discussed by this Court in 'Caetano Colaco v Joao Rodrigues' AIR 1966 Goa 32 (FB).

G S Marathe, for Petitioner; S Tamba Govt Pleader, for Respondent

ORDER.— Shri G S Marathe, learned counsel for the petitioner — Vaijanath H Sanadi — applies for a certificate under Article 134 (1) of the Constitution

2 The petition arises out of the decision given by this Court dated 21st June, 1969, upholding the sentence of death passed by the learned Sessions Judge, Panaji, for the murder of Sidappa Velgathu on the night of 25th October, 1965. The material facts are that the petitioner, after a proper trial was convicted by the learned Sessions Judge under Sections 302 and 201 of the Penal Code, and was sentenced to death. The other accused — Krishna Hema Chorlekar — was also convicted under S. 201 of the Penal Code and was sentenced to undergo R. I. for 5 years. He was, however, acquitted of the offences charged under section 302 read with section 114 of the Penal Code. They preferred an appeal to this Court. There was also a reference to this Court under section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for confirmation of the sentence of death. By his order dated 24th April, 1969, my brother declined to accept the reference for confirmation of the sentence of death. In the particular view taken by him he altered this sentence to the sentence of imprisonment for life. In the case of the other accused — Krishna Hema Chorlekar the sentence was reduced from 5 years to 2 years. I could not persuade myself to agree with my brother. In agreement with the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge, the conviction recorded and the sentence passed by him on the petitioner and the other accused Krishna Hema Chorlekar were maintained by my order dated 7th May, 1969, and this order was sent to my brother for information at Imphal, where he was transferred as Judicial Commissioner, Manipur and Tripura. He ceased to be an Additional Judicial Commissioner with effect from 24th April, 1969. In his supplementary order dated 6th June, 1969, signed at Imphal, while commenting on the order made by me dated 7th May, 1969, he gave additional reasons in support of the sentence of imprisonment for life. There being no third Judge to resolve the difference of opinion the sentences passed by the learned Sessions Judge on the petitioner and Krishna Hema Chorlekar were confirmed in accordance with the proviso to section 7 (2) of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Judicial Commissioner's Court) Regulation, 1963. This decision was communicated to them and their counsel on 21st June, 1969. There is no petition for a certificate on behalf of Krishna. Hema Chorlekar. The petition is only on behalf of the petitioner. This, in short, is the background of the petition.

3. The first ground in support of the certificate applied for under Article 134 (1) (c) "is that the proviso to Section 7 (2) of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Judicial Commissioner's Court) Regulation, 1963 is bad in law because it is against the basic principles of administration of justice." Section 7 (2) and its proviso read as under:—

"Where there is a difference of opinion among the members of the Bench on any matter coming up before it for determination, the opinion of the majority shall prevail and the orders of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall be in terms of the views of the majority:

Provided that where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree, order or sentence of the subordinate Court, such decree, order or sentence shall be confirmed."

There is no substance in this ground and Shri Marathe does not press it. The proviso is not bad in law, although the presence of a third Judge to resolve the difference would be a better alternative.

4. The second ground is that the supplementary order dated 6th June, 1969, signed by my brother from Imphal as Additional Judicial Commissioner when he was no more holding that office has no legal validity and therefore this is a fit case for granting the certificate applied for. Shri S. Tamba, learned Government Pleader, submits that I should direct that the supplementary order should not form part of the record as it is without jurisdiction. I am afraid it is not open to me to pass such an order. This apart, the supplementary order gives additional reasons in support of the sentence of imprisonment for life. It is in favour of the petitioner, and it would not be proper to accept the said submission made by the learned Government Pleader. Let it remain on the record for such use as is considered appropriate by Their Lordships of the Supreme Court. The question of law is whether it can legally form part of the decision announced by me on 21st June, 1969. It may not be proper or expedient for me to answer it.

5. There is one thing more. From the propriety and procedural point of view, was the supplementary order really called for? In 'Rajnikant v. State' AIR 1967 Goa 40, in a somewhat similar certificate proceeding under Article 134 (1) of the Constitution, a supplementary order was passed by my brother when he was an Additional Judicial Commissioner here. At that time there was also no third Judge to resolve the difference of opinion and hence the certificate applied for could not be granted. Special leave appeal by the condemned prisoner was dismissed by the Supreme Court on 7th December, 1966. It may be said in passing that the sentence of death was later commuted to imprisonment for life by the Lt. Governor. A suo motu action was taken by this Court requiring the Lt. Governor to show cause why that order should not be set aside. The President later commuted the said sentence to imprisonment for life. The order of the Lt. Governor was set aside as it had not the authority of law. The order passed by the President was accepted as a valid order.

6. But for the legality and propriety of the supplementary order, I would have been reluctant to grant the certificate applied for. The two orders signed earlier—order dated 24th April, 1969, by my brother and order dated 7th May, 1969, by me—indicated our mind when the judgment was pronounced by me on 21st June, 1969. The first order signed by my brother was intended by him to be final. This would be clear from his supplementary order signed from Imphal. The order dated 7th May, 1969, by me was obviously final. A question of procedural law or principle is involved in this case which requires further consideration by the Supreme Court. The argument of Shri Marathe that because of the difference of opinion in the matter of sentence, this case is a fit one for an appeal to the Supreme Court is not a convincing argument. The Supreme Court is not an ordinary Court of criminal appeal. A case must involve something more than mere appreciation of evidence for the purposes of grant of the certificate applied for. It may be added that there was no difference of opinion between my brother and myself in so far as conviction under section 302 read with section 201 of the I. P. C. is concerned.

7. In the view taken of the facts in this case, the petition for the certificate applied for under Article 134 (1) (c) is granted. I direct that a certificate should issue that this case is a fit one for an appeal to the Supreme Court. The execution of the sentence of death is hereby stayed until further orders. Order accordingly.

(3) That, in any event, even the order was mala fide because the police authorities were biased against the petitioner.

(4) That the appellate authority could not have disposed of this appeal without giving any personal hearing to the petitioner.

4. Before going into the relevant provisions of the Act, it would be proper at the outset to examine the settled legal tests for determining whether the function is purely an administrative function or a judicial or a quasi-judicial function, and whether the power is to be judicially or quasi-judicially exercised on certain objective tests or the discretion is to be an absolute discretion.

In P. L. Lakhanpal v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1507 at p. 1512, their Lordships in terms held that even the function which is in its inception executive in character may not retain the executive character all throughout and it may become quasi-judicial at later or some intermediate stage during the course of its exercise. At the stage at which it attains the nature of a quasi-judicial function the authority entrusted with that function has to comply with the rules of natural justice and give an opportunity to the party concerned of presenting his case. At p. 1510 their Lordships set out the principles for distinguishing a quasi-judicial function from one which is merely ministerial. Where there was a lis, there was prima facie in the absence of anything in the statute to the contrary the duty of the authority to act judicially and the decision of the authority was a quasi-judicial act; and (2) even if there was no lis inter partes and the contest was between the party proposing to do the act and the subject opposing it, the final determination of the authority would yet be a quasi-judicial act, provided the authority was required by the statute to act judicially. Where the statute was, however, silent, the inference whether the authority acting under the statute had, therefore, duty to act judicially had to be arrived at keeping in mind five factors laid down in the case of Board of High School and Intermediate Education, U. P. v. Ghanshyam, AIR 1962 SC. 1110, as under :—

"(1) the express provisions of the statute read along with the nature of rights affected;

(2) the manner of disposal provided;

(3) the objective criterion if any to be adopted,

(4) the effect of the decision on the persons affected,

(5) other indicia afforded by the statute."

In State of Assam v. Bharat Kala Bhandar Ltd., AIR 1967 SC 1766 at p.

1773, their Lordships held that the question whether the power under a particular provision has to be exercised purely on the subjective satisfaction of Government or other authorities or has to be exercised subject to some objective tests depends upon a number of factors. The language of the provision, the nature of the power conferred, the circumstances and the manner of exercise of power, what things are affected by such exercise and how, and other relevant factors, in the context of the particular provision, may have to be considered in determining whether the power envisaged can be exercised merely on the subjective satisfaction of Government or other authority, or there are to be some objective tests before the power can be exercised. The intention of the legislature is primarily to be gathered from the language used and where the language used is plain and unambiguous, effect must be given to it and there is nothing more to be said. But where the language is not clear, all these factors must be weighed to arrive at the final conclusion whether the power conferred depends entirely on the subjective satisfaction of the Government or the authority concerned, or there have to be some objective tests before the power can be exercised. It is on these principles that it was held while construing the relevant provisions of emergency legislation under the Defence of India, Rule 126-AA(4) giving power to the Government to regulate wages and other conditions of service, that this power could not be exercised purely on subjective satisfaction of the Government. When the effect of the order passed under sub-rule (4), can be so far-reaching and so wide in its impact on the industrial relations, this power could not be exercised merely on the subjective satisfaction of the Government, and even in the real emergency the procedure must be adopted by the Government to consult the interests concerned by giving a public notice to the particular interests affected, indicating what the Government intended to do and inviting representations and if necessary, calling for data from them and also giving oral hearing to the representatives of the interests concerned.

5. While applying these five factors, another important consideration must be borne in mind that a judicial element can be inferred from the nature of the power to determine questions which affect individual rights or when it relates solely to the treatment of a particular individual, and it is not necessary that there must be "a superadded characteristic or something more to impose a duty to act judicially". This wrong gloss of Lord Hewart C. J. on Lord Atkin's observations which was assumed even by the

Privy Council in Nakkuda Ali v. Jayaratne 1951 AC 66 to be "a general principle beyond dispute", contrary to all settled decisions stands now finally corrected by Lord Reid in the oft-quoted decision in Ridge v Baldwin (1964) AC 40 (74-79). The rule of "audi alteram partem" is not confined to the conduct of strictly legal tribunals, but is applicable to every tribunal or body of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences to individuals. As Lord Reid ably pointed out there had been a twilight of these principles of natural justice, which had only a limited application in case of modern statutes which left matters to administrative discretion on policy considerations, or under war-time legislations, and particularly, because of the said wrong gloss of Lord Hewart C J on Atkin L J's observations, due to which the Privy Council had been even under a serious misapprehension of the effect of the older authorities in Nakkuda Ali's case, 1951 AC 66. Lord Reid also pointed out that in modern legislations as policy played part in administrative decisions, the strict judicial process or full-fledged judicial inquiry was only inapplicable in that context, but still such administrative bodies performing quasi-judicial functions under statutes authorising administrative interference with private rights or where the administrative power related solely to the treatment of a particular individual as distinguished from a large scale exercise of power where treatment meted out to an individual was only one of many factors to be considered, at least the essentials of principles of natural justice had to be observed. These essential principles were engrafted by courts on to a host of such war-time provisions authorising such administrative interference with private rights. Besides, in war time legislations an alternative safeguard was provided, which was more practicable in war time, the objective test that the officer must have reasonable cause to believe whatever was the crucial matter. Once the erroneous gloss of Lord Hewart C J was corrected of necessity of "any superadded characteristic of a duty to act judicially," Lord Reid further corrected (at p 77) the approach of the Privy Council. In Nakkuda Ali's case, 1951 AC 66 that reviewability was excluded even when objective existence of the reasonable grounds was a condition precedent for a valid exercise of the administrative power to interfere with private rights. He observed that when an enactment expressly required an official to have reasonable grounds for his decision, the law was not so defective that a subject could not bring up such a decision for review, however, seriously he might have been affected, and, however, obvious it might be that the official acted in breach of his statutory obligation. Following this trend started by Lord Reid, Lord Parker C. J. in Re: K. (H) (an infant), (1967) 1 All ER 225 (231), even when he did not, like Solomon L. J. hold the function of an immigration officer to be quasi-judicial, in terms held that Nakkuda Ali's case, 1951 AC 66 only intended to say that there was no duty to invoke a judicial process or to have a full scale inquiry, unless there was a duty to act judicially, and, therefore, the immigration officer must act honestly and fairly, and if he failed to do so, the Court could interfere. The duty to act fairly would imply giving an opportunity to the immigrant of satisfying the officer of the matters in the enactment and for that purpose let the immigrant know what his immediate impression was so that the immigrant could disabuse him and to that limited extent, the so-called rules of natural justice do apply. Lord Denning M. R. in the Court of Appeal, in Hanif v Secy of State for Home, (1968) 2 All ER 145 (151) in terms approved this approach of Lord Parker C. J. as to the extent of the power of the Court to review decisions of immigration officers, by holding that if they acted dishonestly or unfairly, the decision could be questioned by a certiorari, and if they did not inquire into matters which they ought to inquire, they could be compelled to do so by a mandamus. Therefore, from the very nature of the statutory administrative power to make a decision affecting private rights or relating solely to the treatment of an individual, it is either held to be a quasi-judicial power, or such as to imply a statutory duty to act fairly in accordance with the essential principles of justice of at least a previous notice and reasonable opportunity of being heard before an impartial authority, and a further duty to come to as honest decision on the matter statutorily left to such authority by dispassionately and fairly applying its mind to matters which it was bound to consider. These facets of the statutory administrative power so coupled with the duty would be ordinarily reviewable, unless there is a compelling necessity in the context of the statute to manifest a legislative intent to exclude all principles of natural justice and leave the entire matter to the arbitrary absolute discretion of the executive. Except the peculiar case of Liversidge v Anderson, 1942 AC 206 where the laws of England had to be silenced amidst the clash of arms, by holding that even the existence of reasonable grounds even need not be objective but only a mental fact, so that no facet of the administrative power was open to review and the discretion was absolute, the area left to the executive would not be so widely interpreted as to exclude a limited application of even essential principles of natural justice as distinguished from a full-fledged judicial inquiry, and as to the objective existence of the grounds being open to judicial review, although the opinion formed by the authority would be unreviewable.

6. A third important aspect which must also be borne in mind in the context of post-constitutional enactments which bears the mandate of Article 141, Art. 19 (1) etc; as ably pointed out by Subba Rao J. (as he then was) in Nageshwarrao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 1376 (1379), is that in England the Parliament is supreme and, therefore, a statutory law, however repugnant to the principles of natural justice is valid; whereas in India the law made by the Parliament or a State Legislature should stand the test of fundamental rights declared in Part III of the Constitution. It is, therefore, a settled principle of constitution, as adopted in Jagdish Pandey v. Chancellor, Bihar University, AIR 1968 SC 353 (357), to read every such statute consistently with the essential principles of natural justice, as any other reading may make it unconstitutional. In Mahammed Faruk v. State of M. P. (1969) 1 SCC 833 (857), it was in terms held that a law providing for the grant of a license or permit, which confers a discretion upon an administrative authority regulated by rules or principles in accordance with rules of natural justice, will be presumed to impose a reasonable restriction. However, if the power is entrusted to an administrative agency to grant or withhold a license or permit in its uncontrolled discretion, the law ex facie infringes the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 19 (1). In Purtabpore Co. v. Cane Commr. of Bihar, (1969) 1 SCC 308 (316), the Supreme Court even made a further distinction between an order revoking or modifying a license and a decision not to grant a license by in terms holding that the question in the former case was not one of a privilege as in the later case but of a right. The Courts should adopt a presumption that prior notice and opportunity to be heard should be given before a license can be revoked, which can be rebutted only in similar circumstances to those in which the summary interference with vested rights may be permissible.

7. The law in our country has kept abreast with this trend started by Lord Reid in England. In State of Orissa v. Binapani Dei, AIR 1967 SC 1269 (1271), His Lordship Shah J. held:

"The rule that a party to whose prejudice an order is intended to be passed is entitled to a hearing applies alike to judicial tribunals and bodies of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences. It is one of the fundamental rules of our constitutional set-up that every citizen is protected against exercise of arbitrary authority by the State or its officers. Duty to act judicially, would, therefore, arise from the very nature of the function intended to be performed; it need not be shown to be superadded. If there is power to decide and determine to the prejudice of a person, duty to act judicially is implicit in the exercise of such power. If the essentials of justice be ignored and an order to the prejudice of a person is made, the order is a nullity. That is a basic concept of the rule of law and importance thereof transcends the significance of a decision in any particular case."

In Bharat Kala Bhandar's case, AIR 1967 SC 1766, as already considered, even the R. 126-AA (4) under the Defence of India Act, 1962, was construed even in a real emergency, not to confer an administrative power to be exercised purely on the subjective satisfaction of the Government, but only after consulting the interests affected after some kind of previous notice of what the Government intended to do and after giving an oral hearing to the interests concerned, although it was not necessary to hold a full-scale quasi-judicial enquiry. Finally, in Rohtas Industries Ltd. v. S. D. Agarwal, AIR 1969 SC 707 (718-19), the pertinent question, on which the learned judges were equally divided in Barium Chemicals Ltd. v. Company Law Board, AIR 1967 SC 295, as to the extent of reviewability of any of the facets of the discretionary power conferred under Section 237(b) of the Indian Companies Act, 1956, has been fully answered. After taking into account the fact that the statute in question was a post-constitutional statute, subject to the mandate of Art. 19(1)(g) and as this was not a war-time legislation where there would be any special necessity not to fetter the executive discretion, it was held that the statute in question must be so interpreted as to hold that no arbitrary power was conferred on the Government, and that this power must be exercised in accordance with the restrictions imposed by law. Therefore, in these circumstances the Central Government on which the discretion was conferred was not held to be the sole judge of what were its powers as well as the sole judge of what was the way in which they could be exercised. The existence of circumstances in question on the basis of which the power could be exercised was held to be open to judicial review, though the opinion formed by the Government was not amenable to review by the Courts. Finally, in a very recent decision in A. K. Kraipak v Union of India, (1969) 2 SC 264 (268) His Lordship Hegde J. speaking for the Constitutional Bench completed the process started by his Lordship Shah J in Binapani Dei's case AIR 1967 SC 1269 (1271) by almost obliterating their dividing line between an administrative power and a quasi-judicial power. Following the trend of Lord Reid and Lord Parker C J, our Supreme Court corrected the further error in the approach committed in Nakkuda Ali's case 1951 AC 66 by questioning the validity of the limitation that if there was no duty to act judicially, there was no room for application of the rules of natural justice, and that consequently there was no scope for the supervisory review by a certiorari or a mandamus. At page 272 it was in terms held that the purpose of the rules of natural justice being one to prevent miscarriage of justice by supplementing the law of the land, wherever there was a duty to arrive at a just decision even in an administrative inquiry the principles of natural justice would be applicable, at least in so far as they would be necessary to arrive at a just decision on the facts of the case.

8 In view of these settled principles, it is now well settled that while applying the aforesaid five factors in question in order to find out whether the function delegated to the administrative authority is purely administrative or quasi-judicial, the very nature of the administrative power to affect private rights or relating to the sole treatment of individuals will itself imply the statutory duty, to comply with at least the essential principles of natural justice. Besides, in such a post-constitutional statute which has the mandate of Art 19(1), which is not a war-time legislation, the licensing scheme especially in the context of the power to revoke or modify a license, must be interpreted on the presumption that in exercising this discretion, the authority must act fairly at least in accordance with essential principles of natural justice of a prior notice and reasonable opportunity to be heard, and on the objective existence of the grounds on which the power is required to be exercised, and, therefore, both these facets of this discretionary power would ordinarily be reviewable, unless the scheme of this legislation compels us to hold that the Parliament intended to provide for an arbitrary power of summary interference with the vested rights of a licensee; which would ex facie amount to an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right of the citizen to hold the fire-arm, which is a property right guaranteed to him under the Constitution.

9. We would now turn to the relevant provisions of the Act under consideration. As it is mentioned in the statement of objects and reasons, the Indian Arms Act, 1878, was intended to disarm the entire nation at the time of the British rule in the country. After independence was achieved, the Arms Act, 1959, has been enacted which has liberalised the provisions by excluding certain arms like knives, spears, bows and arrows and the like from the licensing provisions and by classifying the firearms and other dangerous weapons so as to ensure that

(1) that dangerous weapons of military patterns are not available to civilians, particularly the anti-social elements;

(2) that weapons for self-defence are available for all citizens under license unless their antecedents or propensities do not entitle them for the privilege, and

(3) that firearms required for training purposes and ordinary civilian use are made more easily available on permits, and to co-ordinate the rights of the citizens with the necessity of maintaining law and order and avoid fifth-column activities in the country. Section 2(c) defines 'arms' to mean articles of any description designed or adapted as weapons for offence or defence and includes firearms, sharp-edged and other deadly weapons, and parts of, and machinery for manufacturing, arms but does not include articles designed solely for domestic or agricultural uses such as a lathi or an ordinary walking stick and weapons incapable of being used otherwise than as toys or of being converted into serviceable weapons. Section 3 provides for licence for acquisition and possession of firearms and ammunition and it provides that no person shall acquire, have in his possession, or carry any firearm or ammunition unless he holds in this behalf a licence issued in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder. Section 4 requires a licence for acquisition and possession of arms of specified description in certain cases. Sections 13 and 14 deal with applications for grant of licence and the grounds on which they can be refused. Under Section 14(1) the licensing authority shall refuse to grant-

(a) a licence under Section 3, section 4 or section 5 where such licence is required in respect of any prohibited arms or prohibited ammunition;

(b) (i) where such licence is required by a person whom the licensing authority has reason to believe

(i) to be prohibited by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force from acquiring, having in his possession or carrying any arms or ammunition, or

(2) to be of unsound mind, or

(3) to be for any reason unfit for a licence under this Act; or

(ii) where the licensing authority deems it necessary for the security of the public peace or for public safety to refuse to grant such licence,

Sub-clause (3) requires that where the licensing authority refuses to grant a licence to any person it shall record in writing the reasons for such refusal and furnish to the person on demand a brief statement of the same unless in any case the licensing authority is of the opinion that it will not be in the public interest to furnish such statement. Section 17(3) deals with variation, suspension and revocation of licence as under:

"(3) The licensing authority may by order in writing suspend a licence for such period as it thinks fit or revoke a licence—

(a) if the licensing authority is satisfied that the holder of the licence is prohibited by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force, from acquiring, having in his possession or carrying any arms or ammunition, or is of unsound mind, or is for any reason unfit for a licence under this Act, or

(b) if the licensing authority deems it necessary for the security of the public peace or for public safety to suspend or revoke the licence: or

(c) if the licence was obtained by the suppression of material information or on the basis of wrong information provided by the holder of the licence or any other person on his behalf at the time of applying for it; or

(d) if any of the conditions of the licence has been contravened; or

(e) if the holder of the licence has failed to comply with a notice under sub-section (1) requiring him to deliver up the licence."

Sub-clause (4) lays down that the licensing authority may also revoke a licence on the application of the holder thereof. Under sub-clause (5),

"Where the licensing authority makes an order varying a licence under sub-section (1) or an order suspending or revoking a licence under sub-section (3), it shall record in writing the reasons therefor and furnish to the holder of the licence on demand a brief statement of the same unless in any case the licensing authority is of the opinion that it will not be in the public interest to furnish such statement."

Thereafter, the sub-clause (9) confers a power on the Central Government by a gazetted order to suspend, revoke or direct any licensing authority to suspend or revoke all or any licences granted under the Act throughout India or any part thereof. S. 18 provides for appeals. Under Section 18(1) any person aggrieved by an order of the licensing authority refusing to grant a licence or varying the conditions of a licence or by an order of the licensing authority or the authority to whom the licensing authority is subordinate, suspending or revoking a licence may prefer an appeal against that order to such authority and within such period as may be prescribed: Provided that no appeal shall lie against any order made by, or under the direction of the Government. Under clause (4) every appeal under this section shall be made by a petition in writing and shall be accompanied by a brief statement of the reasons for the order appealed against where such statement has been furnished to the appellant and by such fee as may be prescribed. Under clause (5) in disposing of an appeal the appellate authority shall follow such procedure as may be prescribed. Provided that no appeal shall be disposed of unless the appellant has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard. Under Section 21(1) any person having in his possession any arms or ammunition the possession whereof has ceased to be lawful, shall without unnecessary delay deposit the same with the officer in charge of the nearest police station as required under that section. Section 22(1) provides that whenever any Magistrate has reason to believe that (a) any person residing within the local limits of his jurisdiction has in his possession any arms or ammunition for any unlawful purpose, (b) that such person cannot be left in the possession of any arms or ammunition without danger to the public peace or safety, the Magistrate may after recording reasons for his belief cause a search to be made of the house or premises occupied by any such person or in which the Magistrate has reason to believe that such arms or ammunition are or is to be found and may have such arms or ammunition seized and detain the same in safe custody for such period as he thinks necessary, although that person may be entitled by virtue of this Act or any other law for the time being in force to have the same in his possession. Under Section 24, the Central Government is also entitled to seizure of any arm or ammunition in possession of any person notwithstanding that such person is entitled by virtue of this Act or any other law for the time being in force to have the same in his possession, and may detain the same for such period as it thinks necessary for the public peace and safety.

10. As far as the Arms Rules, 1962, are concerned, R 6 provides that where a licensing authority is of the opinion that it will not be in the public interest to furnish reasons for the refusal, renewal, variation of conditions, revocation or suspension of a licence, to the applicant, the recorded reasons thereof and the facts of the case shall be communicated by him to the appellate authority. Under Rules 51 and 52 the application for licence and the form of licence are provided. Under Rule 51 Proviso (u) the licensing authority may in respect of all or any class of firearms require the personal attendance of the applicant before granting or renewing the licence applied for. Under rule 56 the procedure is prescribed to be followed by the appellate authority as under :—

"On receipt of an appeal, the appellate authority may call for the records of the case from the authority who passed the order appealed against and after giving the appellant a reasonable opportunity of being heard pass final orders".

11. From the aforesaid scheme of the Act and the Rules, it is clear that for a firearm as in this case, licence under Section 3 is necessary for its acquisition and possession. Even at the time when the licence is granted under Sections 13 and 14, the authority can refuse to grant licence if he has reason to believe that it was required by a person who was under some legal prohibition from acquiring or having in his possession or carrying an arm or was of unsound mind or was for any reasons unfit for a licence or where the licensing authority deems it necessary for the security of public peace or for public safety to refuse to grant such licence. When a licence is refused reasons are to be recorded and the order is an appealable order under Section 18. Even where the licence is to be revoked or suspended under Section 17(3), the same two grounds which were to be taken into account at the time of refusal of initial licence are specified, viz., as to the unfitness of the person for a licence and because the licensing authority deems it necessary for the security of the public peace or for public safety. Three other grounds are also mentioned in Section 17 (3) of the licence being obtained by suppression of material information or on the basis of wrong information or if the conditions of the licence have been contravened or the holder has failed to comply with the notice requiring him to deliver up the licence. Therefore, it is obvious that the discretion which is vested in the licensing authority to suspend or revoke a licence can be exercised even on those three specific grounds mentioned in Section 17 (3) (c) (d) and (e), all of which are grounds which can be objectively demonstrated and they do not depend on the subjective opinion or subjective belief of the licensing authority. Even as to the other two grounds, as to the unfitness of the person and the necessity for securing public peace or for public safety, those circumstances can exist objectively and the authority would have to exercise only a judicial discretion to find out whether these grounds which are mentioned in Section 17(3) were established. In fact, the licensing authority is expected to record his reasons. It is true that under section 17(5), he is to furnish a brief statement thereof to the licensee on demand unless he is of the opinion that it would not be in the public interest to furnish such statement. But even in that contingency he is bound to record his reasons and make them available under rule 6 for perusal by the appellate authority. It is this reasoned order read with the right of appeal under Section 18 which makes these restrictions in the licensing scheme reasonable restrictions on the fundamental rights of a citizen to hold a firearm. Both in the provisions regarding the grant of licence and particularly, in the provisions regarding suspension or revocation of a licence, we find no indication whatever that the legislature wanted to depart from the essential principles of natural justice. The discretion which is vested in the licensing authority to refuse a licence or to suspend or revoke a licence cannot therefore be interpreted to be an arbitrary discretion which is not reviewable in any of its facets. In such a context the discretion must be a judicial discretion to be exercised fairly and honestly in accordance with the essential principles of natural justice and on the objective existence of the grounds or circumstances envisaged in the relevant section, which are to be set out in the speaking order of the licensing authority.

12. Unless, therefore, the concerned licensee is informed of the proposed grounds on which the licensing authority wants to exercise its power, he would not be in a position to render any explanation. If he is not given this notice or opportunity, the two salutary safeguards of a speaking order and of an appeal provided by the legislature would be completely illusory. Unless the licensee gets an opportunity to bring materials in his favour to satisfy the officer or to convince him of the non-existence of the grounds, these provisions would be meaningless as he would be hardly able to convince the appellate authority, when there is nothing on the record in his favour, even if such record would be called for by the appellate authority for its perusal under the relevant rules. Besides, the very fact that all the five grounds in clauses (a) to (e) are lumped together in section 17(3), some of which are clearly capable of demonstration, would show in the light of this statutory scheme that the legislature intended that this discretion should be exercised only on all objective existence of all these grounds and, therefore, even though the opinion formed as to the suitability of the person may not be reviewable the existence of the grounds and the procedure of prior notice and opportunity of hearing being given being complied with in accordance with elementary principles of natural justice would always be open to review. As the other two safeguards become illusory this is the only safeguard which would make such restriction a reasonable restriction maintaining a just balance between the Governmental interest and the citizen's fundamental right which would be affected to a minimal extent. Miss Dabu had in this context vehemently argued on behalf of the State that looking to the nature of the lethal weapons in respect of which the fundamental rights were sought to be restricted and the necessity of wide powers which must vest in the executive in the interest of maintenance of law and order and for securing public peace or public safety, on the doctrine of executive necessity a departure from the principles of natural justice should be implicit and no facet of this power vested in the licensing authority should be held to be justiciable. At first blush the argument is attractive. But we find no substance in the argument if we look to the provisions of the Act in which the legislature has provided ample safeguards to deal promptly and efficiently with such emergencies. Under Section 22 the Magistrate is empowered to search and seize arms if he has reason to believe that they are in possession of any person for any unlawful purpose or that they cannot be left in his possession without danger to the public peace or safety. The Magistrate can exercise his power whenever he has reason to believe that the grounds exist for exercise of the power and he can detain the arm in question from any person who was otherwise entitled to keep it in possession. Besides, there is a general power vested in the Central Government under Section 24 for seizure of any arms or ammunition in possession of any person if it thinks necessary for the public peace and safety. Section 17(9) also empowers the Central Government to suspend or revoke or direct any licensing authority to suspend or revoke all or any licences granted under this Act throughout India or any part thereof. The Legislature has thus provided various provisions to deal promptly and efficiently with any emergency without losing any time. Even individual cases can be dealt with under Section 22 by the order of the Magistrate or by the order of the Central Government. In view of these special provisions, it would not be proper to give such a wide construction to the discretion left with the licensing authority under the licensing provisions so as to make it the sole judge of the extent of its powers and also of the way in which it is to be exercised, with the result that the fundamental rights would be at the mercy of arbitrary discretion of the executive. There is nothing compelling in the context of this post-independence legislation which necessitates such unfettered discretion with the executive on the analogy of war-time measures by holding that the discretion vested in the licensing authority is not a judicial or a quasi-judicial discretion but purely an arbitrary, absolute discretion. Miss Dabu had in this connection vehemently relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896(901), where in the context of restrictions on the freedom of speech it was held that wide preventive powers must be left to the discretion of the State Government charged with maintenance of law and order or to its delegate to be exercised on their subjective satisfaction. To make exercise of the power justiciable and subject to judicial scrutiny would be to defeat the purpose of the enactment. This decision would not be helpful for, as I have already pointed out, when any expediency arises the Legislature has made another provisions in the Act and there is no compelling necessity in this statute to sanction departure from the principles of natural justice. Miss Dabu also relied upon the decision in Kishan-chand v. Commr. of Police, AIR 1961 SC 705, where the question was regarding the licence for conducting a tea house under the Calcutta Police Act, 1866. The majority decision at page 708 in terms lays down that if guidance for exercise of discretion to grant the privilege of a license could be found on a fair reading of the section, there would be no reason for striking it down simply because it has not been worded in a manner which would show immediately that the considerations arising from the provisions of Art. 19(1)(g) and Art. 19(6) were in mind, as naturally those considerations could not be in the mind of legislature in 1866. Besides, the decision in 1951 AC 66 which proceeded on a misconception of law, as already stated was heavily drawn upon for holding that the authority had no duty to act judicially, although it must act fairly. Their Lordships, however, pointed out that each statute had to be examined in its own setting and no general principles could be laid down.

This decision was followed by our Division Bench in Jamnadas v. Ram Aiyar, 4 Guj LR 897 = (AIR 1964 Guj 102), in the context of renewal of licence under the Bombay Police Act, 1951, when that function was held to be purely an administrative one where no question of compliance with principles of natural justice could arise. Such cases must now be judged in the light of the final tests which are now finally evolved by the Supreme Court after the misconception of law in Nakkuda Ali's case, 1951 AC 66 has been corrected, and in view of the mandate of Art 19 (1) in post-Constitutional statutes. It is, therefore, clear that in view of the mandate of Art 19 (1), this power at least of suspension or revocation of an existing licence, which solely relates to the treatment of an individual citizen, must in view of the wide impact of the decision affecting his rights, and particularly, in view of the fact that the Legislature has given a perspective by laying down the area in which the discretion could be exercised, and the additional fact that the reasons are to be recorded and the right of appeal is provided, it must be held that the area which is left to the licensing authority is not an arbitrary, uncontrolled discretion but a judicial or a quasi-judicial discretion to be exercised in accordance with essentials of principles of natural justice. Therefore, in view of the settled principles, we must come to the conclusion that the licensing authority had a judicial or a quasi-judicial discretion to be exercised on objective existence of the grounds and, therefore, it was bound to observe the essential principles of natural justice by complying with at least two minimum safeguards of a notice of the proposed grounds and of a reasonable opportunity to the concerned licensee to enable him to convince the authority of the non-existence of the grounds, and both these facets of this discretionary power were clearly reviewable.

13. Turning to some of the authorities which were cited in this connection, in Narsumha v. District Magistrate Cudapah, AIR 1953 Mad 476, Subba Rao J in terms held that the discretion to give or refuse a licence must be a judicial discretion having regard to the facts that this licensing scheme was a restriction on the fundamental right of the citizen to acquire and hold a gun which was clearly a property right. In Jai Narain v. District Magistrate Azamgarh, AIR 1966 All 265 the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court also, treated the right to possess firearms as a fundamental right and held that such a finding adverse to the licensee that it was necessary to cancel his licence should not be arrived at without giving him an opportunity of showing that it was not so necessary. In Naneppa v. Divisional Commr, AIR 1967 Mys 238, the Division Bench also took the same view in the context of revocation of a licence by holding that the licensee must be informed of the ground on which it was proposed to revoke the licence and he must be given an opportunity to show cause without which the right of appeal would be purposeless and meaningless. The Division Bench of the Madras High Court in In re State of Madras, AIR 1957 Mad 692, also took the same view following the earlier decision of Subba Rao J.

14. The other line of decisions which have taken the view that this function is in all its facets purely an administrative one is now fully considered and followed by the Full Bench of the Assam High Court in Hasan Ali v. Commr of Plains Division, AIR 1969 Assam & Nagaland 50. The learned Chief Justice has considered the decisions of the Madhya Pradesh High Court and the Rajasthan High Court which have been mentioned by him which support this view. The learned Chief Justice based his decision on the ground that the discretion of the authority was controlled in two ways, as reasons were to be recorded and because an appeal lay, but otherwise it was to be exercised on the overall necessity of public security and maintenance of public order on the purely subjective satisfaction or opinion of the licensing authority. The peculiar decision of Lord Atkin in 1942 AC 206 was in terms followed for holding that in forming such subjective opinion the licensing authority did not act judicially and, therefore, there was no question of giving any opportunity of hearing before the licence was cancelled. With great respect to the learned Chief Justice Dutt C. J., I respectfully differ from this view which has also been taken in the authorities mentioned by the learned Chief Justice. These authorities proceed on the misconception found in Nakkuda Ali's case, 1951 AC 66 and on the analogy of Liversidge's case, 1942 AC 206 which was entirely in the context of a war-time measure, where departure from principles of natural justice had to be tolerated, and particularly, as the Parliament of England was also supreme, unlike our Parliament which is fettered by constitutional limitations, especially in the matter of fundamental rights where only reasonable restrictions can be imposed in public interest. Every such statute would have therefore to be read consistently with the principles of natural justice and unless there is compelling necessity to make a departure from the principles of natural justice, all attempt should be made consistently with the essential principles of natural justice to see that a just balance is struck between the Governmental interest and the citizen's fundamental right by the reasonable restrictions imposed by the statute. If, therefore, such a statute could be read consistently with the principles of natural justice, that construction must be the only one in such a post-Constitutional statute, where the legislature had the mandate of Article 19(1)(g) and where there was no question of any emergency or war-time measure, so that the departure from the principles of natural justice would have to be tolerated as the price to be paid by the citizens. Therefore, on the first question it must be held that the discretion of the licensing authority when it sought to suspend the petitioner's licence was a judicial or quasi-judicial discretion, and the authority had a duty to act judicially or quasi-judicially in the sense of at least informing the concerned licensee of the proposed grounds and of giving reasonable opportunity of being heard to show cause by showing non-existence of those grounds, or that they were ultra vires the Act, or no grounds at all. Even on the other question, the petitioner's grievance must be upheld because Section 18(5) in terms provides that no appeal shall be disposed of unless the appellant has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard. After the memorandum is received Rule 56 provides for the record being called from the authority which passed the order appealed against and the final order has to be passed after giving the appellant a reasonable opportunity of being heard. Therefore, it is futile to contend that the reading of the memo of appeal was a sufficient compliance. In Fedco (P) Ltd. v. S. N. Bilgrami, AIR 1960 SC 415, in the context of the cancellation of an import licence on the ground that it was obtained by fraud the Supreme Court considered the question of reasonable opportunity of being heard. At page 418 in the majority judgment it was pointed out that the requirement that a reasonable opportunity of being heard must be given has two elements:— (1) opportunity to be heard must be given and (2) this opportunity must be reasonable. Both these matters were held to be justiciable and it was for the Court to decide whether opportunity had been given and whether such an opportunity was reasonable. Subba Rao J. at page 422 in the minority opinion also pointed out that these were well known words and phrases viz. 'reasonable', 'opportunity' and 'of being heard'. They implied that when the charge was one of fraud the affected party was entitled to know the particulars of fraud alleged, to inspect the documents on the basis of which fraud is imputed to him and to a personal hearing to explain his case and to absolve himself of the charge made against him.

Without these elementary safeguards provided by the authority, the opportunity to be heard given to the licensee becomes an empty formality. Therefore, it is obvious from this settled legal position that it is not a sufficient compliance with the scheme of these provisions that the appellate authority had read the memo of appeal and the petitioner must have been heard personally and given a reasonable opportunity to convince the appellate authority.

15. Applying these principles to the facts of this case, the original show cause notice mentioned the grounds that the petitioner was carrying on a medical profession without a proper certificate. This ground was completely given up when the petitioner came out with a plea that he possessed a proper degree certificate. The other ground as regards the dacoity case against him in 1948 is also dropped. Therefore, the only ground which remained and which was mentioned in the show cause notice was the threat given to the landlord of killing him because of some dispute. When we turn to the order of the licensing authority even though this ground of the show cause notice is recited, in the preamble, there is no finding whatsoever. The order on the contrary proceeds on two new grounds:— (1) that the petitioner is a complainant in one Kagdapith Police Station No. 1090/67 and (2) that there is a chapter case against him, and, therefore, the licence was suspended till these two cases were decided. These two grounds are nowhere mentioned in the notice of proposed grounds and, therefore, the order passed by the licensing authority is wholly vitiated by contravention of essential principles of natural justice. Mr. Bhatt is also right in his argument that being a complainant in a case is no ground at all. In fact the petitioner has averred in the petition that the complaint was made because landlord had cut off water supply and the electric connection was also cut off. This allegation has not been controverted. As regards the nature of the chapter case we get nothing on the record. Not only this was the new ground but there is no indication on the record as to the nature of the chapter case. As this ground is made out for the first time, the petitioner must succeed on the ground that no opportunity was given to him to meet this ground and, therefore, it is not necessary to consider whether this can be considered as a ground at all. Miss Dabu in this connection, however, sought to connect this chapter case with the alleged threat given to the landlord. No material whatever has been pointed out either by way of affidavit or otherwise to establish any such connection. Therefore, on this short ground that no notice whatever has been given to the petitioner of the proposed grounds on which suspension of the licence has been ordered, the order of the licensing authority must be quashed. Even the appellate order must fall through as it would be only confirming the nullity and also on the ground that admittedly no personal hearing was given and the appellate order was passed merely on reading the grounds in the memo of appeal. Therefore, both these orders in the present case of the licensing authority as well as of the appellate authority must be quashed.

16. In the result this petition succeeds and the rule is made absolute with costs by quashing both the orders of the licensing authority as well as of the appellate authority. The authorities are restrained from enforcing the said orders against the petitioner. It is needless to mention that this order will not prejudice the rights of the authorities to take a fresh action, if they are so advised.

K. J. Shethna, for Petitioner, G. N. Desai, Govt. Pleader with G. T. Nana-vau, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Opponent.

DESAI, J. — This is a criminal revision application filed against the judgment and order passed by the Special Judge, Ahmedabad (Rural) at Narol, Shri D. J. Dave, rejecting an application of the applicant requesting the Court to order reinvestigation in the criminal case against him, on the ground that the investigation carried out by the police officers was contrary to the provisions of Section 5A of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act)

2. The short facts leading to this prosecution are that the applicant in the month of July 1963 was working as a Police Head Constable at the Police Station, Dehgam. The offences punishable under Sections 419 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code were alleged to have been committed by one person. That offence was registered at the Police Station, Dehgam as criminal register No 98 of 1963. The present applicant was investigating the said offence. One Karsandas Jividas, the resident of village Motipura was suspected to have committed this offence. Karsandas is brother-in-law of Kalidas Khodidas Patel. The present applicant in his capacity as a public servant was alleged to have made a demand of illegal gratification of an amount of Rs. 300 from Kalidas Khodidas Patel as a motive or a reward from forbearing to do an official act i. e. for not pressing the case or showing favour in the case which he was investigating against Karsandas. Some amount was alleged to have been already paid to the applicant by Kalidas Khodidas Patel towards the said demand of the illegal gratification. On July 21, 1963, Kalidas Khodidas Patel approached Police Sub-Inspector Erulkar, Anti-Corruption Branch and informed him that the applicant demanded illegal gratification and the last instalment of the illegal gratification was to be paid to him on that day. Police Sub Inspector Erulkar recorded his complaint. Thereafter Police Sub Inspector Erulkar submitted an application to the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Ahmedabad (Rural) at Narol for permission to investigate into the offence. The learned Judicial Magistrate, First Class, granted the permission under Section 5A of the Act. Police Sub Inspector Erulkar thereafter lodged a trap and carried out further investigation into the case. On the completion of the investigation he obtained sanction to prosecute the applicant and filed a charge-sheet in the Court of the Special Judge, Ahmedabad (Rural) at Narol. The case was numbered as Special Case No. 2 of 1964. In that case the applicant gave an application stating that the prosecution against him for offences under Section 161 of the Indian Penal Code and Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act was barred by limitation in view of the provisions of Section 161 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951. The learned Special Judge accepted the contention and passed an order discharging the applicant. The State of Gujarat preferred criminal Revision Application No. 449 of 1965 in this Court against the said order. The said application came for hearing before my brother Sheth J. on August 10, 1967 who took the view that the proceedings were not barred by limitation and remanded the case for trial before the Special Judge. In the said case the applicant again filed another application contending that a proper sanction to prosecute was not obtained and the Court of the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case in view of the provisions of Section 6 of the Act. The learned Special Judge rejected the said application. The applicant being aggrieved by the said judgment filed Criminal Revision Application No. 405 of 1967 in this Court. The said criminal revision application was heard by Shelat J. who held that the sanction to prosecute was not legal and, therefore, passed an order dropping the prosecution. Thereafter Police Sub Inspector Zala Anti-Corruption Branch took charge of the investigation of the case against the accused. Police Sub Inspector Zala went through the record of investigation carried out by Mr. Erulkar obtained the permission to prosecute the accused from Inspector General of Police and ultimately filed a charge sheet in the Court of the Special Judge, Ahmedabad (Rural) at Narol. This case was numbered as Special Case No. 3 of 1968. In this case the applicant filed an application contending that the investigation carried out by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar and Police Sub Inspector Zala was in contravention of the provisions of Section 5A of the Act and, therefore, illegal, and requesting the Court to order re-investigation into the case. The application was rejected by the learned Special Judge holding that the permission granted by the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar to investigate in the case was valid one and that the investigation carried on by Mr. Zala was only formal and there was no contravention of the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. It is against this judgment and order that the applicant has filed this Criminal Revision Application No. 270 of 1968 in this Court. The revision application came up for hearing before Thakor J. who referred the matter to Division Bench and it has now reached hearing before us.

3. Mr. Shethna appearing for the applicant contended that the investigation carried out by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar and Police Sub Inspector Zala was not in accordance with the provisions of Section 5A of the Act and, therefore, a fresh investigation of the case should have been ordered by the trial Court before the commencement of the trial. The argument advanced is thus two-fold. The investigation carried out by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar was illegal, submitted Mr. Shethna, because no valid sanction to investigate as required under Section 5A of the Act was obtained by the officer. The argument was that the provisions of Section 5A of the Act are mandatory and the Magistrate before he granted the permission to investigate as required by the provisions of the section had to apply his mind and satisfy himself that there was a prima facie case against the accused, in other words, (1) the case against the accused was not vexatious or frivolous and (2) that there were circumstances which satisfied him that this was a case wherein he should have given permission to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar to carry out the investigation in the case Section 5A of the Act, so far is relevant to our case, provides that notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, no police officer below the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police shall investigate any offence punishable under Section 161, Section 165 or Section 165A of the Indian Penal Code or Section 5 of the Act, without the order of the Magistrate of the First Class. In the present case the investigation was to be carried out by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar and, therefore, he had made an application to the learned Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Ahmedabad (Rural) to obtain permission to investigate as required by law. It was contended by Mr. Shethna that the learned Magistrate passed an order granting permission under Section 5-A of the Act and thus order ex facie did not mention any reason why the learned Magistrate granted the permission to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar to investigate the offence. The order prima facie indicated that the learned Magistrate had not applied his mind while granting the permission to investigate and, therefore, the investigation carried out by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar was in contravention of the provisions of S 5A of the Act. In support of this argument the learned advocate relied on the two decisions of the Supreme Court. The decisions relied upon are H. N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196 and State of Madhya Pradesh v. Mubarak Ali, AIR 1959 SC 707. Mr. Shethna also relied on two decisions of this Court and they are Naginlal Nandlal v. State of Gujarat, 2 Guj LR 664 = (1962) (1) Cri LJ 142 and the decision in Criminal Appeal No 200 of 1961 (Guj) delivered by J. N. Sbelat (as he then was) and Bakshi JJ. on January 30, 1962. The argument of Mr. Shethna, so far as the investigation carried out by Mr. Zala, was that he had not obtained any permission as required under Section 5A of the Act. Mr. Zala had carried out the investigation viz. formation of opinion that the accused had committed the offences on the basis of the materials collected by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar, of filing a charge-sheet in the Court against the accused and arresting the accused during the course of the investigation. Thus the investigation carried out by Mr. Zala was in contravention of the provisions of section 5A of the Act.

4. In order to understand the argument of Mr. Shethna, it is necessary to refer the judgment of the Supreme Court in Rishbud's case, AIR 1955 SC 196 wherein their Lordships examined and considered in details all the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. The relevant observations are as under:

"To appreciate that policy it is relevant to observe that under the Code of Criminal Procedure most of the offences relating to public servants as such, are non-cognizable. A cursory perusal of Schedule II of the Criminal Procedure Code discloses that almost all the offences which may be alleged to have been committed by a public servant, fall within two chapters, Chapter IX 'offences by or relating to public servants', and Chapter 11 'offences against public justice' and that each one of them is non-cognizable. (Vide entries in Schedule II under Sections 161 to 169, 217 to 233, 225-A as also 128 and 129).

The underlying policy in making these offences by public servants non-cognizable appears to be that public servants who have to discharge their functions — often enough in difficult circumstances — should not be exposed to the harassment of investigation against them on information levelled, possibly, by persons affected by their official acts, unless a Magistrate is satisfied that an investigation is called for, and on such satisfaction authorises the same. This is meant to ensure the diligent discharge of their official functions by public servants, without fear or favour.

When, therefore, the Legislature thought fit to remove the protection from the public servants, in so far as it relates to the investigation of the offences of corruption comprised in the Act, by making them cognizable, it may be presumed that it was considered necessary to provide a substituted safeguard from undue harassment by requiring that the investigation is to be conducted normally by a Police Officer of a designated high rank. Having regard therefore to the peremptory language of sub-section (4) of Section 5 of the Act as well as to the policy apparently underlying it, it is reasonably clear that the said provision must be taken to be mandatory."

In case of AIR 1959 SC 707, the Supreme Court observed as under:—

"While in the case of an officer of assured status and rank, the legislature was prepared to believe them implicitly, it prescribed an additional guarantee in the case of police officers below that rank, namely, the previous order of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class, as the case may be. The Magistrate's status gives assurance to the bona fides of the investigation. In such circumstances, it is self-evident that a Magistrate cannot surrender his discretion to a police officer but must exercise it having regard to the relevant material made available to him at that stage."

The decisions in Naginlal's case, 2 Guj LR 664=(1962 (1) Cri LJ 142) and in Criminal Appeal No. 200 of 1961 (Guj) also emphasise the same propositions.

5. Thus it is clear that the provisions of Section 5A are mandatory and they lay down that no offences under Sections 161, 165 and 165-A of the Indian Penal Code and Section 5A of the Prevention of Corruption Act be investigated by a police officer below the designated rank unless a permission to investigate is obtained from the Magistrate. It is also evident from the observations made in the aforesaid authorities that the Magistrate before he grants the sanction has to apply his mind and come to a conclusion that a prima facie case is made out against the accused and that there are circumstances in the case which satisfy him that there is a case wherein he should grant permission to the officer below the designated rank to investigate the case.

6. The question is whether in the present case the provisions of Section 5A of the Act have been complied with. It was argued by Mr. Shethna that under the provisions of Section 5A of the Act officers have been designated who could investigate cases relating to bribery. Therefore, as long as the said designated officers are available to investigate the crime, the officers below the designated rank cannot investigate into the offences and the Magistrate has no authority or power to give sanction to investigate the crime to an officer below the designated rank. The argument was that in the present case, local District Superintendents of Police, were available to investigate the offence and, therefore, the sanction granted by the learned Magistrate to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar to investigate the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused, was illegal. The argument cannot be accepted. The Legislature has made offences, punishable under Section 161 of the Indian Penal Code and Section 5A of the Act, cognizable. As these offences are made cognizable ordinarily Police Station Officer, who is generally a Police Sub Inspector, can investigate the offences. In order to see that public servants are not unnecessarily harassed the legislature enacted Section 5A of the Act and provided that an officer of the designated rank can investigate into the offences and the officers below the designated rank can investigate the offences only on obtaining a permission to do so from the Judicial Magistrate. Thus under the provisions of Section 5A of the Act, the officers of the rank designated therein and officers below that rank, provided they had obtained permission of the Magistrate, can investigate the offence of bribery. The rights and power to investigate which is confirmed by the Criminal Procedure Code on the officer in charge of Police Station to investigate a cognizable case are restricted by the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. The said provisions are of a disabling nature so far as the officers in charge of the Police Stations are concerned. It puts a limitation on their power to investigate the offence of bribery, even though the said offence is made cognizable. The provisions of the section empower a Magistrate to authorise an officer below the designated rank to investigate the offence. The power or authority of the Magistrate to grant sanction to investigate to an officer below the rank designated in the section, is thus, not absolutely dependent on the availability or non-availability of the officers whose authority to investigate is recognised by the provisions of the section. The Magistrate when he considers the question of granting permission to investigate has to satisfy himself that a prima facie case exists and there are circumstances in the case which would justify him to grant a permission to an officer below the designated rank to investigate the offence of bribery. If the intention of Legislature was to restrict the power of the Magistrate in granting the sanction to investigate the offence to the availability or non-availability of officers of the designated rank, different expression would have been used by the Legislature to carry out the said intention. In our opinion the provisions of section 5A of the Act enable either an officer of the designated rank to investigate the offence of the bribery or an officer below the designated rank to do so provided he obtains the permission of the Magistrate to investigate the offence. The provisions of the section do not provide that the Magistrate shall not grant a permission to investigate the offence to an officer below the rank designated in the section because the officers designated in the section are available to investigate the crime.

7. Mr. Shethna then argued that the order of the learned Magistrate permitting Police Sub-Inspector Erulkar to investigate into the offence does not ex facie contain any reasons for granting the permission and, therefore, was illegal or invalid. It is true that the order itself does not contain any reasons but it is a fundamental rule of construction that the document must be read as a whole. Applying the principle to the present case, the order granting permission to investigate to Mr. Erulkar is passed on the application presented by Mr. Erulkar to the Magistrate for obtaining sanction under Section 5A of the Act. In the application Mr. Erulkar had given reasons why he should be entrusted with the investigation of the crime and, to quote his very words:

"The sanction is sought because by Dy. S. P. Anti Corruption Branch, Ahmedabad is not available for working out this case and our Branch being an independent Unit, this investigation cannot be entrusted to any other local Dy S P of the Executive Force. It is, therefore, requested to kindly grant me the sanction under Section 5A Prevention of Corruption Act"

It is thus clear that two reasons have been given by the Police Sub Inspector as to why he should be given the permission to investigate the offence. The first is that the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Anti Corruption Branch, Ahmedabad was not available to work out the case. There is nothing on the record to show that this statement is incorrect. It is thus apparent that when the learned Magistrate granted the permission to investigate, he took this circumstance into consideration. So far as the second ground mentioned in the application is concerned, the argument of Mr. Shethna was that this ground clearly indicated that the Police Sub Inspector believed that the local Deputy Superintendent of Police of the Executive Force could not be entrusted with the investigation of the case because a Special Branch was established by the State Government to carry out the investigation into the offence. The argument was that provisions of section 5A of the Act recognised the power of certain officers designated thereunder to investigate the offence and further provided that the officers below the designated rank should obtain previous sanction to investigate the offence. The section, argued Mr. Shethna did not lay down that only officers of the Anti Corruption Branch could carry out the investigation into the offence of bribery. The State Government has established a special unit of the State Police Force to investigate the offence and the effect of this is that the local District Superintendents of Police cannot be entrusted with the investigation of the crime and are disabled to do so. The argument cannot be accepted. The object of enacting the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act was to eradicate corruption and to achieve the object, the State Government established an independent unit known as Anti Corruption Branch so that the offences relating to bribery could be investigated expeditiously and with secrecy. By the establishment of the Special Branch to investigate the cases relating to bribery, the powers of the local District Superintendent of Police are not taken away. In the present case Police Sub Inspector Erulkar brought to the notice of the learned Magistrate, from whom he had to take the permission to investigate the crime, the fact that the State had established a special independent unit to investigate such crime, that he was an officer of such special unit and thus suitable to investigate the crime. He also brought to the notice of the learned Magistrate that he had verified the facts of the complaint and satisfied himself that the same was genuine. It was emphasized by Police Sub Inspector Erulkar in his letter for obtaining the sanction to investigate that the State had established a special unit to investigate the case, that he was officer of that unit and thus the case could be investigated expeditiously and with secrecy. It is important to note that no legal matter by virtue of any provision of law, was suggested by the Police Sub Inspector on the powers of Deputy Superintendent of Police to investigate the crime. The application was made by the Police Sub Inspector to obtain an authority to investigate the bribery case and, therefore, he emphasized on the fact of the establishment of a Special Branch and that he was a member of the Branch. There is nothing in the application to show that he had negatived the powers or authority of the local District Superintendent of Police to investigate such offences. He had merely stated therein that the investigation could not be entrusted to the local District Superintendent of Police, meaning — if these words are read in context with what precedes and not divorced from it — that such officers might not investigate the case as a special branch has been established by the State Government for the purpose of investigating such offences. He emphasized that it would be expedient to entrust him with the investigation of the case, he being a member of the independent unit established by the State for the purpose of investigating bribery cases. The learned Magistrate, it appears has taken into consideration while granting the permission to the Police Sub Inspector to investigate, the fact of establishment of a special independent unit set up by the State for the investigation of bribery cases, the circumstance that Police Sub Inspector Erulkar was a member of that unit and being satisfied that a prima facie case was made out for the purpose of investigation, granted the permission to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar. It cannot, therefore, be said that he had not applied his mind or had taken into consideration extraneous factors while granting the permission to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar to investigate the offence. The learned Magistrate while granting the sanction to investigate had taken into consideration the advisability to permit the Police Sub Inspector who was a member of the special and independent unit to investigate the crime and thus granted the permission to investigate the same on the basis of administrative convenience. This circumstance cannot be said to be extraneous or irrelevant. The same view has been taken by Mehta J. in Criminal Revn. Applns. Nos. 161, 167 and 162 of 1964, D/- 4-8-1964 (Guj). The learned Magistrate on being satisfied about the existence of a prima facie case against the applicant and the circumstances why he should grant the permission to investigate to Police Sub Inspector Erulkar, granted the permission to investigate to him and we see no ground to hold that such permission was not validly granted. The result is that the investigation carried out by Mr. Erulkar cannot be said to be in contravention of provisions of Section 5A of the Act.

8. We next come to investigation carried out by Mr. Zala. The learned Special Judge came to the conclusion that the filing of the charge sheet, and arresting the accused cannot be said to be a part of investigation but they were formal and routine acts and, therefore, held that the investigation carried out by Mr. Zala was a legal one. The learned Government Pleader also argued that the filing of a charge sheet and arresting the accused cannot be said to be a part of the investigation and, therefore, the investigation carried out by Mr. Zala was not in contravention of the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. Now it is clear that on the completion of the investigation, Section 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires an investigating officer to file a report. This report consists of formation of opinion as to whether on the materials collected, there is a case to place the accused before the Court of the Magistrate for a trial or not. This is an important step in the course of investigation. It has been held by the Supreme Court in Rishbud's case, AIR 1955 SC 196 (supra) that the formation of opinion by the police officer on the materials collected by him is an integral part of the investigation. The same view was taken in AIR 1959 SC 707 (supra). The Supreme Court in the case of Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117 has observed that:

"The investigation under the Code, takes in several aspects, and stages ending ultimately with the formation of an opinion by the police as to whether, on the material covered and collected, a case is made out to place the accused before the Magistrate for trial, and the submission of either a charge-sheet, or a final report is dependent on the nature of the opinion, so formed. The formation of the said opinion, by the police, is the final step in the investigation, and that final step is to be taken only by the police and by no other authority."

Thus it is clear that the filing of a charge-sheet and arresting the accused by Mr. Zala formed a part of the investigation and it was necessary for Mr. Zala to obtain sanction under the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. It was then contended by the learned Government Pleader that in this case permission granted by the learned Magistrate to Mr. Erulkar to investigate the case was a general one, could be taken advantage of by Mr. Zala and it was not necessary for Mr. Zala to obtain a fresh permission to investigate the crime. A prima facie reading of the application shows that the officer was asking for himself a permission to investigate the crime. The provisions of Section 5A of the Act also indicate that the Magistrate has to apply his mind before he grants a permission to investigate to an officer below the designated rank. The learned Magistrate has, therefore, to take into consideration the factors personal to the individual who makes an application to obtain an authority to investigate the crime. The provisions of the section indicate that a general sanction to the investigation is not contemplated by it. The same view was taken by the Division Bench of this Court in Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 200 of 1961 (Guj) (supra) wherein it has been observed as under:

"The observations made in Rishbud's case AIR 1955 SC 196 as also in Mubarak Ali's case, AIR 1959 SC 707 would seem to indicate that when a permission is granted by a Magistrate to a particular officer of the lower rank to conduct the investigation, such permission would not extend to another officer even though such an officer may belong to the same Police Station. It is to the officer who makes an application for permission that the learned Magistrate grants permission on being satisfied that he is a proper officer to carry out the investigation. In that view it would not be permissible to another police officer to conduct the investigation, taking advantage of the permission granted to another officer."

Thus the permission to investigate the crime granted to Mr. Erulkar cannot enure for the benefit of Mr. Zala. The provisions of Section 5A are mandatory and it was incumbent on Police Sub Inspector Zala to obtain a permission to investigate the crime.

9. There is no dispute that Police Sub Inspector Zala had not obtained permission to investigate the crime under Section 5A of the Act. It is, therefore, clear that the investigation carried out by him was not in accordance with the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. It is to be noted that an illegal investigation does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to try the case. The result is that the investigation carried out by Police Sub-Inspector Erulkar was valid and legal and the investigation carried out by the Police Sub Inspector Zala was in contravention of the provisions of Section 5A of the Act. That being the position in our view it would be proper in the interest of justice and fairness that the case should be remanded to the trial Court for ordering a reinvestigation of the case in accordance with the provisions of Section 5A of the Act from the stage at which Mr Erulkar had left and Mr Zala commenced the investigation and thereafter to proceed with the trial of the case in accordance with law.

Anildev Singh, for Appellant; I. D.
Grover, for Respondent.

BHAT, J.: This is a first appeal against the decree passed by the Sub Judge Rajouri dated 30-4-1966 whereby he has passed a decree for Rs. 4,999/- and costs in favour of the plaintiffs against the Union of India. The facts giving rise to this suit are as under:

The plaintiff is a firm which carries on business in village Cumbhir Tehsil Rajouri. They had ordered some bales of cloth from Amritsar, which were lying with M/S Suraj Transport Company. On 23-6-1960, while the goods were in transit with the transport company, they were seized by the Land Customs Authorities as it was suspected that these goods were going to be smuggled to Pakistan. A show cause memo was issued to the plaintiffs by the Assistant Collector Land Customs Central Revenue Amritsar why action should not be taken u/s 7 of the Land Customs Act read with section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act by confiscation of goods and imposition of penalty. The goods were worth Rupees 4,324/5/3. In pursuance of the show cause notice on 16-6-1961 the goods were confiscated by the Assistant Collector Land Customs and a penalty of Rs. 500/- was imposed on the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs went in appeal and revision even upto the Ministry of Finance and the last order was passed by the Ministry of Finance against the plaintiffs on 15-12-1962.

According to the plaintiffs the goods were illegally and maliciously seized. There was no question of the goods being smuggled to Pakistan. The plaintiffs had a bona fide business concern at Cumbhir. The plaintiffs claim Rupees 4,990/-, claiming refund of Rs. 4,324/5/3 as the price of goods plus a penalty of Rs. 500/- recovered from them and an expenditure of Rs. 1300/- incurred by the plaintiffs in defending the action before the Customs authorities. The plaintiffs gave up the amount in excess of the amount claimed. The suit was brought against the Union of India. The defence on behalf of the defendant was that no such suit lies in a Civil Court. The Civil Court had no jurisdiction. No notice u/s 80 C. P. Code was given. The Court at Rajouri had no jurisdiction. The Land Customs authorities had every reason to believe that the goods were being smuggled to Pakistan. The plaintiffs had committed such acts of smuggling before also for which they had been punished; so on and so forth. A complete narration of the defence is not necessary. The Sub Judge who heard the suit initially framed the following issues:

1. Whether this court has got jurisdiction to try the suit? O.P.P.

2. Whether notice u/s 80 C. P. C. and Sea Customs Act was necessary? O.P.D.

3. Whether the suit is not maintainable in the present form? O.P.D.

4. Whether the civil court has no jurisdiction to set aside the decision of Customs authorities on merits? O.P.D.

5. Whether the suit is within time? O.P.P.

The Sub Judge however, found that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit and, therefore, dismissed the suit on 25-6-1964. An appeal was preferred before this court against the order of dismissal and a Division Bench of this court by means of its order dated 26-4-1965 set aside the order of dismissal and remanded the case to the trial court for trial of the remaining issues. The Sub Judge who dismissed the suit was succeeded by another Sub Judge at Rajouri. The successor Sub-Judge recorded the evidence of the parties and ultimately decreed the suit by means of his order under appeal dated 30-4-1966.

2. When this appeal came up for arguments last year, the learned counsel appearing for the appellant wanted to add one more ground to his memo of appeal to the effect that Union of India was not liable for the acts of its officers committed by them in the discharge of statutory functions which were ultimately based on the delegation of sovereign power of the State to such public servants. Further that the customs authorities were protected under the Judicial Officers Protection Act for this action of theirs, if it was held to be illegal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties. Only two points have been argued before us. The findings of fact that the goods were seized by the Land Customs authorities maliciously and without any sufficient cause have not been challenged before us. The learned counsel for the appellant has laid stress on the fact that even if the action of the Customs Officers in seizing these goods was unjustified and tortious, the Union of India would not be liable for damages. Secondly, it was argued that the suit was time barred. Mr. Inder Dass, the learned counsel for the respondent however stated that this was not a suit for torts. Therefore, the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant that Union of India was not liable for tortious acts of its officers was not right. We do not accept this argument of Mr. Inder Dass that the present suit is not an action under torts.

The word tort has been differently defined by different authors. The word 'tort' is of French origin. It is equivalent to the English word 'wrong'. It is derived from the latin term 'tortum' which means twist and implies twisted or tortious conduct. Different authors like Clerk, Lindsell, Winfield, and Underhill among the English authors have defined it differently. Ramaswamy Iyer in his book 'Law of Torts' and Anand and Shastri in their books 'Law of Torts' have also defined the word. Without going into or quoting the different definitions of the different authors, but considering all these definitions, it can safely be said that the essentials of tort are the following—

(i) There must be some act of omission on the part of the defendant, not being a breach of some duty undertaken by contract;

(ii) The act or omission complained of must not be authorised by law;

(iii) The wrongful act or omission complained of must inflict injury special, private and peculiar to the plaintiffs.

Applying these tests to the facts of the present case the act complained of does not arise out of any contract, it is not authorised by law as it has been held to be an act committed by the Land Customs Officers beyond the scope of the law and it has inflicted injury on the plaintiffs, in the shape of deprivation of the goods belonging to the plaintiffs. Therefore, this argument of Mr. Grover does not help him.

4. Mr. Anil Dev's argument is that the Union of India is not at all liable for the illegal, mala fide and unwarranted actions of the Land Customs authorities. He has cited some authorities in support of his contention which may be mentioned as AIR 1961 Raj 64, AIR 1961 Madh Pra 316 and AIR 1965 SC 1039. We need not discuss the earlier authorities of Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh because the law is very clearly laid down in the Supreme Court authority above mentioned i.e. AIR 1965 SC 1039. In that case some gold was seized by a police party from the plaintiff. It was kept in the Malkhanna. The Head-Constable in-charge of the Malkhanna ran away with the gold. The plaintiff brought a suit for the price of the gold wrongfully seized from him. The Supreme Court held that the manner in which the gold was seized had been dealt with at the Malkhanna showed a gross negligence on the part of the police officers and that the loss suffered by the plaintiff was due to the negligence of police officers of the State. Their Lordships further held that—

"that the act of negligence was committed by the police officers while dealing with the property of the plaintiff which they had seized in exercise of their statutory powers. The power to arrest a person, to search him, and to seize property found with him, are powers conferred on the specified officers by statute and in the last analysis, they are powers which can be properly characterised as sovereign powers and so the act which gave rise to the present claim for damages had been committed by the employees of the State during the course of its employment but the employment in question being of the category which can claim the special characteristic of sovereign power"

The suit of the plaintiff was dismissed. We have given out careful consideration to the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant. But we do not wholly agree with him. We have already stated that the finding of fact that the goods were wrongfully seized from the plaintiffs has not been challenged in this appeal. Accepting that finding as correct, we have to come to this irresistible conclusion that the goods having been wrongfully seized from the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs are entitled to the restitution of those goods wherever or in whosesoever possession they are. The Supreme Court authority on which reliance is placed by Mr. Anildev Singh is clearly distinguishable and cannot apply to this case. In that case the gold seized was carried away by the Head constable who had run away with the same to Pakistan. The gold was not in the Malkhanna of the Government. Here the goods or the money equivalent is in the coffers of the Union of India. It is the property of the plaintiffs and has been illegally seized. The price of the goods at Rs. 4324-5-3 is not disputed. If the cloth were not converted into money, on this finding of fact the retention of the cloth either by the Union of India or by any of its servants would be wrongful and the plaintiffs would be entitled to get back their goods; the goods have been converted into money and the sale proceeds are lying with the Union of India. Therefore, the plaintiffs in our opinion, are clearly entitled to the refund of this amount which is lying with the defendant.

We agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that a claim for damages that the plaintiffs would think themselves entitled to on account of the wrongful acts of the Land Customs authorities would not lie against the Union of India on the basis of the Supreme Court authority. But the plaintiffs would be clearly entitled to the restitution of the property or its money equivalent because that property no more exists. In this case the plaintiffs have claimed Rs. 1300/- as expenses incurred by them as well as Rs. 500/- levied as penalty by the Land Customs authorities. The levy of penalty is a power vested in the Land Customs Officers under the statute and would be deemed to be a statutory power vested in them. Therefore, that cannot be questioned in that suit and the civil court will not be competent to grant any relief for the refund of this money to the plaintiff. Similarly the Union of India cannot be liable for Rs. 1300/-, alleged to have been incurred by the plaintiffs in defending the action against the Land Customs authorities, before the concerned authorities upto the Ministry of finance. To that extent the Supreme Court authority would give immunity to the Union of India; but it could not give any protection to the Union of India to retain the actual property i.e., the cloth seized in this case or its money equivalent because it was wrongfully and maliciously seized by the Land Customs authorities. Therefore, in our opinion the plaintiffs are entitled to this amount of Rs. 4,324.33 paise. To that extent the decree of the trial court would be upheld.

5. Mr. Anil Dev argued that the suit of the plaintiffs would be covered by Article 2 to Schedule 1 of the Limitation Act. He bases his argument on AIR 1932 All 16. We do not think that authority has any application to this case. Art. 2 refers to cases for compensation for doing or for omitting to do any act alleged to be in pursuance of any enactment in force for the time being in the State. When the case was first argued before the Sub-Judge, who ultimately dismissed the suit, the learned Counsel for the defendant relied on Article 14 which is in the following words:—

"To set aside any act or order of any officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for."

The then Sub-Judge held the suit within time. When the appeal was preferred before this Court, which was disposed of on 26-4-1965, the point of limitation was not at all pressed. Even if we apply Article 14 the suit is within time. The final order passed in this case by the Ministry of Finance was on 15-12-1962. The suit was brought on 2-11-1963 i.e., within one year of the final order. Therefore, Article 2 not being applicable, even if we apply Article 14 as pressed for by the learned counsel for the appellant at the initial stage, the suit is clearly within time. We therefore, do not find that the suit is barred by limitation.

6. Some authorities about the distinction between attempt and preparation were argued at the bar but in view of the fact that the finding of fact as arrived by the trial Court not having been challenged before us, we need not go into those authorities.

7. The result is that the decree of the trial court is upheld to the extent of Rs. 4,324.33 paise. In the circumstances of the case, the parties will bear their own costs in this appeal.

8. ALI C. J.:— I agree with my learned brother Bhat J. but would like to add a few lines of my own.

9. To begin with I had a little hesitation in agreeing with the view taken by Bhat J. because of the pronouncement of the Supreme Court in AIR 1965 SC 1039, but on a closer scrutiny of the various aspects of the matter I find myself ultimately in complete agreement with the view taken by my learned brother. It has rightly been pointed out by my learned brother that the part of the suit that can be decreed by us would be only that part which relates to the pure and simple recovery of the money equivalent of the goods of the plaintiff lying with the Union of India and which had been seized by the Customs authorities without any lawful cause, as held by the trial court. Apart from the question of tortious liability the simple point which falls for determination in this case is. Can the plaintiff ask the Union of India to return a sum of money which is lying with it and to which the plaintiff has got title and which is being unlawfully retained by the Union of India? The answer to such a question must necessarily be in the affirmative.

The claim of the plaintiff which we are decreeing is not for damages on account of the tortious or the negligent act of the employees of the Union of India. Nor is a decree being passed in this appeal on the basis of the vicarious liability of the defendant. In fact we would be fully justified in invoking the principle contained in Section 70 of the Contract Act for restituting the benefit which the Union of India has derived by keeping the money of the plaintiff in its custody for some time. It is manifest that if the goods of the plaintiff were not seized then the plaintiff would have earned profits on those goods or even if those goods were sold in open market, the plaintiff could have earned interest on the aforesaid amount of money.

10. In the instant case it is not disputed that the goods confiscated by the Customs authority were finally auctioned for a sum of Rs 4324 53. It is also not disputed that this amount has ever since the date of the auction been in the coffers of the Union of India. Thus the question arises as to whether or not the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for a refund of the money which belonged to the plaintiffs and was wrongfully seized and which is in fact lying with the defendant. In AIR 1928 PC 261 it was clearly held that where a contract is found to have been entered under a mistake of both the parties the money paid under such mistake can be recovered as money had and received. In this connection their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows—

"It follows that in the absence of such proof, the payment made to the appellant in respect of the 1000 shares was on the interpretation of the facts most favourable to himself, a payment made under a mistake of fact common to himself and the company, viz., that he was a shareholder for 1,000 shares when in truth he was not, and money so paid can be recovered as money had and received to the use of the company and this was the form of the action."

11. The same principle, in my opinion, applies to the facts of the present case. Here also the Customs authorities unlawfully seized the goods belonging to the plaintiffs believing that the same were going to be smuggled. The goods were therefore, put to auction and retained by the Union of India in its custody under a mistaken impression that the money was the sale proceeds of the goods which were lawfully seized.

12. On the findings of fact by the trial court which have not been disputed before us it is manifest that both the parties were under a mistaken notion. The goods, according to the trial court, were not at all meant for smuggling and were therefore, wrongfully seized. Similarly the retention of the money by the Union of India under the belief that the money was the sale proceeds of the smuggled goods was mistaken. On this point also there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs would be entitled to the recovery of the bare amount representing the price of the goods lying in the coffers of the Union of India.

13. Finally the case in AIR 1965 SC 1039 (supra) is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In that case the money was not in the custody of the Union of India but was actually taken away by a head-constable and had been misappropriated by him or converted to his own use. Thus the Union of India could be made to pay the money only if it was found to be vicariously liable. Since, however, the money was taken away due to the negligence of an officer in the exercise of his statutory or sovereign powers, the immunity of the Union of India was both full and complete.

14. In the present case the money equivalent of the goods auctioned continues to be in the custody of the Government of India and therefore, there is no reason why the Union of India should not be asked to pay back the money which belongs to the plaintiff and to which the Union of India has no title.

15. I, therefore, agree that appeal be dismissed, with the modification indicated by my brother Bhat J, but in the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

ORDER:— This is an application under Section 561-A Cr. P. C. praying that the proceedings pending against the applicant under Section 406 R. P. C. in the Court of the Sub-Registrar, Magistrate, Ist Class, Srinagar, be quashed.

2. Shri Hira Lal Wazir, appearing in support of the application has submitted that his client has never been to Srinagar, and has never met the respondent there, that the complaint against him is false and frivolous and that in any case the ingredients of the offence namely entrustment of the amount and its criminal misappropriation or retention or its dishonest conversion to his own use by his client are not made out. He has also drawn my attention to a few authorities but they have little bearing on the matter in question.

3. Mr. I. K. Kotwal, has on the other hand, submitted that the High Court cannot interfere with the criminal proceedings at their interlocutory stage unless the case is of an exceptional nature.

4. It is well settled that the inherent power possessed by the High Court to quash criminal proceedings is to be exercised in exceptional cases to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court or to secure the ends of justice. In other words an order under Section 561-A Cr. P. C., should only be passed where there is a glaring defect on the face of the proceedings which makes the prosecution untenable and where there is no reasonable chance of the accused being convicted.

5. In the instant case the proceedings are still at an initial stage and it is difficult to say at this stage that the prosecution has been launched to harass the petitioner or that the ingredients of the offence are not made out.

6. The nature and scope of inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under the Criminal Procedure Code or to prevent abuse of the process of the court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice, was considered in R. P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, where the Hon'ble Gajendragadkar J., speaking for the court observed as follows:—

"It is well established that the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised to quash proceedings in a proper case either to prevent the abuse of the process of the court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. Ordinarily criminal proceedings instituted against an accused person must be tried under the provisions of the Code, and the High Court would be reluctant to interfere with the said proceedings at an interlocutory stage. It is not possible, desirable, or expedient to lay down any inflexible rule which would govern the exercise of this inherent jurisdiction. However, we may indicate some categories of cases where the inherent jurisdiction can and should be exercised for quashing the proceedings. There may be cases where it may be possible for the High Court to take the view that the institution or continuance of criminal proceedings against an accused person may amount to the abuse of the process of the court or that the quashing of the impugned proceedings would secure the ends of the justice. If the criminal proceeding in question is in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by an accused person and it manifestly appears that there is a legal bar against the institution or continuance of the said proceedings the High Court would be justified in quashing the proceeding on that ground. Absence of the requisite sanction may, for instance furnish cases under this category. Cases may also arise where the allegations in the first information report or the complaint even if they are taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety do not constitute the offence alleged; in such cases no question of appreciating evidence arises; it is a matter merely of looking at the complaint or the first information report to decide whether the offence alleged is disclosed or not. In such cases it would be legitimate for the High Court to hold that it would be manifestly unjust to allow the process of the criminal court to be issued against the accused person. A third category of cases in which the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court can be successfully invoked may also arise. In cases falling under this category the allegations made against the accused person do constitute an offence alleged but there is either no legal evidence adduced in support of the case or evidence adduced clearly or manifestly fails to prove the charge. In dealing with this class of case it is important to bear in mind the distinction between a case where there is no legal evidence or where there is evidence which is manifestly and clearly inconsistent with the accusation made and cases where there is legal evidence which on its appreciation may or may not support the accusation in question. In exercising its jurisdiction under S 561-A Cr P C., the High Court would not embark upon an enquiry as to whether the evidence in question is reliable or not. That is the function of the trial magistrate and ordinarily it would not be open to any party to invoke the High Court's inherent jurisdiction and contend that on a reasonable appreciation of the evidence the accusation made against the accused would not be sustained. Broadly stated that is the nature and scope of the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 561-A Cr P C. In the matter of quashing criminal proceedings and thus is the effect of the judicial decisions on the point (Vide In Re Shripad G Chandavarkar, AIR 1928 Bom 184, Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v Queen Empress (1899) ILR 26 Cal 786, Dr. Shankar Singh v State of Punjab, 56 Pun LR 54 AIR 1954 Punl 193, Nripendra Bhusan Roy v Gobinda Bandhu Majumdar AIR 1924 Cal 1018 and Ramanathan Chettiyar v Sivarama Subramania ILR 47 Mad 722 AIR 1925 Mad 39")

Keeping in view the principles deducible from the aforesaid ruling of the Supreme Court, I do not think it is a case in which extraordinary powers of the High Court should be used to quash the criminal proceedings at their present stage.

7. For the foregoing reasons the petition is dismissed. The observations made herein are purely for the purpose of this petition and shall not be construed by the trial magistrate as preventing him to let off the accused if after taking the evidence led in the case he comes to the conclusion that no case under Section 406 R P C is made out against the applicant MBR/DVC. Petition dismissed.

ORDER.— This is an application under Section 561-A Cr P C praying that criminal proceedings under Section 420 R. P. C. pending against the petitioners in the court of the Munsiff Magistrate 1st Class, Nowshera be quashed or in the alternative be transferred to some other court of competent jurisdiction at Jammu.

2. The facts giving rise to this application are —

The respondent Kulbir Singh lodged a complaint under Section 420 R P C in the court of Munsiff Magistrate 1st Class, Nowshera, on 1-9-1966 with the allegations that he was a retail dealer of cloth at Nowshera, that for carrying on his business he has to import cloth from outside that on 23-7-1966 petitioner No 3 herein, who is an agent of the firm M/s Progressive Handloom Industries, Gaziaabad, came to his shop and showed him certain samples of cloth, that acting on the representation of the said petitioner that supplies would be made according to the samples he placed an order for supply of some cloth, that the representation made by the petitioner No 3 was fraudulent that on receipt of intimation about the arrival of the consignment note he got the same i.e. the consignment note released from the post office Nowshera on payment of Rs 353.42 plus the consignment charges amounting to Rs 30.75, that on taking delivery of the consignment and seeing its small size he got suspicious as before the arrival of the consignment M/s Des Raj Munshi Ram had also received some goods from the aforesaid firm which did not correspond to the samples shown and exhibited to them that he accordingly had the consignment opened before the Tehsildar Magistrate Nowshera, that on opening the consignment before the Tehsildar Magistrate, it was discovered that the goods despatched by the petitioners were not in accordance with the samples shown to him and were inferior in make and quality and did not exceed Rs. 90/- in value, that he had the consignment sealed in presence of the Tehsildar Magistrate, that as the accused i.e., the petitioner herein had not supplied the goods and had acted fraudulently they were liable to be dealt with under Section 420 R. P. C.

3. After recording the statement of the complainant and his witness Munshi Ram and being of the opinion that a prima facie case under Section 420 R. P. C. has been disclosed against the petitioners herein, the Munsiff Magistrate issued bailable warrants to secure their attendance. Thereafter several attempts were made to procure the attendance of the accused but all of them proved abortive.

The accused instead of putting in appearance before the trial magistrate have approached this court by means of an application under Section 561-A Cr. P. C., as stated above.

4. Mr. J. L. Sehgal appearing in support of the application has urged that even assuming the allegations made in the complaint to be correct, no offence appears to have been made out against the accused, that the complaint does not either allege that the accused had no intention of executing the order from the very commencement or had no intention of executing the order in the manner they were expected to do, that subsequent dishonest intention as alleged in the complaint would not bring the matter within the mischief of Section 420 R. P. C. and that in any case, the case is of a civil nature.

5. Mr. Sharma appearing for the respondent has on the other hand urged that the complaint does prima facie disclose the commission of offence under Section 420, R. P. C. by the accused, that the criminal proceedings had been appropriately taken against the petitioners and that is not a case in which the High Court should interfere in exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction.

6. It cannot be gainsaid that the High Court is invested with plenary powers to quash criminal proceedings pending in a subordinate Court, but those powers, it is also well settled, have to be exercised with great care and circumspection, and the High Court does not ordinarily interfere at an interlocutory stage of criminal proceedings in a subordinate court.

7. The Supreme Court has in R. P. Kapur v. State of the Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, laid down certain guide lines for exercise of the inherent power under Section 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code. According to the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court, the inherent power is to be exercised in the following category of cases.

"i. Where it manifestly appears that there is a legal bar against the institution or continuance of the criminal proceeding in respect of the offence alleged. Absence of the requisite sanction may for instance furnish cases under this category.

ii. Where the allegations in the first information report or the complaint even if they are taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety do not constitute the offence alleged; in such cases no question of appreciating evidence arises; it is a matter merely of looking at the complaint or the first information report to decide whether the offence alleged is disclosed or not.

iii. Where the allegations made against the accused person do constitute an offence alleged but there is either no legal evidence adduced clearly or manifestly fail to prove the charge. In dealing with this class of cases, it is important to bear in mind the distinction between a case where there is no legal evidence or where there is evidence which is manifestly and clearly inconsistent with the accusation made and cases where there is legal evidence which on its appreciation may or may not support the accusation, in question. In exercising its jurisdiction under S. 561-A Cr. P. C. the High Court would not embark upon an enquiry as to whether the evidence in question is reliable or not. That is the function of the trial magistrate and ordinarily it would not be open to any party to invoke the High Court's inherent jurisdiction and contend that on a reasonable appreciation of evidence the accusation made against the accused would not be sustained."

Again in AIR 1963 All 33, it has been held:

"The inherent powers of the High Court under Section 561-A of the Cr. P. C. are very wide but on account of this very reason they are to be applied in a very careful manner and should be used only in extraordinary cases. Section 561-A is not an instrument handed over to an accused person to short-circuit a prosecution and bring about its sudden death, whenever his counsel feels that the prosecution is not likely to succeed. The High Court should normally refrain from giving a premature decision in a case whose picture is extremely incomplete and hazy as the evidence has not been produced and the issues involved whether factual or legal cannot be seen in their true perspective. It is only where the High Court is satisfied that it amounts to an abuse of a process of law or that it amounts to a persecution of an accused person or that there is no reasonable possibility of the prosecution succeeding in the case or some similar reason that relief is granted under Section 561-A Cr. P. C."

I have carefully perused the allegations made in the complaint and I am of the opinion that the present case does not fall within the categories enumerated in the above rulings

The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners that since the complainant has a civil remedy open to him, he should not be permitted to resort to criminal proceedings cannot also be allowed to prevail for it is also well settled that the existence of civil remedy does not exclude trial by a criminal court of an offence and the fact that a complainant is entitled to both civil and criminal remedies does not disentitle him to take recourse to the criminal remedy

8. As the instant case is still at an interlocutory stage and no evidence has so far been recorded in the presence of the accused. It is difficult to get a clear picture of the true state of affairs bearing in mind therefore, the principles enunciated in the above-mentioned rulings, I am unable to accede to the submission of the learned counsel for the petitioners to quash the proceedings

9. Let me now advert to the prayer of the petitioners for transfer of the proceedings from the court of the Munsiff magistrate Nowshera to some court at Jammu. This prayer also cannot be granted because the main ground for transfer that the Tehsildar Magistrate Nowshera in whose presence the consignment received from the petitioners is alleged to have been opened is likely to influence the Munsiff magistrate, apart from being imaginary and fanciful has ceased to exist as the learned counsel for the petitioners himself admits that the said gentleman has already been transferred from Nowshera.

No other good ground for transfer of the case has been made out.

10. For the foregoing reasons, there is no substance in this application which is dismissed.

MBR/ D.V.C. Application dismissed.

R. N. Bhalgotra and Joginder Singh, for Petitioners; D. D. Thakur and R. P. Sethi, for Respondents

ORDER:— These two petitions Nos 99 and 120 under Section 103 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir are by Kushma Joshi and Vedh Prakash respectively who sought but have been denied admission to the M.Sc. Chemistry class of the Jammu and Kashmir University. The petitioners pray that by issue of a writ of Certiorari the order of respondent No. 1 (Pro Vice-Chancellor of the Jammu and Kashmir University) whereby Baldev Chand Katoch, a respondent in both the petitions, has been admitted to the said class be quashed and by a writ of Mandamus or other appropriate writ the respondent No. 1 be directed to admit the petitioners to the said class in the current session.

2. As these petitions seek the cancellation of admission of one and the same respondent namely Baldev Chand Katoch to the M.Sc. Chemistry class of the Jammu and Kashmir University and raise identical points, it would be convenient to dispose them together by this judgment.

3. In petition No. 99 of 1968 the petitioner's case is that she passed the B.Sc. examination of the Punjab University securing 249 out of 500 marks, that she is a daughter of ex-serviceman who had after retirement been re-employed in the Military and stationed in the State, that she applied for admission to the M.Sc. Chemistry class of Jammu and Kashmir University on the basis of her being the daughter of an ex-serviceman, that respondent No. 2 i.e. Baldev Chand Katoch who is not a son of an ex-serviceman and who passed the B.Sc. examination of the Punjab University in the 3rd division and had obtained 43 percent marks in Chemistry as against the petitioner who had secured 2nd division and obtained 50 percent marks in the subject has secured admission to the said class by cheating the University and by keeping the authorities in dark by not mentioning his parentage and by representing himself to be the ward of an ex-serviceman, that interview for the purpose of selecting candidates for admission to the said class was held and after the interview a merit list was prepared wherein she was shown at serial No. 64 and respondent No. 2 at Serial No. 82, that in view of her merit position she was recommended by the Head of the department for admission to the said class but respondent No. 2 was unduly favoured, that a copy of merit list prepared for admission to the said class and of the admission form of Baldev Chand for the said class as also of his B.Sc. certificate were denied to her in spite of a written request made by her in that behalf, that selection of the respondent No. 2 as against her is discriminatory and infringes Article 16 of the Constitution of India as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, and that the order of respondent No. 1 granting admission to the respondent No. 2 is also bad as a seat reserved for children of ex-serviceman has been given to respondent No. 2 who does not belong to that category.

4. This petition has been resisted by respondent No. 1 inter alia on the grounds that the father of the petitioner being still in service of the Army, he cannot be treated as an ex-serviceman for the purpose of the Government order, that a seat was reserved for the wards of ex-service man in the M.Sc. Chemistry class of the Jammu and Kashmir University, that both the petitioner and respondent No. 2 were the wards of ex-servicemen but as the petitioner was not a State subject, her case was not considered for admission to the said class, that the father of respondent No. 2 is dead and his brother also died while fighting on the front, that there being no major difference in the comparative merits of the petitioner and the respondent No. 2 admission was granted to the latter against the seat reserved for a ward of an ex-serviceman, that respondent No. 2 is the son of an ex-serviceman whose guardian also died while fighting on the front, and that while the petitioner had secured 50% marks in Chemistry respondent No. 2 had secured 54 % marks in the said subject. It is not, however, denied that the petitioner had passed the B.Sc. examination in 2nd division and respondent No. 2 in the third division. It has also not been denied that in the merit list prepared in connection with the selection of candidates for admission the petitioner's name appeared at Serial No. 64 and respondent's name appeared at Serial No. 82. By way of postscript it has been submitted that the Deputy Secretary to Government General Department had, vide his No. TRB-Res/67 dated 28-7-1967, communicated to the Registrar of the University that the Government had, vide Government order No. 381 of 1967 dated 6-7-1967, made reservations for the sons (children) of ex-servicemen and servicemen belonging to J & K State.

5. It may be stated that no affidavit in support of his assertions has been filed in this case on behalf of respondent No. 1, nor has it been anywhere averred on his behalf that Baldev Chand respondent or his father belonged to the State. On the other hand, it appears from the merit list produced before me by the learned counsel for the respondent No. 1 that respondent No. 2 is a non-State subject.

6. In the course of the objections filed by respondent No. 2 he has also stated that he is son of an ex-serviceman, that his whole family has dedicated itself to the service of the country, that he is a son of late Subedar Sant Singh Katoch who served in the 8/14 Punjab Regiment and the real brother of the late Naib Subedar Amin Chand Katoch, and that after the death of his father and his real brother he has been living under the guardianship of his uncle Subedar Milap Chand. The respondent has also averred that he had secured 54% marks in Chemistry in the B.Sc. examination.

7. In petition No. 120 of 1968 the petitioner has stated that he passed the B.Sc. examination in high second division securing 382 marks, that he along with other candidates applied for admission to the M.Sc. Chemistry class of the Jammu and Kashmir University, that he was also interviewed, that he secured 25th position in the order of merit and was entitled to be admitted against one of the 30 seats available for admission to the said class, that under the policy and circular of the Department of Education Government of Jammu and Kashmir as also of the Ministry of Education, Government of India, six seats were reserved on the basis of merit for sportsmen that among the six sportsmen who were candidates to the said class the petitioner was selected as No. 1 and recommended by the Physical Director who was authorised to make the selection of sportsmen, that under rules candidates were to be selected and admitted to the said class strictly according to merit and position obtained on the basis of marks obtained in the university examination and at the interview, that Baldev Chand respondent No. 4 who had obtained only 326 marks and a number of other candidates who had obtained much lesser marks than him have been admitted to the said class in violation of the rules, that he approached the Pro-Vice-Chancellor requesting him to direct the Head of the Faculty to admit him to the said class, that in spite of the telephonic order of respondent No. 1

he was not admitted, that the admission of respondent No. 4 has been made against the provisions of Sections 26, 28 and 29 of the University Act and that by not admitting him the Statutes and Regulations made under the University Act have been violated. This petition has also been resisted by respondent No. 1 who in the course of his objections has stated that there were only 30 seats available for the M.Sc. Chemistry class, that position of the petitioner is 41st in the merit list, that recommendation, if any, of the Physical Director has no meaning, that Baldev Chand respondent is the only exception to the general rule of merit, that he has been given admission on the ground of his being a ward of an ex-serviceman, that there was nothing like policy or circular of the Ministry of Education, Government of India, or the State Government reserving seats for sportsmen, that Section 26 of the University Act provides only for matters in respect of which the Statutes can be framed, that the said section does not relate to admission and has no bearing on the matter, and that there has been no violation of any Statute, Regulation or Act.

8. Shri R. N. Bhalgotra appearing in support of the petition No. 99 of 1968 has submitted that his client has been illegally discriminated against, that she being admittedly the daughter of an ex-serviceman and being higher in order of merit in that category was entitled to be admitted against a seat reserved for the children of ex-servicemen.

9. Sardar Joginder Singh appearing in support of petition No. 120 has submitted that his client having secured 25th position in order of merit as a result of the interview was entitled to be admitted against one of the 30 seats available for the purpose, and that in any case he should have been admitted against one of the seats reserved for sportsmen. Lastly he has contended that reservation made for the wards of children of ex-servicemen is unconstitutional and invalid. He has in support of his contentions drawn my attention to the decision of the Kerala High Court reported in AIR 1964 Ker 39.

10. Mr. D. D. Thakur appearing for the respondent No. 1 has, however, contended that reservation of seats for children of ex-servicemen does not violate the provisions of law or of the Constitution.

11. I have given my very anxious consideration to the submissions made by the learned counsel for the parties and have also carefully studied the law including some decided cases bearing on the matter.

12. For a proper appreciation of the rival contentions of the learned counsel for the parties, it will be convenient at this stage to refer to Articles 14, 15, 16 and 29 of the Constitution of India as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir which run as under:—

"Article 14 The State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India.

"Article 15 (1) The State shall not discriminate against any citizen on grounds only of religion race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them.

(4) Nothing in this Article or in clause (2) of Article 29 shall prevent the State from making any special provision for the advancement of any socially and educationally backward classes of citizens or for the scheduled castes."

"Article 16. There shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State

x	x	x

(4) Nothing in this Article shall prevent the State from making any provision for the reservation of appointments or posts in favour of any backward class of citizens which in the opinion of the State is not adequately represented in the services under the State

"Article 29(1) Any section of the citizens residing in the territory of India or any part thereof having a distinct language, script or culture of its own shall have the right to conserve the same

(2) No citizen shall be denied admission into any educational institution maintained by the State or receiving aid out of State funds on grounds only of religion, race, caste, language or any of them."

13. The scope of Article 14 as also the other Articles of the Constitution reproduced above has been explained in a number of rulings of the Supreme Court and of other courts in the country and it is unnecessary to refer to them here. Suffice to say that although the Constitution of India forbids discrimination, it does not prohibit reasonable classification based on intelligent differentia for the purpose of special treatment. Reference in this connection may be made to Ram Krishna Dalmia's case, 1959 SCR 279= (AIR 1958 SC 538). According to this judgment the test of reasonableness is (i) whether the classification is rational and based on intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons or things that are grouped together from others that are left out from the group and (2) whether the basis of differentiation has any rational nexus or relation with the policy or objects of the law. It would thus be clear that besides the reservations which are specifically provided for in Articles 15(3) and (4) and 16 (4) of the Constitution of India, reservations on the basis of reasonable classification under Article 14 of the Constitution can be made. I am fortified in this view by a direct authority of the Mysore High Court reported in AIR 1966 Mys 40 where a division bench of the court upheld the reservations of seats in the Medical Colleges under the management of the Government for the children or wards of the men in armed services, and ex-servicemen including those who were in the armed services, during the Second World War. This judgment appears to have been noticed in (1966) 1 Andh WR 294 and AIR 1968 Andh-Pra 165, but the aforesaid reservation has not been held to infringe any constitutional inhibition.

The decision of Kerala High Court reported in AIR 1964 Ker 39 on which reliance has been placed by Shri Joginder Singh is clearly distinguishable. In that case challenge to the reservation of two seats for children of Registered Medical Practitioners and one seat for a sportsman student was upheld on the ground that there was no legal basis for such reservation in professional Colleges. The reservation made, however, on the basis of classification of the kind as in the present case is rational and reasonable. It is well known that the armed forces have rendered meritorious service ever since India became free and the reservation of seats for children of ex-servicemen and of the men in armed forces cannot but be deemed to be in national interest. Even in the judgment reported in AIR 1968 Pat 3 (FB) where the Ordinance reserving seats in Medical Colleges for children of university employees on ground of their extreme pecuniary difficulties and for rendering meritorious services to the university was struck down as discriminatory and it was held that there was no reasonable nexus between the object intended to be achieved by the Ordinance on the one hand and the principle on which the children of the employees of the University were selected for preferential treatment on the other, the decision reported in AIR 1966 Mys 40 though noticed was not disapproved. I am, therefore, clearly of the view that the reservation made for the children of ex-servicemen and servicemen proceeds on a reasonable basis and is not hit by the provision of the Constitution. On the contrary, such a classification is permissible under Article 14 of the Constitution. For the foregoing reasons, I find myself unable to accede to the contention of Sardar Joginder Singh that no reservations could be made for the children of ex-servicemen and servicemen.

14. The other contentions of Shri Joginder Singh are also without any substance. According to the merit list produced before me on behalf of the University, the position of Shri Ved Prakash petitioner is 41st in the order of merit and not 25th as contended by him. He had, therefore, no claim to be admitted on the basis of his merit. His contention that he ought to have been accommodated against one of the seats reserved for sportsmen is also without any foundation as according to the affidavit of Shri M. A. Chisti, Joint-Registrar of the University, filed in reply to his petition, no such reservation had been made. The petition of Shri Ved Prakash, therefore, fails and is hereby dismissed.

15. Let me now examine as to whether Kushma Joshi petitioner has been illegally discriminated against or not. From the statement at page 27 of the file, produced before me by Shri D. D. Thakur, it appears that there were only three applicants who sought admission to M.Sc. Chemistry class on the basis of their being children of ex-servicemen. Out of the three applicants namely Baldev Chand respondent, Kushma Joshi petitioner, and Rajinder Singh Sambria, the last one does not appear to have presented himself for interview. As such Baldev Chand and Kushma Joshi were the only two contestants for the reserved seat. It is well settled that even in case of a reserved seat the best available candidate has to be selected. It is not denied before me that both Baldev Chand and Kushma Joshi belonged to the category for which the reservation had been made. It has also not been denied that Kushma Joshi Petitioner's position in the category of the children of ex-servicemen and servicemen as regards merit is higher than that of Baldev Chand respondent. Her preferential claim for admission to M.Sc. Chemistry class could not, therefore, have been ignored by the University authorities. The averment in the objections filed on behalf of respondent No. 1 in petition No. 99 of 1968, that the case of Kushma Joshi was not considered as she was not a State subject also does not appeal to me in view of the fact that in the merit list produced for my perusal on behalf of respondent No. 1 even Baldev Chand respondent has been shown as a non-State subject. It is, I think, because of all these reasons that Shri D. D. Thakur has not made any serious attempt to justify the selection of Shri Baldev Chand respondent. Thus Kushma Joshi being decidedly higher in order of merit was entitled to be preferred to Baldev Chand and has been unjustly discriminated against in the matter of admission to M.Sc. Chemistry class of Jammu and Kashmir University for the session 1968-69. Her claim cannot, therefore, be ignored. The contention of Shri Devi Das that Kushma Joshi even if admitted at this stage will not be able to make up her attendance cannot be countenanced. A similar contention was advanced in the case reported in AIR 1963 Pat 3 (FB) (supra) but was repelled.

16. Now remains the question of the relief to be granted to the petitioner, Kushma Joshi. As Baldev Chand respondent is stated to have been studying in the M.Sc. class for a considerable length of time i.e. for nearly five months it might cause hardship to him if his admission is disturbed at this stage I would, therefore, direct the respondent No 1 to take steps to admit the petitioner Kushma Joshi to the M. Sc. Chemistry class for the session 1968-69 by providing an additional seat for her. In case the creation of an additional seat be not possible for any reason, Baldev Chand respondent shall have to make way for Kushma Joshi who would in that event be admitted in his place. As the matter has already been delayed due to circumstances beyond the control of the petitioner, I cannot give more than week's time to the respondent to implement this order.

17. In the result the petition No 99 succeeds and the petition No 120 of 1968 filed by Ved Prakash fails and is hereby dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

MBR/D.V.C. Order accordingly.

JASWANT SINGH, J.

Durga Dass, Defendant-Appellant v.

Second Appeal No 130 of 1966,

Udhampur D/- 30-11-1965.

Limitation Act (1908), S. 23, Arts. 113, 120 — Suit for perpetual injunction for prevention of wrong — Maintainability — Suit land purchased by A on 23-1-2006 (BK) from B and C — B and C undertaking to close door and window of the house opening on suit land — Subsequently B & C selling their house to D — D declining to close door and window — Suit by A against D, B and C filed on 2-4-1960 (A D) — Case, one of continuing wrong — S. 23 held applicable and suit was not barred by limitation — (J & K) Limitation Act (9 of 1955), S. 23, Arts. 84, 119.)

A purchased a plot of land from B and C on 17-1-2006 (Bikrami). B and C undertook to close the door and window of their house opening on the said plot. They also undertook for ever not to open any door or window on the said plot. Subsequently, on 19th Magh 2006, D purchased from B and C the house having the aforesaid door and window. D was asked several times to close the door and window, but he failed to comply with this demand and finally declined to do so. About a fortnight thereafter i.e., on 2-4-1960 (A D), A filed suit against D, B and C for perpetual injunction enjoining D to close the door and the window opening on his land.

Held, (1) that the suit was not for specific performance of the contract and was maintainable in the form in which it was framed by A. As the continuance of the door and the window by D was contrary to the right of A and constituted a breach of the obligation undertaken by D, the suit for perpetual injunction for prevention of the wrong could lie. AIR 1917 Mad 465 & AIR 1935 Mad 967 Distinguished. (Para 7)

(2) that Section 23 was applicable and the suit could not be barred after the expiry of six years from 23-1-2006, as in the very nature of the obligations, the case was one of continuing wrong and every fresh default on the part of D or his predecessor-in-interest would furnish the plaintiff A with a fresh cause of action. Their conduct thus amounted to a continuing wrong and a fresh period of limitation began to run at every moment of time during which the wrong continued. (Para 7)

D. D. Thakur, for Appellant; R. N. Bhalgotra, for Respondent

JUDGMENT:— This is a defendant's second appeal against the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge, Udhampur, dated 30-11-1965, affirming the judgment and decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Udhampur.

2. The facts leading to this appeal are simple and may briefly be stated as follows:—

On 2-4-1960 (A.D.) Amar Nath, plaintiff respondent filed a suit against Durga Dass, defendant-appellant for a perpetual injunction enjoining the latter to close a door and a window opening on the land of the former, as also for removal of two water shoots falling on the said land. It was inter alia averred by the plaintiff that he along with his brother, Daya Ram, purchased a plot of land measuring 85 Ft. x 65 Ft. from Ishar Das and Chuni Lal, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, their elder brother, Mukund Lal, and their mother Mst. Malto by virtue of sale-deed dated 17-1-2006 (Bikrami), that by the aforesaid sale-deed the said vendors i.e. defendants 2 and 3, their elder brother, and their mother, also undertook to close the door and the window of their house opening on the said plot, that the said vendors also undertook for ever not to open any door or window on the said plot, that subsequently by means of sale-deed dated 19th Magh 2006, the defendant No. 1 purchased from defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and their mother the house having the aforesaid door and the window opening on the aforesaid plot, that the defendant No. 1 was asked several times to close the said door and the window and to remove the water shoots but he failed to comply with his demands and finally declined to do so about a fortnight before the institution of the suit.

3. Defendant No. 1 alone resisted the suit. He denied that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and others from whom the plaintiff purchased the plot ever undertook to close the door and the window and contended that such an undertaking could not have been given. He further pleaded that the plaintiff not having enforced the alleged agreement within time, his suit was time barred. He also averred that the water shoots alluded to by the plaintiff had been in existence ever since the house was constructed by his predecessors-in-interest.

4. On the pleadings of the parties the following issues were struck in this case by the learned trial court :

1. Whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had promised to close the window and the door of their house opening on the land of the plaintiff? O. P. P.

2. In case issue No. 1 is proved, whether the defendant No. 1 is bound to honour the commitments of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3? O. P. P.

3. In case issues Nos. 1 and 2 are proved, whether the plaintiff has waived his right? O.P.D.

4. Whether the defendant No. 1 has opened two water shoots without any title towards the plaintiff's land? O. P. P.

5. Relief.

5. After recording and appraising the evidence led by the parties the learned

Sub-Judge, Udhampur, found issues Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff. Regarding issue No. 4 the finding of the trial court was that the plaintiff had not been able to show that the water shoots had been opened by the defendant No. 1 after the house was purchased by him from defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The trial court further found that the water shoots existed in the house from the very beginning and as such the plaintiff was not entitled to get them removed. Before striking these issues, the trial court by its order dated 11-8-1960 (A.D.) raised a preliminary issue on the point of limitation which on the concession of the counsel for the defendant No. 1 was also decided by it in favour of the plaintiff by its order dated 31-5-1961. Issues Nos. 1 to 3 having been found in favour of the plaintiff as stated earlier, the Sub-Judge granted him a decree for perpetual injunction enjoining the defendant No. 1 to close the window and door of his house which opened on the land of the plaintiff. The appellant herein thereupon preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, Udhampur, who by his judgment dated 30-11-1965, affirmed the judgment and the decree passed by the Sub-Judge Udhampur. Against this judgment of the learned District Judge, the defendant No. 1 has come up in second appeal to this court.

6. In this appeal, the findings of the lower courts with regard to issues Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have not been challenged by the learned counsel for the appellant. He has merely confined himself to the plea of limitation. Under the plea of limitation two points have been canvassed by him firstly, that the suit in substance was for specific performance of the contract dated 17-1-2006 to which Art. 84 of the Limitation Act applied and secondly, that the suit in any event was governed by Art. 119 of the Limitation Act which provides a period of six years and as it i.e. the suit had been brought after the lapse of about 13 years, the same was time barred. He has further contended that this is not a case of continuing breach of contract as held by the lower appellate court. In support of his contentions, the learned counsel has relied on two rulings reported in AIR 1917 Mad 465, and AIR 1935 Mad 967. On the other hand, Mr. Bhalgotra appearing for the respondent while relying on Article 119 of the Limitation Act has urged that the present is the case of continuing breach of contract and that every moment's default on the part of the defendant No. 1 in not closing the door and window furnished his client with a fresh cause of action and the suit was not barred by limitation. According to him, the appropriate provision that should govern the case is Section 23 of the Limitation Act, which ordains that "In the case of a continuing breach of contract and in the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract, a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment of the time during which the breach or the wrong, as the case may be, continues"

I have gone through the authorities cited by the learned counsel for the parties and have also studied the law bearing on matter Adverting to the rulings cited by Shri D D Thakur it may at once be observed that these are clearly distinguishable and cannot afford any help to the appellant. The first ruling cited by the learned counsel for the appellant relates to a case of a lease, the obligation wherein was to place the lessee in possession in the beginning of the term and on breach of the obligation the lessee was held entitled to institute an action and recover by way of damage the whole value of the term. The second authority cited by the learned counsel is with regard to a suit to establish the right to pass in a procession over a certain route in a village.

7. As regards, the first contention of the learned Counsel of the appellant that the suit was governed by Article 84 of the Limitation Act, I am of the opinion, that the suit was not for specific performance of the contract and was maintainable in the form in which it was framed by the plaintiff. As the continuance of the door and the window by defendant No 1 was contrary to the right of the plaintiff and constituted a breach of the obligation undertaken by the defendant-appellant, the suit for perpetual injunction for prevention of the wrong could lie. The other submission of the learned counsel for the appellant is equally misconceived. The instant case is manifestly a case of continuing breach of contract to which Section 23 of the Limitation Act is clearly attracted. As pointed out in (1902) ILR 26 Mad 410, ILR (1950) Nag 633 — (AIR 1951 Nag 327) the contention under Section 23 of the Limitation Act, is not whether the right is a continuing one but whether the wrong is a continuing wrong. The following illuminating observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1959 SC 798, are also apposite in this connection.

"In dealing with this argument it is necessary to bear in mind that Section 23 refers not to a continuing right but to a continuing wrong. It is the very essence of a continuing wrong that it is an act which creates a continuing source of injury and renders the doer of the act responsible and liable for the continuance of the said injury. If the wrongful act causes an injury which is complete, there is no continuing wrong even though the damage resulting from the act may continue. If, however, a wrongful act is of such a character that the injury caused by itself continues, then the act constitutes a continuing wrong. In this connection, it is necessary to draw a distinction between the injury caused by the wrongful act and what may be described as the effect of the said injury. It is only in regard to acts which can be properly characterised as continuing wrongs that Section 23 can be invoked."

In the instant case, although the predecessor-in-interest of defendant No 1 had by virtue of sale-deed dated 17-1-2006 (Bikrami) undertaken to close the door and the window of the house overlooking the plot purchased by the plaintiff within a week of the execution of the deed in his favour, yet the suit could not be barred after the expiry of six years from 23-1-2006, as in the very nature of the obligations, the case is one of continuing wrong and every fresh default on the part of defendant No 1 or his predecessor-in-interest would furnish the plaintiff with a fresh cause of action. There has not been a single wrongful act from which injurious consequences have ensued to the plaintiff but a state of affairs in which the defendant No 1 and his predecessor-in-interest though in position to terminate the injury at their pleasure have intentionally caused it to continue. Their conduct thus amounted to a continuing wrong and a fresh period of limitation began to run at every moment of time during which the wrong continued i.e., the cause of action arose de die in diem to the plaintiff and his suit was within limitation. That being so, there is no substance in this appeal which is dismissed with costs.

On a plain construction and simple reading of Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, it is clear that 15 per cent of Jabirana (solatium) is included in the word 'compensation', and interest is to be paid on this amount under Sections 28 and 35 of the Act. The head-note of Section 23 is "Matters to be considered in determining compensation," which obviously means that not only the first part but both parts of this section have to be read together in determining the compensation. BHAT J.—In these 19 appeals two points arise for consideration. The proprietors or, in legal language, the persons interested have objected to the amount of compensation. Their grievance is that more compensation should have been allowed to them than has been actually given by the learned District Judge Jammu. The appeal of the Collector is with respect to the grant of interest. His objection is twofold, one that interest is discretionary and should not have been allowed and secondly that if any interest is allowed, it should be allowed only on the value of the land assessed and not on the 15% Jabirana i.e., solatium also.

2. After hearing the parties, the parties took time to arrive at an amicable settlement about the price of the land to be paid to the owners. Ultimately they came to an agreement that Rs. 375/- per kanal should be paid as compensation for the land in village Gaginan Tehsil R. S. Pora (i.e. in appeals Nos. 27, 28, 53, 55 and 56 of 1966) and Rs. 2,000/- per kanal for the land situate in Ranbir Singh Pora (i.e. in appeal No. 54 of 1966). The amount of money payable to various owners in the different appeals at this rate as the price of the land comes to:—

In appeal No. 28 of 1966=Rs. 12,918.75

In appeal No. 53 of 1966=Rs. 10,462.50

In appeal No. 56 of 1966=Rs. 11,306.25

In appeal No. 55 of 1966=Rs. 20,587.50

In appeal No. 54 of 1966=Rs. 15,100.00

So that concludes one part of the appeals i.e. the appeals of the owners.

3. The argument of the learned counsel for the Collector is composed of two parts; one that payment of interest is discretionary; but this argument of his is refuted and the matter concluded by a Full Bench decision of this Court, Collector v. Habib Ullah AIR 1967 J & K 44 (FB). In that case after considering various authorities the court came to the conclusion that payment of interest under Sections 28 and 35 of the Act was obligatory and it could not be denied to a person whose land had been acquired.

4. For the proposition that interest should not be paid on 15% jabirana (solatium), the argument of the learned counsel for the Collector is that Jabirana is not part of compensation and interest is payable only on compensation. He has referred us to Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act. This section consists of two parts: Part (1) states:—

"In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under the Act, the Court shall take into consideration — six things, which are mentioned therein. According to him this is the compensation that has to be paid and interest is to be computed only on this amount. But we are afraid that this argument of the learned counsel for the Collector is not correct. As already stated this section consists of two parts. The opening words of the first part have already been quoted but the second part reads like this:—

"(2) In addition to the market value of the land as above provided, the Court shall in every case award a sum of fifteen per centum on such market value in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition."

The head-note of the section is "Matters to be considered in determining compensation", which obviously means that not only the first part but both parts of this section have to be read together in determining the compensation. The compensation that the owner or other person who is deprived of his property is to get is the first market value then other things contained in part (1) of the section plus 15% as solatium (Jabirana) which is given to him to compensate him for the acquisition of his property against his wishes. The learned counsel for the Collector has referred us to AIR 1959 Mad 16 but we are afraid he has not read the authority properly because that authority clearly says that:—

"The Solatium under Section 23(2) Land Acquisition Act cannot be considered to be an integral part of Section 23(1) of that Act. The 15 per cent solatium is not integrated with the market value but is a gift or addition provided under the statute. The claim to it will disappear when the statute providing for it is withdrawn."

So this authority clearly makes the distinction between parts (1) and (2) of Section 23 of the Act. Obviously the solatium is not a part of the market value of the land but is an additional amount granted to the owners as I said earlier, to compensate them for the loss caused to them.

5. The dictionary meaning of the word "compensation" is "something that constitutes an equivalent or recompense; something that makes good a lack; something that makes up for a loss; something that relieves, equalizes or neutralizes". Similarly the word has been defined in Wharton's Law Lexicon as 'making things equivalent, satisfying or making amends; also that equivalent in money which is paid to the owners or occupiers of land taken or injuriously affected for public purposes and under Act of Parliament i.e. the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. Clause 18)'. Therefore, on a plain construction and simple reading of Section 23 of the Act, it is clear that 15 per cent of Jabirana (solatium) is included in the word 'compensation', and interest is to be paid on this amount under Sections 28 and 35 of the Land Acquisition Act. In this view of ours, we are further fortified by a recent authority of the Gujarat High Court reported as AIR 1968 Guj 1.

(In paragraphs 6 to 8, the judgment works out the amounts of compensation payable to the various owners with interest. The judgment then proceeds.)

9. In all the cases, the appellants will be entitled to a further interest at the rate of 4 % per annum from today on the amount of compensation standing unpaid till the whole amount is liquidated.

10. The appeals filed by the Collector stand dismissed. But the parties are left to bear their own costs.

ISAAC, J.: This is a reference made by the Madras Bench of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal under Section 64 (1) of the Estate Duty Act, 1953 on the application of the assessee. The question referred is:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the Appellate Tribunal was correct in law in having included the value of the forest lands in the total value of the estate for the purpose of Estate Duty?"

2. The estate concerned in this case is that of Smt. Jayalakshmi Devi and Shri Madhava Rajah of Kollengode, the former having died on 6th March 1954, and the latter on 9th May 1955. They were members of a Marumakkathayam tarwad; and each of them had admittedly a one-thirteenth share in the tarwad properties on the dates of their deaths.
The tarwad had large extents of forest lands situate in the erstwhile Malabar District which was part of the State of Madras till the formation of Kerala on 11-11-1956. The assessee claimed that forest lands are agricultural lands, and they were not, therefore, liable to estate duty under the Estate Duty Act, 1953. In support of this claim, reliance was made on the decision of the Madras High Court in Sarojini Devi v. Sri Krishna, AIR 1944 Mad 401 which held that the expression 'agricultural lands' must be taken to include lands which are used or are capable of being used for raising any valuable plants or trees for any other purpose of husbandry. The Appellate Tribunal, by its order dated 28th July 1964 rejected the assessee's claim holding that the above decision did not lay down a definition of the expression of agricultural lands for all purposes, and that it did not apply to cases under the Estate Duty Act. The question in this reference arose out of the above order; and it came for decision before a Bench of this Court in I. T. R. Case No. 75 of 1965, which was disposed of by the order pronounced on 26th August, 1966. This Court disagreed with the view of the Tribunal, and held that the term agricultural land should be interpreted in its widest significance. In support of the above view, reference was made by this Court to the decision of the Federal Court in Megh Raj v. Allah Rakhia, AIR 1942
FC 27 and the Commissioner of Incometax v. Benoy Kumar, AIR 1957 SC 768, in addition to the decision of the Madras High Court above referred to. In this view of the matter, this Court directed the Appellate Tribunal to modify the statement of the case by incorporating therein a clear finding as to whether the forest lands concerned in this case were agricultural lands. Accordingly the Appellate Tribunal has submitted a supplementary statement; and the question has again come before us for decision in the present reference.

3. The supplementary statement and the report of the valuers which is Appendix F to this reference show that the forest lands belonging to the tarwad of the deceased on the relevant dates have an extent of 36.857 acres. Out of this, 16.640 acres are held by the State of Kerala on a 99 years lease; and the remaining 20,000 and odd acres are in the possession of the tarwad of the deceased persons. 5,000 acres out of the latter area are bare rock; and admittedly this area is neither cultivable nor useful for any purpose. This has been valued separately as non-agricultural land; and there is no dispute about it. The controversy relates only to the remaining extent of about 32,000 acres. The assessee produced a number of lease deeds before the Appellate Tribunal, and contended that the forest lands were of the same nature as taken in by the lease deeds, and were, therefore, agricultural lands. The Appellate Tribunal found that none of the lease deeds related to the forest lands in question; and it rightly held that these lease deeds cannot give any assistance in deciding whether the said forest lands are agricultural lands or not. Regarding the 15,000 and odd acres of land in the possession of the assessee's tarwad, the Appellate Tribunal stated:

"According to the valuers, the remaining extent of 15,000 and odd acres out of the first category, has been leased by the assessee from time to time for cutting of timber and fuel wood, and has never been used by him either by himself or through lessees to bring it under cultivation for any purpose. There is no material on record from which it can be said that this area can at all be brought under cultivation for any purpose.
Even if it is assumed that there is a bare possibility of this area being brought under cultivation, the assessee has not placed any material before us from which it can be said that a prudent owner would undertake any process of farming in respect of this land".
Regarding the 16,000 and odd acres held by the State of Kerala under lease, the Appellate Tribunal stated:

"With regard to the second category of the land of the extent of 16,000 and oddacres the report of the valuers does not throw any light upon the nature of this land, and the only information available is that these lands have been held by the Kerala Government under a perpetual lease on an annual rent of Rupees 5,000/- The assessee has not shown whether this land was being cultivated by the Kerala Government or whether it was only being exploited by the Kerala Government for its timber value. On the material on record it is not possible for these lands to come under the category of agricultural lands."

The Tribunal then concluded by saying:

"We, therefore, record a finding that none of the lands in question of the total extent of 36,857 16 acres is agricultural land."

4 It is obvious from the above statement of the Tribunal that its finding is solely based on the absence of evidence or the assessee's failure to prove that the disputed forest lands are agricultural lands. The learned counsel for the assessee contended that what the assessee claims is not an exemption, but an immunity from tax liability on the ground that the lands do not fall within the ambit of the charging Section. It is not disputed that, if what the assessee claims is an exemption, the burden of proving that he is entitled to the exemption is on him, and on the short ground that he has not discharged that burden, he should fail. On the other hand, if what he claims is an immunity from tax on the ground that the subject does not fall within the ambit of taxing Statute, the Revenue has to establish that the subject is taxable, and then alone it would be entitled to tax. The whole question depends upon the construction of the charging section in the Estate Duty Act, 1953. Section 5 is the charging Section, and it has undergone a small amendment by Adaptation Order 3 of 1956 issued under the States Reorganisation Act 1956. The amendment is not very material; however, we will quote Section 5 as it stood before its amendment.

"5 Levy of estate duty—

(1) In the case of every person dying after the commencement of this Act, there shall, save as hereinafter expressly provided, be levied and paid upon the principal value ascertained as hereinafter provided of all property settled or not settled, including agricultural land situate in the States specified in the First Schedule to this Act, which passes on the death of such person, a duty called "estate duty" at the rates fixed in accordance with section 35.

(2) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, add the names of any other States to the First Schedule in respect whereof resolutions have been passed by the Legislatures of those States adopting this Act under clause (1) of Article 252 of the Constitution in respect of estate duty on agricultural lands situate in those States and on the issue of any such notification the States so added shall be deemed to be States specified in the First Schedule within the meaning of sub-section (1)."

"Estate duty. In respect of agricultural land" is item 48 in List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. Hence Parliament has no power to levy estate duty in respect of agricultural lands, except in pursuance of resolutions passed by the State Legislatures as provided by Article 252 of the Constitution. The Legislatures of some of the States had passed such resolutions for enabling the Parliament to levy estate duty in respect of agricultural lands. Accordingly the Parliament became entitled to levy estate duty on agricultural lands within the said States, and these States were included in the First Schedule to the Estate Duty Act, 1953. By sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Estate Duty Act provision was also made for including in the First Schedule in the Act, States in respect whereof resolutions adopting this Act may be passed by their Legislatures. The Madras Legislature passed such a resolution on 2-4-1955, and pursuant to that the Government of India issued a notification, S R O No. 1227 dated 6-6-1955. It reads as follows:

"Whereas in pursuance of the provisions contained in clause (1) of Article 252 of the Constitution a resolution has been passed by the Legislature of the State of Madras on the 2nd April 1955, adopting the Estate Duty Act, 1953 (34 of 1953) in so far as it relates to estate duty in respect of agricultural land, situate in the said State,

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the provision contained in sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the said Act, the Central Government hereby adds the name of the State of Madras to the First Schedule thereof." Accordingly, the State of Madras was added in the First Schedule to the Act with effect from 6th June 1955; and from that date agricultural lands in this State became liable to estate duty under the Estate Duty Act, 1953. It is also clear from sub-section (1) of Section 5 that, unless the State is included in the First Schedule to the Act, estate duty cannot be levied under this Section. Therefore, estate duty is not leviable before 6-6-1955 in respect of agricultural lands situate in Madras State; and the words "the principal value ascertained as hereinafter provided of all property" appearing in Section 5 of the Act should be read and understood as all property other than agricultural land situate in States not specified in the First Schedule to the Act. In other words, the charge can be imposed only on non-agricultural lands.

It appears to us, therefore, on a reading of Section 5(1), that the burden is on the Revenue to prove that the property in respect of which estate duty is sought to be levied is non-agricultural property, as Parliament's power to levy estate duty was confined only to such lands in respect of States not specified in the First Schedule to the Act. There is no material in this case to hold that forest lands concerned in this reference are non-agricultural lands; and hence the finding of the Tribunal to that effect cannot be sustained.

5. We may also point out that, as has been held by this Court in I. T. R. Case No. 75 of 1965 and the decisions referred to therein, the question whether a land is agricultural land or not has to be determined with reference to its nature, and not to the use to which it may be put at a particular time. The question whether the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Land Act, 1938 was a law falling under Entry 21 in List II in the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 (which corresponds to Entry 18, List II in the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution) arose for decision before the Federal Court of India in AIR 1942 FC 27. In dealing with this question the Court had to consider the meaning of the term "agricultural land" appearing in that entry; and after referring to various decisions of the Indian High Courts, the Court said:

"It may on a proper occasion be necessary to consider whether for the purpose of the relevant entries in Lists 2 and 3, Constitution Act, it will not be right to take into account the general character of the land (as agricultural land) and not the use to which it may be put at a particular point of time. It is difficult to impute to Parliament the intention that a piece of land should, so long as it is used to produce certain things, be governed by and descend according to laws framed under List 2, but that when the same parcel of land is used to produce something else (as often happens in this country), it should be governed by and descend according to laws framed under List 3."

The same question arose before the Madras High Court in AIR 1944 Mad 401 with respect to the constitutional validity of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937; and Patanjali Sastri J., in delivering the judgment of the court said:

"As we have already pointed out, the term "agriculture" is used in different senses and in order to ascertain in what sense it is used in the Legislative Lists in Sch. 7, Constitution Act, we must have regard to the object and purpose of Section 100 of which these lists really form part. That section deals with the distribution of legislative powers as between the Federal and Provincial Legislatures, and the Lists enumerate the "matters" in respect of which those Legislatures have or have not power to make laws. In such context it seems to us that the expression "agricultural land" must receive the widest meaning for it would be somewhat grotesque to suppose that Parliament intended that lands devoted to the production of one kind of crop should devolve according to laws passed by Provincial Legislatures, while those used for growing another kind should pass according to laws made by the Central Legislature, or that "the circumstances in which the cultivation is carried on" (per Reilly J. in ILR 54 Mad 900 = (AIR 1931 Mad 659)) should determine the law which governs the devolution of the land. Nor could it have been intended that succession to such lands should depend on the degree of tillage or preparation of the soil or of the skill and labour expended in rearing and maintaining the plants. We are of opinion that for the purpose of the relevant entries in Lists II and III of Sch. 7, the expression "agricultural lands" must be taken to include lands which are used or are capable of being used for raising any valuable plants or trees or for any other purpose of husbandry."

The force of the expression of opinion contained in the above two decisions regarding the meaning of the term "agricultural land" was recognised by the Supreme Court in AIR 1957 SC 768. After referring to the above decisions, this Court said in its decision in I. T. R. Case No. 75 of 1965:

"The test, as we have already indicated, should be whether a prudent owner would embark on an adventure in agriculture in respect of the land concerned. The prudent owner is the common man of the common law, sane and sensible, reasonable and responsible averse to gambling and speculative experiments; but none the less prepared for normal risks and legitimate expenditure."

6. It is well known that the extensive areas of different varieties of plantation that we have got in this State were once forest lands; and it is also equally well known that year after year large areas of forest lands in this State are being cleared and converted into valuable plantations. In the absence of exceptional circumstances such as the land being entirely rocky or barren for other reasons, all forest lands in this State are agricultural lands in the sense that they can be prudently and profitably exploited for agricultural purposes. There is no case that the forest lands concerned in this case or any part thereof are unfit for agricultural exploitation.

7. The learned counsel for the Revenue raised a new contention before us on the basis of Section 30 of the Estate Duty (Amendment) Act, 1958. This section reads as follows:

"Act not to apply to agricultural land.

For the removal of doubts it is hereby declared that nothing contained in this Act shall have effect in respect of any matter enumerated in entry 48 of List II in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, and estate duty in respect of any estate which consists wholly or in part of agricultural land situate in the territories which immediately before the 1st day of November, 1956, were comprised in the State specified in the First Schedule to the principal Act shall continue to be governed by the principal Act as if this Act had not been passed". This section was omitted by the Estate Duty (Amendment) Act, 16 of 1960. We are not certain why such a provision was enacted, and why it was omitted. It appears to us that, in view of the amendment made to Section 5(1) of the Estate Duty Act, 1953 by Adaptation Order 3 of 1956, Section 30 of the Estate Duty (Amendment) Act, 1958 was unnecessary, and it served no purpose. Whatever it may be this section is not available in the Statute after the Estate Duty (Amendment) Act 16 of 1960, and the contention of the learned counsel is, therefore, based upon a non-existing statutory provision. This is sufficient to dismiss that contention. However, the learned counsel seriously pressed it; and we may therefore, deal with the same. Relying on Section 30 of the Estate Duty (Amendment) Act, 1958, he submitted that, before 1st day of November, 1956, Madras got included in the First Schedule to the Estate Duty Act, 1953, and therefore the agricultural land in Madras State was liable to estate duty before the above date under Section 5 of the Estate Duty Act as it stood before the amendment of 1958. We are unable to appreciate this argument. In the first place, as we have already pointed out, Parliament had no power to levy estate duty in respect of agricultural lands in Madras until the Legislature of that State adopted the Estate Duty Act by a resolution passed under Article 252 of the Constitution, and the Central Government issued the notification under Section 5(2) of the Estate Duty Act on 6-6-1955, adding Madras in the First Schedule to the Act. Secondly, it appears to us that the contention of the learned counsel cannot also be sustained on the language of Section 30 of the Amendment Act of 1958. In clear terms, this section states that the amending Act shall not in any manner affect the power of the States to levy Estate Duty on agricultural lands; and it also states that estate duty in respect of any estate existing of agricultural land situate in territories which immediately before 1st November, 1956 were comprised in the States specified in the First Schedule to the original Act shall continue to be governed by the original Act, as if the amendment Act had not been passed. It, therefore, takes us to the provision of the original Act, and under the Original Act, the agricultural land in Madras State was not subject to estate duty until that State was included in the First Schedule to the Act by the notification of the Central Government dated 6-6-1955. It may also be stated that in the valuation made by the Assistant Controller of Estate Duty, which has been upheld by the Appellate Tribunal, agricultural lands which belonged to the deceased persons and situate in Madras have been excluded from the valuation, obviously on the ground that such lands did not come within the ambit of the Statute on the relevant dates. The question in this reference has been drawn up on that basis; and it was also dealt with by this Court in I T. R 75 of 1965 accordingly. The contention raised by the learned counsel for the Revenue is devoid of any substance.

8. In the result, we answer the question referred to this Court in the negative and against the Controller of Estate Duty, except regarding 5000 acres of rocky land which have been found by the Revenue as non-agricultural land. In the circumstances of the case, the parties will bear their costs. A copy of this judgment will be forwarded to the Appellate Tribunal as required by S 64 (4) of the Estate Duty Act, 1953.

State of Kerala, Appellant v. New Dholari Steamships Ltd., Respondent

Second Appeal No. 1111 of 1965, D/- 11-9-1968, from Dist Court, Ernakulam in A.S. No. 215 of 1964

Carriage of Goods by Sea Act (1925), Schedule, Article 3, para 6, clause 3 — Calculation of one year — Starting point.

Paragraph 6(3) to Article III in the Schedule of the Act provides for extinction of the right of the consignee to claim compensation for loss and damage if one year has passed after the delivery of goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered. For calculating the period of one year two starting points are given and that in the alternative. There may be cases where the two starting points synchronise. There may also be cases where one of them may be earlier than the other. In such cases it is to the advantage of the consignee that the later date is adopted as the starting point for calculating the period of one year. Where both the starting points are equally applicable to the case and none of them can be said to be more general or more specific than the other, it is only a fair rule of construction that, that which keeps alive the right should be preferred and that as much time as the language admits of should be given in the matter of computation of the period. If the goods are deli-

JUDGMENT: The question in this appeal depends upon what is the true reading of the 3rd clause of paragraph 6 of Article III in the Schedule of the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, Central Act XXVI of 1925, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) and is whether, when on the date of suit more than one year has elapsed from the date of departure from the port of delivery of the ship which carried the contracted goods but not from the last date of actual delivery of a portion of them the consignee has a subsisting right to claim compensation for short delivery.

2. Paragraph 6 of the aforesaid Article reads as follows:

"6. Unless notice of loss or damage and the general nature of such loss or damage be given in writing to the carrier or his agent at the port of discharge before or at the time of the removal of the goods into the custody of the person entitled to delivery thereof under the contract of carriage, or, if the loss or damage be not apparent, within three days, such removal shall be prima facie evidence of the delivery by the carrier of the goods as described in the bill of lading.

The notice in writing need not be given if the state of the goods has at the time of their receipt been the subject of joint survey or inspection.

In any event the carrier and the ship shall be discharged from all liability in respect of loss or damage unless suit is brought within one year after delivery of the goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered.

In the case of any actual or apprehended loss or damage the carrier and the receiver shall give all reasonable facilities to each other for inspecting and tallying the goods."

3. The suit out of which this appeal arises, was filed on 7-4-1962 by the appellant, the State of Kerala, against a shipping company, the New Dholaru Steamships Ltd., for damages for short delivery of 10 and odd tons of M. S. Rods valued at Rs. 7,600 and odd. The goods were shipped at Calcutta on board "S. S. Jayalakshmi" under 2 bills of lading for delivery at Cochin. The ship arrived at Cochin on 7-7-1960 and left that port on 12-7-1960. Except 10 and odd tons covered by the suit the rest of the goods was delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff on several dates, the last of which was 28-7-1961. The suit was resisted by the defendant on various grounds one of which based on paragraph 6(3) of the aforesaid Article was that the plaintiff had no subsisting enforceable right to claim compensation. Issues 4 and 5 raised in the suit related to it and they were heard preliminarily and disposed of. The decision of both the trial and lower appellate courts on them was against the plaintiff.

4. Both the lower courts relied upon the decision in East and West Steamship Company v. S. K. Ramalingam, AIR 1960 SC 1058 in support of their conclusion. What directly falls for decision in the instant case is when the 2 dates, the date of actual delivery of goods and the date when they should have been delivered are different and one of them falls within one year before suit and the other outside it which of them should be taken as the starting point for calculation of the period of one year mentioned in paragraph 6(3) of the aforesaid Article. If delivery of goods is made on several dates the question also arises as to whether it is not the last of those dates that has to be taken as the starting point. These questions did not arise for consideration and were not considered in AIR 1960 SC 1058. Only 3 points arose for decision in that case and they were whether the word "loss" as used in paragraph 6(3) of the Article included failure to supply goods also, whether the period of one year fixed in that paragraph was a period of limitation for suit or for extinction of right and what was the import of the words "the date when the goods should have been delivered" as used there. The Supreme Court held that the word 'loss' was wide enough to include failure to deliver goods also, that the period of one year fixed was one for extinction of the right to claim compensation and that the last date when the goods should have been delivered was the date of departure of the ship from the port. No opinion whatsoever was expressed in that decision as to which date had to be taken as the basis for calculation of the period of one year when the date of delivery of goods was different from that when they should have been delivered. In the present case the trial Court ignoring the dates of delivery of goods took the starting point for calculating the period of one year as the date when the ship left Cochin and that Court's decision was affirmed by the lower appellate Court.

5. I now come to the Act itself and the circumstances under which it happened to be passed. The rights and liabilities of the carriers by sea whose activities were widespread were not uniform in all countries. Consequently merchants were put to great difficulties. To remedy their grievances it became necessary to have a set of uniform rules. At a meeting of the International Law Association at Hague in 1921 certain Rules known as the 'Hague Rules' were approved. In the next year with certain modifications those rules were recommended by the delegates to the Diplomatic Conference on Maritime Law held at Brussels to their respective Governments for adoption. Thereafter on the recommendation of the Imperial Economic Conference held in 1923 most of the then British dominions including India passed the necessary Acts. These matters are clear from pages 439 to 441 of the 15th Edition of Scrutton on Charter Parties the Preamble to the Act and AIR 1960 SC 1058.

6. The Act applies only to outward as distinguished from homeward bills of lading. Consequently the provisions in bills of lading which though outwardly are only receipts for goods shipped on board ships showing the terms on which the goods were delivered to and received by the ships are really documents of title and form part of the currency of trade, issued from our country and the provisions in the Act would have to be interpreted in foreign countries and the provisions in the bills of lading issued from foreign countries and the provisions in the corresponding Acts of those countries would have to be interpreted in our courts. This involves a serious responsibility on our part and that is emphasised in AIR 1950 SC 1058. One of the decisions cited in that case is Stag Line Limited v. Foscolo Mango and Company 1932 AC 328 where Lord Atkin observed that as the English Act was the result of an International Conference intended to unify rules relating to bills of lading, in construing the provisions of that Act words had to be given their plain meaning and that one should not allow to colour his interpretation by considering whether a meaning otherwise plain should be avoided if it altered the previous law and Lord Macmillan said

"It is important to remember that the Act of 1924 was the outcome of an International Conference and that the rules in the Schedule have an international currency. As these rules must come under the consideration of foreign Courts it is desirable in the interests of uniformity that their interpretation should not be rigidly controlled by domestic precedents of antecedent date but rather that the language of the rules should be construed on broad principles of general acceptance"

7. To turn now to Article III in the Schedule of the Act, Paragraph 6 (3) provides for extinction of the right of the consignee to claim compensation for loss and damage if one year has passed after the delivery of goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered. For calculating the period of one year two starting points are given and that in the alternative. There may be cases where the two starting points synchronise. There may also be cases where one of them may be earlier than the other. In such cases it is to the advantage of the consignee that the later date is adopted as the starting point for calculation of the period of one year. Both the starting points are equally applicable to the instant case. None of them can be said to be more general or more specific than the other. In such cases it is only a fair rule of construction that that which keeps alive the right should be preferred and that as much time as the language admits of should be given in the matter of computation of the period. If the goods are delivered on several days it is from the last of those days that the period of one year has to be calculated because only on that day inclusive of the delivery of goods on that day can the total loss and damage be assessed. From all these it follows that in the present case the plaintiff's right to claim compensation for short delivery had not become extinguished on the date of suit as one year had not passed after the last date of delivery of some of the goods.

8. In the result, the judgments and decrees of the lower courts are set aside, Issues 4 and 5 raised in the suit are found in favour of the plaintiff and the case is remanded to the trial court for trial and disposal according to law of the remaining issues raised in the suit. This Second Appeal is allowed as mentioned above. The plaintiff is allowed to recover the costs hitherto incurred by it in all the three courts from the defendant.

ORDER :— This is an application for the issue of an appropriate writ or order quashing the order of the Industrial Tribunal, Calicut, passed under Section 33 (2) (b) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act), refusing approval to the action taken by the management in dismissing the 2nd respondent herein from the service of the petitioner.

2. The order dismissing the 2nd respondent was passed by the management on 7-6-1966. It was communicated to the 2nd respondent on 8-12-1966. The application under Section 33 (2) (b) of the Act for approval of the action was filed on 15-7-1966. The one month's salary was sent by money order to the 2nd respondent on 8-12-1966.

3. The tribunal held that the dismissal, the payment of one month's wages, and the application for approval must form part of the same transaction and since the application was filed on 15-7-1966 but the order of dismissal was passed on 7-6-1966 and the one month's wages were tendered only on 8-12-1966, they do not form part of the same transaction and so the application was not maintainable.

4. In Strawboard Manufacturing Co. v. Gobind, 1962-1 Lab LJ 420 = (AIR 1962 SC 1500) the Supreme Court held that the proviso to Section 33 (2) (b) requires the employer to do three things, namely, (i) dismissal or discharge of the employee; (ii) payment of wages; and (iii) the making of the application as part of the same transaction. In that case, the employer decided to dismiss the employee after making an enquiry. It then passed the order of dismissal on 1st February, 1960, and made an application on the same day to the Tribunal for approval of the action taken. The tribunal took the view that the application should have been made before dismissing the employee. This view was held to be wrong by the Supreme Court. The contention before the Supreme Court was that the application for approval must have been made before the employer took action. The court said:

"It seems to us, therefore, that when the proviso speaks of an application for approval of the action taken, there is the order of actual discharge or dismissal made by the employer and it is for the approval of this order that the application is to be made. This is borne out by Form X under Rule 60 of the rules framed under the Act which corresponds to Form XV under Rule 31 of the Uttar Pradesh Rules. Further, the use of the word "approval" in the proviso also suggests that something has been done by the employer who seeks approval of that from the Tribunal.

If the intention was, that in view of the proviso, the employer could not pass the order of dismissal or discharge without first obtaining the approval of the tribunal, we see no reason why the words in the proviso should not have been similar to those in sub-sections (1) and (3), namely, that no workman shall be discharged or dismissed without the express permission in writing of the authority concerned. The change, therefore, in the language used in the proviso to sub-section (2) (b) clearly shows in our opinion that the legislature intended that the employer would have the right to pass an order of discharge or dismissal subject to two conditions, namely,

(i) payment of wages for one month; and

(ii) making of an application to the authority concerned for approval of the action taken.

The use of the word 'approval' also suggests that what has to be approved has already taken place, though sometimes approval may also be sought of a proposed action. But it seems to us in the context that the approval here is of something done, as otherwise it would have been quite easy for the legislature to use the words 'for approval' of the action proposed to be taken, that some action has been taken and it is that action which the employer wants to be approved by his application. The difference between sub-s. (1) and sub-section (2) is therefore that under sub-section (1), the employer proposes what he intends to do and asks for the approval of the action taken from the authority concerned by his application. There can therefore be no doubt that sub-section (2) (b) read together with the proviso contemplates that the employer may pass an order of dismissal or discharge before obtaining the approval of the authority concerned and at the same time make an application for approval of the action taken by him . . .

5 In Tata Iron and Steel Co v. Modak, 1965-2 Lah LJ 128 at p 132 = (AIR 1966 SC 380 at p 382) the Supreme Court said:

"It is now well settled that the requirements of the proviso have to be satisfied by the employer on the basis that they form part of the same transaction, and stated generally, the employer must either pay or offer the salary for one month to the employee before passing an order of his discharge or dismissal, and must apply to the specified authority, for approval of his action at the same time, or within such reasonably short time thereafter as to form part of the same transaction."

6. In Balakrishna Bhiva v. Industrial Tribunal, 1967-1 Lah LJ 637 (Bom) the order of dismissal was passed on 19th April, 1963. It was communicated to the employee on 24th April. The application for approval of the action was made on 29th April. The Bombay High Court said:

"The application could, therefore, have been prepared and made to the tribunal at or about the same time. It was not necessary, to wait until the petitioner had been served. Even after the petitioner was served there was five days' further delay in making the application or if the holidays are excluded at least three days' delay, which has not been satisfactorily explained. On the facts of this case, we do not think that it can be said that the making of the application was part of the same transaction, by which the petitioner was dismissed from service."

6-A. Counsel for the petitioner relied upon the ruling reported in State Bank of Bikaner v. Balai Chander Sen, 1963-2 Lah LJ 657 = (AIR 1964 SC 732) in support of the contention that an application made before an order of dismissal takes effect is maintainable, and therefore, the application made in this case before the date when the order of dismissal took effect was competent. He also argued that the money order of one month's wage was sent on 8-12-1966, and therefore, it became part of the dismissal, as the dismissal took effect only on 8-12-1966, when the order of dismissal was communicated to the 2nd respondent.

7. In 1963-2 Lah LJ 657 = (AIR 1964 SC 732) it was held that an application under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval can be made even before the actual action is taken by the management and that the latest point on which the application should be made is the date of actual dismissal of the employee. The Court distinguished the decision in 1962-1 Lah LJ 420 = (AIR 1962 SC 1500) and said:

"We see nothing in principle against the employer making an application under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval of the proposed action before the actual action is taken. Such a course on the part of the employer would, if anything, be more favourable to the employee and would not in our opinion be against the provisions contained in Section 33 (2) (b). We are therefore of opinion that the labour court was wrong in holding that an application made by an employer under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval of the action he proposes to take is not entertainable and that such an application must necessarily be made after the action of which approval is sought to be taken. All that the Strawboard Manufacturing Company case, 1962-1 Lah LJ 420 = (AIR 1962 SC 1500) lays down is that the application can be made after the action of which approval is sought has been taken and that when this happens the three conditions in the proviso to Section 33 (2) (b) must be shown to be parts of the same transaction. But if an employer chooses to make an application under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval of the action he proposes to take and then takes the action we find nothing in Section 33 (2) (b) which would make such an application not maintainable. Such an application in our opinion, would not be contrary to the provisions of Section 33 (2) (b), read with the proviso thereof and would be maintainable."

This decision is a clear authority for the proposition that an application under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval of the action can be made before the action becomes effective. In this case, as already stated, the management after conducting the enquiry passed the order of dismissal on 7-6-1966. The order was communicated to the employee only on 8-12-1966. The application was made on 15-7-1966, after the decision to dismiss the employee was made, but before it was communicated to him. The decision became effective only when it was communicated to the employee on 8-12-1966; and since the application was made before the decision was communicated to the employee, it was maintainable. The question whether a tender of wages for one month before the order of dismissal came into force would be sufficient was considered in Delhi Transport Undertaking v. Industrial Tribunal 1965-1 Lah LJ 458 at p 461 = (AIR 1965 SC 1503 at p. 1505). There, the tender of the wages for one month was made on 30th October, 1961, and that was before the order of dismissal came into force by communicating it to the employee. The court said:

"The tender was thus made on the 30th before the order of dismissal came into force and the wages would have been paid either on the 30th or on the 31st had Hari Chand cared to receive them in any event, the amount was sent to him by money order immediately afterwards and the application for the approval made 3 days prior to the date of dismissal mentioned the fact that the amount was being paid to him

The proviso does not mean that the wages for one month should have been actually paid, because in many cases the employer can only tender the amount before the dismissal but cannot force the employee to receive the payment before dismissal becomes effective. In this case the tender was definitely made before the order of dismissal became effective and the wages would certainly have been paid if Hari Cband had asked for them. There was no failure to comply with the provision in this respect."

8. In Ritz Theatre v. Its Workmen, (1962) 2 Lab LJ 498 at p. 505 = (AIR 1963 SC 295 at p. 301) the question arose as to when an order of dismissal comes into force. Gajendragadkar J. (as he then was) observed thus:

"The relationship of the employer and the employee can be effectively terminated in such a case not merely by the decision of the employer to terminate the employee's services but by the communication of the said decision to the employee; and as it happened, such a communication had not been made even till the date when the award was pronounced. We are told by Mr. Andley today, and Mr. Sastri concedes, that effective steps have now been taken by the employer to terminate the services of Mohd. Mia and that from today in any case he is not an employee of the appellant."

9. It was argued for the 2nd respondent that the wages for one month were not paid before the application was filed and that on that ground the application was not maintainable. The proviso to Section 33 (2) (b) says:

"Provided that no such workman shall be discharged or dismissed, unless he has been paid wages for one month and an application has been made by the employer to the authority before which the proceeding is pending for approval of the action taken by the employer."

In this case, the wages for one month were tendered by money order on the day on which the order of dismissal took effect. That was a sufficient compliance with the proviso. If an application under Section 33 (2) (b) for approval can be made after a decision to dismiss an employee has been taken, and before it has not become effective by communication to the employee, it must necessarily follow that an application can be filed before the wages for the month are tendered to the employee; for, the wages need be paid only when an employee is dismissed, which takes place only when the order of dismissal is communicated to him and the application for approval can be filed before the decision to dismiss takes effect according to the authorities referred to above. Reference was made to Form X in the rules framed under the Act and it was submitted that before the application was made it was necessary that the wages for one month should have been paid or tendered. I do not think that the Form is intended to cover a situation like this. I hold that the wages for the month need not have been paid or tendered in this case at the time of the decision of the management to dismiss the worker, namely on 7-6-1966, and that it was also unnecessary that they should have been paid before the application for approval was made. The wages were tendered when the order became effective and that was sufficient.

10. It was contended on behalf of the 2nd respondent that the case must be remitted to the Tribunal for a consideration of the question whether the wages for the month were actually paid to the employee. The finding of the Tribunal is that wages for the month have been tendered to the employee. I do not therefore think that the case should be remitted to the Tribunal.

11. I quash the order of the Tribunal and allow the writ petition. No costs.

Giovanola-Binny Limited, Palluruthy, Cochin, Petitioner v. Industrial Tribunal, Calicut and another, Respondents.

Original Petition No. 3815 of 1966 D/- 5-11-1968.

Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 33 — Appointment of employee on probation — His removal from service on ground of unsuitability a few days after expiry of probation period — Does not amount to alteration of service condition — (Words and Phrases — 'Probationer') — (Constitution of India, Art. 311 — Probationer — Non-confirmation after expiry of probation — Effect).

It is well settled that a person appointed on probation does not ordinarily get automatic confirmation in service on the expiry of the stipulated probationary period and that if he is allowed to continue in service without any action being taken by the employer either by way of confirmation or by way of termination, he continues only as a probationer even after the expiration of the period of probation. Where the appointment order issued to the employee does not contain any provision stating that at the end of the period of probation mentioned therein the employee would automatically stand confirmed but on the other hand it is specifically mentioned therein that he would be confirmed in the appointment only if his work and conduct were found to be satisfactory, the continuance of the employee in the service of the company after expiry of probation period is only as a probationer and it is open to the management to decide about his suitability for confirmation and pass consequential orders either confirming him or discharging him from service 1969 Lab IC 37 and AIR 1964 SC 806 and C A No 548 of 1962 D/- 23-1-1964 (SC) Foll

(Para 7)

It would be totally meaningless to refer to a person's employment as being on probation if the management has the right to terminate his services only on grounds of proved misconduct, it is of the very essence of the concept of probation that the person is on trial regarding his suitability for regular appointment and is liable to be discharged on being found to be unsuitable for permanent absorption. The employee continuing in service only as probationer does not become immune from liability to be discharged from service on the ground of unsuitability and it cannot be said that he can only be dismissed on grounds of misconduct. In this respect, the only difference between a probationer whose term of probation has not expired and one who is continuing in service after the expiry of the stipulated period of probation without any order of confirmation having been passed, is that the former has a guaranteed period of trial namely the probationary period during which he is not liable to be discharged on the ground of unsuitability whereas the latter is liable to be discharged at any time. It must then follow that an order discharging the probationer from service does not amount to an alteration of the conditions of service even if it is passed not exactly on a date coinciding with the end of the probationary period but only a few days thereafter.

ORDER:— This writ petition is directed against an award passed by the Industrial Tribunal, Calicut in I. D. No. 19 of 1965 setting aside the order passed by the petitioner company discharging from their service the 2nd respondent who was a production worker on probation and ordering his reinstatement with continuity of service and back wages.

2 The award in question was passed by the Tribunal on a petition preferred before it by the 2nd respondent under S. 33-A of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. The 2nd respondent had been appointed by the management as a production worker as per order dated 8-1-1964 (M-2). It was expressly stipulated in that order that the appointee was to be on probation for one year with effect from 1-1-1964 and that if his work and conduct were found to be satisfactory he will be confirmed in his appointment at the end of the probationary period. On 19-1-1965 the management terminated his services as per Ext W-2 order by which the 2nd respondent was informed that it had been decided not to confirm his appointment. An industrial dispute namely I D No 74 of 1964 was pending adjudication at that time before the Industrial Tribunal. That dispute had been raised at the instance of certain workmen of the company concerning certain terms and conditions of their service. The 2nd respondent put in the petition under Section 33-A of the Industrial Disputes Act on the allegation that the termination of his services under Ext W-2 order during the pendency of I D 74/64 amounted to a violation of the provisions of Section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act.

3. The management contended before the Tribunal that the discharge of the probationer after the completion of his period of probation on the ground that he was considered unsuitable for confirmation would not amount to an alteration of the conditions of his service to his prejudice so as to constitute a violation of Section 33 of the Act and that therefore the complaint filed under Section 33-A was totally misconceived and devoid of merit.

4. The Tribunal took the view that even though a termination of the service of probationer on the very date of the expiry of the period of probation will not constitute an alteration of his conditions of service within the meaning of S. 33 of the Act, the position would be entirely different where the discharge is ordered not on the precise day on which the probationary period ends but only a few days thereafter. According to the Tribunal in cases where the discharge is ordered subsequent to the date of expiry of the period of probation, it has jurisdiction to go into the question whether discharge was bona fide or was only a colourable exercise of the contractual power. In this view the Tribunal proceeded to hold that the order passed by the company terminating the services of the 2nd respondent offended against the provisions of Section 33 and was therefore liable to be set aside.

5. Counsel appearing for the petitioner relied on the decision of this court reported in Stanley Kendez v. Giovanola Binnv 1968 Ker LJ 537 = (1969 Lab IC 37), and contended that the action taken by the management in terminating the services of an employee who had admittedly been appointed only on probation, the termination being effected after the completion of the period of probation and before his confirmation, will not constitute an alteration of the conditions of service of the employee concerned so as to amount to contravention of Section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act. It was urged that the Tribunal had gone wrong in holding that there was a distinction between cases where the order of discharge was passed exactly on the date of expiry of the probationary period and cases where the order was passed only a few days thereafter.

6. Counsel appearing for the 2nd respondent, however, contended that the applicability of the principle laid down in 1968 Ker LJ 537 = (1969 Lab IC 37), should be limited to cases where the order terminating the services of the probationer has been passed exactly at the end of the probationary period and the probationer is not continued in service for any time thereafter. According to the respondent's counsel once the period of probation expires without an order of discharge having been passed on or before the date of completion of the probationary period, the position is that the probationer would continue in service, no doubt only as a probationer, but his service cannot be terminated otherwise than for misconduct.

7. I have no hesitation to reject the respondent's contention. It is now well settled that a person appointed on probation would not ordinarily get automatic confirmation in service on the expiry of the stipulated probationary period and that if he is allowed to continue in service without any action being taken by the employer either by way of confirmation or by way of termination he would continue only as a probationer even after the expiration of the period of probation. This has been clearly laid down by the Supreme Court in Express Newspapers, Ltd. v. Labour Court, Madras, (1964) 1 Lab LJ 9 = (AIR 1964 SC 806). The same principle has been reiterated by their Lordships in Accountant General, Madhya Pradesh v. B. P. Bhatnagar, Civil Appeal No. 548 of 1962 (SC) where it was held:

"When a first appointment or promotion is made on probation for a specific period and the employee is allowed to continue in the post after the expiry of the said period without any specific order of confirmation, he continues as a probationer only and acquires no substantive right to hold the post. If the order of appointment itself states that at the end of the period of probation, the appointee will stand confirmed in the absence of any order to the contrary, the appointee will acquire a substantive right to the post even without an order of confirmation which is necessary to give him such a right. When after the period of probation, an appointee is allowed to continue in the post without an order of confirmation the only possible view to take is that by implication the period of probation has been extended. Much can be said for the view that it is desirable in such cases that an express order extending the period of probation should be made, as otherwise the appointed person may be under a misapprehension about the exact position. There is however no basis for the conclusion that from the mere fact that an appointee is allowed to continue after the end of the period of probation stated in his order, he should be deemed to have been confirmed."

The appointment order issued to the 2nd respondent (Ex1, M2) does not contain any provision stating that at the end of the period of probation mentioned therein the employee would automatically stand confirmed; on the other hand it is specifically mentioned therein that he would be confirmed in the appointment only if his work and conduct were found to be satisfactory. Hence there can be no doubt that the continuance of the 2nd respondent in the service of the company after 31-12-1964 was only as a probationer and it was open to the management to decide about his suitability for confirmation and pass consequential orders either confirming him or discharging him from service.

8. It would, in my opinion, be totally meaningless to refer to a person's employment as being on probation if the management has the right to terminate his services only on grounds of proved misconduct; it is of the very essence of the concept of probation that the person is on trial regarding his suitability for regular appointment and is liable to be discharged on being found to be unsuitable for permanent absorption. It is not therefore, possible to accept the contention put forward by the respondent's counsel that once the stipulated period of probation expires, the employee, though continuing in service only as probationer, is nevertheless immune from liability to be discharged from service on the ground of unsuitability but can only be dismissed on grounds of misconduct. In this respect, the only difference between a probationer whose term of probation has not expired and one who is continuing in service after the expiry of the stipulated period of probation without any order of confirmation having been passed, is that the former has a guaranteed period of trial namely the probationary period during which he is not liable to be discharged on the ground of unsuitability whereas the latter is liable to be discharged at any time. It must then follow that an order discharging the probationer from service would not amount to an alteration of the conditions of service even if it is passed not exactly on a date coinciding with the end of the probationary period but only a few days thereafter and that the decision in 1968 Ker LJ 537 = (1969 Lab IC 37) would equally govern both types of cases.

9. I accordingly hold that in ordering the discharge of the 2nd respondent on the ground of his unsuitability for confirmation the management has not violated the provisions of Section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act and the complaint made by the 2nd respondent under Section 33-A was clearly misconceived.

10. The Tribunal had, therefore, no jurisdiction to go into the question of the propriety of the action taken by the management. The original petition is allowed and the award Ext P1 is quashed. There will be no direction regarding costs.

DVT/DVC. Petition allowed.

Second Appeal No. 739 of 1965, D/- 25. 9-1968, from decision of Dist. Court, Alleppey in A S No. 465 of 1959.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 96, 107 — Duty of appellate court to consider evidence independently.

An appellate court is the final Court of fact ordinarily and therefore a litigant is entitled to a full and fair and independent consideration of the evidence at the appellate stage. Anything less than this is unjust to him. No supplementing of appreciation is contemplated at the appellate stage. But, an independent appraisal of the evidence is the duty of the Court at that level. Failure to do that is an abdication of appellate power. It is the appellate Court's function not to find out whether there is perversity in the trial Court's judgment but whether it is wrong. There is very wide difference between a wrong conclusion and a perverse conclusion. A restricted revisional jurisdiction may be invoked under certain statutes only where there is perversity in the findings but the wider appellate jurisdiction conferred under Section 96 of the Civil P. C. demands a little more effort on the part of the appellate Court in going into the evidence to come to its own conclusion and reversing the trial Court's decision if it is found to be wrong.

M/s Joseph Vithayathil, George Vadakkal Varghese Kalhath and K. J. Kurien, for Appellant; S Narayanan Pillai, N. K. Varkey and V. Dharmadan, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The plaintiff, unsuccessful in two Courts, has come up here aggrieved by the dismissal of his suit which was one for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The defendant disputed the plaintiff's title to the property as also his possession and claimed both in himself. The learned Munsif, who tried the suit, recorded findings against the plaintiff both on title and possession. But, in appeal the learned Subordinate Judge disposed of the whole matter glubly and briefly, in a few sentences.

2. An appellate court is the final Court of fact ordinarily and therefore a litigant is entitled to a full and fair and independent consideration of the evidence at the appellate stage. Anything less than this is unjust to him and I have no doubt that in the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has fallen far short of what is expected of him as an appellate Court. Although there is furious contest between the counsel for the appellant and for the respondent, they appear to agree with me in this observation. Shri Varkey, learned counsel for the respondent, feels that his client has a strong case not merely regarding possession but regarding title and wants me to remember that the burden is on the plaintiff to establish a subsisting title and this implies possession within 12 years of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, after stating a few facts, has wound up with the following observations:

"There was also no satisfactory explanation by the appellant for the delay of about three weeks to file the suit". I may state in parenthesis that a suit for possession on title does not depend upon a few weeks' delay, after the trespass had occurred, in bringing the suit. The crucial question is as to whether the plaintiff has title at all which, in this context, means a subsisting title. The Court cannot sidetrack itself by minor questions like whether the trespass was a week ago or two weeks ago and whether any cock-and-bull story seeking to explain the 2 or 3 weeks' delay in bringing the suit is true or not. The Subordinate Judge continued:

"In this context we cannot help remarking that the appreciation by the Court below of the evidence of possession on the side of the respondent cannot be usefully supplemented."

No supplementing of appreciation is contemplated at the appellate stage. But, an independent appraisal of the evidence is the duty of the Court at that level. Failure to do that is an abdication of appellate power. Unfortunately, there is no consideration of the evidence in the case in appeal. The Subordinate Judge concluded still more erroneously, by stating:

"No factual error or perversity has also been pointed out by the appellant's counsel."

It is the appellate Court's function not to find out whether there is perversity in the trial Court's judgment but whether it is wrong. There is very wide difference between a wrong conclusion and a perverse conclusion. A restricted revisional jurisdiction may be invoked under certain statutes only where there is perversity in the findings but the wider appellate jurisdiction conferred under Section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code demands a little more effort on the part of the appellate Court in going into the evidence to come to its own conclusion and reversing the trial Court's decision if it is found to be wrong. Far be it from me to suggest that I even hinted at the trial court's judgment being wrong in this case. That is a matter entirely for consideration by the appellate Court. The interests of justice, therefore, require that the judgment and decree of the Court below should be set aside and the appeal sent back for fresh disposal by the Sub Court of Kottayam.

The court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal will be refunded. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

S. A. Nagendran and N. N. D. Pillai, for Petitioner; Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The short question arising for decision is whether the alteration by Ext. P 3 order of the date of birth of the petitioner entered in the Service Register, from 15-12-1912 (1-5-1089 M. E.) into 13-12-1911 (28-4-1087 M. E.) is illegal, justifying interference by this Court, in proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

2. The petitioner entered service on 17-7-1939 (1-12-1114 M. E.). Regulation 352F (e) of the Travancore Service Regulations which admittedly governed the petitioner is in these terms:—

"352-F (e). The age of an officer whether gazetted or non-gazetted, can be recorded only on receipt of satisfactory proof. Once the date of birth has been accepted and recorded in the service register, it should form conclusive evidence of the same in respect of all future Government transactions. The entry in the service register should be full and it should indicate on what evidence the date of birth is accepted by the appointing officer or the Head of the office. The following shall be considered as satisfactory proof of age.

1 An authenticated extract from the birth register or the baptismal register or the English School Leaving Certificate, or the admission register of a school or college where the officer last studied or a certificate by a Magistrate or other well-known and trustworthy person in the town or village

2 Original copy of the horoscope, or correspondence at the time of the birth supported by a declaration before the Head of the office, or

3 An affidavit of the parent of the applicant or a close relative who has knowledge of the approximate date of birth of the applicant signed before an officer who is competent to administer oath."

3. Apparently in accordance with the above provision proof was furnished of the date of birth of the petitioner and this was accepted by an order dated 11-12-1940 corresponding to 26-4-1116 M.E. In the Service Book there is the following entry.

"Verified with horoscope and found correct"

We are marking the Service Register as Ext. R4 and the portion where the above entry is seen as Ext. R4 (a) Years afterwards a Memo Ext. P1 dated 17-12-1966 reading as under:-

"1 That you, Sri. E. Ramavarma, Raja Regional Transport Officer Cannanore while employed in Government service as Plant Operator in the Development Department furnished incorrect date i.e. 1-5-1089 as your date of birth to be entered in the Service Register (Service Book) fully knowing that your date of birth according to the records of Ennakkad Upper Primary School, C. M. S. L. G. V. School, Pallon, G. M. S. E. M. S. Pallon and C. M. S. H. S. Pallon was 28-4-1087,

2 That you disobeyed the directions issued by the Government in respect of the rectification of the defects or irregularity in the date of birth entered in Service Records as per Government Circulars P1. 96 dated 5-1-1942 and M3 2789/50/CS dated 30-1-1950 read with No M3 2789/50CS dated 22-2-1950 and that you have not taken any steps to get the Service Records examined and the defect in respect of your date of birth rectified on proper proof.

Your action described above amounts to gross irregularity on your part. You are, therefore requested to show cause why disciplinary action as contemplated under the Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1960 should not be taken against you. You are allowed 15 days time from the date of receipt of this communication to put in a written statement of your defence. If the written statement of defence is not received within the said period, the matter will be proceeded with on the presumption that you have no defence. You are also requested to state whether you desire to be heard in person

A statement of allegations on the basis of which the charge is framed, and a list of documents, proposed to be relied on are attached hereto. You may peruse the records mentioned in the list of documents and take down extracts if so desired during office hours from the Secretariat in the presence of Deputy Secretary to Government, Home Department, on any day prior to the due date for the submission of your written statement."

was issued to the petitioner. An explanation Ext. P2 was submitted by the petitioner to the Memo. But this was found unacceptable, and by Ext. P3 order, the petitioner was censured. We may state here that the Memo Ext. P1 proceeded on the basis that the petitioner was liable to be punished by taking action under the Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1960 because he had committed a misconduct. The misconduct as is seen from the Memo is the refusal to 'correct' the entry in the Service Register of the date of birth of the petitioner in accordance with the Circulars Exts. R1, R2 and R3 issued by the Government in January 1942, January 1950 and February 1950. It is unnecessary to read the Circulars Exts. R1 and R2 which merely contain directions that all Government employees should correct the dates of birth given by them and entered in the Service Register. If those dates are incorrect. These Circulars were issued by the State Government because it is alleged the Government discovered that in many cases incorrect dates of birth had been furnished by Government employees. It is necessary to read the last paragraph of Ext. R3:-

"As a further clarification to these orders Government are pleased to order that in the case of graduates the entry in the College Certificate will be accepted as correct age and in the case of non-graduates the school age is the authority."

4-5. It is clear from the Memo of charges Ext. P1 as well as from the statements contained in the order Ext. P3 and the several statements in the counter affidavit that has been filed on behalf of the State of Kerala that the State Government proceeded on the basis that the one and only evidence acceptable to the State Government as regards the date of birth of the petitioner is that furnished by the entry in the School Register. We may refer to some of the statements in the counter affidavit.

6. In paragraph 3 of the counter affidavit it is stated -

"Government have laid down the procedure for entering in the service records the correct date of birth of Government Servants as per Exts. R1 to R3 Circulars. According to the Government Orders the school record is the authority to prove the correct date of birth The only date of birth acceptable to the Government as proof of the correct date of birth of the petitioner is 28-4-1987 which is entered in the School records Here the proper authority is the records of the various schools where the petitioner had studied. The petitioner had also produced the relevant extract from his horoscope. In the face of the date of birth as entered in the School records (which alone is recognised by Government) was available to prove his date of birth, the records produced by the petitioner could not be relied on....."

It is unnecessary to multiply instances of the definite stand taken. We must however refer also to another statement in the counter affidavit where it is asserted that it is not necessary to give any opportunity to the petitioner to state his case before the date of birth as entered in the Service Register is 'corrected'.

"There is no rule requiring the Government to give the petitioner an opportunity to show cause why his date of birth should not be corrected."

From what is stated above, it is very clear that a strict adherence to a rule contained in Ext. R3 which specified a particular document and that alone as proof of the date of birth of a Government employee has been the basis of the 'correction' effected by Ext. P3 order.

7. The question is whether this procedure is justified or not. The question has to be answered in favour of the petitioner in the light of the ruling of the Supreme Court in State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, AIR 1967 SC 1269. In view of this decision, the decisions of the Travancore Cochin High Court and of this Court AIR 1953 Trav-Co 140, 1954 Ker LT 966 = (AIR 1954 Trav-Co 32), 1956 Ker LT 906 = (AIR 1957 Trav-Co 124), 1957 Ker LT 608 = (AIR 1958 Ker 1) and 1959 Ker LT 553 relied on by the State cannot have any application. A perusal of the judgment of the Supreme Court AIR 1967 SC 1269 would show that that decision was rendered on facts very similar to those in this case. The relevant paragraphs of the decision are paragraphs 9 and 10. We shall read those paragraphs.

"The first respondent held office in the Medical Department of the Orissa Government. She, as holder of that office, had a right to continue in service according to the rules framed under Art. 309 and she could not be removed, from office before superannuation except 'for good and sufficient reasons'. The State was undoubtedly not precluded, merely because of the acceptance of the date of birth of the first respondent in the service register, from holding an enquiry if there existed sufficient grounds for holding such enquiry and for re-fixing her date of birth. But the decision of the State could be based upon the result of an enquiry in manner consonant with the basic concept of justice. An order by the State to the prejudice of a person in derogation of his vested rights may be made only in accordance with the basic rules of justice and fairplay. The deciding authority, it is true, is not in the position of a Judge called upon to decide an action between contesting parties, and strict compliance with the forms of judicial procedure may not be insisted upon. He is, however, under a duty to give the person against whom an enquiry is held an opportunity to set up his version or defence and an opportunity to correct or to controvert any evidence in the possession of the authority which is sought to be relied upon to his prejudice. For that purpose the person against whom an enquiry is held must be informed of the case he is called upon to meet, and the evidence in support thereof. The rule that a party to whose prejudice an order is intended to be passed is entitled to a hearing applies alike to judicial tribunals and bodies of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences. It is one of the fundamental rules of our constitutional set-up that every citizen is protected against exercise of arbitrary authority by the State or its officers. Duty to act judicially would, therefore, arise from the very nature of the function intended to be performed; it need not be shown to be superadded. If there is power to decide and determine to the prejudice of a person, duty to act judicially is implicit in the exercise of such power. If the essentials of justice be ignored and an order to the prejudice of a person is made, the order is a nullity. That is a basic concept of the rule of law and importance thereof transcends the significance of a decision in any particular case.

The State has undoubtedly authority to compulsorily retire a public servant who is superannuated. But when that person disputes the claim he must be informed of the case of the State and the evidence in support thereof and he must have a fair opportunity of meeting that case before a decision adverse to him is taken."

8. There is a rule which came into force on 1-11-1959, Rule 60, of the Kerala Service Rules, which has stipulated that the age of superannuation of Government employees is 55. This rule was framed under Article 309 of the Constitution. So it has to be taken that the petitioner had a vested right to continue in service till he attained the age of 55 reckoned on the basis of the actual date of birth of the petitioner. The actual date of birth was accepted by the State Government by order dated 11-12-1940 and we conceive that if this is to be altered, it can only be on the basis of an enquiry which would satisfy the requirements specified by the Supreme Court in the decision already read. This means that such an enquiry must be made in consonance with the principles of natural justice. We cannot think of such an enquiry where there has been a pre-determination of the issue by an adherence to a single item of evidence and refusal to consider the question with an open mind. And this procedure has been adopted when there has been an earlier acceptance of the date given by the petitioner on material then furnished by him and found acceptable. That makes the position worse.

9. The order Ext P-3 cannot be sustained. This has to be quashed. We do so. It necessarily follows that no further action pursuant to Ext P-3 as visualised by

Ext. P-4 order by the second respondent, the Commissioner of Transport the Head of the Department in which the petitioner was working can be taken. We therefore quash Ext. P-4 as well.

10. We may add that the quashing of these orders will not preclude a proper enquiry being conducted, if there is need for it, in consonance with the principles of natural justice as regards the age of the petitioner. This enquiry will of course be as to what is the actual date of birth of the petitioner and the question naturally would not be what is the date of birth of the petitioner as entered in a particular document or in any School Register.

11. We allow this original petition on the above terms. There will be no order as to costs.

v. Sadasheo Rao 8, 9, 10
(1921) AIR 1921 PC 59 (V 8)=
16 Nag LR 187, Balwantrao v.
Baji Rao 8
A. P. Sen, for Appellant; Y. S. Dharmadhikari, for Respondent.

PANDEY, J.: The main question for consideration in this appeal is whether the parties are governed by the Lex Loci or by the personal law of the parties.

2. The question arises in this manner.
It is no longer disputed, though it was in contest in the Courts below, that one Jagan Mahar owned the house in dispute which is situate at Rajnandgaon. He had by his wife Gujji a son, Mangya, and three daughters, Kamalji, Bhagi and Kisni. It transpired that Mangya, Bhagi and Kisni predeceased Jagan, who died in 1929 leaving behind him surviving his widow Gujji, a daughter Kamalji and two sons of his daughter Kisni, namely, Atmaram and Rajaram.
On Jagan's death, the widow Gujji inherited the house. Upon her death in 1936, her daughter Kamalji took the house. Kamalji died on 4 October 1952 leaving a daughter, Bhagirathibai, as her only issue. The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was filed by Bhagirathibai, Jagan's daughter's daughter against Rajaram, Jagan's daughter's son, for possession of the disputed house. It was dismissed by the Court of first instance. The lower appeal Court, however, allowed her claim. Rajaram filed this second appeal. He died during the pendency of the appeal survived by his daughter Hirabai who was thereupon brought on record as his legal representative.

3. Initially Bhagirathibai filed a suit for ejectment, but she was allowed to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit because she had not duly served on the defendant a notice to quit. After doing the needful, she filed the present suit. Subsequently, she was allowed to convert it into a suit for possession grounded on her title to the house.
The second suit for ejectment was filed in accordance with the liberty reserved to her under Order 23, Rule 1 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore, the question here is not whether a suit based on title grounded on a different cause of action could be filed. Order 23, Rule 1 of the Code does not interfere with the liberty of filing such a suit. The precise question is whether the suit for ejectment, as subsequently laid, could be allowed under O. 6. R. 17 of the Code to be converted into a suit founded on title. The powers of allowing an amendment under Order 6, R. 17 of the Code are very wide because the proviso in the old section, which inhibited an amendment that changed the character of the suit, is no longer there. No question of limitation was involved and the defendant was not prejudiced in any way. In this situation, the amendment which the Court allowed was within its jurisdiction. Since the point was not argued before me, I do not consider it necessary to dwell further on this aspect of the matter.

4. On the main question, the plaintiff pleaded

"Jagan died in or about the year 1929 and his property was inherited by his widow Mst Guji as the parties are Maharashtra Mahars and they are governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law. Mst Guji thus became the actual owner of the property inherited by her from her husband." In answer, the defendant stated

"The parties are Mahars. They have been living in Rajnandgaon for last more than a century. It is denied that they are governed by Bombay School of Hindu Law. It is denied that the rule regarding the taking of absolute property by daughters in Bombay is applicable to the community to which the parties belong. That rule was not adopted by the Mahars of the Bombay Presidency even in Bombay. It is denied that, among the community to which the parties belong, the daughter takes an absolute estate either by adoption of the Bombay School of law of inheritance or by any custom or even otherwise".

5. There was, it will be seen, no specific plea that the plaintiff's predecessors had, at some time in the past, migrated from any State or region where the Bombay School of Hindu Law was in force or that they had carried with them their personal law. No issue was, therefore, framed on this particular aspect of the matter. Even so, it may well be regarded as covered by the general issue whether the parties are governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law. The point is that both parties fully knew and understood what the real issue was and also led evidence in support of their contentions. That being so, none of them could be regarded as having been taken by surprise or prejudiced in any manner. In this situation, there was, even in the absence of a specific issue on the point, no mis-trial such as might vitiate the decision. Nagubhai v. B. Shama Rao, AIR 1958 SC 593, Kameshramma v. Subba Rao, AIR 1963 SC 884 and Kunju Kesavan v. M. M. Philip, AIR 1964 SC 164. Indeed even when there is no specific plea but the matter is covered by an issue by implication and the parties go to trial with full knowledge that the plea is involved in the trial and adduce evidence thereon, the absence of the plea is a mere irregularity which did not cause any prejudice to the parties, AIR 1958 SC 593 and Bhagwati Prasad v. Chandramaul, (1967) 1 SCJ 666 (AIR 1966 SC 735). In the last mentioned case, the Supreme Court observed:

"If a plea is not specifically made and yet it is covered by an issue by implication and the parties knew that the said plea was involved in the trial, then the mere fact that the plea was not expressly taken in the pleadings would not necessarily disentitle a party from relying upon it if it is satisfactorily proved by evidence. The general rule no doubt is that the relief should be founded on pleadings made by the parties. But where the substantial matters relating to the title of both parties to the suit are touched, though indirectly or even obscurely, in the issues, and evidence has been led about them, then the argument that a particular matter was not expressly taken in the pleadings would be purely formal and technical and cannot succeed in every case". (Page 870 of SCJ) = (at p. 738 of AIR)

6. Upon a consideration of the evidence, the lower appeal Court found the following facts well established.

- (i) The parties are, by caste, Mahars
- (ii) They had settled at Rajnandgaon after migrating from Nagpur and Bhandara districts
- (iii) It was not proved that they had migrated from any place where the Bombay School of Hindu Law is the Lex Loci
- (iv) The parties speak Marathi language.
- (v) They dress in Maharashtra style
- (vi) they follow Maharashtra social customs and manners
- (vii) They worship Maharashtra Gods, visit Maharashtra religious places and observe Maharashtra festivals
- (viii) They have adopted some local social customs and manners also

7. Russel, in his Tribes and Castes of Central Provinces, stated that the customs of Mahars showed that they were the earliest immigrants from Bombay into the Berar and Nagpur plain (Volume IV, page 182). The same view was expressed in the "Central Province Ethnographic Survey, Part IX, Draft Articles of Maratha Castes, 1911". In the Chapter on Mahars, the following observations were made:

"These customs tend to show that the Mahars were the earliest immigrants from Bombay into the Berar and Nagpur plain, excluding of course the Gond and other tribes, who have practically been ousted from this tract".

It would, therefore, appear that Mahars had originally migrated from the Bombay region. After they settled in Berar and Nagpur plain, they migrated into other tracts including Chhattisgarh.

8. The leading case on the point is Kesheo Rao v. Sadasheo Rao, ILR 1938 Nag 469 = (AIR 1938 Nag 163). Bose, J. (as he then was) referred to the decision of the Privy Council in Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 16 Nag LR 187 = (AIR 1921 PC 59) and observed:

"It must follow from this that the Mayukha did not create the Bombay view and that even though it was written by Nilkanth in the seventeenth century, he merely recited the customs and usages which he found in vogue around him, and knowing 'the tenacity with which oriental races cling to their age-long tradition it can only mean that this was always the law of the Maharashtrians, whoever they were, wherever they came from.

If that is so, then wherever we find a family clinging to its individuality and retaining its identity as Maharashtrian, it must be presumed until the contrary is shown that it hailed from the race or group of people known as Maharashtrians and carried the law of Maharashtra with them — the law which according to the reasoning of their Lordships has always been their law and which has been as characteristic of them as their racial or communal identity, as distinct as their name." (Page 477-8 of ILR) = (at p. 1967 of AIR).

9. The learned counsel for the appealing defendant distinguished ILR 1938 Nag 469 = (AIR 1938 Nag 163) (supra) on the ground that it related to Maharashtra Brahmins and referred to a number of contrary decisions about lower castes. In Rajeshwar v. Kesheo, 1944 Nag LJ 291, Dhanoje Kunbis of Chanda who had merely adopted the Marathi language, were not regarded as Maharashtrian origin. In Ramlu v. Vithal, ILR 1947 Nag 267 = (AIR 1947 Nag 180) migration of Komtis from the region where the Madras School of Hindu Law applies was not proved. As held in Bhaskar v. Laxmibai, ILR 1953 Nag 187 = (AIR 1953 Nag 326) there was no presumption that Khair Kunbis of Nagpur, who spoke Marathi language, had migrated from Maharashtra. It was held in Sonabai v. Lakshimbai, ILR 1956 Nag 980 = (AIR 1957 Nag 76) that Halbi Koshitis were of eastern rather than western origin and the mere fact that they had adopted Marathi language would not bring them under the Bombay School of Hindu Law. In Ramaji v. Manohar, AIR 1961 Bom 169 all that was said was that the parties were Marathi Telis and there were other circumstances contra-indicating that the Bombay School of Hindu Law applied to them. It was, therefore, held that they were governed by the Benaras School. It will be readily seen that all these cases are distinguishable mainly because it was not found in these cases that the parties could be identified as characteristically or peculiarly Maharashtrian by their language, dress, customs, manners, festivals, observances, Gods they worshipped, the places to which they pilgrimaged and the like.

10. In the present case, the parties claim to be Maharashtrian Mahars. As already stated, there are indications that their ancestors had immigrated from the Bombay region into Nagpur and Berar plain, though migration of the family, in the sense of its exact origin, is not proved. Even so, as found by the lower appeal Court, the family is retaining its identity as Maharashtrian by clinging to its language, dress, social customs and manners, mode of worship and the like. That being so, it must be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that the family had migrated from the Bombay region. I have already referred to the case of ILR 1938 Nag 469 = (AIR 1938 Nag 163) (supra) as the leading authority on this point. The same view was taken in Udebhan v. Vikram, AIR 1957 Madh Pra 175 and Anjubai v. Ramchandrarao, AIR 1960 Madh Pra 382 also. The last mentioned case related to a Maratha family of Chhattisgarh and the Bombay School of Hindu Law was applied to that family in circumstances mostly similar to those present in this case. It only remains to be mentioned that here the defendant made no endeavour to rebut the presumption mentioned in Kesheo Rao's case, ILR 1938 Nag 469 = (AIR 1938 Nag 163) (supra). I therefore, agree with the conclusion of the lower appeal Court that the parties are governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law.

11. Since it is not disputed that, under the Bombay School of Hindu Law, the claim of Bhagirathibai must succeed, this appeal fails and is dismissed with all costs throughout on the appellant. Hearing fee according to schedule.

(V 56 C 62)

S. P. BHARGAVA, J.

Ramashanker Parmanand, Petitioner v. Jugalkishore Ramasahaya Bajaj and others, Respondents.

Election Petn. No. 36 of 1967, D/- 26-7-1967.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Ss. 81, 37, 86 (1) — Election challenged on ground of corrupt practice — Omission of petitioner to supply copies of annexures for being served to respondents — Effect — Petition is liable to be dismissed — Requirement of Section 81 (3) is mandatory.

Where an election is challenged on ground of corrupt practice, but the petitioner fails to supply copies of annexures to the petition, for being served on the respondents, the defect produced by the non-supply of copies is a defect of presentation of the petition and so cannot be allowed to be cured subsequently. Consequently, the petition is liable to be dismissed. (Para 13)

The requirement of the copies being supplied to the respondents according to Section 81 (3) is as important a requirement of the section as the necessity of supplying the requisite number of copies after getting them attested under the signature of the petitioner. Section 81 (3) in unmistakable terms lays down the manner in which an election petition should be presented and it is also clearly laid down in Section 80 (1) as to what the consequence would be in case the provisions of Section 81 are not complied with. The requirement of Section 81 (3) is mandatory. (Para 11)

The copies of the petition served on the respondents with the omission of the copies of annexures cannot also be treated to be copies or true copies of the petition within the meaning of Section 81 (3). It is true that a substantially true copy would be a copy within the meaning of S. 81 (3), but a copy which differs in material particulars from the original is not a copy within the meaning of Section 81 (3). The word "petition" as used in Section 81 (3), includes the annexures to the petition containing particulars of corrupt practice alleged therein. The entry of an annexure may be different but nevertheless it is a part of the petition when it contains material particulars of the corrupt practice (Paras 13 & 14)

(B) Representation of the People Act (1951), Ss. 86 (5), 81 — Election petition — Amendment of — Power of High Court — Extent of — Amendment when can be allowed — Principles of — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 11.

The High Court has power under Sec 86 (5) and also under O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C. to allow the particulars of any corrupt practice alleged in the petition to be amended or amplified but plainly enough there are two limitations on the powers of the Court (i) that it cannot allow any amendment which will enable the petitioner to remove the defect pertaining to the presentation which is dealt with under Section 81, and (ii) that it cannot allow a defect of non-jourder of parties to be cured after the limitation for making the election petition is run out. The third limitation is to be found in the provision under Section 86 (5) which prohibits any amendment being allowed which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition. With these limitations the High Court can permit the same amendments in the election petition as it could in a plaint or an application under the Code of Civil Procedure. However, it is plain that only those amendments can be permitted which are necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties. (Para 14)

Where the petitioner fails to supply the copies of annexures giving better particulars of the alleged corrupt practice, he cannot be allowed to introduce the same in petition by way of amending the same. Annexures being part of the petition, amendment would amount to change of form without any substance. Moreover, such amendment would enable the petitioner to remove the defect of presentation which cannot be allowed to be done. (Para 15)

R. S. Dabir, for Petitioner, G. P. Singh, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER: This election petition was filed by the petitioner Ramshanker challenging the election of respondent No. 1 Jugalkishore who was elected from a constituency known as "Hatta 162" constituency of the Vidhan Sabha of Madhya Pradesh. In the election which took place on 17-2-1967, in all fifteen candidates including the petitioner had taken part. The petitioner and the first ten respondents contested the election while respondents 11 to 14 withdrew their candidature after the acceptance of their nomination papers within the time allowed for such withdrawal. The election of the first respondent is challenged on the ground that he resorted to the corrupt practice described in Section 123 (5) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (hereinafter called the Act). The particulars of the said corrupt practice have been specified in paragraphs 6 to 17 of the petition, which, briefly stated, consisted of procuring and hiring vehicles for conveyance of the voters to the different polling stations and the vehicles procured or hired were used for the said purpose on the date of voting.

2. In Paragraph 4 of the petition it was averred that annexed to the petition and as part thereof is annexure A showing the number of votes obtained by each of the candidates who contested at the poll. The petition referred to annexure (2) and annexure (3) also. Annexure (2) is a schedule showing the names of persons who worked for the returned candidate. Annexure (3) is the schedule showing the names of electors who were carried in the vehicles for casting their votes. It is admitted on behalf of the petitioner and is stated so in paragraph 8 of the application for amendment of the petition that by inadvertence copies of the said three annexures (A), (2) and (3) were not given for being served on the respondents. It is averred in the said amendment that copies supplied to the respondents were copies of the petition minus the said annexures.

3. The first respondent in his written-statement raised a preliminary objection to the effect that in paragraphs 4, 16 and 17 of the petition reference is made by the petitioner to annexures (A), (2) and (3) and the petitioner himself states that these annexures are parts of the election petition but in spite of this the petitioner did not file copies of these annexures along with the copies of the petition as required by Section 81 (3) of the Act. It is pleaded that as there were fourteen respondents in the petition, the petitioner was bound to file fourteen copies of the entire petition including the said annexures. It is urged that as there was non-compliance of Section 81 (3), the petition should be dismissed under Section 86 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951.

4. On the aforesaid objection, a preliminary issue was framed as under on 12-7-1967:

"Whether due to copies of annexures (A), (2) and (3) not having been furnished for being supplied to the respondents, the petition is liable to be dismissed under Sec. 86 (1) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951?"

5. Later, on 17-7-1967, the petitioner filed an application under Section 86 (5) of the Representation of the People Act read with Order 6, Rule 17 read with Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure seeking permission of the Court to incorporate the contents of annexures (A), (2) and (3) in the body of the petition itself by way of better particulars.

6. The application for amendment was opposed by the learned Counsel for the first respondent. As it is convenient to consider the application for amendment and the first preliminary issue reproduced above together, arguments on both the application for amendment and the preliminary issue were heard together.

7. Shri G. P. Singh, learned Counsel for the first respondent, has reiterated the objections raised in the written-statement. He has urged that the provision contained in Section 81 (3) with regard to the supply of true copies is mandatory, that the copies filed by the petitioner did not contain the said annexure and therefore could not be treated to be "copies of the petition" within the meaning of Section 81 (3); that the petition on account of the omission of the supply of true copies of the petition suffered from a defect of presentation under Section 81 (3) of the Act and it could not be allowed to be cured later by any amendment or by permitting the petitioner to file copies of the annexures subsequently; that on the ground of non-compliance of the mandatory provision of Section 81 (3), the petition should be dismissed under Section 86 (1) of the Act. With regard to the amendment application, the argument advanced by the learned Counsel is that the petition as filed in Court did not suffer from any defect of particulars which are now sought to be supplied. In the petition itself it was clearly averred that annexures (A), (2) and (3) were parts of the petition and if they were so, according to the petitioner himself the question of amending the petition which incorporated these very particulars though, in another form, was wholly unnecessary and the question of amendment really did not arise at all. Further it has been urged that possibly the application for amendment has been made only to get over the defect of presentation of the petition, but such a defect could not be allowed to be cured under Section 86 (5) of the Act or even under Order 6, Rule 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure as under the general provisions of law only that amendment could be allowed which was not in contravention of the provisions of the Act.

8. Shri R. S. Dabir, learned Counsel for the petitioner, urged in reply that there is no defect in the petition as the petition contains all the three annexures (A), (2) and (3). He has further urged that the defect of non-supply of copies of the said annexures for being served on the respondents does not entail the penalty of dismissal of the petition as the petition can be dismissed only if there is a failure to comply with the provisions of Section 81 (3) in respect of "copy of the petition" and not "annexures thereof" and the defect being merely a technical one, caused by clerical inadvertence, and the application for amendment having been made bona fide and without delay, the defect should be allowed to be cured so that the trial of the petition on merits is secured. He further urged that the requirement of the annexures being served along with the copy of the petition on the respondents is merely technical and cannot be held to be mandatory. It has also been urged that the application for amendment of the petition falls squarely within the provision of Section 86 (5) of the Act and the general provisions of law contained in Order 6, Rule 17, C P C, and there could be no valid objection to the amendment being permitted and therefore the petition should not be dismissed under Section 83 (1) of the Act.

9. It would be convenient to consider the arguments advanced in connection with the preliminary issue first and then to take up the question as to whether the petition should be allowed to be amended.

10. The first question which arises for consideration is whether the provision with regard to the supply of copies made in Section 81 (3) is a mandatory provision. Section 81 (3) reads as follows:

"Every election petition shall be accompanied by as many copies thereof as there are respondents mentioned in the petition, and every such copy shall be attested by the petitioner under his own signature to be a true copy of the petition."

The object of copies supplied by the petitioner being attested by him as true copies and served on the respondents is clearly to inform the respondents of the grounds on which the election is challenged. Where a statute requires an act to be done at or within a particular time, or in a particular manner, the question arises whether the validity of the act is affected by a failure to comply with what is prescribed. If it appears that Parliament intended disobedience to render the act invalid, the provision in question is described as "mandatory," "absolute," "imperative" or "obligatory", if, on the other hand, compliance was not intended to govern the validity of what is done, the provision is said to be "directory." (See Halsbury's Laws of England Simonds Edition, Vol 36, Article 656). In the foot-note (b) to Article 656, the following passage is found—

"It has also been said that mandatory provisions must be fulfilled exactly, whereas it is sufficient if directory provisions are substantially fulfilled see, e. g., (1875) 10 CP 733, at p 746, Philips v Goff, (1886) 17 QBD 805 at p 812. It appears, however, from the authorities (see, e. g., notes (i) —(i), pp 435, 436, post) that acts have frequently been held valid notwithstanding a total failure to comply with what is prescribed, and the foregoing proposition would seem to amount to no more than an inaccurate description of the over-all position where a provision laying down a number of requirements is held to be mandatory as to some and directory as to the rest see e. g., Pope v. Clarke, (1953) 2 All ER 704, (the facts of which are mentioned in note (h), p. 435, post)."

In K Kamaraja Nadar v. Kunju Thevar, AIR 1958 SC 687 their Lordships held the provisions of Section 81 to be mandatory. In Sardar Mal v. Smt Gayatri Devi, AIR 1964 Raj 223 in paragraph 26 the learned Judge expressed the view that the requirements of Section 81 (3), both about the requisite number of copies to be supplied and their attestation under the signature of the petitioner are mandatory as they have a purpose and a public policy behind them and are essential elements of the provisions contained in that sub-section. To my mind, the requirement of the copies being supplied to the respondents according to Section 81 (3) is as important a requirement of the Section as the necessity of supplying the requisite number of copies after getting them attested under the signature of the petitioner.

11. In Baru Ram v Smt Prasanna, 1959 SCR 1403=AIR 1959 SC 93 it has been explained that whenever the statute requires a particular act to be done in a particular manner and also lays down that failure to comply with the said requirement leads to a specific consequence it would be difficult to accept the argument that the failure to comply with the said requirement should lead to any other consequence. In such a case, the requirement is a mandatory requirement which must be strictly complied with. Applying this test to the instant case, it is clear that Section 81 (3) in unmistakable terms lays down the manner in which an election petition should be presented and it is also clearly laid down in Section 88 (1) as to what the consequence would be in case the provisions of Section 81 are not complied with. I, therefore, hold that the said requirement is mandatory.

12. The next question which arises for consideration is as to whether the copies of the petition given by the petitioner with the omission of the annexures (A), (2) and (3) for being served on the respondents can be treated to be copies or true copies of the petition within the meaning of Section 81 (3) of the Act. In Murarka Radhev Shyam Ram Kumar v Roop Singh, AIR 1961 SC 1545 their Lordships of the Supreme Court took the view that the word "copy" as used in Section 81 (3) does not mean an absolutely exact copy, but means that the copy shall be so true that nobody can by any possibility misunderstand it. Their Lordships' dictum indicates that a substantially true copy would be a copy within the meaning of that section.

It is true that in the ultimate analysis in every case the question involved is one of construction of a relevant provision of a particular statute which proceeds on the basis of the words used as understood in the context of the statute, but it appears to be plain that where the portion which is omitted in the copy exhibited was a material portion, there can be little doubt that such a copy which differs in material particulars from the original is not a copy within the meaning of Section 81 (3) of the Act. The petition itself declares that the copies of the annexures (A), (2) and (3) are parts of the petition. One of the recognised ways of incorporating documents or other matter which is not reproduced in the petition itself is to include it in the annexures and schedules and to state that such annexures and schedules may be treated as part of the petition. The word "petition" as used in Section 81 (3), in my opinion, includes the annexures to the petition containing particulars of corrupt practice alleged therein. I am fortified in my view by the observations made by the Rajasthan High Court in Sardar Mal's case, AIR 1964 Raj 225 (supra) in para 31 of the judgment. Section 83 which deals with the contents of the petition clearly provides for schedules or annexures to the petition in sub-section (2) thereof. The entity of an annexure may be different but nevertheless it is a part of the petition when it contains material particulars of the corrupt practice.

13. It is obvious that any one who has the original petition before him and the copy of the petition supplied to the respondents cannot fail to notice that they are neither identical or substantially the same, as the particulars given in the annexures annexed to the petition are lacking in the copies of the petition supplied to the respondents. These particulars are so material that without them the election petition cannot be said to be complete. It lacks something so vital that without the annexures the copies served cannot be said to be copies of the petition. Under Section 81 (3) it is the duty of the petitioner to supply the copies for being served on the respondents. By attesting copies under his own signatures to be true copies of the petition, the petitioner assures that they have been duly compared with the original and then served on the respondents without any further comparison as the copies of the original. The copies supplied are so defective that on their basis it is obviously impossible to file a complete written-statement meeting the objections raised against the returned candidates in the petition. In annexure (2) and list of workers of respondent No. 1 has been given by the petitioner. Without knowing the names he could not accept or deny as to whether the particular persons mentioned in annexure (2) were his workers or not. Similarly, in annexure (3) the list of those electors has been given who were allegedly carried to the polling stations in the vehicles hired or procured by the first respondent. (In the heading of annexure 3 the word "labourers" appears to have been wrongly written instead of "electors"). Again, unless the names of these electors were communicated to the respondents when the copies of the election petition were served on them, it was not possible for them to meet the case of corrupt practice set up in the petition and to file their written-statement on the date required by the Court.

The defect thus is of a fundamental nature and therefore the copies of the petition served on the respondents with the omission of the said annexures cannot be treated to be copies or true copies of the petition within the meaning of Section 81 (3) of the Act.

14. The third question which arises for consideration is as to whether the defect produced by the non-supply of copies is a defect of presentation of the petition and so cannot be allowed to be cured subsequently. I may straightway refer to the decision of their Lordships in Ch. Subbarao v. Member, Election Tribunal, Hyderabad, AIR 1964 SC 1027. In that case it was urged on behalf of the appellant that the jurisdiction of the tribunal under Section 90 (3) to dismiss an election petition which does not comply with the provisions of Section 81 was attracted only if there was a defect in the petition itself and that a defect merely in the copy accompanying the petition would not be a case of a petition not complying with the provisions of Section 81 so as to require or even permit the tribunal to dismiss the petition. Their Lordships rejected this argument in Para 14 of their judgment and significantly observed:

"When Section 81 (3) requires an election petition to be accompanied by the requisite number of copies, it becomes a requirement for the presentation of the election petition to the Commission, and therefore a condition precedent for the proper presentation of an election petition. If that is a requirement of Section 81 no distinction can be drawn between the requirements of sub-ss. (1) and (2) and of sub-section (3). We might add that if there is a total and complete non-compliance with the provisions of Section 81 (3), the election petition might not be 'an election petition presented in accordance with the provisions of this Part' within S. 80 of the Act. We are therefore inclined to consider that if there had been such a non-compliance with the requirement of sub-section (3) not merely the Election Commission under Section 85 but the Election Tribunal under Section 90 (3) would prima facie not merely be justified but would be required to dismiss the election petition."

In my opinion, these observations aptly apply with full force in the instant case where the provision made in Section 81 (3) with regard to the supply of copies or true copies as stated above has not been complied with.

15. I may now consider the application for amendment of the election petition. The amendment which is sought to be introduced in the petition is to lift the particulars given in the annexures bodily from them and to incorporate them in the petition. Under Section 86 (5) the High Court may upon such terms as to costs or otherwise, as it may deem fit, allow the particulars of any corrupt practice alleged in the petition to be amended or amplified in such a manner as may in its opinion be necessary for ensuring a fair and effective trial of the petition but shall not allow any amendment of the petition which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition.

A perusal of the decisions in Harish Chandra Bajpai v. Triloka Singh, AIR 1957 SC 444, AIR 1958 SC 837, Inamati Mallappa Bassappa v. Desai Basavaraja Ayyappa, AIR 1958 SC 698, Chaturbhuj Chunnial v. Election Tribunal, Kanpur, AIR 1958 All 809 and Amin Lal v. Hunna Mal, AIR 1965 SC 1243 makes it clear that even in the absence of the said provision the Court has wide powers for allowing amendments under Order 8, Rule 17, Civil Procedure Code but plainly enough there are two limitations on the powers of the Court, (i) that it cannot allow any amendment which will enable the petitioner to remove the defect pertaining to the presentation which is dealt with under Section 81, and (ii) that it cannot allow a defect of non-joinder of parties to be cured after the limitation for making the election petition is run out. The third limitation is to be found in the provision under Section 86 (5) of the Act which prohibits any amendment being allowed which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition. With these limitations the High Court can permit the same amendments in the election petition as it could in a plaint or an application under the Code of Civil Procedure. However, it is plain that only those amendments can be permitted which are necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties. If the annexures were parts of the election petition according to the petitioner himself, as they really are, there is no point in permission being granted to introduce the same matter by incorporating the particulars given in the annexures in the body of the petition. This would be a change of form without any substance and such an amendment is obviously unnecessary and futile. On the other hand, if the amendment were desired for the purpose of getting over the mandatory provisions of Section 81 (3) read with Section 86 (1), the amendment would defeat a provision of law and therefore could not be allowed. The most significant reason for not allowing the amendment, in my opinion, is that the amendment, if permitted, would enable the petitioner to remove the defect of presentation which cannot be allowed to be done.

16. For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the copy of the petition supplied to the respondents was not a copy of the election petition within the meaning of Section 81 (3) and therefore the election petition is liable to be dismissed under Section 86 (1). I further hold that the petitioner is not entitled to introduce the amendment in the petition which is sought to be made by his application dated 17-7-1967. For these reasons, the election petition is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 400/-.

Employees of Asbestos Cement Ltd., Ky-more, Petitioners v. Industrial Court, Madhya Pradesh, Indore and others, Respondents

Misc Petn. No 249 of 1968, D/- 11-10-1968

(A) Madhya Pradesh Industrial Relations Act (27 of 1960), Ss. 2 (17), 31, 51 — Industrial Dispute — Notice of change under S. 31 — No prerequisite for giving rise to.

Notice of change under Sec 31 of the Madhya Pradesh Industrial Relations Act is no prerequisite for giving rise to an Industrial Dispute. The power of the State Government to make a reference under Sec 51 is not controlled by anything contained in Sec. 31. Section 51 opens with a non obstante clause — "Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act" — which makes it plain that a notice of change under Sec 31 is not a condition precedent for enabling the State Government to make a reference under Section 51. (Para 3)

The definition of 'Industrial Dispute' under Sec 2 (17) of the Act also goes to show that it is not restricted to disputes arising out of a notice of change issued by employer or employees under Sec. 31. AIR 1966 SC 497, Rel. on. (Para 3)

In a case where a dispute about the propriety and legality of closure of certain establishments was referred to arbitration by the Industrial Court, it was wrong for the Court to hold that the reference was incompetent on the ground that the workers had not issued a notice under Sec 31 (2) of the Act demanding withdrawal of the change. (Paras 3 and 6)

(B) M. P. Industrial Relations Act (27 of 1960), S. 51 — Existence of industrial dispute — Reference resting satisfaction of Government — Regularity of reference must be presumed — Company pleading absence of dispute has to prove it. AIR 1961 SC 1331 at p 1337, Foll. (Para 3)

(C) M. P. Industrial Relations Act (27 of 1960), Ss. 2 (17), 51 and 82 — Closure can be subject-matter of Industrial Dispute — Scope of provisions stated.

Considering the language of Ss 51 and 82 of the M. P. Industrial Relations Act, it must be held that S 51 is not controlled by anything contained in S. 82 and that an industrial dispute arising out of a proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage can be referred for arbitration under Sec. 51 if other conditions of that section are fulfilled. The above inference is strongly reinforced by the non obstante clause with which S. 51 opens.

Y. S. Dharmadhikari and Gulab Gupta, for Petitioner; R. S. Dabir and M. R. Pathak, for Respondents.

SINGH, J.: This is a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution for issuance of writs of certiorari and mandamus by the Employees of the Asbestos Cement
Limited, Kymore through their representative Union and is directed against an order of the Industrial Court, Indore by which a reference made to it by the State Government was rejected as incompetent.

2. The facts and circumstances leading up to this petition are as under:

The Asbestos Cement Limited, Kymore, hereinafter referred as the Company, put up and issued a notice on 11th March, 1968 declaring its intention to close one pipe machine and one sheeting machine from 20th May, 1968 as also to close the third shift in the loading department from 20th June, 1968. This led to the reference of an industrial dispute. The State Government by its order of reference made on 22nd April, 1968 referred the dispute upon the matters specified in the schedule annexed thereto to the arbitration of the Industrial Court under Section 51 (a) of the Madhya Pradesh Industrial Relations Act, 1960.

The schedule which specified the dispute ran as follows:

"1. Whether the proposed closure of one sheeting machine and one pipe machine from 20-5-1968 and discontinuance of one shift in Loading Department from 20-6-68
by the Management of Asbestos Cement Ltd.
Kymore, is legal and justified.

2. Whether an interim order should be issued restraining the management from closing down the above departments shift until the dispute about the propriety and legality of the closure is adjudicated upon."

The Industrial Court by its order passed on 20th May, 1968 rejected the reference holding it to be incompetent. The employees, therefore have filed this petition in which they pray that the said order be quashed and the Industrial Court be directed to decide the reference according to law.

3. The first ground on which the reference was held to be incompetent is that on the company issuing the notice giving out its decision to discontinue the two machines and close the third shift in the loading department, the Representative Union of the Employees made no demand nor expressed any desire to the company to withdraw the proposed change in accordance with Section 31 (2) and in the absence of such a notice under Section 31 (2) no industrial dispute could be said to have arisen and, therefore, no reference could be made to the Industrial Court under Section 51 of the Act. This reasoning presupposes that a notice of change under Section 31 is a prerequisite for giving rise to an Industrial Dispute. But there is no basis whatsoever for such an assumption.

The expression "Industrial Dispute" is defined by Section 2 (17) of the Act which reads as follows:

"S. 2 (17). "Industrial dispute" means any dispute or difference between an employer and employee or between employers and employees or between employees and employees and which is connected with any industrial matter."

A bare reading of this definition goes to show that Industrial Dispute is not restricted to disputes arising out of a notice of change, issued by Employer or Employees, under Section 31. The generality of the definition which embraces any dispute or difference connected with any industrial matter cannot be cut down by any such assumption as was made by the Industrial Court. Moreover, the power of the State Government to make a reference under Section 51 is not controlled by anything contained in Section 31. Section 51 opens with a non obstante clause "Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act"— which makes it plain that a notice of change under Section 31 is not a condition precedent for enabling the State Government to make a reference under Section 51.

Indeed this question can be taken to be covered by the decision of the Supreme Court in Ahmedabad Millowners' Association
v. The Textile Labour Association, AIR 1966
SC 497. In that case their Lordships considered this question in the context of the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, 1946 which contains similar provisions. Sections 2 (17),

31 and 51 of the Madhya Pradesh Act correspond respectively to Sections 3 (17), 42 and 73 of the Bombay Act. Construing these sections of the Bombay Act, their Lordships observed:

"On a fair reading of Section 73, it is plain that it deals with the powers of the State Government to make a reference and as such, it is difficult to assume that the said powers of the State Government are intended to be controlled by the provisions of Section 42. Section 42 prescribes the procedure which has to be followed by the employer and the employee respectively if either of them wants a change to be effected as contemplated by it. The scheme of Section 42 read along with the other provisions in Ch VIII clearly shows that the said Chapter can have no application to cases where the State Government itself wants to make a reference. That is the first consideration which militates against the construction which Mr Setalvad suggests."

"The opening clause in Section 73 also unambiguously indicates that the power of the State Government to make a reference will not be controlled by any other provision contained in the Act. This clause plainly repels the argument that the provisions of Section 42 should be read as controlling the provisions of Section 73. The meaning of the non obstante clause is clear and it would be idle to urge that the requirements of Section 42 must be satisfied before the power under Section 73 can be invoked by the State Government."

"It is, however, urged that the power conferred on the State Government by Sec 73 is the power to refer an industrial dispute to the arbitration of the Industrial Court, and there can be no industrial dispute unless a notice of change has been given either by the employer or the employee. In other words, the argument is that unless a notice of change is given as required by Section 42, no industrial dispute can be said to arise between the employer and his employee, and that is how Section 42 governs Sec 73. If it was the true legal position that there can be no industrial dispute between an employer and his employee unless a notice of a change is given by either of them, there would have been some force in this contention, but the definition of the words "industrial dispute" does not justify the assumption that it is only a notice of change that brings into existence an industrial dispute. Section 3 (17) of the Act defines an "industrial dispute" as meaning any dispute or difference between an employer and employee or between employers and employees or between employees and employees and which is connected with any industrial matter. This definition is so wide and comprehensive that it would be impossible to accept the argument that it introduces the limitation suggested by Mr. Setalvad."

The observations quoted above apply with full force for construing Sections 2 (17), 31 and 51 of the Madhya Pradesh Act and it must be held that the Industrial Court went wrong in holding that no industrial dispute could arise and none could be referred under Section 51 in the absence of a notice of change contemplated by Section 31.

In support of its conclusion the Industrial Court placed reliance on the ruling of the Supreme Court in Sindhu Resettlement Corporation Ltd v Industrial Tribunal, Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 529 and quoted the following observations:-

"If no dispute at all was raised by the respondents with the management, any request sent by them to the Government would only be a demand by them and not an industrial dispute between them and their employer. An industrial dispute, as defined must be a dispute between employers and employees, employers and workmen, and workmen and workmen. A mere demand to a Government without a dispute being raised by the workmen with their employer, cannot become an industrial dispute."

All that these observations mean is that simply by making a request to the Government the employees cannot be said to have raised a dispute with the management and that raising of a dispute with the management is necessary for giving rise to an industrial dispute. But these observations do not in any way support the conclusion that a dispute with the management which can be subject matter of reference as an industrial dispute can only arise by giving a notice of change. In that case certain retrenched employees and their representative union had demanded from the management only retrenchment compensation and had not claimed reinstatement and therefore, it was held that it was not open for the State Government to make a reference in respect of reinstatement and the reference could have been made only in respect of the retrenchment compensation which was the only subject matter of dispute between the employees and the management.

As regards the instant case, the Industrial Court merely found that the employees did not give any notice of change under Section 31 (2) of the Act to the company and the finding is not this that no demand was made by the employees to the company not to close the two machines and the third shift in the loading department. In the absence of a finding to that effect it could not have held that there was no industrial dispute, which the State Government could refer under Section 51. The order of reference in the instant case recited the satisfaction of the State Government about the existence of the industrial dispute between the company and its employees. In view of this recital the regularity of the order including the fulfilment of the conditions precedent had to be presumed; see Swadeshi Cotton Mills v. S. I. Tribunal, AIR 1961 SC 1381 at p. 1387. If the company wanted to contend that no industrial dispute in fact existed, it was for the company to produce the relevant material to rebut the presumption of existence of dispute. Be that as it may, the Sindhu Resettlement Corporation's case, AIR 1968 SC 529 (supra) relied upon by the Industrial Court does not support the reasoning that in the absence of a notice of change under Section 31 no industrial dispute could arise for reference under Section 51.

4. The second ground on which the reference was rejected is that an industrial dispute in respect of a proposed closure is outside the purview of Section 51, as it falls within Section 82 and, therefore, the reference made by the Government under Section 51 was not entertainable. To appreciate this reasoning it is necessary to read Sections 51 and 82 —

“S. 51. Reference of disputes to Labour Court, Industrial Court or Board.—

Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, the Government may, if on a report made by the Labour officer or otherwise it is satisfied that an industrial dispute exists, and—

(a) it is not likely to be settled by other means; or

(b) by reason of the continuance of the dispute—

(i) a serious outbreak of disorder or breach of the public peace is likely to occur; or

(ii) serious or prolonged hardship to a large section of the community is likely to be caused; or

(iii) the industry concerned is likely to be seriously affected or the prospects and scope of employment therein curtailed; or

(c) it is necessary in the public interest to do so; refer the dispute or any matter appearing to be connected with or relevant to the dispute for arbitration to a Labour Court or the Industrial Court or a Board;

Provided that—

(i) no reference under this section shall be made to a Board without referring the matter to the parties and obtaining consent in writing of one of the parties to the dispute; and

(ii) no reference shall be made to a Labour Court under this Section if the matter in dispute is included in Schedule I or if the dispute is between employees and employees.”

“S. 82. Reference to Industrial Court for declaration whether strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage is illegal.—

(1) The State Government may make a reference to a Labour Court or the Industrial Court for a declaration whether any proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage will be illegal.

(2) No declaration shall be made under this section save in open Court.

(3) The declaration made under sub-section (1) shall be recognised as binding and shall be followed in all proceedings under this Act.”

The language used in Section 51 is very wide in scope and authorises the Government to refer any industrial dispute for arbitration provided other conditions of the section are satisfied. The section does not enact that an industrial dispute arising out of a proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage cannot be referred under the section and it is difficult to read any such implied exception. If a proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage leads to an industrial dispute, the same can be referred for arbitration if other conditions mentioned in the section exist. This inference which follows from the plain meaning of the words used is strongly reinforced by the non obstante clause — “Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act” — with which the section opens. After a reference is made under section 51 the authority concerned will have power to decide the dispute and to grant appropriate relief to the parties within the scope of the reference by its award under Section 56.

We may now turn to section 82 to see if there is anything in that section which can be read as a limitation on the power of the State Government to refer for arbitration under Section 51 an industrial dispute arising out of a proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage. Section 82 does not speak of any industrial dispute. It only authorises the Government to make a reference to a Labour Court or the Industrial Court, for a declaration whether any proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage will be illegal. The existence of an industrial dispute is not a condition precedent for a reference under this section. There is nothing in its wording which may prevent the making of reference under Section 51 if the proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage gives rise to an industrial dispute. Moreover, the relief available in a reference to the Industrial Court, under section 82 is only that of a declaration whereas Sec. 51 is not so limited. Having considered the language of Sections 51 and 82 we are of opinion that Section 51 is not controlled by anything contained in Section 82 and that an industrial dispute arising out of a proposed strike, lock-out, closure or stoppage can be referred for arbitration under Section 51 if other conditions of that section are fulfilled.

5. It will thus be seen that the two grounds given by the Industrial Court in support of its order cannot be sustained. But that is not the end of the matter, for it was contended on behalf of the company before us that a proposed closure cannot give rise to an industrial dispute. Reliance for this contention was placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in Indian Hume Pipe Co. v. Their Workmen, AIR 1968 SC 1002. In that case it has been observed.

"Once the Tribunal finds that an employer has closed its factory as a matter of fact it is not concerned to go into the question as to the motive which guided him and to come to a conclusion that because of the previous history of the dispute between the employer and the employees the closure was not justified. Such a closure cannot give rise to an industrial dispute."

The Indian Hume Pipe Company's case related to closure of a factory i.e. closure of the entire business carried on in the factory. In the instant case the closure is not of that type. Here the company merely proposed to close two of its machines and one shift in the loading department, the proposal was not to close the factory at Kymore or the business carried on at that place and therefore the principle laid down in the Indian Hume Pipe Company's case AIR 1968 SC 1002 can have no application.

6. The petition is allowed. The order of the Industrial Court dated 20th May, 1968 rejecting the reference is quashed and that Court is directed to decide the reference according to law. By the same order the Industrial Court refused to grant to the employees the relief for interim injunction and we make it clear that this part of the order has not been challenged before us and will, therefore, stand. The petitioners will have their costs of this petition from the respondent No. 2. Counsel's fee Rs. 200. The security amount will be refunded to the petitioner.

A. P. SEN AND G. P. SINGH, JJ.

Sitaram Barela, Petitioner v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Respondent

Misc. Petn No 32 of 1969, D/- 12-2-1969.

Transfer of Prisoners Act (1950), S. 3 — M. P. Prisoners Release on Probation Act (16 of 1954), S. 2 — M. P. Prisoners Release on Probation Rules (1964), R. 3 — Transfer of prisoner to M. P. State — Powers of State Government under S. 2 to release such prisoner — Are not subject to prior concurrence of State of conviction — Expression,

"in duo course of law" in Section 3 — Meaning — Interpretation of Words and Phrases — Expression "in duo course of law".

The powers of the State Government of Madhya Pradesh to release prisoners by licence on conditions prescribed in Section 2 apart from being subject to the conditions specified therein are not subservient to any further requirement like the prior concurrence of the State of conviction. Neither the State Government of Madhya Pradesh nor their Inspector General of Prisons can, by an executive fiat curtail the ambit of the statutory powers conferred on the State Government under Section 2 of 1954 Act.

The use of the words 'it appears to the Government' in Section 2 of 1954 Act prima facie rests the exercise of those powers to the satisfaction of the State Government. Nevertheless, that satisfaction has to be arrived at, only upon a consideration of the conditions mentioned therein. Only two conditions envisaged by that section, are (i) the confinement of a prisoner under a sentence of imprisonment, and (ii) the likelihood of his abstaining from crime and leading a peaceful life, if he is released therefrom, looking to his antecedents and conduct in prison. Upon fulfilment of these conditions, the powers of the State Government to direct a prisoner's conditional release, at once, come into play, subject, of course to a compliance of the other requirements appearing in the latter part of that section, by the prisoner himself. That construction flows from a plain reading of the section itself. The only other requirement is that imported by Rule 8 of the Rules which enumerates the different classes of prisoners who should not be released under the Act of 1954. (Paras 5, 6)

Under sub-section (1) of Section 3 of 1950 Act, when any person is confined in any prison of a State, the Government of that State may, with the willingness of the Government of the other State concerned, direct the removal or transfer of the prisoner, from their prison to any prison in that other State. That provision applies to all classes of prisoners. In terms of this provision, no inter-State agreement could possibly be arrived at, which would make the subsequent release of such prisoner on probation or otherwise, by the transferee State, conditional upon the prior concurrence of the State from whose prison he had been transferred. (Para 8)

Apart from this, it is clear upon the transfer of a prisoner from the prisons of one State to that of another, sub-section (2) of Section 3 of 1950 Act comes into play. On a plain construction of Section 3 (2) the Officer in charge of the prison to which a prisoner is removed or transferred under sub-section (1), has to receive and detain him in that prison, so far as may be, (i) according to the exigencies of any writ, warrant or order of the Court, by which such person had been committed; or (ii) until such person was discharged or removed, in due course of law.

(Para 9)

The expression 'in due course of law', appearing in sub-section (2) of Section 3, in the context in which it appears, must be interpreted, as meaning 'under some rule or enactment in force'. In this view, detention of a prisoner is governed not only by the relevant rules and regulations in the Jail Manual of the particular State where he happens to be imprisoned for the time being, but also by all the laws of that State governing all classes of prisoners. The Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Act, 1954 must be regarded as a relevant law governing the subject. It, accordingly, follows that on other conditions being fulfilled, a prisoner transferred to State of M. P. is entitled to benefits of Section 2 thereof, unless he belonged to any of the excepted classes mentioned in Rule 3 of the Rules.

(Para 10)

S. C. Datt, amicus curiae, for Petitioner; M. V. Tamaskar, Dy. Govt. Advocate, for State.

SEN, J.: After hearing the parties on merits, we passed an order on 27th January, 1969, to the following effect:

"Having heard the parties, we are satisfied that this petition for grant of a writ of habeas corpus under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, must be allowed. We hereby set aside the order issued by the Secretary to Government of Madhya Pradesh, Jail Department, bearing No. 1090/342/III-Jail, dated Bhopal, the 3rd May 1967, cancelling the petitioner's conditional release on a licence issued under Section 2 of the Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Act, 1954.

We accordingly direct the State of Madhya Pradesh and, in particular, the Superintendent of the Central Jail, Jabalpur, where the petitioner is being detained, to serve him with the original licence of conditional release already issued by the State Government in Form 'D' under Rule 7 of the Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Rules, 1964, and to afford him every facility to comply with the conditions imposed thereby and to fulfil all other legal requirements and thereafter to release him forthwith in terms of the licence, from the prison where he is being detained. The reasons for our decision shall follow later."

The reasons for allowing the petition are these.

2. Before stating the reasons, it is necessary for us to set out a few facts which are relevant to the present controversy. On 29th October, 1956, the petitioner was convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge, Chanda, under Sees. 302, 452, 453 and 506 (II) of the Penal Code and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The district of Chanda being in Vidarbha Region, he was lodged at the Central Jail, Nagpur, to serve out his sentence. After the States Reorganisation Act (Act No. XXXVII of 1956), came into force on 1st November, 1956, the entire Vidarbha Region became part of new State of Maharashtra and, since he had been convicted by a Court of Session in that region, the petitioner continued to be a prisoner in the State of Maharashtra, till 23rd April, 1958. As the petitioner desired to be transferred to the Central Jail, Jabalpur, being nearer to his home district, Narsinghapur, the Maharashtra State under the arrangement referred to in Section 3 of the Transfer of Prisoners Act (Act No. XXIX of 1950), obtained the sanction of the Government of Madhya Pradesh for his transfer, and, he was, accordingly, on that day, transferred to that jail, where he is now detained. The Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Act (No. XVI of 1954) having been brought into force on 1st February, 1962, the petitioner applied to the State Government of Madhya Pradesh for his release on probation under Section 2 thereof.

The petitioner's application was forwarded by the authorities to the District Magistrate, Chanda, who recommended his case for release and, thereupon, the Government of Madhya Pradesh placed the matter before the Advisory Board under Rule 6 (5) of the Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Rules, 1964 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Rules'). The Advisory Board duly recommended his release on a conditional licence, and the Inspector General of Prisons having agreed with that recommendation, the State Government of Madhya Pradesh issued a licence in Form D under Rule 7 of the Rules, for his conditional release on probation under Section 2 ibid, vide Licence No. 1191-92/347-III dated the 8th April, 1966. Before that order could, however, be implemented, the authorities concerned felt that they had overlooked the Inspector General of Prisons' Circular No. 6548 dated 2nd April, 1965, which requires the prior concurrence of the State of conviction as a condition precedent for the release of prisoners under Section 2 ibid. Apparently, the State Government of Madhya Pradesh consulted the State of Maharashtra which ultimately did not agree to the release of the petitioner, and hence the order of conditional release passed on 8th April, 1966, was cancelled by the State Government of Madhya Pradesh, by their impugned order No. 1090-342/III-J dated 3rd May, 1967, without assigning any reason whatever. Thereafter, the authorities tried to take steps for his premature release under Paragraph 1018 of the Madhya Pradesh Jail Manual, but their efforts proved to be abortive.

The Advisory Board on 13th March, 1968, had recommended his premature release under Section 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and, on the 14th March, 1968, the Inspector General of Prisons also appears to have agreed with that recommendation but the State Government of Madhya Pradesh in their turn, referred the matter to the State of Maharashtra on 23rd April, 1968, for their concurrency That Government, having turned down the recommendation for the premature release of the petitioner, the Government of Madhya Pradesh dropped the proceedings. Hence this petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

3 The State Government of Madhya Pradesh have in their return, asserted that the petitioner cannot be released without the prior concurrence of the State Government of Maharashtra and, they were, therefore, right in revoking their earlier order for his conditional release and in consequence, the confinement of the petitioner in prison was not illegal. Their contention is that so far as remissions in sentence are concerned, the rules applicable to the prisoners in general in Madhya Pradesh, whether from this State or outside, are the same, but as regards premature release of prisoners, the concurrence of the State of conviction is necessary. Presumably, the contention rests on the strength of the Inspector General of Prisons, Circular referred to above. The validity of that Circular being in question, we feel it would be rather convenient to set the same out in extenso. It reads

4 The questions for our consideration in this petition, are—

(1) Whether the powers of the State Government of Madhya Pradesh under Section 2 of the Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Act, 1954 are subject to any prior concurrence of the State of conviction, as envisaged by the impugned Circular?

(2) Whether the Superintendent of the Central Jail, Jabalpur has a right under Section 3 (1) of the Transfer of Prisoners Act, 1950 to detain the petitioner until he serves out his sentence of imprisonment for life, despite the order of the State Government of Madhya Pradesh for his release on licence in Form 'D' under Rule 7 of the Rules?

5. As to the first, we are clearly of the view that the powers of the State Government under Section 2 ibid are untrammelled by any such condition as was sought to be introduced by the offending circular requiring the prior concurrence of the State of conviction as a condition precedent for the exercise of such powers. The terms of that section are clear enough, and it reads, a follows

“2 Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, where a person is confined in a prison under a sentence of imprisonment and it appears to the Government from his antecedents and his conduct in the prison that he is likely to abstain from crime and lead a peaceable life, if he is released from prison, the Government may by licence permit him to be released on condition that he be placed under the supervision or authority of a Government Officer or of a person professing the same religion as the prisoner or such institution or society as may be recognised by the Government for the purpose, provided such other person, institution or society is willing to take charge of him.”

The use of the words ‘it appears to the Government’ in the section, prima facie rests the exercise of those powers to the satisfaction of the State Government. Nevertheless, the satisfaction has to be arrived at, only upon consideration of the conditions mentioned therein.

6. Now, the only two conditions envisaged by that section, are (i) the confinement of a prisoner under a sentence of imprisonment and (ii) the likelihood of his abstaining from crime and leading a peaceful life, if he is released therefrom, looking to his antecedent and conduct in prison. Upon fulfilment of these conditions the powers of the State Government to direct a prisoner's conditional release, at once, come into play, subject, of course, to a compliance of the other requirements appearing in the latter part of that section, by the prisoner himself. That construction flows from a plain reading of the section itself. The only other requirement is that imported by Rule 3 of the Rules which enumerates the different classes of prisoners who should not be released under the Act. Admittedly, the petitioner does not fall within the mischief of Rule 3, and there was, therefore, no impediment to the applicability of Section 2 ibid to his case. For these reasons, it follows that the powers of the State Government of Madhya Pradesh to release prisoners by licence on conditions prescribed in Section 2 ibid, apart from being subject to the conditions specified therein, are not subservient to any further requirement like the prior concurrence of the State of conviction. Neither the State Government of Madhya Pradesh nor their Inspector General of Prisons could, by an executive fiat of this nature like the offending circular in question, curtail the ambit of the statutory powers conferred on the State Government under Section 2 ibid. The Inspector General of Prisons' Circular in question must, accordingly, be held to be invalid, being in excess of his authority, and the action of the State Government in cancelling the petitioner's conditional release under Section 2 ibid being based on that circular, must also be held to be an wholly unwarranted abdication of their own powers to the caprice or whim of an external authority.

7. We now turn to the second question urged, namely, whether the transfer of the petitioner by the State of Maharashtra being under Section 3 of the Transfer of Prisoners Act (Act No. XXIX of 1950), there could be no remission of his sentence without the previous sanction of that State. We may profitably refer to the legislative history leading to this piece of legislation. Section 29 of the Prisoners Act (Act No. III of 1900) had previously provided, inter alia, for the inter-State transfer of prisoners between the different States mentioned in Parts A, C and D of the First Schedule to the Constitution. There was, however, no provision either in that Act, or, in any other law, for the transfer of prisoners from prisons in those States to prisons in Part B States and vice versa. It appears that cases frequently arose where the transference of prisoners from Parts A, C and D States to Part B States and mutatis mutandis was considered administratively desirable or necessary. The Transfer of Prisoners Act, 1950, was intended to remove this lacuna and was to provide legal sanction to such transfers or removals; and, the words "or, with the consent of the State Government concerned, to any person in any other State", appearing in Section 29 (1) (d) were, consequently, omitted by Section 4 thereof, inasmuch as the Transfer of Prisoners Act (Act No. XXIX of 1950) was now an all pervading measure providing for transfer of prisoners between the different States in India. It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

8. We are definitely of the view that the continued detention of the petitioner at the Central Jail, Jabalpur, despite the earlier order of the State Government for his conditional release on probation under Section 2 ibid, is wholly illegal. On a reading of Section 3 of the Transfer of Prisoners Act, it would appear that the transfer of the petitioner by the State Government of Maharashtra to the Central Jail, Jabalpur, with the sanction of the Madhya Pradesh Government, did not make his subsequent release on probation, conditional upon the prior concurrence of the State Government of Maharashtra. Under sub-section (1) of Section 3 of 1950 Act, when any person is confined in any prison of a State, the Government of that State may, with the willingness of the Government of the other State concerned, direct the removal or transfer of the prisoner, from their prison to any prison in that other State. That provision applies to all classes of prisoners, including one like the petitioner, who is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for life. In terms of this provision, no inter-State agreement could possibly be arrived at, which would make the subsequent release of such prisoner on probation or otherwise, by the transferee State, conditional upon the prior concurrence of the State from whose prison he had been transferred. At any rate, no such inter-State agreement between the States of Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra has been brought to our notice, nor have the State Government placed reliance on any of its terms as supporting their action.

"(2) The Officer in charge of the prison to which any person is removed under sub-section (1) shall receive and detain him, so far as may be, according to the exigency of any writ, warrant or order of the Court by which such person has been committed, or until such person is discharged or removed in due course of law."

On a plain construction of this provision, the Officer in charge of the prison to which a prisoner is removed or transferred under sub-section (1), has to receive and detain him in that prison, so far as may be, (i) according to the exigencies of any writ, warrant or order of the Court, by which such person had been committed; or (ii) until such person was discharged or removed, in due course of law. Normally, the Superintendent of the Central Jail, Jabalpur, has, therefore, under the first part of Section 3 (2), a right to detain the petitioner till the completion of his sentence of imprisonment for life, unless he is discharged or removed, in due course of law, under the second part of that section.

10. Now, the expression 'in due course of law', appearing in sub-section (2) of Section 3, in the context in which it appears, must be interpreted, as meaning 'under some rule or enactment in force'. In the view, detention of a prisoner is governed not only by the relevant rules and regulations in the Jail Manual of the particular State where he happens to be imprisoned for the time being, but also by all the laws of that State governing all classes of prisoners. The Madhya Pradesh Prisoners Release on Probation Act, 1954 must, in our view, be regarded as a relevant law governing the subject. It accordingly, follows that on other conditions being fulfilled, the petitioner was entitled to benefits of Section 2 thereof, unless he belonged to any of the excepted classes mentioned in Rule 3 of the rules. As already stated, he does not belong to any of the categories enumerated therein, and there was, therefore, no legal impediment to his conditional release on probation under Section 2 ibid. Section 3 of the Transfer of Prisoners Act, 1950, under which the petitioner was transferred by the State of Maharashtra to the Central Jail, Jabalpur, nowhere contemplates that their prior concurrence, i.e., of the State Government of Maharashtra, would be a condition precedent for the exercise of the powers conferred under Section 2 ibid, i.e., his conditional release on probation, and cannot, therefore, be brought into aid as supporting the present action of the State Government of Madhya Pradesh in cancelling their earlier order.

11. The result is that the petition succeeds and is allowed. We, accordingly, direct that a writ of habeas corpus under Article 226 of the Constitution be issued for the release of the petitioner in terms of our interim order dated 27th January, 1969, upon fulfilment of the conditions set forth therein. There shall be no order as to costs in these proceedings. We would, however, like to record our indebtedness to Shri Satish Dutt, Advocate, who had kindly consented to appear as amicus curiae on behalf of the petitioner, for the assistance that he has rendered.

and also in Cl. (3) of L-2 licence are not exhaustive. They deal with safeguards where spirit as such is used, but they are not authority for the conclusion that a preparation containing alcohol comes into existence, only if alcohol in its free condition had been used but not as tincture or spirits. The rules are intended to safeguard the case of manufacture outside bond where alcohol in unmixed form is used. But they will have no application where alcohol in tinctures or spirits is used in a preparation; the preparation will come within the category of preparations containing alcohol for the levy of excise duty on which the Act as well as the Schedule thereunder have made provision. (Para 10)

(B) Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Excise Duties Act (1955), Ss. 3 and 4 and Schedule — Excise duty on preparations containing tinctures or spirits — Validity — Held that there was no double taxation in respect of such preparations — Tax already paid on tinctures or spirits is paid by their manufacturers and not by petitioners — If manufacturer used alcohol on which duty was paid by him, he could claim rebate under S. 4 (Para 11)

(C) Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Excise Duties Act (1955), Sch. Items 1 and 2 — Validity — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — 'Potability' as basis for distinction between items 1 and 2 is not capricious or absurd — Provisions are valid.

The "potability" test constituting a distinction between items 1 and 2, on a careful analysis, does not appear to be a capricious or absurd test like the distinction between a white horse and black horse, for the purpose of taxation. On the introduction of the Prohibition Acts in various States, it became apparent that many preparations under the name of medicinal preparations were being put on the market but which were medicines only in nominal sense, they were being bought up and consumed in large quantities by addicts to alcohol, valuing them exclusively for their alcoholic content. Customers of this kind will not care to buy medicines which contain only a trace of alcohol used as a preservative because such preparations would not readily help them to achieve their object of getting inebriated. It was therefore, considered to be a proper method to levy excise duty on preparations which contain alcohol and which are potable in the sense of their being fitted for consumption as ordinary alcoholic beverages on a rate calculated upon the volumetric content of alcohol. This appears to be a perfectly rational basis for drawing a distinction between item 1 and item 2 of the Schedule based upon their suitability or non-suitability for being used as ordinary alcoholic beverages. In item 1, stress is laid not so much on the value of alcoholic content as on the value of the medicines that go into their preparations. In item 2, the value of the medicines that go into the preparations may be little, when compared with the value of the higher alcoholic content that went into the preparation, and that has necessitated the levy on item 2 on the basis of the alcoholic content. From this point of view there appears to be a valid basis of distinction between items 1 and 2. Again, when by the amendments in 1963 and 1964 ad valorem duty as an alternative to the duty based on the value of the alcoholic content was used for taxing both items 1 and 2 preparations, apparently a certain uniformity was introduced where such uniformity did not exist before, but still the provision even after such amendment, for the levy of the higher duty out of two alternative rates might have helped to lay stress in the case of item 2, on alcoholic content, and in the case of item 1 on the value of the medicines. Further, it is not possible to say by merely looking at the Schedule that item 1 will operate more oppressively than item 2. (Para 14)

(D) Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Excise Duties Rules, 1956, Rr. 12, 11 and 9 — Limitation — Manufacturer failing to take licence and failing to pay duty at appropriate time and place — It is R. 12 that applies — Limitation of six months contained in R. 9 does not apply.

The rules other than Rule 12 do not contain any specific provision for a case where the manufacturer, due to his own default, fails to take a licence and fails to ensure the proper safeguards for the manufacture under Rules 46 to 58. Had he done so, it would have ensured the levy of duty at the proper time and proper place. But that does not mean that the goods which are dutiable under the Act should escape from duty due to the default of the manufacturer. It is for such cases that Rule 12 provides the appropriate power for levy, it being in the nature of a residuary power, as the heading itself states. For the application of Rule 12, there is no period of limitation. A limitation of six months is provided only for Rule 11, which does not apply to such a case: AIR 1962 SC 1006 and AIR 1955 Raj 114 and W. P. Nos. 125 and 126 of 1961 (Mad), Disting.

(E) Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Excise Duties Rules, 1956 Rr. 2 (xix) and 60 (1) — "Restricted preparation" — Meaning of.

The definition of "restricted preparation" contained in Rule 2 (xix) read with R. 60 (1) would show that a restricted preparation is one which the Government have considered after adopting the prescribed procedure and after taking the advice of the Standing Committee, to be capable of being misused as ordinary alcoholic beverage (Para 17)

ORDER — These petitions were heard together because common questions of fact and of law arise in them for consideration. They are filed by certain manufacturers of patent or proprietary medicines under Art. 226 of the Constitution for writs in the nature of mandamus or certiorari, as the case may be. In all these cases the respondents who are the Board of Revenue Authorities of the Commercial Tax Department and the District Revenue Officer charged with the administration of the Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Excise Duties Act 1955 (Central Act 16 of 1955) hereinafter called the Act, as amended in 1961 have, after calling for returns of their manufacture of patent and proprietary medicines since 1st June, 1961, when an amendment to the aforesaid Act was brought about under Act XIX of 1961, issued demands against the petitioners for payment of excise duty calculated ad valorem at 10 per cent of the value on the patent or proprietary medicines manufactured by them subsequent to 1st June, 1961.

2 The first contention of the petitioners in these cases, for challenging the correctness and validity of the above demand was that under the Schedule to Act XVI of 1955, in item 1, under which the proposed levy of excise duty had been made only preparations containing alcohol are liable to excise duty but in the case of the preparations manufactured by the petitioners, except a single item called "Selvine" (manufactured by the petitioner in W P. No 1139 of 1964) alcohol in its free state had not been used, but they had used "spirits," "Chloroform" or other tinctures containing alcohol in small quantities only as preservatives. In such circumstances, bearing in mind the definition of alcohol given in S 2 (a) of the Act and also the general scope of the Act and the Rules the petitioners contend that it is illegal to consider that their preparations contain alcohol, and therefore, liable to pay excise duty

3. In addition to this main plea which turns on the proper interpretation to be given to the use of the term "containing alcohol", in the Schedule to the Act, the petitioners have also raised pleas that the levy in question is illegal because (1) it involves a double taxation on their products, (2) the levy is discriminatory, (3) the levy is barred by time and finally (4) that in any event, assuming that all the above mentioned points are decided against them bearing in mind the presumption of law enunciated in R 60 (3) of the Rules framed under the Act, the appropriate item of the Schedule under which they should have been assessed to excise duty will be item 2 and not item 1. In their counter affidavit, the Department traversed all these points and raised pleas contra I shall refer to them at the appropriate stage in the course of this judgment

4. I will take up first for consideration the first plea mentioned above, that the preparations under consideration do not contain alcohol as defined in the Act. The definition of alcohol in Section 2 (a) of the Act runs:

"Alcohol means ethyl alcohol of any strength and purity having the chemical composition of C-2, H-5 OH."

5. It is admitted by the petitioners that in most of the products manufactured by them, they have used either spirits, chloroform, or tinctures of other substances only as preservatives. It was also admitted by them that on the labels affixed to their preparations, they have given in the formula used for the manufacture, the exact alcoholic content by volume. The words "spirits" and "tinctures" have recognised meanings in the Pharmacopoeias. Taking for example Bentley's Text Book on Pharmaceutics "spirits" are defined as solutions of volatile substances in alcohol, and as such furnishing relatively stable solutions for distilling purposes. The British Pharmacopoeia Codex describes tinctures as alcoholic liquids containing in comparative dilute solution the active principle of vegetable drugs. Both these definitions of the terms "tinctures" and "spirits" would show that they comprise necessarily solutions of other substances in alcohol. The products manufactured by the petitioners are prepared adding spirits or tinctures to other drugs so as to form a mixture in the form of a solution. Therefore alcohol which has functioned as a solvent in the tinctures and spirits, has gone into state of further solution in the medicines prepared by the petitioners. In other words, alcohol, though it might not have been directly added, is present in the medicines in a state of solution. It has not undergone a chemical change into some other substance. It is present in a liquid form and the medicines thus prepared will reveal all the properties of alcohol, whether of smell or taste or capacity to vaporise, dependent of course, upon the quantity present. A solution of sugar in water retains the properties of sugar including taste, a solution of salt in water retains the properties of salt including taste, and a solution containing coloured substance or substances having smell, retains the colour and smell, the going of a substance into the solution will still make it an ingredient present in the solution importing all its characteristics to the solution. Therefore, the fact that alcohol went into solution in these preparations as tinctures or spirits and was not directly added will not make any difference to the resultant position about the presence of alcohol as alcohol in the product. In fact the position of alcohol in relation to the pharmaceutical products of the petitioners, as an ingredient in a state of solution is an a fortiori case, in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court in Tungabhadra Industries Ltd. v. Commercial Tax Officer, (1960) 11 STC 827 = (1961) 2 SCR 14 = (1961) 1 Mad LJ (SC) 45 = (1961) 1 Andh WR (SC) 45 = (1961) 1 SCJ 272 = (AIR 1961 SC 412) where the Supreme Court held that Vanaspathi manufactured out of groundnut oil is still groundnut oil notwithstanding that in the manufacture of Vanaspathi, a chemical change has intervened by effecting an inter-molecular change in the composition of the oil, by the absorption of hydrogen atoms. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the medicines in this case are preparations which contain alcohol.

6. Before dealing with the other contentions of the petitioners I will briefly refer to the charging section which is Section 3 of the Act, and it reads thus:

"Duties of excise to be levied and collected on certain goods—

1. There shall be levied duties of excise, at the rates specified in the Schedule on all dutiable goods manufactured in India.

2. The duties aforesaid shall be leviable—

(a) where the dutiable goods are manufactured in bond, in the State in which such goods are released from a bonded warehouse for home consumption whether such State is the State of manufacture or not;

(b) where the dutiable goods are not manufactured in bond, in the State in which such goods are manufactured.

3. Subject to the other provisions contained in the Act, the duties aforesaid shall be collected in such manner as may be prescribed."

Explanation:— Dutiable goods are said to be manufactured in bond within the meaning of this section if they are allowed to be manufactured without payment of any duty of excise leviable under any law for the time being in force in respect of alcohol, opium, Indian hemp or other narcotic drug or narcotic which is to be used as an ingredient in the manufacture of such goods."

7. The actual levy is made in accordance with the Schedule. The Schedule prior to the amendment in 1961 read thus:—

1.	Medicinal and toilet preparations, containing alcohol, which are prepared by distillation or to which alcohol has been added, and which are of the strength of capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages.	Rupees Seventeen and annas eight per gallon of the strength of London proof spirit.
2.	Medicinal and toilet preparations not otherwise specified containing alcohol:— (i) Ayurvedic preparations containing self-generated alcohol which are not capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages. (ii) Ayurvedic preparations containing self generated alcohol which are capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages. (iii) All others...	Nil Rupees three per gallon. Rupees five per gallon of the strength of London proof spirit.
8.	Medicinal and toilet preparations, not containing alcohol, but containing opium, Indian hemp, or other narcotic drug or narcotic.	Nil

8. After the amendment in 1961 the Schedule was recast thus —

Item No. 1	Description of dutiable goods. 2	Rate of duty. 3
Medicinal preparations :
1.	Medicinal preparations, being patent or proprietary medicines, containing alcohol and which are not capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages.	Ten per cent ad valorem .
2	Medicinal preparations, containing alcohol, which are prepared by distillation or to which alcohol has been added, and which are capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages.	Rupees three and eighty-five paise per litre of the strength of London proof spirit.
8.	Medicinal preparations, not otherwise specified containing alcohol— (i) Ayurvedic preparations containing self-generated alcohol which are not capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages.	Nil

9. Learned Counsel Sri K. Raja Iyer, Sri Chengalvarayan and Sri Narayanaswamy Mudaliar, appearing for the petitioners, referred to the provisions of the Act and the Rules and in particular, to Section 3 (2) (a) and (b) extracted above, (which provide for manufacture in bond or manufacture outside bond), Rule 20 and the licence in Form L-2 for supporting the argument that the words, 'containing alcohol' in item 1 of the Schedule as amended in 1961, must necessarily refer to the direct use of free alcohol and not alcohol used indirectly in the form of tinctures or spirits. Their argument is that the provisions of the manufacture in bond and manufacture outside bond, must imply the direct use of alcohol as a dutiable preparation, but when it is used as a tincture or spirits, there is no question of paying duty on the tinctures as such, or spirits as such and therefore the charging section will not apply. Rule 20 states that manufacture of medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol shall be permitted in bond without payment of duty as well as outside bond, in the case of manufacture in bond alcohol on which duty has not been paid shall be used under excise supervision and in the case of manufacture outside bond, only alcohol on which duty has already been paid shall be used. Clause (3) in Form L-2 licence provided a condition limiting the quantity of spirit in the licensee's possession upto a certain quantity. According to the learned Counsel, these provisions also would show that the Act contemplated the use of alcohol directly in the course of manufacture for purposes of bringing the medicinal preparations within the scope of its levy, but it was not intended to levy excise duty on preparations in whose manufacture alcohol did not directly enter in its pure form but only as tinctures or spirits. Reference was also made in this connection to the Preamble to the Act which states that it was intended to provide for the levy and collection of excise on medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol, opium etc. It is urged that under the broad scheme of the Act thus expressed in the provision of the Act, the Rules thereunder as well as in the Preamble, the Act was intended to tax only preparations in whose manufacture alcohol directly was used, and not alcohol contained in tinctures or in spirits.

10. I am unable to accept this line of reasoning. Section 3 (2) (b) of the Act, dealing with manufacture outside bond, is sufficiently general, to include the preparations in the present cases. The provision contained for manufacture outside bond in R 20 and also in CL (3) of L-2 licence are not exhaustive. They deal with safeguards where spirit as such is used, but they are not authority for the conclusion that a preparation containing alcohol comes into existence, only if alcohol in its free condition had been used but not as tincture or spirits. The aforesaid rules are intended to safeguard the case of manufacture outside bond where alcohol in unmixed form is used. But they will have no application where alcohol in tinctures or spirits is used in a preparation, the preparation will come within the category of preparations containing alcohol for the levy of excise duty on which the Act as well as the schedule thereunder have made provision.

11. I will take up next the argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the petitioners under the heading 'double taxation.' The argument of the learned Counsel is that tinctures have already suffered excise duty on their alcoholic component, and levy of excise duty on the medicines again will involve double taxation. It appears to me that this is not a very clinching argument. The scope of the Act is obviously to pass on the duty to the customers. Further, the tax on the alcoholic content of the tinctures or spirits was paid by the manufacturers of these tinctures or spirits and not by the petitioners. Therefore there is no question of double taxation so far as the petitioners are concerned. Again, if in a given case the manufacturer used alcohol for manufacture on which he has paid duty, he can claim a rebate on such duty under Section 4 of the Act. I am of opinion that the attack made on the levy from the point of view of double taxation has no substance.

12. I will take up next the attack made against the levy on the ground of discrimination. Sri K. Raja Iyer appearing for the petitioners has made a careful analysis of items 1 and 2 in the Schedule which I have already extracted above. He draws my attention to the point that the essential distinction between the two items is what may be called for brevity "potability as beverage" the formula used for this purpose in the Schedule is "capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverage." According to the learned Counsel's submission, this ground of distinction has been relied on to make certain preparations, which are not potable as beverages and falling under Item 1, liable to 10 per cent. ad valorem duty, and other preparations, which are potable as beverages are liable to excise duty according to the alcoholic content calculated at Rs. 3.85 per litre. Learned Counsel also lays stress on the fact that in the Schedule to the old Act before the amendment there was no provision for such a duty levied ad valorem but only upon the alcoholic content by volume and this would be more in consonance with the purpose of the Act namely, levy of excise duty on preparations containing alcohol. Learned counsel also urges that the distinction on the basis of potability for levying ad valorem duty, is a distinction based on caprice without any reasonable basis to the object of the legislation. He referred to the following observation found at page 596 of Willis Constitutional Law:—

"Another classification for taxation frequently used is one according to objects. The Legislature has a wide discretion in this respect. It may levy a tax on all houses, excluding barns, and on all horses, excluding sheep and cows. However, any such classification must have some basis other than mere caprice. A tax on white horses would be an illustration of a classification without basis." He also referred to the amendment of the Schedule in 1963 and a further amendment in 1964 whereby uniformity as against item 1 and item 2, 10 per cent. ad valorem or the rate based upon alcoholic content of the preparation whichever is higher, had been introduced. By these amendments, it was urged, both items 1 and 2 were brought into a state of uniformity but in the amendment of 1961 which governs the present case, that uniformity had not been attained, and there was discrimination in the method adopted for levying duty between items 1 and 2.

13. As against this argument, the learned Government Pleader submits that under Item 14 (E) of the Schedule to the Central Excise Act, there was already a provision for levying 10 per cent. ad valorem excise duty on patent or proprietary medicines not containing alcohol, opium etc. At the same time when the Medicinal and Toilet Preparations Act (16 of 1955) was passed with the old schedule which contained the "potability" test as well as a levy of duty based upon alcoholic content, several medicinal preparations which contained alcohol in small quantities which did not satisfy the "Potability" test, and which were in all respects similar to patent or proprietary medicines falling under Item 14 (E) of the Schedule to the Central Excise Act, were escaping levy of excise duty and gaining an unfair advantage by reason of this lacuna in the legislation. It was to get over this anomaly, that the amendment made in 1961 to Act 16 of 1955 introduced item 1 classification in the Schedule imposing 10 per cent ad valorem duty on preparations which contained alcohol as an ingredient but without the medicine being suitable for being used as an alcoholic beverage. This argument appears to me to be a valid one for explaining the circumstances which led to the imposition of 10 per cent. ad valorem duty on preparations containing alcohol and which did not satisfy the "potability" test.

14. This apart, the "potability" test constituting a distinction between items 1 and 2, on a careful analysis, does not appear to be a capricious or absurd test like the distinction between a white horse and black horse, for the purpose of taxation to quote Willis. On the introduction of the Prohibition Acts in various States, it became apparent that many preparations under the name of medicinal preparations were being put on the market but which were medicines only in a nominal sense, they were being bought up and consumed in large quantities by addicts to alcohol, valuing them exclusively for their alcoholic content. Customers of this kind will not care to buy medicines which contain only a trace of alcohol used as a preservative because such preparations would not readily help them to achieve their object of getting inebriated. It was therefore, considered to be a proper method to levy excise duty on preparations which contain alcohol and which are

potable in the sense of their being fitted for consumption as ordinary alcoholic beverages on a rate calculated upon the volumetric content of alcohol. This appears to be a perfectly rational basis for drawing a distinction between item 1 and item 2 of the Schedule based upon their suitability or non-suitability for being used as ordinary alcoholic beverages. In item 1, stress is laid not so much on the value of alcoholic content as on the value of the medicines that go into their preparations. In item 2, the value of the medicines that go into the preparations may be little when compared with the value of the higher alcoholic content that went into the preparation, and that has necessitated the levy on item 2 on the basis of the alcoholic content. From this point of view there appears to be a valid basis of distinction between items 1 and 2. Again, when by the amendments in 1963 and 1964 ad valorem duty as an alternative to the duty based on the value of the alcoholic content was used for taxing both items 1 and 2 preparations, apparently a certain uniformity was introduced where such uniformity did not exist before, but still the provision even after such amendment, for the levy of the higher duty out of two alternative rates might have helped to lay stress in the case of item 2, on alcoholic content, and in the case of item 1 on the value of the medicines. Further, it is not possible to say by merely looking at the Schedule that item 1 will operate more oppressively than item 2. It may happen that a particular manufacturer may be able to sell large quantities of preparations which are being put into the market not so much for their medicinal content as for their alcoholic content, and seeing that the rate for item 2 is quite high, namely, Rs. 3.85 per litre of alcohol, the actual duty in such cases may work out of more than 10 per cent. ad valorem if calculated on the value of the medicinal content alone. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the argument based on discrimination is without substance.

15. I will next deal with the argument on the question of limitation. The relevant rules in this connection are Rr 6, 9, 11 and 12 of the Rules framed under the Act, which read thus:

"6 Recovery of duty.— Every person who manufactures any dutiable goods, or who stores such goods in a warehouse, shall pay the duty or duties leviable on such goods under the Act, at such time and place and to such person as may be designated in, or under the authority of these Rules whether the payment of such duty or duties is secured by bond or otherwise.

9. Time and manner of payment of duty:—

(1) No dutiable goods shall be removed from any place where they are manufactured or any premises appurtenant thereto, which may be specified by the Excise Commissioner in this behalf whether for consumption, export or manufacture of any other commodity in or outside such place, until the excise duty leviable thereon has been paid at such place and in such manner as is prescribed in these Rules or as the Excise Commissioner may require.

Provided that such goods may be deposited without payment of duty in a warehouse or may be exported out of India under bond as provided in R 97.

Provided further that the Excise Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, instead of requiring payment of duty in respect of each separate consignment of goods removed from the place or premises specified in this behalf or from a warehouse keep with any person dealing in such goods an account-current of the duties payable thereon and such account shall be settled at intervals not exceeding three months, and the account-holder shall periodically deposit a sum therein sufficient in the opinion of the Excise Commissioner to cover the duty on the goods, intended to be removed from the place of manufacture or storage.

(2) If any dutiable goods are, in contravention of sub-rule (1) deposited in, or removed from, any place specified therein the manufacturer thereof shall pay the duty leviable on such goods upon written demand made by the proper officer, whether such demand is delivered personally to him or is left at the manufactory or his dwelling house, and he shall also be liable to a penalty to be determined by the Excise Commissioner which may extend to two thousand rupees, and such goods shall also be liable to confiscation.

11 Recovery of duties or charges short-levied or erroneously refunded.— When duties or charges have been short-levied through inadvertence, error, collusion or misconstruction on the part of an Excise Officer or through misstatement as to the quantity or description of such goods on the part of the owner, or when any such duty or charge, after having been levied, has been, owing to any such cause, erroneously refunded the person chargeable with the duty or charge, so short-levied, or to whom such refund has been erroneously made, shall pay the deficiency or repay the amount paid to him in excess as the case may be, on written demand by the proper officer being made within six months from the date on which the duty or charge was paid or adjusted in the owner's account-current, if any, or from the date of making the refund.

12. Residuary powers for recovery of sums due to Government.— Where these rules do not make any specific provision for the collection of any duty, or of any deficiency in duty if the duty has for any reason been short-levied, or of any other sum of any kind payable to the collecting Government under the Act or these Rules, such duty, deficiency in duty or sum shall, on written demand made by the proper officer, be paid to such person and at such time, and place, as the proper officer may specify."

These rules have to be read also with the Rules for the manufacture of preparations outside bond, contained in Section B of the Rules, namely, Rr. 46 to 58, as well as Section 6 (1) of the Act and the licence in Form L-2. Under Section 6 (1) of the Act, no person shall engage in the production or manufacture of any dutiable goods or of any specified component parts or ingredients of such goods except under the authority and in accordance with the terms and conditions of a licence granted under the Act. Section 6 (2) says that every licence under sub-section (1) shall be granted for such area and for such period, subject to such restrictions and conditions, and in such form and containing such particulars as may be prescribed. The licence in Form L-2 requires the manufacturer to describe the premises where the goods are to be manufactured. Rules 46 to 58 in Section B provide for the conditions and safeguards under which the manufacture takes place outside bond. It is against the background of the requirements of Rules 46 to 58 that one has got to view the provision in Rule 9, extracted above that duty under the Act has to be ordinarily paid at the time of their removal from the place where they are manufactured or other premises as may be specified by the Excise Commissioner, for consumption, export etc. Rule 9 (2) provides for levy of duty where there is removal of the goods, in contravention of Rule 9 (1), from the place where they are deposited, with a penalty for such illegal removal. In the present case, the petitioners, though they had manufactured dutiable goods containing alcohol as found above, never cared to take a licence as required under Section 6 (1) of the Act, with the consequence that all the restrictions and safeguards regarding manufacture of the products contained in Rr. 46 to 58 had been avoided by them in this case. There was, therefore, no scope for levy of the duty either as provided under Rule 9 or under Rule 9 (2). Rule 11 which I have extracted above, deals with a limited set of contingencies as mentioned therein. The first contingency is where there has been a short-levy because of inadvertence, error, collusion or misconstruction on the part of the Excise Officer; the second contingency arises where there is a misstatement on the part of the owner as to the quantity or description of such goods. There is a third contingency under Rule 11, of erroneous refund; but we are not concerned with this. Obviously in the present case there is no question of short-levy due to any of the acts or omissions attributed to the Excise Officer under the first contingency; nor is there a question of short-levy due to misstatement as to the quantity or description by the owner under the second contingency. What has happened, in fact, is a failure on the part of the manufacturer to pay duty due to his default in complying with the requirement of the Act after obtaining a licence under Section 6 (1) and after ensuring the manufacture of the goods within the safeguards contained in Rules 46 to 58 with the result that the manufactured goods have not been assessed to duty as they should have been in the normal manner under Rule 9 of the Rules. In my opinion, it is Rule 12 which one will have to look to, for finding the appropriate provision for levy of duty in this case. Rule 12, which I have also extracted above, deals with cases where the rules do not make any specific provision for the collection of any duty or of any other sum of any kind payable to the collecting Government under the Act. The rules other than Rule 12 do not contain any specific provision for a case where the manufacturer, due to his own default, fails to take a licence and fails to ensure the proper safeguards for the manufacture under Rules 46 to 58. Had he done so, it would have ensured the levy of duty at the proper time and proper place. But that does not mean that the goods which are dutiable under the Act should escape from duty due to the default of the manufacturer. It is for such cases that R. 12 provides the appropriate power for levy, it being in the nature of a residuary power, as the heading itself states. For the application of Rule 12, there is no period of limitation. A limitation of six months is provided only for rule 11 and I have already referred to the reasons which make me hold that it is not a case where the question relates to the recovery of a duty or charge short-levied or erroneously refunded.

16. Learned Counsel for the petitioners referred to M/s. Chhotabhai Jethabhai Patel and Co. v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1006, Mewar Textile Mills Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1955 Raj 114, and the decision of Srinivasan, J., in A. Peria Nachimuthu Gowndar v. Assistant Collector of Central Excise, Coimbatore, W. P. Nos. 125 and 126 of 1961 (Mad). Each one of these cases deals with a particular situation where it was not possible to levy the appropriate duty on certain goods in the manner provided by the earlier provisions in the Rules, like Rr. 9, 11 and so on and it was held that a levy under Rule 12 (or Rule 10-A which is the corresponding provision under the Central Excise Act) could be levied. Thus in the Supreme Court decision in AIR 1962 SC 1006 an additional duty was leviable under a later enactment which was directed to have retrospective effect and therefore, the levy could not be made under Rule 9 or the other provisions of the Rules and the residuary provision under Rule 10-A under the Central Excise Act was held to be applicable. Before Srinivasan, J., in W. P Nos 125 & 126 of 1961 (Mad), it was discovered as a result of a subsequent finding arrived at by the department, that the two mills, though they were normally in the names of different persons, really belonged to single manufacturer and this required a further payment of excise duty for which a demand was made under the residual provision in Rule 10-A of the Central Excise Act. The learned Judge held that Rule 10-A would cover such a case. In AIR 1955 Raj 114, by reason of the retrospective operation of an Act, additional duty was found payable in respect of goods which had been already cleared without payment of duty in the ordinary way at the time of clearance, it was held that the residual provision in Rule 10-A would apply. Learned Counsel for the petitioners argued that these decisions would show that the proper situation to apply the residual provision, will be where a subsequent amendment of the laws in force at the time of the actual removal of the goods, and therefore, the residual provision cannot apply to a case like the present where liability to pay a duty under a later enactment is not relied upon, but only a failure on the part of the department to collect the legitimate duty from the manufacturers at the time when the goods were removed from the place of manufacture the law in force having continued to be the same at all material times. I am of opinion that the decisions do not provide an exhaustive list of all the cases or situations where the residual provisions can be applied. They should be considered only as illustrative of certain situations. What we have in this case is a situation, where owing to the default of the manufacturer, he failed to take a licence and failed to pay the duty at the appropriate time and place. Later on, the department found out the omission on the part of the manufacturer to comply with the Rules and called upon him to pay the required duty. It appears to me that such a demand will fall under the residuary power in rule 12, and therefore the provision about limitation contained in R 9 will not apply.

17. I will now consider a final argument of the petitioner's learned Counsel which appears to have a great deal of substance, and which is based upon the presumption in Rule 60 (3) of the Rules as amended on 18th June, 1960.—

"60 Maintenance of restricted list of preparations— (1) A list of medicinal and toilet preparations which are considered as capable of being misused as ordinary alcoholic beverages, hereinafter referred to as restricted preparations, is given in the Schedule. All other medicinal preparations being manufactured from a date prior to 1st April, 1957 shall be considered to be not capable of being misused as ordinary alcoholic beverages (hereinafter referred to as unrestricted preparations).

(2) If, however, a preparation falling in the unrestricted category is found to be widely used as ordinary alcoholic beverage, the Central Government may on the request of a State Government or suo motu refer the matter to the Standing Committee referred to in R 68. The Central Government shall declare the preparation as a restricted preparation, if so advised by the said Committee and thereupon include the said preparation in the Schedule.

(3) Medicinal preparations other than official allopathic preparations and toilet preparations which are manufactured in India for the first time on and subsequent to 1st April, 1957 shall be presumed to be restricted preparations unless declared to the contrary by the Central Government on the advice of the Standing Committee. Any manufacturer intending to produce a new alcoholic preparation other than an official allopathic preparation, shall submit two samples of such preparation with the recipe to the State Government. The State Government shall forward such request with recipe to the Central Government for a decision. The Central Government shall refer the matter to the Standing Committee and in accordance with the advice tendered by it declare the category in which the preparation should be placed. The decision of the Central Government shall be communicated to all State Governments. In case the preparation is declared to be a restricted preparation it shall be included in the Schedule.

The advice of the Standing Committee shall be communicated within a reasonable time and in no case, later than six months from the date of submission of sample to the Committee."

A majority of the preparations in the present cases were manufactured after 1st April, 1957. In their cases, a presumption will arise under Rule 60 (3) that they are restricted preparations. Rule 2 (xix) defines "restricted preparation" as:

"'restricted preparation' means every medicinal and toilet preparation specified in the Schedule and includes every preparation declared by the Central Government as restricted preparation under these Rules."

This definition read with Rule 60 (1) would show that a restricted preparation is one which the Government have considered after adopting the prescribed procedure and after taking the advice of the Standing Committee, to be capable of being misused as ordinary alcoholic beverages. In the present case also the petitioners want to rely on the presumption contained in Rule 60 (3) that since their preparations have not been declared to be unrestricted by the Central Government on the advice of the Standing Committee, such of their preparations manufactured after 1st April, 1957 shall be presumed to be restricted and therefore, capable of being misused as ordinary alcoholic beverages. It is urged by them that they could take advantage of this presumption, and claim that such preparations fall under Item 2 of the Schedule already mentioned, for the purpose of being assessed to excise duty on the basis of the alcoholic content. They also referred to an opinion given by a former Member of the Board of Revenue, Sri S. K. Chettur, which is marked as Exhibit B in W. P. No. 1139 of 1964, and also a reply given by another former Member of the Board of Revenue, Sri C. A. Ramakrishnan in answer to a memorandum from the Honorary Secretary, Pharmaceutical, Chemical and Allied Manufacturers Association, on 6th October, 1964. These communications indicate that in the view of these authorities of the Revenue Department where particular manufacturers do not obtain a declaration to the contrary by the Central Government in respect of preparations manufactured after 1st April, 1957, there shall be a presumption about their being restricted, and with the consequent liability to pay excise duty under item 2. As against this, the learned Government Pleader contends that what the aforesaid R. 60 (3) lays down is only a presumption, that such presumption can be rebutted by contra evidence, and that if the petitioners want to take advantage of the presumption thus claimed, the department also should be given an opportunity to afford contra evidence to rebut the presumption and also to establish that the preparations in question are not really capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages. But no decision can be given by this Court on these rival contentions while dealing with the matter in a proceeding for the issue of a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution, because such decision requires an analysis of data and also taking evidence, if necessary. These necessary steps before a decision can be arrived at should necessarily be delegated to the authorities who are charged with the duty of considering the representations by the manufacturers and passing appropriate orders on those representations in the light of the law. It is also mentioned by the learned Government Pleader that against the decisions of the assessing authorities, appeals are provided under the Act and the Rules, to higher tribunals or departmental authorities and the petitioners can obtain adequate relief by resort to these provisions. On the other hand, what the petitioners really feel aggrieved about in the present case is due to a two-fold cause. One is, that even though the amendment to the Act came into force in 1961 and they had submitted returns promptly when the department called for such returns, they were given no opportunity to put forward the proper representations as against the proposed levy at any time, and that they were suddenly faced with the demand by the authorities for payment of the duties calculated ad valorem on the nature of the medicines as if they were products containing alcohol, to be assessed under item 1 of the Schedule. They had no opportunity of meeting this demand by adducing adequate data both regarding the presumption abovementioned as well as the dates of the manufacture of the goods. The second cause of grievance is stated to be that by the time these demands were made, they had sold their products, and that if they are now asked to pay duty with retrospective effect, it would make a deep cut into their profits, especially if the 10 per cent. ad valorem duty is to be made payable. It appears to me that both these representations one from the point of view of want of proper opportunity and the other from the point of view of the undue hardship which may be caused to the petitioner by making a demand retrospectively long after the Amending Act was passed, are matters which should be properly considered by the appropriate authorities. Necessary relief has to be given to them under Rules in regard to the first contention about the benefits they would be entitled to get under the presumption in Rule 60 (3). The second contention is a matter which the administrative authorities will have to consider in their discretion and decide whether there should be any waiver of duty in these cases, because of the long delay in making the demand and also because the petitioners had long ago sold out their goods without adding the burden of the duty to the prices charged to the customers, and also bearing in mind the fact that the higher authorities of the Department had at one time taken a view which would imply that the products were to be treated as restricted preparations with a liability to pay duty under item 2 of the Schedule at Rs. 3.85 on the volumetric content of alcohol. In view of the above considerations I allow the Writ Petitions (other than W. P. Nos. 1093, 1095, 1098 and 1156 of 1964) and quash the orders making demands for the payment of the duty. It will be open to the authorities to call upon the petitioners to show cause against the levy of the duty, and proceed to make the proper levy after hearing their representations contra and in the light of the observations above-mentioned in this judgment.

18 The excepted writ petitions, W. P. Nos 1093, 1095, 1098 and 1156 of 1964, are directed against the demand of the authorities against the petitioners asking them to take out L-2 licences on the ground that the preparations manufactured by them contain alcohol and therefore, licences are necessary under Section 6 (2) of the Act. In view of my above decision that the preparations do contain alcohol the writ petitions filed against the demand for taking out L-2 licences, have to be dismissed and they are hereby dismissed. There will be no order as to costs

Sri Raja Rajeswari Bus Service, Vridhachalam, Petitioner v Regional Transport Authority South Arcot Cuddalore and another, Respondents

Writ Petns Nos 1055 and 1794 of 1968 and W. A. No 128 of 1968 D/-23-7-1968 Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 47 (3), 57 (3) — Proceedings under S 57 (3) without prior determination of number of permits to be granted under S 47 (3) — Failure of petitioner to make representations under S. 57 (3) within prescribed time — Proceedings if vitiated

Section 47 envisages two stages of inquiry (i) fixation of number of permits under Section 47 (3) and (ii) consideration thereafter of the applications for the grant of permit and representations, if any by persons mentioned in S 57 (3). While Section 57 (3) provides for making applications for the grant of permit and inviting of representations on receipt of such applications, the proviso to that sub-section authorises the Regional Transport Authority to reject even summarily the applications without following the procedure laid down in the sub section, if the grant of permit in accordance with the applications would go beyond the limits fixed under sub-section (3) of Section 47. That is, if a limit has been fixed under Section 47 (3) and that limit would be exceeded with the grant of permit, the Regional Transport Authority may in limine dismiss the applications for permit. If the Regional Transport Authority, without such summary rejection, proceeds to publish the applications and calls for representations, clearly it will be open to any person who would be affected to object to the grant, pointing out that the limit fixed would be exceeded. Equally it will be open to the objector to state, where no limit has been fixed, that the route is well served or the condition of the road is such that more buses cannot ply on the road etc. all germane and relevant considerations under Section 47 (1). Such representations can quite properly find a place in the representations made when called for, under S 57. The rule that where an inquiry under Sec. 47 (3) is necessary it must precede the disposal of applications for permit on their merits does not preclude the raising of all germane objections and relevant representations within the time prescribed. Once the objections raised and representations made call for a determination under Section 47 (3) under the rulings it is incumbent upon the Regional Transport Authority to take proceedings under Section 47 (3) first before embarking upon the merits of the applications under Section 57. But where the petitioner has not notified his objections to the grant of permit on the route, sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 57 read together would preclude the Regional Transport Authority from hearing the petitioner at the inquiry under Section 57 (3). Section 57 (4) bars the authority from considering any representation in connection with an application referred to in sub-section (3), unless the application is made in writing before the appointed date

The contention that the petitioner could not, in proceedings under Section 57 (3) raise objection as to want of a prior determination under Section 47 (3), is devoid of merits. It was open to him to raise that point before the Regional Transport Authority as an objector, being an operator on the route. (Para 5)

NATESAN, J.— The two writ petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution and the connected Writ Appeal directed against an interlocutory order in W. P. No. 1055 of 1968 vacating the interim stay granted before notice, relate to the grant of a stage carriage permit on the route Madampoondi to Ulundurpet (Via) La-Gudalur, Rishivandiam, etc. By a notification dated 16-12-1967, the Regional Transport Authority, South Arcot, under Section 57 (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act, invited applications for the grant of a stage carriage permit on the route. There were three applicants, for the route in question, the 2nd respondent in the writ petitions being one. On 12-1-1968 the applications were duly notified under Section 57 (3) and 8-2-1968 was fixed as the date, on or before which representations in connection with the applications should be submitted furnishing copies thereof simultaneously to the applicants. The applications with representations were originally scheduled to be taken up for consideration on 29-2-1968, but were adjourned to 12-3-1968.

The petitioner is a fleet owner operating 12 buses on a sector of the route in question. No representations or objections to the applications entertained by the Regional Transport Authority for permit on the route in question were submitted by the petitioner within the time prescribed. But, the petitioner sent a petition by registered post to the Regional Transport Authority which was acknowledged by the Regional Transport Authority, on 27-2-1968, praying that proceedings under Section 47 (3) should be taken before consideration of the applications for permit on the merits. Again, when the applications were actually taken up for consideration by the Regional Transport Authority on 12-3-1968, the petitioner appeared through Counsel and submitted that consideration of the applications should be postponed, pending determination under Section 47 (3). In the proceedings of the Regional Transport Authority dated 12-3-1968, the 2nd respondent in the writ petitions became grantee. From the proceedings it is seen that there was only one objector. Grant of the permit to the 2nd respondent was duly communicated to the applicants and the representator on 3-4-1968. The proceedings did not refer to the receipt of the petition filed by the petitioner and representation made on his behalf by his Counsel on 12-3-1968.

It is under these circumstances that the petitioner came to this Court first with W. P. No. 1055 of 1968 for the issue of a writ of prohibition. Later, after the 2nd respondent came on the scene and represented that the permit in question had been granted to him on 3-4-1968 itself, the petitioner applied for amendment of the relief of prohibition into one of certiorari. He also filed an independent application, W. P. No. 1794 of 1968 for the issue of a writ of certiorari to quash the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 12-3-1968.

2. The substantial contention of the petitioner is that there has been no inquiry under Section 47 (3) and the proceedings, taken under Section 57 (3) without a prior determination of the number of permits to be granted on the route in question, are vitiated. It is submitted that, as the petitioner, an existing operator on the route, had specifically objected to the hearing of the applications for permit on the merits without prior determination under Section 47 (3), the proceedings are void and without jurisdiction, and should be quashed. Reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in the batch of writ appeals and writ petitions, port Authority, Coimbatore and W. P.

 cision of the Supreme Court in Jayaram

3. There is no dispute that, for the route in question, there has been no prior determination under Section 47 (3). But the question is whether the proceedings are liable to be challenged under Art. 226 and quashed at the instance of the petitioner, who had admittedly made no representation under Section 57 (3) within the prescribed time. It is submitted for the 2nd respondent that, not having made any representation under Section 57 (3), the petitioner has no locus standi to be heard at the inquiry of the applications for permit on their merits, and that, therefore, he could not complain of the grant. It is submitted that it was open to the petitioner, by his representation under Section 57 (3), to question the need for the grant of permit on the route. Objections to the proposed grant, which would necessitate an inquiry under Section 47 (3) particularly under sub-cl (a) and (f) of Section 47 (1) it is said could have been taken. Our attention was drawn to Section 57 (4) which precludes consideration of any representation in connection with an application for permit, unless the representation had been made in writing before the appointed date, simultaneously furnishing a copy thereof to the applicant. In the circumstances, it was submitted that the Regional Transport Authority acted perfectly in accordance with law in not taking cognizance of the representation sent by post, just two days before the date fixed for inquiry, and the representation made by the petitioner's Counsel at the hearing on the adjourned date. The petitioner having no right of audience under Section 57 (4), representations, if any, made by him it is urged were non est

4. There can be doubt — and it has been so held following the decisions of the Supreme Court—that Section 47 envisages two stages of inquiry, (i) fixation of number of permits under Section 47 (3), and (ii) consideration thereafter of the applications for the grant of permit and representations, if any, by persons mentioned in S 57(3). In W A Nos 264 to 266 of 1967—(AIR 1969 Mad 441) in fact we have remarked, with reference to the cases then under consideration, that the Regional Transport Authority had no jurisdiction to proceed to consider the applications for permit without a prior determination under S 47(3). But we have to bear in mind the facts of the cases then considered. The Regional Transport Authority there had invited applications for the grant of additional permits on the route. The applicants for the route, besides filing applications for the grant of permit to themselves, had also made representations under Section 57 (3) objecting to the addition of new buses on the route, on the ground that the route in question was more than adequately served by the existing service. When the objectors wanted the Regional Transport Authority to first fix the maximum number of permits to be granted on the route under Section 47 (3), the Regional Transport Authority took the stand that orders under Section 47 (3) would be passed at the time of consideration of the applications. It is in those circumstances that the petitioners came up to this Court praying for the issue of a writ of prohibition and we observed inter alia:

"That being so, from all aspects and angles it could be said that at any rate when the existing operators or applicants call upon the Regional Transport Authority to fix the number of buses on the route, before entertaining the applications for permit, it is bound to do so under Section 47 (3)"

In that batch of cases the objectors in time made due representation and demanded that there must be a prior determination under S 47 (3). They had qualified themselves to be heard at the inquiry. The decision of ours in that batch of cases may be contrasted with our decision in W P No 406 of 1968 and W. A. No. 92 of 1968 (Mad), K. Naniappan v. Regional Transport Authority North Arcot at Vellore. In the later case the petitioner was one of several applicants for the grant of permit on the route. On representations being called for under Section 57 (3) to the applications received, the petitioner made no representation, on the applications of others, and raised no question about the need for a prior determination under Section 47 (3). The principal contention in this Court for the Writ petitioner was, that a determination under Section 47 (3) was an essential prerequisite and a matter which went into the jurisdiction of the authority, whether the petitioner had raised any objection before the Regional Transport Authority or not as to the need for additional bus and the adequacy or otherwise of the existing facilities. In dealing with the argument, we observed —

"Though it is a question of jurisdiction in one sense, when parties, at any rate, tacitly proceed on the basis that there is no need for fixation of a limit under Section 47 (3) or revision of the limit already fixed, it cannot be said that orders passed on such assumption are wholly void. If any of the objectors or any applicant at least in the alternative calls for a prior determination under Section 47 (3), then the objection ought to prevail before the Regional Transport Authority, and its failure to proceed under Section 47 (3) first would vitiate its order. In our view, in a matter of this kind, when an objection has not been taken by any one before the Regional Transport Authority, it cannot be said that the order is wholly void, and that objection could be raised at any stage, irrespective of other considerations and saving features."

5. The contention of Mr K. K. Venugopal that the petitioner could not, in proceedings under Section 57 (3) raise objection as to want of a prior determination under Section 47 (3), is devoid of merits. In fact, in our judgment in W. P. No 406 of 1968 (Mad) we remarked,

"It was open to him to raise that point before the Regional Transport Authority as an objector, being an operator on the route. He could have raised the point at least in the alternative."

In the batch W A. Nos 264 to 266 of 1967 — (AIR 1969 Mad 441) we said —

"Applications have been called for under Section 57 (2) and have been filed.

Objections have been preferred and affected parties have called for a determination under Section 47 (3). We see nothing in law which prevents the question of revision of the limit of stage carriages on a route being taken up even after applications have been called for and received."

It can make no difference, even if it is a case where there has been no prior inquiry at all under Section 47 (3). While Section 57 (3) provides for making applications for the grant of permit and inviting of representations on receipt of such applications, the proviso to that sub-section authorises the Regional Transport Authority to reject even summarily the applications without following the procedure laid down in the sub-section, if the grant of permit in accordance with the applications would go beyond the limits fixed under sub-section (3) of Section 47. That is, if a limit has been fixed under Section 47 (3) and that limit would be exceeded with the grant of permit, the Regional Transport Authority may in limine dismiss the applications for permit. If the Regional Transport Authority, without such summary rejection, proceeds to publish the applications and calls for representations, clearly it will be open to any person who would be affected to object to the grant, pointing out that the limit fixed would be exceeded. Equally it will be open to the objector to state, where no limit has been fixed, that the route is well served or the condition of the road is such that more buses cannot ply on the road etc. all germane and relevant considerations under Section 47 (1). Such representations can quite properly find a place in the representations made, when called for, under Section 57. The rule that where an inquiry under Section 47 (3) is necessary it must precede the disposal of applications for permit on their merits, does not preclude the raising of all germane objections and relevant representations within the time prescribed. Once the objections raised and representations made call for a determination under Section 47 (3), under the rulings it is incumbent upon the Regional Transport Authority to take proceedings under Section 47 (3) first before embarking upon the merits of the applications under Section 57.

6. We are not impressed with the contention of Mr. K. K. Venugopal that, as the legal position was not clear till the decision of this Court in W. A. Nos. 264 to 266 of 1967=(AIR 1969 Mad 441) following the decision of the Supreme Court in (1967) 2 SC WR 857 at p. 860, the petitioner could not take the objection earlier. As a matter of fact, the decision of this Court was given on 10-1-1968 and the last date for preferring objections, called for under Section 57 (3), was 8-2-1968. Further all that we laid down, following the observations of the Supreme Court in (1967) 2 SC WR 857 at p. 860 is that, when a determination under Section 47 (3) is required, an inquiry under Section 47 (3) should not be telescoped with the inquiry under Section 57 of the applications for the grant of permit on the merits. An enquiry under Section 47 (3) may be initiated by the authority itself or duly called for by parties interested. We pointed out that, once the number of vacancies is settled, the question canvassed and decided prior to the taking up of the applications for the grant of permit on the merits, it cannot become the subject of controversy at the further stage, when the actual merits of the applications are considered.

7. Here the petitioner has not notified his objections to the grant of permit on the route, and sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 57 read together preclude the Regional Transport Authority from hearing the petitioner at the inquiry under Section 57 (3). Section 57 (4) bars the authority from considering any representation in connection with an application referred to in sub-section (3), unless the application is made in writing before the appointed date. It is manifest that the objections now raised is a representation in connection with an application for permit contemplated in sub-section (3) of S. 57. The objections raised do relate to considerations provided under Section 47 (1). We cannot agree with the contention that the representation should be confined to the qualifications of the applicant for permit. True at the inquiry under Section 57 (5) the authority is concerned only with the choice of the operator.

It is pertinent in the context to remember the practice that was previously prevalent in this State on the receipt of applications for permit, referred to in our judgment in W. A. Nos. 264 to 266 of 1967=(AIR 1969 Mad 441) batch. Suppose a limit has been fixed under Section 47 (3) and, notwithstanding ignoring the proviso to Section 57 (3), the authority, without summarily rejecting the applications, proceed further publishing the applications and calling for representations. To accede to the petitioner's contention, would come to this, that it will not be open to an operator, on the route in his representation to raise even the patent objection that the grant of permit would exceed the limits. If he does not raise his objection in his representation, we fail to see how he can raise it at a later stage. The Motor Vehicles Code does not provide for an audience before the Regional Transport Authority at the inquiry under Section 57 (3) to persons who had made no representations. In Purushotham Bhai Punambhai Patel v. State Transport Ap- pellate Authority, Madhya Pradesh, C A. No. 762 of 1963 the Supreme Court held "We consider that the terms of S 57 (3) and (4) of the Act preclude any party who had not notified its objections in time to be heard at any stage of the proceedings original or appellate in relation to the grant of the permit on an application duly advertised under Section 57 (3)"

The decisions in Arunachalam Pillai v Southern Roadways Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 1191, Tai Mahal Transport Ltd v Secretary Regional Transport Authority Tirunelveli AIR 1966 Mad 8 and Swami Motor Transport (P) Ltd v Raman and Raman AIR 1961 Mad 180 relied upon by the petitioner, are clearly distinguishable and have no bearing on the question now under consideration. In the present case it does not appear whether even the only representator demanded an inquiry under Section 47 (3). The order of the Regional Transport Authority does not refer to any such objection from the representator. We do not think that the circumstances call for any interference by us in the matter under Art 226 of the Constitution. The writ petitions fail and are dismissed. As the writ appeal is from an interlocutory order in the writ petition it fails with the writ petition and is dismissed. Rules Nisi in the writ petitions are discharged. No order as to costs.

VEERASWAMI AND KRISHNASWAMI REDDY JJ.

The Weavers Mills Ltd Rajapalayam, Plaintiff-Appellant v. Balkis Ammal and others, Defendants, Respondents

Appeals Nos 28 and 178 of 1962 D/-1-9-1967 against decree of Sub J., Ramanathapuram at Madurai in O. S. No. 40 of 1959

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 11 and 9 — Decree — When can be set aside on ground of collusion and fraud.

A suit does not lie to set aside a judgment in a previous suit on the ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence. In order that fraud may be a ground for vacating a judgment, it must be a fraud that is extrinsic, or collateral to everything that has been adjudicated upon but not one that has been or must be deemed to have been dealt with by the Court. Suppression of evidence and even negligent conduct in the prior litigation would not be proper grounds for setting aside an earlier order. (Para 12)

On failure of the 2nd defendant to repay his personal loan, the 1st defendant obtained a decree and attached certain property in execution of the decree. Execution proceedings were resisted by the 2nd defendant. He was also a promoter and Managing Director of the plaintiff-Company and in that capacity filed a suit for declaration that the attached property belonged to the Company. While dismissing the suit the Court relied on facts that the prospectus which ought to mention properties was not produced, nor was any resolution adopting the purchase. Second suit was filed by the Company to set aside judgment in earlier suit on ground that 1st and 2nd defendants were in collusion and obtained the judgment by fraud.

Held, that the second suit was barred by res judicata. In view of the fact that the 2nd defendant resisted execution proceedings and consistently claimed that the property belonged to the Company, the mere fact that the prospectus was not produced would not amount to fraud or collusion extrinsic to the trial in earlier suit so as to vitiate judgment and decree in that suit. AIR 1919 Mad 1044 (FB) and AIR 1916 Mad 364 and AIR 1962 Andh Pra 274 and (1967) 82 Mad LW 167, Rel. on.

(B) Trusts Act (1882), Ss. 94, 92, 88, 3 — Promoter of Company — Status of — Purchase of immovable property by promoter for Company — Benefit of purchase passes to Company on its incorporation — (Contract Act (1872), S. 182) — (Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 3) — (Companies Act (1956), Ss. 40, 12).

As to the exact legal status of promoters, the statutory provisions both in England and in this country are silent in most part except for a couple of sections in the Specific Relief Act, both old and new ones. A promoter is neither an agent nor a trustee of the company under incorporation but certain fiduciary duties have been imposed on him both under the English Companies Act, 1948 and the Indian Companies Act, 1956. He is not an agent because there is no principal and he is not a trustee as there is no cestui que trust in existence. There can be no agent for a non-existing principal, nor a trustee for a non-existing cestui que trust. Though a promoter is neither an agent nor a trustee of the company under incorporation, however, in respect of transactions on behalf of it, he stands in a fiduciary position. Sections 92 and 94 of the Trusts Act are not attracted. No trust as defined by Section 3 of the Act is brought about by the purchases made by the promoters. The legal position of a promoter in relation to his acts, particularly purchase of immoveable properties on behalf of the company under incorporation, is a peculiar one not capable of being brought into any established or recognised norms of the law as to its character as an agent or a trustee. But, at the same time he does stand in a certain fiduciary position in relation to the company under incorporation. When he does certain things for the benefit of it, as for instance, purchase of immoveable properties, he is not at liberty to deny that benefit to the company when incorporated. In such a case the benefit of the purchase passes on to the company when incorporated. (Paras 16, 18).

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 9, 5, 54 — Purchase of immovable property by promoter of company — Adoption of benefit of purchase by Company — Absence of conveyance by promoter in favour of Company under registered document — No effect on transfer of title to Company — (Companies Act (1956), S. 46) — (Trusts Act (1882), S. 83) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes — Absence of prohibition implies permission) — (Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (1)).

The Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive of the kind of transfers. The test, therefore, in this country, to determine whether a transaction (be it a transfer or not) can be made without writing is to see if it is expressly required by law to be in writing. If the transaction is a 'transfer of property' and there is no express provision of law requiring it to be in writing, Section 9 will enable it to be made without writing. If on the other hand, the transaction is not a 'transfer of property' and there is no express provision of law requiring it to be in writing, the general principle referred to above will enable it to be validly made without writing. Section 9 underlies the general principle that everything is to be taken permissible unless there is a prohibition against it and has been inserted in the statute ex abundanti cautela. 1959-2 Mad LJ 502, Foll. (Para 18)

Where the promoter of a Company purchased properties expressly stating that he did so as representatives of the company to be formed, that the funds therefore, did not belong to him and that on incorporation the company assumed possession and built structures upon them, it is clear that the Company adopted the benefit of purchase. The Company's title to the property purchased by its promoter before incorporation, cannot, therefore, be set aside on the ground that there is no conveyance by the promoter, in favour of the Company after its incorporation, under a registered document. (Paras 18, 19)

(D) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 9 — Purchase of certain property by defendant 1 in execution of decree against defendant 2 — Finding by Court in suit by plaintiff for possession of property claiming the same to be his that plaintiff is entitled to that property and also to recover possession — Direction by Court that plaintiff to deposit purchase money before recovering possession is invalid (obiter). (Para 4)

 R. Gopalaswami Iyengar and M. Srinivasan, for Appellant; T. R. Mani, for Respondents.

VEERASWAMI J.:— These appeals arise out of the same judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Ramanathapuram, at Madurai, in a suit instituted by the appellant in A. S. 28 of 1962 for declaration of its title to the suit properties and for an injunction restraining the first defendant from executing the decree obtained by her (the first defendant who is the appellant in the other appeal A. S. 178 of 1962) in O. S. 16 of 1949 or in the alternative to set aside the judgment and decree in O. S. 3 of 1958, both on the file of the same Subordinate Judge. The appellant in A. S. 28 of 1962 is a limited liability company incorporated under the provisions of the Indian Companies Act, on 12-7-48, with its registered office at Rajapalayam. Two of its promoters, one of them the 2nd defendant in the suit and the other by name Ayyadurai alias Madeswamy Mooppanar, purchased the suit lands under two registered sale deeds dated June 17th and June 18th of 1945, for a total consideration of Rs. 11000 from one Ramaswami Raja and Ranganammal. In O. S. 16 of 1949, the 1st defendant obtained a decree against defendants 2 and 3 for a sum of Rs. 10000 due under a promissory note that had been executed by them. Admittedly, the loan was obtained by the promisors for their personal purposes. In execution of the decree, the first defendant attached the suit properties and brought them to sale in E. P. 60 of 1955. An application of the second defendant representing the company in E. A. 301 of 1956 under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., was dismissed on 29-10-1957 and thereafter he instituted, in his capacity as Managing director of Jayam and Co., the Managing Agents of the company, O. S. No. 3 of 1958 to set aside the order in E. A. 301 of 1956, but without success. No appeal was filed from the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958.

By resolutions dated 27-7-1959, the second defendant was removed from the Managing directorship of Jayam and Co., and of the plaintiff-company and one A. M. Chinnna Guruswami Moopanar was appointed in his place. The present suit out of which the appeals arise has been instituted by the company through its managing agency Jayam and Co. Ltd. represented by its Managing director Chinnna Guruswami Moopanar. The plaintiff's case is that the suit properties were purchased by the second defendant and Ayyadurai alias Madasami Moopanar as representatives and on behalf of Raapalayam Weavers Mills which was to be incorporated later and that on its incorporation the Municipal registry of the properties stood in the name of the company and it has been paying the Municipal tax therefor. According to the plaintiff, nevertheless, defendants 2 and 3 colluded with the first defendant and allowed the application under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. and O. S. 3 of 1958, to be dismissed and thus fraudulently allowed the properties to be attached and brought to sale in discharge of their own personal debts. On those averments, the plaintiff company sought the reliefs mentioned by us at the outset. It claimed that the suit properties belonged to the company, that this position had been accepted on all hands and building for the purpose of the company has since been erected before the attachment and that though the company was ex nomine a party to the claim application and the suit, as the interests of the company were not properly placed and represented before the Court on account of the collusion between the defendants and their fraudulent conduct, the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 was null and void and was not binding on the plaintiff.

2. The first two defendants filed separate written statements while the third defendant remained ex parte. The first defendant denied any collusion or fraudulent conduct on her part and asserted that the properties belonged to the second defendant and that ever since their purchase, they had been in the possession and enjoyment of the second defendant himself. The first defendant also pleaded that both the application under Order 21 Rule 58, C. P. C. and the claim suit were hotly fought out by the second defendant and that, therefore, the present suit was barred by res judicata by reason of the judgment and decree in O. S. 3 of 1958. The Second defendant also denied the plaintiff allegations of fraud and collusion on his part and maintained that all the directors of the company knew full well the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 and its execution. He did not accept that he mismanaged the affairs of the company and stated that he could not be removed from directorship until the expiry of 20 years from the date of the incorporation of the plaintiff-company. On that ground he urged that the suit itself as framed was not maintainable. At the trial, the second defendant remained absent and his counsel reported no instructions.

3. The Court below framed appropriate issues and found that the suit properties belonged to the plaintiff company, that the judgment and decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 on account of fraud and collusion on the part of defendants 2 and 3 were not binding on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff prayers should be granted. It also found that removal of the second defendant from the managing directorship was true, valid and binding on him and the suit was maintainable. This last finding is no longer in dispute before us. While granting a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for, the Court below directed it to deposit a sum of Rs. 23,301, for which the properties were purchased by the first defendant in execution of her decree within a specified period, as a condition to recover possession. The company aggrieved by the direction has appealed to this Court and likewise the first defendant against the decree declaring the title of the plaintiff-company to the suit properties and for possession.

4. On the view the Court below took on the plaintiff's claim to title and possession, we cannot but express our surprise at the Court below having directed the company to deposit a sum of money as a condition to recover possession. We fail to see how, in view of the findings arrived at by the Court below, it could properly direct the plaintiff to do that. If the plaintiff was entitled to the properties and also to recover possession, it is certainly not under an obligation to deposit any sum of money as a condition for recovery of possession. In fact, the Court below has given no justification in its judgment for making such a direction.

Since we have come to the conclusion for the reasons which would presently appear, to allow the appeal of the first defendant and dismiss the suit, it should follow that App. No. 28 of 1962 should be dismissed.

5. In the other appeal, substantial contentions for the appellant are (1) that the declaration of the Court below of the plaintiff's title to the suit properties is erroneous and (2) that in any case the judgment and decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 bar the present suit by res judicata. The first contention is not quite free from difficulty but we have reached the conclusion that the finding of the Court below on this question does not call for interference. But the second contention, in our opinion, has force and we accept it.

6. In O. S. 3 of 1958 the issue directly arose for decision as to whether the suit properties belonged to the company. The suit was instituted by the company through its Managing agents Jayam and Co. Ltd., represented by the Managing director the second defendant in the present litigation. The prayer was to set aside an order of the executing Court in E. A. 301 of 1956, rejecting the claim of the company that it was entitled to and was in possession of the properties. The company was the applicant represented by its Managing director the second defendant. The Court found that there was nothing to show that after 1957 the company was in possession of the properties or in February 1956. In O. S. 3 of 1958 the company sought to set aside the order in its claim petition on the ground that it was entitled to the properties, that they had been purchased by two of its promoters for purposes of the Company, that after its incorporation it adopted the transactions and got into possession of the properties and that pucca mill buildings were constructed on the land though they remained incomplete. The present first defendant also figured as the first defendant in that suit and curiously the second defendant, who, in his capacity as Managing director of the company, instituted the suit figured as the second defendant but in his personal capacity. The second issue in that suit was whether the suit properties belonged to the plaintiff the Weavers Mills Ltd. at Rajapalayam and it was decided against the plaintiff with the result that the suit was dismissed. Though the issue was framed in that manner, the court posed the question for its decision as to whether the title to the properties had passed to the plaintiff-company. In answering the question against the plaintiff, the court relied on the fact that the prospectus which ought to mention the properties was not produced, nor was any resolution adopting the purchase of the properties proved. The Court also noticed that patta stood in the sole name of the second defendant, that the purchase of the properties was with the funds contributed by the second defendant, and Ayyadurai and that subscriptions from other shareholders came in only subsequent to the purchase. The decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 was therefore, a clear decision on the question of title as between the very parties before us, except of course the third defendant who did not figure in the earlier suit, and would operate as res judicata.

7. But the company in the instant suit urged that the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 was invalid and not binding on it because defendants 1 to 3 colluded together to have the debt owed by the second defendant to the first defendant discharged from out of the properties of the company and that in implementation of the scheme defendants 2 and 3 in collusion with the first defendant, allowed O. S. 3 of 1958 to be dismissed and wilfully failed to file an appeal against that decree. The company also urged that the other directors of the company were kept in the dark and the second defendant in collusion with the first fraudulently suppressed from them the fact of the claim suit being dismissed. The company would also have it that in order to give a colour of reality, the second defendant filed a claim petition to raise the attachment effected on the suit properties in execution of the decree in O. S. 16 of 1949 and that in truth the several execution proceedings were designed by defendants 1 and 2 in collusion to defeat its rights to the suit properties.

As we said, the Court below was prepared to accept the attack on the validity of the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 and declared it to be null and void and not binding on the plaintiff. The main grounds for coming to that conclusion are (1) the second defendant himself did not at any time claim title in himself to the suit properties and in a sense his interest in O. S. 3 of 1958 was adverse to that of the company which he purported to represent as its Managing director; (2) the circumstances appearing in the case would show that both defendants 1 and 2 colluded together and fraudulently brought about the dismissal of O. S. 3 of 1958 thereby depriving the company of the suit properties and (3) the second defendant's conduct in the present suit in not producing certain documents though the plaintiff called upon him by notice to do so was suggestive of fraud and collusion between the first defendant and himself. The circumstances referred to in the second ground were stated by the Court below to be that in O. S. 3 of 1958 the second defendant did not produce the prospectus of the company and that was the main reason why that suit was dismissed and further he did not produce the resolution of the Board of Directors of the company though there was one which had ratified the purchase of the suit properties. The Court below observed that its conclusion was substantially supported by the fact that the second defendant did not properly conduct O S 3 of 1958 and by the further conduct of the second defendant in the present suit by remaining ex parte at the trial stage, though he had earlier filed a written statement in which he supported the claim of the company as to its title to the suit properties.

8. Before us, the argument for the appellant in A S 178 of 1962 is that not only there is no evidence to support the finding of collusion between defendants 1 and 2 and fraud on their part but there was no fraud or collusion extrinsic to the trial in O S 3 of 1958 to vitiate the judgment and decree in that suit and render them not binding as between the parties thereto.

9. The plaint in the present suit proceeds on the footing that defendants 2 and 3 borrowed from the first defendant for their personal use and executed a promissory note for a sum of Rs 10000 and that the amount was not repaid by them. There is, therefore, no challenge against the decree in O S 16 of 1949 as one obtained with any ulterior purpose. The decree in that suit was dated 27-4-1951. The present second defendant, who was the first defendant in that suit, preferred an appeal against the decree in A S 342 of 1952, which was dismissed. The first defendant decreeholder, as is evident from the proceedings in execution of the decree had a tough job and had to file as many as six execution petitions. The first of them was E P 61 of 1951 filed on 20-8-1951 for attachment and sale of the suit properties as belonging to the second defendant and it was dismissed in October 1952 on the ground that no attachment could be properly effected for want of proper description of the suit properties. It appears that the properties were described as vacant lands but it turned out that there were incomplete buildings thereon. E P 33 of 1952, 52 of 1953 and 3 of 1954 were for arrest but each of them had to be dismissed as the second defendant was reported to be absconding. There were two other unnumbered execution petitions in 1953 and 1955 both for attachment and sale. Finally, the execution petition E P 60 of 1955 resulted in attachment of the properties on 11-2-1955. The second defendant appeared and filed a counter statement in which he claimed relief under Act 1 of 1953.

In October 1956 he filed E. A. 301 of 1956 in his capacity as the Managing director of the Mills to raise the attachment on the ground that the properties belonged to the company (Mills). This petition having been dismissed in October 1957, the company represented by the second defendant as its Managing director instituted O S 3 of 1958 to set aside the claim order. In that suit, the second defendant himself gave evidence and produced certain documents in support of the company's title to the properties. But the dismissal of the suit was mainly rested on the ground that "the suppression of the prospectus would give rise to presumption that if produced it would go against the plaintiff's case". There is nothing in the execution proceedings or in the proceedings in O S 3 of 1958 to show that defendants 1 and 2 colluded or employed fraud jointly or each by herself or himself on the company to defeat its rights in those proceedings. On the other hand, what appears is that the second defendant had been contesting the execution of the decree in O S 16 of 1949 against the suit properties and has all along been asserting and trying to establish its title to the properties by means of the claim petition and also of the subsequent suit. It is true that the second defendant did not file an appeal against the decree in O S 3 of 1958 but his plea was want of funds and proper support from the fellow directors in this regard. So far as the first defendant is concerned, there is nothing in the record including the oral evidence in the suit as to justify the finding that she colluded with the second defendant or was guilty of any fraud of any kind as against the company's interests. As we said, the first defendant had no easy task of executing the decree both personally against the second defendant and against the suit properties.

10. The Court below was perhaps right in its view that the present second defendant's interests in O S 3 of 1958 were adverse to those of the Company, but it is only in a theoretical sense, for we find that at no time did he set up in himself the title to the properties and all the time on the other hand, he had been asserting that the properties belonged to the company ever since its incorporation. The failure on the part of the second defendant to produce the prospectus of the company in that suit is certainly not suggestive of fraud on his part or collusion between him and the first defendant. We are wholly unconvinced on the record that defendants 1 and 2 colluded together and fraudulently brought about the dismissal of O S 3 of 1958. The facts and circumstances emerging from the evidence do not lead us to that conclusion; nor can we infer from the conduct of the second defendant in the present suit any indication of any such fraud or collusion. We are unable to believe the oral evidence for the plaintiff company that its directors were either kept in dark by the second defendant as to the proceedings in the Court relating to the suit properties in both the earlier suits or that they did not know about them contemporaneously. It is not possible to predicate from the materials before us that the other Directors could have better conducted O. S. 3 of 1958, than the second defendant in the present suit. We accordingly disagree with the finding of the Court below and hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 was vitiated by fraud and collusion on the part of or as between defendants 1 and 2 against the company.

11. In any case, as is rightly contended for the appellant in A. S. 178 of 1962, the judgment and decree in O. S. 3 of 1958 do not suffer from any extrinsic fraud so as to set them at large and permit the parties to raise the same issue which has been finally and conclusively adjudicated as between them in that suit. It is suggested, and the Court below has accepted that view, that suppression of the prospectus in O. S. 3 of 1958 by the second defendant, as it was put by the Court in that suit, amounted to a fraud on Court which misled it into dismissing that suit. As we already indicated, when the Court in that suit used the phraseology "suppression" all that it meant was that the second defendant as representing the plaintiff-company failed to produce the prospectus. Even assuming that it was a deliberate suppression on the part of the second defendant while he represented the plaintiff-company that in itself would not render the judgment and decree in that suit null and void leaving the issues as to title open for a fresh trial as between the parties.

12. On that matter, though there was difference of opinion in this Court earlier, Kadirvelu Nainar v. Kuppuswami Naicker ILR 41 Mad 743 = (AIR 1919 Mad 1044) settled it by overruling Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick, (1906) ILR 29 Mad 179 and accepting the principle in Chinnayya v. Ramanna, ILR 38 Mad 203 = (AIR 1916 Mad 364). ILR 41 Mad 743 = (AIR 1919 Mad 1044) held that a suit did not lie to set aside a judgment in a previous suit on the ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence. ILR 38 Mad 203 = (AIR 1916 Mad 364) also was a case to set aside an earlier judgment on a similar ground. Sundara Aiyar J. who spoke for the Division Bench consisting of himself and Benson, J., elaborately discussed the question and held:—

"In order that fraud may be a ground for vacating a judgment, it must be a fraud that is extrinsic or collateral to everything that has been adjudicated upon but not one that has been or must be deemed to have been dealt with by the Court."

The learned Judges were not prepared to accept the view of Boddam and Moore,

JJ. in (1906) ILR 29 Mad 179 that deliberate perjury was a ground to set aside an earlier judgment. ILR 38 Mad 203 at 208 = (AIR 1916 Mad 364 at p. 366) explained by illustration what it meant by extrinsic fraud in the context:

"If, for instance, a party be prevented by his opponent from conducting his case properly by tricks or misrepresentation, that would amount to fraud. There may also be fraud upon the Court if, in a proceeding in which a party is entitled to get an order without notice to the other side, he procures it by suppressing facts which the law makes it his duty to disclose to the Court. But where two parties fight at arm's length, it is the duty of each to question the allegations made by the other and to adduce all available evidence regarding the truth or falsehood of it. Neither of them can neglect his duty and afterwards claim to show that the allegation of his opponent was false."

The learned Judge noticed the classical observations of Lord Justice James in Flower v. Llyod, 1879-10 Ch D 327 at p. 333 which are well worth reproduction:—

"Assuming all the alleged falsehood and fraud to have been substantiated is such a suit as the present sustainable? That question would require very grave consideration indeed, before it is answered in the affirmative. Where is litigation to end if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris and at arm's length could be set aside by a fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first action, or that false answers had been given to interrogatories or a misleading production of documents or of a machine or of a process had been given?..... Perjuries, falsehoods, frauds, when detected, must be punished and punished severely, but in their desire to prevent parties litigant from obtaining any benefit from such foul means, the Courts must not forget the evils which may arise from opening such new sources of litigation, amongst such evils not the least being that it would be certain to multiply indefinitely the mass of those very perjuries, falsehoods and frauds."

That extrinsic fraud alone can be a ground for setting aside an earlier judgment has been at length considered and affirmed by our learned brothers Ramamurti and Alagriswami, JJ. recently in A. S. No. 347 of 1962 (Mad), Jagannath v. Perumal Naidu. In fact this judgment relieves us from the necessity of an extensive consideration of the question. The learned Judges held:—

.. "We therefore, hold that even if the plaintiff was guilty of suppression of the release deed Ex. B-15, executed by him, the preliminary decree cannot be said to be vitiated by extrinsic fraud....."

L. V. Apte v R G N Price, AIR 1962 Andh Pra 274 is even more directly in point for our present purposes where it was held that suppression of evidence and even negligent conduct in the prior litigation would not be proper grounds for setting aside an earlier order

13 In the case before us, there is no question of any extrinsic fraud alleged or suppression on the part of the first defendant or the second defendant or both together. We hold, therefore, that the judgment and decree in O S 3 of 1958 are binding as between the plaintiff on the one hand and the first defendant as well as the second on the other and conclude the question of title against the plaintiff and it is not open to the plaintiff to re-agitate it in the present litigation as it is barred by res judicata. That will suffice to allow appeal No 179 of 1962

14. We shall, however, proceed to consider the first ground relating to the plaintiffs' title to the suit properties on the merits. It is said that though they were purchased in June 1945, by the 2nd defendant and another, they did so as representatives of the Weavers Mills Ltd, Rajapalayam, that the purchasers as promoters stood in a fiduciary position to the company to be incorporated and that on its incorporation in July 1948, the properties automatically vested in it as the true owner. The contention is reinforced by stating that the prospectus set out the properties as those belonging to the company, that there was a resolution of the General body adopting the purchases of the properties by the second defendant for the company and that subsequently after the incorporation, the plaintiff-company assumed possession and constructed pucca buildings thereon. It is pressed upon us that when property was purchased by promoters, they held the same in trust which on incorporation vested in the company and that such a transfer was a valid one not required to be in writing. On this process of reasoning, it is maintained for the company that at the time of the attachment of the properties, they belonged to it by adoption and recognition. The argument for the decree-holder purchaser is that short of a conveyance by the promoters, who purchased the properties, to the company after its incorporation, the company could not claim title thereto. Inasmuch as there was in fact no transfer of the properties to the company by a registered conveyance, the mere fact of its having assumed possession and put up buildings thereon or even the fact that the properties were shown in the prospectus as belonging to the company will not invest it with the ownership of the properties.

15. The question thus raised is of general importance. On facts, there is no doubt on record before us that the company after its incorporation had assumed possession of the lands purchased by the second defendant and another and built on them, though the constructions were left unfinished and the company never started its business. The prospectus has not been filed in this case, nor the resolution of the General Body, and it is not, therefore, possible to say whether the properties were treated as belonging to the company by adoption and recognition. One other fact which admits of no doubt is that the second defendant never claimed that the funds for the purchase of the properties ever came from him or the one who joined with him, personally. It is in the setting of these circumstances we have to consider whether the company became the owner of the properties.

16. There is very little guidance in the Companies Act, 1913 and the new Act to decide the question before us. One of us in W P Nos 475, 555 and 1249 of 1960 (Mad), Nandi Transport (P) Ltd. v S T. A. T. had occasion to consider in a different context the legal implications in relationship of a promoter and the company under incorporation. There was there an elaborate consideration of that matter with reference to authorities, A Division Bench in appeal W. A. Nos 85 and 86 of 1963 (Mad), Palaniswami v. Nandi Transports (P) Ltd., and etc, arising out of those petitions also covered the question in some detail. But, for our present purpose, we think it is not necessary to cover the entire ground. A promoter according to Cockburn C J in Twycross v. Grant, (1877) 2 C P D 469 is one who undertakes to form a company with reference to a given project and to set it going and who takes the necessary steps to accomplish that purpose. 6 Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., page 91 and Palmer's Company Law 19th Edn. 322, elaborate this idea. In the writ petitions, one of us after referring to these authorities summed up the position of a promoter:—

"A 'Promoter' therefore, is a compound term given to a person who undertakes, does and goes through all the necessary and incidental preliminaries, keeping in view the objects, to bring into existence an incorporated company. This process leading to the genesis of a company may include a variety of things, not the least of them, I think, being some of the steps taken by a promoter to ensure commencement, within a reasonable time, of the business, for the carrying on of which the company is formed. He makes purchase of moveable and immoveable assets, enters into contracts involving rights and obligations and applies to authorities for a variety of things, all on behalf of the company to be formed."

As to the exact legal status of promoters, the statutory provisions, both in England and in this country are silent in most part except for a couple of sections in the Specific Relief Act, both old and new ones. It appears that a promoter is neither an agent nor a trustee of the company under incorporation but certain fiduciary duties have been imposed on him both under the English Companies Act 1948 and the Indian Companies Act, 1956. He is not an agent because there is no principal and he is not a trustee as there is no cestui que trust in existence. There can be no agent for a non-existing principal, nor a trustee for a non-existing cestui que trust. It is on this ground that the doctrine of ratification by the company was regarded as inapplicable to the actual promoter vis-à-vis the company under incorporation. We do not refer to the earlier view held in 1821 in England which assumed that Corporation could on its incorporation ratify, or hold the promoter personally liable as it liked. The dictum of Lord Cottenham in Edwards v. Grand Junction Ry. Co., (1836) 1 My & Cr 650, at p. 672 that 'if the company and the projectors cannot be identified, still it is clear that the company have succeeded to, and are now in possession of, all that the projectors had before; they are entitled to all the rights and subject to all their liabilities', does not appear to have been endorsed as correct in every respect by the House of Lords after 1856. In Kelner v. Baxter, 1866-2 CP 174, it was held that a contract entered into by a promoter could not be ratified by a company after its incorporation. Willes, J. one of the learned Judges who decided that case observed at page 184—

"I apprehend the company could only become liable, upon a new contract. It would require the assent of the plaintiff to discharge the defendants. Could the company become liable by a mere ratification? Clearly not. Ratification can only be by a person ascertained at the time of the act done—by a person in existence either actually or in contemplation of law."

Lord Davey in Natal Land and Colonisation Co. Ltd. v. Pauline Colliery Syndicate, 1904 AC 120, speaking for the Judicial Committee stated that a company could not by adoption or ratification obtain the benefit of a contract purporting to have been made on its behalf before the company came into existence and that in order to do so a new contract must be made with it after its incorporation on the terms of the old one. Sections 21 (f), 23 (h) and 27 (e) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, were perhaps based on the doctrine of Lord Cottenham that a company after its incorporation was a successor to and took the place of the promoters in relation to contracts entered into by them for the purposes of the company and warranted by the terms of the incorporation. Though the first two sections do not seem to be rested on any theory of agency or trust, Section 27 (e) was possibly founded on some kind of quasi agency or of trust. To this extent, the Indian Legislature in enacting the Specific Relief Act, 1877, would appear to have departed from the English view in 1866-2 CP 174 and 1904 AC 120. These sections in the Specific Relief Act are concerned with executory contracts and cannot possibly be applied to conveyances of immoveable properties in favour of promoters of a company under incorporation.

17. Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act defines 'transfer of property' as an act by which a living person conveys property in present or in future to one or more other living persons. But a 'living person' by the statutory direction includes a company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. Inasmuch as the purchases of the properties in this case were by promoters before incorporation of the plaintiff-company, it is said for the decree-holder-purchaser that in the absence of a conveyance by the promoters in favour of the company after its incorporation under a registered document, the company cannot claim title thereto. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and S. 17 (1) of the Registration Act are relied on in support of the contention. In our opinion, though this is a possible view, a better view to take is that the instant case is covered by Section 9 of the Transfer of Property Act.

18. That section says that a transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law. The Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive of the kind of transfers. We are inclined to agree with the proposition of Ramaswami J., in Sarandaya Pillai v. Sankarlinga Pillai 1959-2 Mad LJ 502 at p. 503 namely, that "the test, therefore, in this country to determine whether a transaction (be it a transfer or not) can be made without writing is to see if it is expressly required by law to be in writing. If the transaction is a 'transfer of property' and there is no express provision of law requiring it to be in writing, Section 9 will enable it to be made without writing. If on the other hand, the transaction is not a 'transfer of property' and there is no express provision of law requiring it to be in writing, the general principle referred to above will enable it to be validly made without writing." The learned Judge, if we may say so with respect, rightly pointed out that Section 9 underlines the general principle that everything is to be taken permissible unless there is a prohibition against it and has been inserted in the statute ex abundanti cautela.

While we accept the position that a promoter is neither an agent nor a trustee of the company under incorporation, we are inclined to think that in respect of transactions on behalf of it, he stands in a fiduciary position. For the plaintiff-company Sections 92 and 94 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, were relied upon. It seems to us that neither of these sections is of assistance to it. These sections, as we think, contemplate transactions as between persons in existence. In any case, it seems to us that no trust as defined by Section 3 of the Act is brought about by the purchases made by the promoters. The legal position of a promoter in relation to his acts, particularly purchase of immoveable properties on behalf of the company under incorporation, is a peculiar one not capable of being brought into any established or recognised norms of the law as to its character as an agent or a trustee. But, at the same time it is impossible, to our minds, to deny that he does stand in a certain fiduciary position in relation to the company under incorporation. When he does certain things for the benefit of it, as for instance, purchase of immoveable properties, he is not at liberty to deny that benefit to the company when incorporated. We are prepared to hold that in such a case the benefit of the purchase will pass on to the company when incorporated. Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn paragraph 194, says that a promoter stands in a fiduciary position with respect to the company which he promotes from the time when he first becomes until he ceases to be a promoter thereof. It is also pointed out that a promoter may acquire assets as a trustee for a company. Though the cases relied on for these propositions were of the year 1877 or thereabouts, we do not see why the principle of the dictum of Lord Cottenham should not, in justice and equity, be invoked to clothe the promoter with the mantle of fiduciary position with respect to the company under incorporation with the implication that when incorporated the company will succeed to the beneficial acts transacted on its behalf by the promoter.

19. As we already noted, the second defendant and another purchased these properties expressly stating that they did so as representatives of the company to be formed, that the funds therefor did not belong to them and that on incorporation the company assumed possession and built upon them. These facts clearly show that the company adopted the benefit of the purchase if adoption is a requisite at all for passing of such benefits to the company on incorporation. On this view, it follows that the suit properties did belong to the plaintiff company.

ALAGIRISWAMI, J

Ramachandra Sarma, Appellant v. Ayesha Begum and others, Respondents
Second Appeal No 204 of 1964, D/-1-3-1968 against decree of Dist Court, Salem in A S No 485 of 1962.

Specific Relief Act (1877), Section 21 — Contract Act (1872), Sections 2 (d) and 10 — Agreement for resale of properties in favour of minor plaintiffs' father — Father assigning his rights to plaintiffs — Suit for specific performance in favour of plaintiffs can be decreed — Doctrine of want of mutuality — Test — Must be judged as on date of contract.

Where an infant plaintiff claims under a party who himself could have obtained specific performance such infancy is no ground for refusing specific performance.

(Para 2)
A contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual, that is to say such that it might at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. The relevant date on which this test of mutuality is to be applied is the date of the contract itself and not the date on which it is sought to be enforced.

Therefore, where the father of the minor plaintiffs sold his property to the defendant and on the same date the defendant executed a registered deed of agreement for resale in favour of the plaintiffs' father who assigned his rights under the agreement of resale to the plaintiffs.

Held, there could be no valid legal objection to granting a decree for specific performance in favour of the plaintiffs. The original contract was between the two adults and it was valid. It was not hit by the doctrine of want of mutuality. It was not a case of contract by a guardian of a minor on behalf of the minor to purchase the property for the minor. The fact that the assignee happened to be a minor did not mean that the contract could not be enforced by the assignee minors or that it could not be enforced as against the assignee minors. Case law discussed. (Para 1)

JUDGMENT: This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance. The suit property belonged to the father of the plaintiffs. He sold the suit property on 24-1-1956 to the defendant. On the same date, the defendant executed a registered deed of agreement for resale in favour of the plaintiffs' father. On 12-7-1957, the plaintiffs' father assigned the rights under the agreement of resale in his favour to the plaintiffs. To the plaintiffs' claim for specific performance, the defendant's contention was that the father of the plaintiffs had no right to assign the agreement of reconveyance, that there was no valid tender and that the suit was not maintainable, as the plaintiffs were minors. The only question of substance that was argued before this Court was that the plaintiffs could not maintain this suit as they are minors and the test of mutuality is not satisfied in this case. The plaintiffs based their contention on the decision in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin, (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC) which was followed by a Full Bench of this Court in Venkatachalam Pillai v. Sethuramarao, AIR 1933 Mad 322 (FB). In the Privy Council case in (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC) the guardian of a minor entered into an agreement with another for the purchase of certain immoveable property by the minor. The minor after attaining the majority sued for specific performance of the contract. Their Lordships laid down the law as follows—

"They are however of opinion that it is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property, and they are further of opinion that as the minor in the present case was not bound by the contract, there was no mutuality, and that the minor who has now reached majority cannot obtain specific performance of the contract".

In AIR 1933 Mad 322, there was a sale in respect of a minor's property executed by his guardian and there was a covenant that in case the vendee sold the property, he should resell it to the minor or his heirs. It was held as follows—

"that the agreement for sale in the sale deed being an executory contract without mutuality was unenforceable by either party in a suit for specific performance irrespective of the question whether the contract was for the benefit of the minor or not".

Before the Full Bench an attempt was made to get over the effect of the Privy Council decision by urging that as in the case before the Full Bench, the contract was for the benefit of the minor he should be able to enforce specific performance of the contract. But the Full Bench pointed out that in the case before the Privy Council the contract was validly entered into and was for the benefit of the minor and was even ratified by him. The effect of these decisions seems to be considerably shaken by a later decision of the Privy Council in Subrahmanyam v. Subbarao, AIR 1948 PC 95. Dealing with this question under the heading "Minors and the Doctrine of Mutuality" in his book, "The Law of Specific Relief" Prof. G. C. Venkatasubba Rao at page 159 observes as follows—

"Since the decision of the Privy Council in (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC), it must be taken as settled law that the doctrine of mutuality applies to India". He observes at page 160 as follows—

"Thus it is clear that an executory contract for the transfer of immoveable property in favour of a minor is not capable of specific performance. In AIR 1933 Mad 322 (FB), dealing with an agreement of resale contained in a sale deed executed by a guardian and sought to be enforced by the minor after attainment of majority, the Madras High Court observed — "The validity or enforceability of such a contract does not therefore, depend upon the question whether it was conducive to the benefit of the minor or not". That contract was held to be unenforceable specifically as it was lacking in mutuality

"It may, therefore, be taken as well settled that an executory contract for the purchase of immoveable property entered into by a guardian on behalf of the minor is not capable of specific performance either at the instance of the seller or at the instance of the minor purchaser".

At page 162 it is observed as follows—

"A recent decision of the Privy Council in AIR 1948 PC 95 has considerably shaken the authority of the long catena of decisions noticed above. In the case before the Privy Council the mother as the guardian of her minor son entered into an agreement for the sale of the minor's lands. The intended transferee was put in possession pursuant to the contract. The minor, however, sued by his next friend for recovery of possession of the properties. The defendant vendee relied upon the doctrine of part performance embodied in Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882. The Madras High Court held that Section 53-A could not be invoked by the defendant as the minor plaintiff was not a 'transferor' as contemplated by that section. This decision was reversed by the Privy Council. Referring to the power of the guardian to enter into the contract of sale the Privy Council observed—

"Their Lordships entertain no doubt that it was within the powers of the mother as guardian to enter into the contract of sale of 29th November 1935, on behalf of the respondent for the purpose of discharging his father's debts, and that if the sale had been completed by the execution and registration of a deed of sale, the respondent would have been bound under Hindu Law".

The conclusion of their Lordships is thus formulated

"It would appear, therefore, that the contract in the present case was binding upon the respondent from the time when it was executed. If the sale had been completed by a transfer, the transfer would have been a transfer of property of which the respondent, not his mother, was owner. If an action had been brought for specific performance of the contract it would have been brought by or against the respondent and not by or against his mother".

It may also be noticed that Lord Morton of Henryton in the above case expressly refers to and approves a passage in Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on the Indian Contract and Specific Relief Acts 7th Edn. page 70, where the learned authors observe that in the case of a contract entered into on behalf of a minor by his guardian, 'the contract can be specifically enforced by or against the minor, if the contract is one which it is within the competence of the guardian to enter into on his behalf so as to bind him by it, and, further, it is for the benefit of the minor. But if either of these two conditions is wanting, the contract cannot be specifically enforced at all'. That the first of these conditions is wanting in the case of a contract by the guardian for the purchase of immoveable property on behalf of the minor is perfectly clear from Mir Sarwarjan's case, (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC). That neither of the two conditions need be wanting when the contract is for the sale of the minor's immoveable property is equally clear from the latest decision of the Privy Council in AIR 1948 PC 95. A contract for the purchase of immoveable property can rarely be demonstrably for the benefit of the minor's estate or for legal necessity but the same cannot be said of a contract for sale of the minor's property. This seems to be the basis for drawing a distinction between contract for the purchase of property and contracts for sale entered into on behalf of minors".

At page 163 occurs the following passage—

".....A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has taken a different view. Govinda Menon J expressed the view that the effect of the later Privy Council decision is to render the principle of mutuality inapplicable to contracts for sale of the minor's property leaving that doctrine still applicable to a contract of purchase of property for the minor which was the specific case dealt with by the earlier Privy Council decision. These conflicting decisions were considered in Abdulsattar v Ismail, AIR 1958 Madh Pra 373 by the Madhya Pradesh High Court. Newaskar J was inclined to the view that the decision of the Privy Council in Mir Sarwarjan's case, (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC) is not overruled by the later decision thus endorsing the opinion of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court. The other learned Judge, Srivastava, J, however, did not share this view and was inclined to agree with the Full Bench decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court.....".

"This case focuses attention on the incompatibility between the decision in Mir Sarwarjan's case, (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC) & AIR 1948 PC 95. The learned Judges who have distinguished the later Privy Council decision and have held that it has not shaken the authority of the earlier Privy Council ruling have not pondered over a situation in which both vendor and vendee are minors acting through their guardians. That the minor purchaser can say 'I rely on Mir Sarwarjan's case, (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC). This is a contract of purchase. So it is beyond the power of my guardian to bind me. Ergo it cannot be specifically enforced against me.' To this the minor seller would say 'I rely on AIR 1948 PC 95. This is a contract of sale. It is for legal necessity. My guardian can enter into this contract. Ergo, I can specifically enforce it.' How are we to resolve this tangle? It is respectfully submitted that the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court has erred in supposing that the two Privy Council decisions can stand together. The Full Bench of the Andhra High Court has rightly held that the earlier Privy Council decision must be deemed to have been overruled by the later pronouncement".

It appears to me that on principle the contention on behalf of the appellant cannot be supported. In this case the agreement for reconveyance was in favour of the plaintiffs' father. That contract was not hit by the doctrine of want of mutuality. The only question that arises, therefore, in this case whether because the plaintiffs, who are the assignees of the contract in favour of their father, are all minors, they cannot enforce the contract for specific performance on the ground that the defendant would not be able to enforce contract for specific performance as against the plaintiffs. It would not be correct to say that the defendant would not be entitled to enforce the contract of specific performance as against the plaintiffs. A contract by a minor is void. The effect of the Privy Council decision in (1911) ILR 39 Cal 232 (PC) is that a contract on behalf of a minor for purchase of a property is not valid and binding on the minor. The present is not a case of a contract by a guardian of a minor on behalf of the minor to purchase the property for the minor. The original contract is between the two adults and the contract is certainly valid. The fact that the assignee happens to be a minor does not mean that the contract cannot be enforced by the assignee-minors or that it cannot be enforced as against the assignee-minors. The relevant date on which this test of mutuality is to be applied is the date of the contract itself and not the date on which it is sought to be enforced.

In AIR 1933 Mad 322 (FB), it was pointed out at p. 325, that want of mutuality must be judged as on the date of the contract. In Fry's Specific Performance of Contract, 6th Edn. at 219 it is stated that a contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual, that is to say, such that it might at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. The further observation of the learned author that an infant cannot sue, because he could not be sued for a specific performance can only, therefore, refer to a case where the infant himself enters into a contract. The two cases relied on by him in support of this observation are both cases of contracts entered into by minors. (Flight v. Bolland (1827-28) 4 Russ 8 and 9 George IV P. 298, and Lumley v. Revenscroft, (1895) 1 QB 683) In both those cases, if the defendants had sued for specific performance the minor plaintiffs could have successfully urged that the contracts entered into by them could not be enforced against them as they were minors at the time the contracts were entered into. There being thus no mutuality the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue.

2. In Corpus Juris Secundum Volume LXXXI, the position regarding mutuality is stated thus at page 430--

"Where an infant plaintiff claims under a party who himself could have obtained specific performance, such infancy is no ground for refusing specific performance. Likewise, specific performance has been allowed, for or on behalf of, an infant where the contract involved was made for him by one competent to do so. Where there has been complete performance by the infant, his infancy has been held to be no bar to specific performance".

There is, therefore, no valid legal objection to granting a decree for specific performance in favour of the plaintiffs in this case.

3. The defendant's appeal, therefore, fails and it is dismissed with the costs of the plaintiffs to be paid by the defendants. No leave.

Second Appeal No. 787 of 1965, D/- 20-9-1968, against Decree of District Court, Tiruchirapalli, D/- 15-2-1965.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 100-101 — Question of fact — Agreement between landlord and tenant to pay enhanced rent — Finding of lower Court as to truth or otherwise of such agreement is essentially question of fact — High Court sitting in second appeal has to accept it.

(B) Houses and Rents — Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (18 of 1960), Sections 7, 5, 6 — Variation of rent — Validity — Fair rent not fixed — Agreement for enhancing rent is valid — Section 7 (2) does not invalidate such agreement — Scope of Sections 5, 6 and 7 explained — "Agreed rent" — Meaning explained — (Words and Phrases — "Agreed rent") — (Contract Act (1872), Section 10).

There is nothing illegal in a landlord asking for higher rent so long as fair rent has not been fixed. Restrictions on the rights of parties to enter into a contract cannot be imposed, purely by implication, particularly when the existence of such rights is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. There is no specific provision in Madras Act 18 of 1960, prohibiting the parties to agree between themselves and vary the prevailing rent, so long as the fair rent has not been fixed. The Act makes a distinction between a case where the fair rent has been fixed and the one where it has not been fixed under the Act.

CM/DM/B88/69

Under Sections 5 and 6, if the tenant is not willing to an increase in rent the landlord can have the rent revised under the provisions of the Act. Section 7 (1) (a) provides for the landlord claiming excess in terms of the provisions of Sections 5 and 6 and the only provision which has to be considered where the fair rent has not been fixed is Section 7 (2), and that section does not prohibit any agreement between the parties increasing the rent. (Para 8)

Nothing in sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 7 can invalidate an agreement for a rent different from the then prevailing rent. The fresh agreement can be for enhancement or even for a reduced rent. What sub-section (2) prohibits is the receipt by the landlord of any amount as premium or like sum in addition to the agreed rent. The expression "agreed rent" has not been defined in the Act and its ordinary meaning is, rent agreed between the parties, not any unilateral demand to which the tenant has not consented. For, any unilateral action of the landlord increasing the rent will not avail him, as in the absence of an agreement with the tenant, he cannot recover the same in a Court of law. Held, further that the Act deals with tenancies commenced before the Act and those which may come into existence after the Act. C R P. 2319 of 1965 (Mad) and (1966) 2 Mad LJ 139, Foll. (Para 8)

(C) Houses and Rents — Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (18 of 1960), Section 7 (2) — Words "Premium or other like sums" — They are sums paid in excess of agreed rent in consideration of grant, continuance or renewal of tenancy — The Act does not define rent but makes clear distinction between rent and premium or other like sums — (T. P. Act (1882), Section 105) — (Words and Phrases — "Premium or other like sums"). (Para 7)

R. Gopalaswami Iyengar and N R. Natarajan, for Appellant, K. S. Naidu and M. Mani Narayanan, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This Second Appeal has been filed, by the defendant in a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs 2,562-50 as arrears of rent due in respect of the defendant's tenancy of a building.

2. The defendant has been a tenant of the building in question, except for two upstairs rooms, for a number of years, running a coffee and meals hotel in the premises. It is the common case of the parties that the agreed rent till 8th February, 1960, was Rs 112-50 per month. There is evidence on record that, in the middle of 1959 itself, the plaintiff had been seeking to evict the defendant and had been refusing to receive the rent at the rate of Rs 112-50 per month. The plaintiff would have it that it was not his intention to get an enhanced rent, but to secure vacant possession of the building for the purpose of repairs and improvements.

It is the plaintiff's case that, on 8th February, 1960, there was an agreement between him and the defendant at the intercession of one Natesan Pillai, P. W. 2 in this case whereunder the defendant agreed to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 200 per mensem from 1st of Masi, 1960, that notwithstanding this agreement, the defendant failed to pay the agreed rent of Rs 200 even in the first month and that he sent only a Bank draft for Rs 112-50. The plaintiff returned this draft for Rs 112-50 sent for Masi 1960, protesting against the conduct of the defendant in sending that amount only. This protest letter has not been produced by the defendant. On the refusal of the plaintiff to accept rent at Rs 112-50 per month, the defendant paid the rents into the Karur Vysia Bank Ltd., without any reference to the plaintiff. For about a year after this rejection we find no correspondence between the parties.

On the plaintiff issuing a notice in February, 1961, the defendant, along with his reply notice Exhibit A-2, sent a draft for Rs. 1,350/- being the accumulated rent at Rs 112-50 per month which had been put into the Bank. The plaintiff accepted this draft for Rs 1,350 without prejudice to his contention and the defendant continued to send rent at Rs. 112-50 per month thereafter. The plaintiff accepted the subsequent rents also of course without prejudice to his claim. This suit was instituted on 5th February, 1963, claiming the balance of rent on the basis that the agreed rent was Rs 200/- per mensem. Proceedings for eviction were also started under the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, on the basis that there was wilful default in the payment of the balance of rent.

3. The defendant denied any agreement on 8th February, 1960, to pay rent from 1st Masi, 1960 at the rate of Rs. 200 per mensem. He would state that he never agreed to pay rent at Rs. 200 per month unequivocally as alleged, and that there was no concluded agreement in this regard, much less a completed contract. There is no denial that there were talks on 8th February, 1960, between the plaintiff and the defendant. Nor is there any denial of the intercession of Natesan Pillai, P. W. 2, in the matter. According to the defendant, he wanted the two upstairs rooms also to be made available to him and his case is that he did not accept to a rent of Rs. 200 per month, as such without reference to the two upstairs rooms. In the written statement it is stated that the defendant expressly informed the plaintiff that the question of paying enhanced rent will arise only after the tenants occupying the two upstairs rooms vacated and the rooms were given delivery to the defendant. It is the defendant's case that everything was kept in suspense and the plaintiff proposed to take suitable steps to have the tenants in the upstairs rooms evicted outside or through Court.

4. From the records it is seen, and it is the finding of the Courts below, that the plaintiff had asked for arrears of rent prior to 1960 at Rs. 175 per month, but that the matter was settled between the parties on 8th February, 1960, the defendant agreeing to pay, along with the arrears of rent, a further sum of Rs. 150. It is the admitted case of the plaintiff that there was an advance of Rs. 500 left with the plaintiff, and that the defendant had paid the arrears of rent due prior to the date of the fresh agreement, together with a sum of Rs. 150 immediately after the agreement on 8th February, 1960. On the plaintiff's side, the plaintiff, besides himself, examined Natesan Pillai as P. W. 2, and the defendant was the sole witness for the defence. Admittedly there was none else present at the time of the agreement. The Courts below have concurred in upholding the plaintiff's case of an agreement to pay rent at Rs. 200 per month from Masi, 1960. They overruled the legal plea put forward for the defendant that, even if the agreement was established as a fact, the agreement to pay enhanced rent was void and unenforceable in view of the provisions of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (XVIII of 1960).

5. Counsel for the defendant challenges before me the finding of the Courts below as to the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant to pay rent at Rs. 200 per month. He also contends that the agreement, even if it is true, is void under the provisions of Madras Act (XVIII of 1960).

6. The finding of the Courts below as to the truth or otherwise of the agreement is essentially a question of fact and the matter is now before me in second appeal. Learned Counsel for the defendant urges that certain essential and important pieces of evidence have not been given consideration, and that their materiality has been ignored. x x x x x (After discussing the evidence, his Lordship proceeded). In the circumstances, when the Courts below accept the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 and hold that there was a clear agreement to pay rent at Rs. 200 per month, sitting in second appeal, I have to accept the finding. The appellate Court concludes the matter thus:

"Taking all the circumstances into consideration, certainly the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 is preferable to that of the defendant and the conclusion of the learned District Munsif that the agreement set up by the plaintiff is true, cannot be seriously challenged".

7. I shall now take up the next question that the agreement entered into on 8th February, 1960, enhancing the then prevailing rent is void in law and, therefore, unenforceable. The contentions of learned Counsel for the appellant is that except under the provisions of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, no landlord is entitled to increase the rent, and that, even if the parties voluntarily enter into an agreement to increase the rent, the agreement is unenforceable in law. Reliance is placed on Section 7 of the Madras Act (XVIII of 1960) and the general scheme of the Act, to protect the unreasonable eviction of tenants and the regulation and control of rents of buildings. Admittedly no fair rent has been fixed for the building in question and the relevant provisions are sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 7 of the Act:

"7. (2) Where the fair rent of a building has not been so fixed —

(a) the landlord shall not claim, receive or stipulate for the payment of, any premium or other like sum in addition to the agreed rent:

Provided that the landlord may receive, or stipulate for the payment of, an amount not exceeding one month's rent, by way of advance.

(b) Save as provided in clause (a), any sum paid in excess of the agreed rent, whether before or after the date of the commencement of the Act, in consideration of the grant, continuance or renewal of the tenancy of the building after the date of such commencement, shall be refunded by the landlord to the person by whom it was paid or, at the option of such person, shall be otherwise adjusted by the landlord.

3 Any stipulation in contravention of sub-section (2) shall be null and void".

I fail to see how anything in the above sub-sections can invalidate an agreement between a landlord and tenant for a rent different from the then prevailing rent. The fresh agreement need not necessarily be for enhancement of rent. It can equally be for a reduced rent. What sub-section (2) prohibits is the receipt by the landlord of any amount as premium or like sum in addition to the agreed rent. The expression "agreed rent" has not been defined in the Act and its ordinary meaning is, rent agreed between the parties, not any unilateral demand to which the tenant has not consented. The contention of Counsel for the appellant that there can be no fresh agreement for rent after coming into force of the Act, cannot stand, as the Act deals with tenancies commenced before the Act and those which may come into existence after the Act. When a tenant, for the first time after the Act, is inducted into a building, the landlord and tenant, it is not contended, cannot agree for the rent payable for occupation. The Act does not define "rent," but makes a clear distinction between "rent" and "premium or other like sum". Section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act defines that the price paid or promised in consideration of a lease is called the premium, and that the money, share of crops, service or other things paid periodically or on specific occasions or to be rendered at such times by the tenant is called the rent. Clause (b) of section 7(2) brings out clearly the meaning of the words "premium" or "other like sum". They are sums paid in excess of the agreed rent in consideration of the grant, continuance or renewal of the tenancy. In Abdul Rahim v State of Madras, I.L.R. (1961) Mad 1243 = (1962) 1 Mad LJ 272 at p 275, Veeraswami J., points out that "premium" as ordinarily understood is a lump sum payment made outright as price for a lease. Referring to the words "other like sum", the learned Judge observes

"The question then is whether such an amount is within the scope of 'other like sum'. The scope of those words has to be understood in the light of the doctrine of ejusdem generis. Only a sum which has some resemblance to what is comprehended by the word 'premium' will come within the scope of the words 'other like sum'.

In King v Earl of Cadogan, (1915) 3 KB 485 at p 492, which the learned Judge has cited, Warrington, L. J., said.—

"Now the Legislature in expressing its intention has chosen to use two words—'rent' and 'premium'—both of which in connection with leases have perfectly well known, legal meanings. I need not say anything about the meaning of the word rent, but 'premium', as I understand it, used as it frequently is in legal documents, means a cash payment made to the lessor, and representing, or supposed to represent, the capital value of the difference between the actual rent and the best rent that might otherwise be obtained. It is a very familiar expression to everybody who knows the forms and powers of granting leases. It is in fact the purchase money which the tenant pays for the benefit which he gets under the lease."

8. The question, in fact, is not res integra and has been considered at length by Venkataraman, J., in P. Subbar v. Madurai Sowrashttra Sabha, C R P No. 2319 of 1965 (Mad), and again by Sadasivam, J., in Ranganayaki Ammal v. Chockalingam, (1966) 2 Mad LJ 139 at 141 = 1966 Mad LJ (Cri) 570. In Jamuna Bai v Narayanamurthi, (1958) 2 Andh WR 493 = (AIR 1959 Andh Pra 108) Chandra Reddy, Officiating Chief Justice, and Srinivasachari, J. considered this question and held that, where fair rent has not been fixed, it is open to the parties to come to an agreement with regard to an increase in the rent. The matter was again considered by the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Aswathanarayanaiah v. Sanjeeviah, (1964) 1 Andh WR 69 = AIR 1965 Andh Pra 33. Referring to the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (25 of 1949), it was held in that case that, subject to what was specifically provided in the Act, the freedom of contract had not been taken away, that what Section 6 in that Act stipulated was that in case a fair rent was fixed, the landlord was not permitted to charge an increased rent except as provided in the Act, and that in case the landlord entered into an agreement with the tenant to get an increased rent over and above the fixed rent, such a contract was not enforceable in law. However, it was held that, so long as the fair rent was not fixed, the parties were at liberty to enter into a contract as regards the rent. In C R P. No. 2319 of 1965 (Mad), Venkataraman, J., refers to these cases of the Andhra Pradesh High Court, and distinguishing the two earlier decisions of this Court in Moses Pillai v Govindan, (1948) 1 Mad LJ 51 = (AIR 1948 Mad 346) and Venkat-swara Rao v Mohammad Mohibulla, (1953) 1 Mad LJ 490 = (AIR 1953 Mad 705) as not applicable after Act (25 of 1949) was amended, where the fair rent had not been fixed, upheld the validity of a fresh agreement for enhanced rent. In (1966) 2 Mad LJ 139 at 141 = (1966) Mad LJ (Cri) 570 Sadasivam, J. examined at length the nature of "premium" or "other like sum", and, pointing out that there is a clear distinction between "rent" on the one hand and "premium" or "other like sum" on the other, holds that "premium" does not include "rent". The learned Judge observes:—

"There is nothing illegal in a landlord asking for higher rent so long as fair rent has not been fixed. If the tenant does not agree to pay it, the remedy of the landlord may be only to file a petition for fixation of fair rent."

I am in entire agreement with the learned Judge, Venkataraman, J. in C.R.P. No. 2319 of 1965 (Mad) and with the learned Judge Sadasivam, J., in (1966) 2 Mad LJ 139 at p. 141 = (1966) Mad LJ (Cri) 570. My attention has not been drawn to any specific provision in Madras Act (25 of 1949), particularly its amendment in 1951, or in Madras Act (18 of 1960), prohibiting the parties to agree between themselves and vary the prevailing rent, so long as the fair rent has not been fixed for the premises under the provisions of the Act. Restrictions on the rights of parties to enter into a contract cannot be imposed, purely by implication, particularly when the existence of such rights is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. The Act makes a distinction between a case where the fair rent has been fixed and the one where the fair rent has not been fixed under the Act. Section 5 of the Act provides against an increase of rent, where the fair rent has been fixed. Provision for an increase or decrease in the fair rent would be unenforceable. Similarly, Section 6 provides for an increase in the rent when taxes are increased. The provisions for variation of rent in Sections 5 and 6 are, it must be appreciated, such that if the tenant is not willing and agreeable to an increase in accordance with the provisions, the landlord could have the rent revised under the provisions of the Act. Section 7 (1) (a) provides for the landlord claiming excess in terms of the provisions of Sections 5 and 6 and the only provision which has to be considered where the fair rent has not been fixed is Section 7 (2): and this section does not prohibit any agreement between the parties increasing the rent. It is needless to point out that any unilateral action of the landlord increasing the rent will not avail him, as, in the absence of an agreement with the tenant, he cannot recover the same in a Court of law.

(A) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sections 10 and 12 (5) — Reference of disputes to Boards etc.—Matters which government may take into consideration.

Where there are two unions of workers in the concerned industry or unit of industry, and one Union which contains the majority of the workers, claims to have arrived at a settlement with the Management through negotiation in respect of the very matters in controversy, or some of them, a minority Union cannot urge that these facts should be altogether omitted from consideration by Government, in deciding on the expediency of the reference. On the contrary, those facts would be perfectly relevant, and it would be equally relevant whether developments subsequent to the period or date when the issues in controversy were raised, may render the reference itself otiose: 1964-2 Lab LJ 407 (Mad), Affirmed. It is indisputable that the power of the High Court in Mandamus is not either to direct a reference or to constrain the Government to do so, but only to ask the Government to reconsider the issue. Again, it appears to be equally indisputable that there is no bar of limitation applicable to such cases. It may be that conditions have bettered so much, that the original issues are now academic. It may be that other grievances have developed, or even that they are more controversial than they were, when the Union originally agitated for their consideration. It is always open to the Union to agitate for a fresh reference on conditions of employment as between the Union and the Management: 1964-2 Lab LJ 407 (Mad), Affirmed. (Para 4)

B R Dola for Aiyar and Dola, for Appellant, Government Pleader and A R Ramanathan, for Respondents

M. ANANTANARAYANAN, C. J.—

The writ appeal is by a Trade Union of the workmen of Messrs Sundaram Motors (Pte) Ltd, from the judgment of Veeraswami, J in W P No 1345 of 1962 declining to issue a writ of Mandamus to the State of Madras, to dispose of the alleged dispute afresh under Section 10 read with Section 12 (5) of the Industrial Disputes Act. It is not necessary to canvass the facts at any length. It is sufficient for us to state that the points in controversy related to revision of wage scales, dearness allowance, leave facilities bonus for 1961 and gratuity, and lastly, to the non-employment of one P Sambasivan

2. A great deal of the area covered in the judgment of the learned Judge by way of discussion, may now be regarded as unnecessary. The learned Judge referred to the decisions of the Supreme Court in State of Bombay v K. P. Krishnan 1960-2 Lab LJ 592 = (AIR 1960 SC 1223) and Bombay Union of Journalists v State of Bombay, 1964-1 Lab LJ 351 = (AIR 1964 SC 1617), and emphasised that the Government, on these authorities, would be justified in considering the prima facie merits of the dispute, and in taking into account other relevant data which may assist the Government to decide whether a reference would be expedient or otherwise. The learned Judge then came to the conclusion that the Government did not act, in this case, on anything extraneous or irrelevant, and that the Government would be justified in taking into account, in the manner that they did, the settlement reached by another union of the workers, namely, T V S Workers Union, with the Management, in regard to certain aspects of the points in controversy.

3. It is needless for us to emphasise that where there are two unions of workers in the concerned industry, or unit of industry as in this case, and one Union which contains the majority of the workers claims to have arrived at a settlement with the Management through negotiation in respect of the very matters in controversy, or some of them, a minority Union like the present appellant cannot urge that these facts should be altogether omitted from consideration by Government, in deciding on the expediency of the reference. On the contrary, those facts would be perfectly relevant, and it would be equally relevant whether developments subsequent to the period or date when the issues in controversy were raised, may render the reference itself otiose. Mr Dola, for the appellant Union, does concede that such developments might have taken place, and, hence, that, at the present moment, in view of the considerable lapse of time since the original issues in controversy were raised, it may be very difficult to state whether they are live issues, or whether they are not.

4. We may therefore, point out that the learned Judge was entirely justified in taking these facts into consideration, and in coming to the conclusion that it cannot be held in this case, that Government acted arbitrarily or upon consideration of matters not germane to the subject, when they declined reference under Sections 10 and 12 of the Act. It is indisputable that our power in Mandamus in this case is not either to direct such a reference or to constrain the Government to do so but only to ask the Government to reconsider the issue. Again, it appears to be equally indisputable that there is no bar of limitation applicable to such cases. It may be that conditions have bettered so much, that the original issues are now academic. It may be that other grievances have developed, or even that they are more controversial than they were when the Union originally agitated for their consideration. It is always open to the Union to agitate for a fresh reference on conditions of employment as between the Union and the Management. Accordingly, we shall leave the matter there, as far as this aspect of the writ appeal is concerned.

5. But Mr Dola for the Union urges that the matter is on a somewhat different footing upon the last of the issues, namely, non-employment of P. Sambasivan. This was an independent dispute, at the inception, and later, the worker became a member of this minority Union, and the Union appears to have sponsored his cause. We are not now stating anything on the merits of the alleged dismissal, indeed, we cannot do so, since the Government declined to make a reference. But we find that the dismissal was in September 1960 and that it was only 12 months later that the Union which subsequently came into existence sponsored the dispute. Actually, the dismissed workman himself became a member of the union, only subsequently. This belatedness was the reason given by the Government for declining to make the reference. We cannot state that that is necessarily unreasonable or perverse. Further, conditions might have changed now, and it may even be that the individual workman is employed elsewhere, or is no longer desirous of returning to this unit of industry. Only the Union is the appellant here, and if the workman is still in need of relief with regard to his alleged dismissal, it may be open to the Union to move the Government afresh, on the existing state of facts with regard to the worker.

6. With these observations, the writ appeal is dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs.

VGW/D.V.C. Order accordingly.

V. N. Krishna Rao, for Petitioner; S. Ramalingam, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This is a petition to revise the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Thanjavur in I. A. 11 of 1966 in O. P. 6 of 1966. O. P. 6 of 1966 was filed by the present respondent for annulment of his marriage with the petitioner. Along with the original petition No. 6 of 1966, he filed the interlocutory application out of which this civil revision petition arises for condonation of the delay of one year, six months and twenty four days in presenting the petition. The parties were married on 18-6-1963. The petitioner gave birth to a child on 26-2-1964. The petitioner intimated to the Municipal authorities on 8-3-1964 disowning the said child. Thereafter he filed the petition for annulment of marriage on 5-1-1966. On behalf of the petitioner (herein) objection was taken that the Court had no jurisdiction to condone the delay in the presentation of the petition for annulment of the marriage and that the conditions laid down in Sec. 12 (2) of the Hindu Marriage Act were conditions subject to which alone an application for annulment of a marriage under Cl. (d) of sub-section (1) of Section 12 could be maintained.

The learned Judge thought that the question for decision in the case was whether the petition for excusing the delay was a bona fide one and whether the petitioner had not filed the petition under Section 12 on a bona fide mistake of fact. He also thought that in a matrimonial case it would be very difficult to apply strictly the law of limitation because when the Hindu Marriage Act alone provides for dissolution of the marital tie on the ground of the wife being proved to have been conceived on the date of the marriage by a person other than the petitioner it would not be possible for the husband to obtain the relief under any other law and that by excusing the delay no injustice would be caused. I am afraid question of bona fide mistake of fact does not arise in this case. We are not now concerned with the question whether the requirements of sub-Cls. (i) and (iii) of Cl. (b) of sub-section (2) of Section 12 are satisfied. We are only concerned with the question whether the requirements of S. 12 (2) (b) (ii) have been satisfied. Sub-clause (ii) of Cl. (b) of sub-section (2) of Section 12 is as follows—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) no petition for annulling a marriage—

(b) on the ground specified in Cl. (d) of sub-section (1) shall be entertained unless the Court is satisfied—

(i).....(ii) that proceedings have been instituted in the case of a marriage solemnised before the commencement of this Act within the year of such commencement and in the case of marriages solemnised after such commencement within one year from the date of the marriage; and (iii)....."

What is laid down in sub-cl. (ii) is a condition subject to which alone a petition for annulling a marriage could be entertained. It is not a period of limitation. Section 5 of the Limitation Act cannot apply to this case, because Section 29 (3) of the Limitation Act of 1963 provides—

"Save as otherwise provided in any law for the time being in force with respect to marriage and divorce, nothing in this Act shall apply to any suit or other proceeding under any such law"

2. The wording of Section 12 (2) of Hindu Marriage Act is more or less similar to the wording of Section 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which is as follows—

"9(1) A creditor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition against a debtor unless.... (c) the act of insolvency on which the petition is grounded has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition."

A Full Bench of our Court in the decision reported in Chenchurammanna v Arunachalam, ILR 58 Mad 794=(AIR 1935 Mad 857) (FB), has laid down that the period of three months fixed in Section 9 (1) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not a period of limitation but is a condition to an adjudication and accordingly an act of insolvency, which has occurred more than three months prior to the presentation of the petition, is not available as a ground of adjudication. I may also point out that a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Savilaram Kacharoo v. Yeshodabai, 64 Bom LR 27 = (AIR 1962 Bom 190) has taken the view that—

"Compliance with Section 12 (2) (b) of the Hindu Marriage Act 1955, is a condition precedent to the entertainment of a petition under Section 12 (1) (d) of the Act, and therefore, a petition filed beyond the period mentioned in Section 12 (2) (b) (ii) of the Act cannot be saved by reason of the provisions of Section 10 of the General Clauses Act, 1897."

With respect I follow the decision of the Bench. It follows, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to allow I A 11 of 1966 and condone the delay. The civil revision petition is allowed. I A. 11 of 1966 will as a consequence stand dismissed. No order as to costs.

Takyel Khongbal village No. 93, in favour of the respondents 3 to 5 and two others viz. the deceased Maipakpi Devi and Chaobiton Devi or in the alternative to issue a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the first respondent to hear and decide the case of the petitioners on merits according to law.

2. The brief facts of the case, which have led to the institution of the present petition, are as follows :

The petitioners allege that C. S. plots Nos. 83, 284, 523, 538 etc. in C. S. plot No. 284 in Takyel Khongbal village 93 is immemorial grazing ground for the cattle of the villagers of Bijoy Govinda Gram Panchayet, Takyel Gram Panchayet and Lamjaotongba Gram Panchayet. The Government of Manipur took up the matter of allotment of a portion of the land on 6-5-1965 in favour of 5 political sufferers. The Director of Settlement and Land Records, Manipur granted certain lands on 7-10-1966 to the respondents 3 to 5 and two others namely, Smt. Wai-khom ongbi Kumari Devi, Smt. Ayekpam ongbi Rajani Devi, Smt. Pebam ongbi Chamu Devi and late Laimayum ongbi Maipakpi Devi and late Aribam ongbi Chaobiton Devi, (vide Exts. B/1 and A/5). The petitioners allege that in the first week of May 1967 they came to know of the allotment, that they held a public meeting on 28-5-1967 objecting to the allotment and that they made a representation on 17-6-1967 to the Secretary R. & M., Government of Manipur, requesting him to cancel the allotment but that no action was taken by the second respondent. (Vide Exts. A/6 and A/7).

The petitioners filed a revision petition (C. C. Rev. Revision Petition No. 178/1967) on 26-7-1967 in the Court of the first respondent (Chief Commissioner, Manipur) under section 95 of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act of 1960 (hereinafter called as the Act of 1960) to set aside the allotment. Also, they filed a petition under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act read with para 62 of schedule III of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Rules of 1961 framed under the Act of 1960 (hereinafter called as the Rules of 1961). But, the learned Chief Commissioner, Manipur summarily dismissed the case without hearing the petitioners on the ground that the petition was barred by limitation, though no period of limitation is prescribed by section 95 of the Act (Vide Exts. A/9 and A/10). Hence, the present writ petition.

3. The writ petition was opposed by the respondents 1, 2 and 7 who filed a joint counter. The other respondents also filed a joint counter. Their allegations are the same.

4. The points which were argued and which arise for determination are:

(i) Whether the order of the first respondent is correct?

(ii) Whether the writ petition is not maintainable?

5. Points i and ii:— Ext. A/10 shows that the learned Chief Commissioner dismissed C. C. (Revenue) Revision Petition No. 178 of 1967 summarily on the ground that the petition was filed on 26-7-1967 questioning the order of the Director of Settlement and Land Records dated 7-10-1966 after lapse of nearly eight months and that there was no reason why such delay had occurred and why the revision petition was not filed "in time".

6. But, Section 95 of the Act runs thus: "The Administrator or the Deputy Commissioner may, at any time, either on his own motion or on the application of any party, call for the records of any proceedings before any revenue officer subordinate to him for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the legality or the propriety of any order passed by such revenue officer, and may pass such order in reference thereto as he thinks fit:

Provided that he shall not vary or reverse any order affecting any right between private persons without having given to the parties interested notice to appear and be heard." Section 95 does not lay down any period of limitation. On the other hand, it gives wide powers of interference to the Administrator and the Deputy Commissioner, who may at any time, call for the records of any proceedings before any revenue officer subordinate to him and may pass such orders as they think fit. But, the order in question shows that the learned Chief Commissioner was under the impression that Section 95 of the Act prescribes some period of limitation, though it does not. As such, his order is liable to be set aside.

7. Further, Ext. A/9 shows that the petitioners filed a petition under Section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act to condone the delay, if any, in filing the revision petition. Under Section 81 of the Act of 1960, a revenue officer sits as a Revenue Court when he exercises the powers under the Act of 1960. Paragraph 62 of Schedule III of the Rules of 1961 directs that a Revenue Court should hold an enquiry in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure. So, the learned Chief Commissioner should have exercised his jurisdiction and considered the merits of the petition filed by the petitioners under Section 5 of the Limitation Act to condone the delay, if any. But, he failed to do so. For this reason also the order of the first respondent is liable to be set aside.

8. The contention of the learned Government Advocate is three-fold. His first contention is that the land in question is not a grazing ground, that the respondents deny the nature of the land and that the writ petition is not maintainable, as there is a disputed question of fact. He relied on

Union of India v. T. R Varma, AIR 1957 SC 882 and Ganesh Chandra Khan v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1958 Cal 114 in support of his contention. Though the respondents dispute the nature of the land, the very counter filed by the respondents 1, 2 and 7 shows that in the recent cadstral survey, the land in question was entered as grazing ground in the Dag Chitha Vide paras 2 and 4 of their counter. The petitioners produced Exts A/1 to A/4 certified copies of Dag Chithas in the land records (record of rights) wherein C S Plots Nos 83, 284, 523 and 538 in village No 93, were recorded as "village grazing ground". The entries were made according to the sub-rule (ii) of Rule 55 and sub-rule (1) of Rule 66 of the Rules of 1961. The entries in the Dag Chitha were made by the Revenue Officers concerned in Form VII prescribed by the Rules of 1961 after consulting the previous records and after making local investigation. Under Section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act, a Dag Chitha is a "Public document" forming the act or the record of the act of a public officer. Section 2 (17), Civil P C defines a "public officer" as a person falling in any one of the categories mentioned therein including an officer, whose duty is to make any survey of Government property etc. Section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act makes an entry in any public or official record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties as a relevant fact. So, the entries in Exts A/1 to A/4 are relevant to show prima facie that the land in question is a "village grazing ground".

But, the survey is said to be still going on and the record of rights has not been finally published under Section 43 of the Act of 1960. A presumption that the record of rights is correct arises only after it is finally published. So, the weight to be attached to the entries in Exts A/1 to A/4 has to be decided by the learned Chief Commissioner. But, their admissibility in evidence is quite a different matter and they are admissible in evidence to prove that the lands were tentatively recorded in the Dag Chithas as "village grazing ground". Also, the petitioners filed Ext. A/12 to show that the then Chief Commissioner cancelled the allotment of neighbouring land in C. C. (Revenue) Revision Case No 6 of 1961 on the ground firstly that no consideration was given by the S O to the question whether there was enough grazing ground left for the village after the settlement of the land in dispute was made, secondly that notices calling for objections to settlement were not effectively served and, thirdly, that a number of persons to whom settlement was made appeared to be fictitious. The petitioners also filed Exts A/15 and A/16 to show that notices were issued by the S D C., I W. in the Eviction Cases Nos. 33 and 36/A S & 80 of 1960 and that eviction cases were started against them. The petitioners also rely on Ext. A/17 proceedings in the Manipur Assembly to show that the Government admitted that the land in question is village grazing ground. Thus Ext. A/12 and A/15 to A/17 further probabalise the petitioners' contention that the land in question was set apart as common village grazing ground and that there is justification for the petitioners' complaint that a portion of the village grazing ground was granted away to some political sufferers. As the matter is being remanded, I do not wish to enter deeper into this aspect of the case.

9. The second contention of the learned Government Advocate is that the petitioners have an alternative remedy under S 11 of the Act of 1960 and that Section 159 of the Act of 1960, bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court with respect to any matter arising under the Act. He argued that the land in dispute is vested in the Government under Section 11 (1) of the Act of 1960, that the petitioners should have filed a petition before the Deputy Commissioner claiming the land under sub-section (3) of Section 11 of the said Act and that, if the petitioners felt aggrieved with his order or any order passed in appeal or revision, then they should institute a civil suit within a period of six months from the date of the order under sub-section (4) of Section 11 of the Act. He relied on the passages at pages 34, 35 and 37 of the Fundamental Rights and Constitutional Remedies by V C Ramchandran—Vol III—1963 edition, where the learned author states that in the matter of domestic tribunals there is a certain amount of finality in the exercise of their powers on account of their being vested with autonomy within their sphere in the interest of public good and that the Court can intervene in a limited way, either when such domestic authorities have acted under bias or in bad faith and mala fide or when they have violated the principles of natural justice or when such authorities have exceeded their jurisdiction under the statute. Vide also Raj Krushna Bose v. Bmud Kanungo, AIR 1954 SC 202.

Though the learned counsel for the petitioners contended that Section 11 of the Act does not apply to the land in question, his contention is not correct. Section 11 of the Act of 1960 is very general in scope, which vests the property in all the lands etc., which are not the property of any person, in the Government. The petitioners have got only an easementary right of pasturage over the lands. They are not the owners of the same. But, it has to be seen that under Section 13 of the Act, the Deputy Commissioner has to set apart land belonging to the Government for pasturage for the village cattle etc. Rules 9 to 13 of the Rules of 1961 lay down the procedure to be adopted by him when he sets apart land for pasturage for the village cattle. But, it appears that, so far, he did not allot any land under Section 13 of the Act for pasturage for the village cattle.

In Manipur the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886 (Assam Act 1 of 1886) was in force before the Act of 1960 repealed it. The petitioners claim that their right of pasturage under the Regulation is saved by section 170 of the Act 1960. Thus, the petitioners have got 2 remedies under the Act of 1960. Either they could file an application under sub-section (3) of Section 11 of the Act of 1960 before the Deputy Commissioner questioning the grant. Alternatively, they could also file revision petition under Section 95 of the Act questioning the order of the Settlement Officer which affected the petitioners' right, which are preserved and saved by Section 170 of the Act of 1960. They pursued the latter remedy. But, the first respondent failed to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by disposing of the revision petition and the petition filed under Sec. 5 of the Limitation Act on merits. The existence of an alternative remedy is not always a bar to the exercise of writ jurisdiction by the High Court. Vide Ravi Pratap Narain Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1952 All 99, State of U. P. v. Mohammad Nooh, AIR 1958 SC 86, M. Velayudhan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1960 Kerala 220 and Collector of Monghyr v. Keshav Prasad Goenka, AIR 1962 SC 1694. As the order of the first respondent is manifestly incorrect and against natural justice, a writ of Mandamus has to issue to set right the illegality and the writ petition is maintainable. It is desirable that the first respondent should direct the Deputy Commissioner to set apart land under Section 13 of the Act of 1960 for the purpose of pasturage for the village cattle, after due enquiry according to the Rules of 1961 to avoid further litigation.

10. The third contention of the learned counsel for the respondents is that the petitioners did not file any petition under O. I, R. 8, Civil P. C. so that they may represent the body of villagers and that the writ petition is not maintainable. He referred to the American Law on the subject and relied on sub-articles (a) and (b) of Article 47 at pages 77 to 81 of Vol. 55 of Corpus Juris Secundum. But, the Indian Law is different. Even a right to graze, which is an easementary right to land, is "property" within the meaning of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution of India, and is a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution of India. Vide Brij Bhukan Kalwar v. D. O. Siwan, AIR 1955 Pat 1 (SB) and State of Manipur v. Nongthombam Amubi Singh, AIR 1957 Manipur 1. The petitioners and every other villager of the 3 villages in question have a right to graze his cattle on the village grazing ground and if the land is allotted to others, the petitioners' right is affected and it is not necessary for the petitioners to represent other villagers also. The issuing of writs or directions by the High Court is founded only on its decision that a right of the aggrieved party under Part III of the Constitution of India had been infringed. The existence of the right is the foundation for the exercise of jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution. The petitioners have to make out some personal interest, which the law recognises, to invoke the writ jurisdiction of the High Court. Vide State of Orissa v. Madan Gopal Rungta, AIR 1952 SC 12, Bhanwarlal v. Rajasthan State, AIR 1953 Raj 180, Damodar Goswami v. Namaravan Goswami, AIR 1955 Assam 163 and Dr. P. S. Venkataswamy Setty v. University of Mysore, AIR 1964 Mys 159. So, the writ petition is not liable to be dismissed on this ground.

11. The petitioners' counsel also referred to certain merits of the case. Firstly, he stated that there are executive instructions by the Central Government and the Government of Manipur that, before any village land is allotted to others, notice should be issued to the village Panchayat concerned and that no allotment should be made before such notice is issued. He produced Exts. A/13 and A/14 which are copies of the instructions of the Government of India and the Government of Manipur respectively, which support his contention. But, no writ lies for violation of and disobedience to the executive instructions. Vide G. J. Fernandez v. State of Mysore, AIR 1967 SC 1753. It is for the first respondent to consider the executive instructions.

Secondly, the petitioners' counsel stated that the allotment was made to two dead persons, namely, Laimayum Ongbi Maipakpi Devi and Aribam Ongbi Chaobiton Devi. The learned counsel for the respondents 1, 2 and 7 stated that the proposal for the allotment to political sufferers was taken up on 6-5-1965, that as one of the ladies was found dead long ago, her name was excluded from the list of recommended persons, but that her name was entered in the list and that the order of the allotment in her name was cancelled on 3-11-1966 when the mistake was detected. But, still there was another person Maipakpi Devi, who too died. The respondents' counsel stated that the proposal for settlement was made in her favour when she was alive and that therefore the allotment order was not cancelled. This has to be considered by the first respondent.

Thirdly, the petitioners' counsel stated that all the ladies are widows and "disqualified persons" within the meaning of Sec. 2 (q) of the Act, that under Section 46 (2) of the Act, a minor's contract is void as a minor is a disqualified person and that similarly a widow is equally disqualified and is not entitled to a grant. But, there is no force in this contention, inasmuch as, even a widow can be a landless poor person and a cultivator within the meaning of Rule 6 of the Allotment of Land Rules, 1962. But, under Rule 6 (1) of the said Rules, a person who is evicted is entitled to preference. The bearing of the Allotment of Land Rules is also to be considered by the learned Chief Commissioner.

12. For the above reasons I find point (i) in the negative I find on Point (u) that the writ petition is maintainable

13. In the result, the writ petition is allowed and the order of the first respondent dated 27-7-1967 in C. C. (Revenue) Revision Petition Case No 178 of 1987 is set aside. He should dispose of the case in the light of observations made in this order. There shall be no order for costs in this petition. TVN/D.V.C. Petition allowed.

(D) Tenancy Laws — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (33 of 1960), S. 93 — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Allotment of Land Rules, 1962, Rr. 6 and 8 — Landless agricultural worker is to be preferred in allotting land for agricultural purposes — A registered Co-operative Society to be preferred to the individual — Allotment ignoring the above is liable to be set aside. (Para 14)

(E) Tenancy Laws — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (33 of 1960), S. 14 (1) and (2) — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Rules, 1961, R. 6 — Deputy Commissioner alone can allot land for purposes of agriculture or construction of dwelling houses — The Administrator can, however, direct the Deputy Commissioner to allot the land — Impugned order, a direct allotment by the Administrator and not a direction to Deputy Commissioner — Allotment, held, illegal. (Para 15)

(F) Tenancy Laws — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (33 of 1960), S. 94 (1) (a) — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Rules, 1961, R. 135 — Revenue Court to follow procedure under Civil P. C. — Order by Settlement Officer without hearing party is void and can be ignored — Hence an appeal against can be filed even beyond the 30 days period prescribed under S. 94 (1) (a) — (Words and Phrases — 'Void' judgment).

In a case where the Settlement Officer passed orders without hearing the party and who, aggrieved by it preferred an appeal under Section 94 (1) (a) but beyond the period of 30 days prescribed for filing such appeal, the order of the Settlement Officer being void could be challenged even beyond the time prescribed for appeal. Under R 135 of the Rules, the Revenue Court has to decide the cases following the provisions of Civil P. C. (Para 16)

A "void" judgment has been defined as one which has no legal force or effect, invalidity of which may be asserted by any person whose rights are affected at any time and at any place directly or collaterally. Black's Law Dictionary, p. 1745, 4th Edn. and AIR 1953 Manipur 20, Foll. (Para 16)

(G) Co-operative Societies — Assam Co-operative Societies Act (1 of 1950), S. 85 — Writ petition by a society said to be represented by the named Chairman is maintainable. (Constitution of India, Art. 226). (Para 17)

(H) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115 — On facts, held, estoppel did not operate.

The petitioner was claiming all the land lying within the boundaries mentioned in the settlement in question. His case was not that he should be given fresh settlement of the land found in excess of the description as to extent appearing in the settlement.

Held that his application before the Director of Settlement and Land Records to grant the excess land in its favour, did not operate as estoppel. Under Section 115, Evidence Act if a person, by his declaration, act or commission intentionally causes or permits another person to believe a thing to be true and act upon such belief, then the former is estopped from denying the truth of the thing AIR Commentaries on Constitution

(I) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Existence of other remedy is not always a bar to exercise of writ jurisdiction — (Tenancy Laws — Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (33 of 1960), Ss. 11 (4) and 159 — Remedy of a Civil suit challenging order of Dy. Commissioner under S. 11 (4) — Bar of Civil and other proceedings under S. 159 — Provisions do not bar filing of a writ petition — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9).

It is too late in the day to argue that where there is an alternative remedy, no writ petition lies. The existence of an alternative remedy is not always a bar. It is pre-eminently a matter of discretion. Where the remedy suggested is not equally convenient or efficacious or effective and when it involves very onerous, expensive and lengthy proceedings, a writ lies. Thus, the provision under S. 11 (4) of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act for a suit challenging an order of the Deputy Commissioner within six months from the date thereof and the provision under S. 159 of the same Act barring civil or other proceedings in respect of any matter arising under the Act, held did not bar the filing of a writ petition. ORDER The petitioner Tronglaobi Pisciculture Co-operative Society Ltd., by its Chairman, Maimom Iboton Singh of Kiyam Siphai village under Thoubal Police Station obtained rule nisi under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India against (1) the Chief Commissioner of Manipur, (2) the Union Territory of Manipur and (3) Khundrakpam Khamba Singh of Kiyam Siphai village calling upon the respondents to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not be issued quashing the order of the first respondent dated 8-12-1964 passed by him in C. C. Revenue Appeal Case No 5 of 1964, under which 177 acres of land covered by new Dag No 4004 situate in Kiyam Siphai village was ordered to be settled in favour of the 3rd respondent under the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (Act XXXIII of 1960), hereinafter called as the Act of 1960

2. The respondents showed cause.

3. The brief facts of the case leading to the institution of the present writ petition are thus. An extent of 1662 acres of land covered by patta No 96/1(A) Thoubal Tahsil situate in Kiyam Siphai village formed part of Wathou Sorrel Fishery No 226, having been declared as such under Section 16 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (Regulation 1 of 1866) which was made applicable to Manipur. It was temporarily settled by the Government in 1953-54 with the Wathou Phumnon Fishing Co-operative Society Ltd. The said Society enjoyed the land as lessee of the Government till 1961-62, during which period the third respondent was employed as Chowkidar of a brick-field and was allowed to occupy a portion of the land. The Society was dissolved in 1962-63.

4. Some of the members of the aforesaid Society, who are landless agricultural workers, proposed to form a Pisciculture Co-operative Society and to have the above-mentioned land settled with the latter for piscicultural purposes. The Deputy Commissioner of Manipur submitted to the Government of Manipur proposal to de-reserve the said land from Wathou Sorrel Fishery No 226 to settle it with the petitioner's Society. The first respondent accorded sanction to the dereservation of land measuring 5 paris out of the said Wathou Sorrel Fishery No 226 in favour of the petitioner's Society and described the boundaries of the land. They are Wathou Fishery and foot-path on the northern side and on the three remaining sides there are "Burma Road and hill". Vide Ext. A/1 dated 1-5-1962 certified copy of the order of the first respondent.

5. The petitioner's Society was registered on 16-8-1962 as Tronglaobi Pisciculture Co-operative Society Limited with 42 landless agricultural workers as members, who reside within a distance 2 kilometres from the said land. The Deputy Commissioner passed an order (under Section 14 (1) of the Act of 1960 and Rules 6 (u) and 12 (a) of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms (Allotment of Land) Rules, 1962) settling the land with the petitioner's Society. He directed that the petitioner's Society should lay an earthen boundary bund, so that 5 paris might be separated from the Wathou Sorrel Fishery No 226. He described the land settled with the petitioner by the same boundaries as mentioned in Ext A/1. Vide Ext A/2 certified copy of his order dated 8-12-1962.

6. In the course of the survey and settlement operations in 1962-63, it was discovered that the actual extent of the land is 6½ paris and not 5 paris. The entire extent was put in the name of the petitioner in the Dag Chitha prepared in 1962. Vide Ext. A/7 certified copy of the Dag Chitha. There were criminal proceedings between the petitioner and the 3rd respondent regarding the excess land. When the third respondent interfered with the disputed excess portion of the land, the S D M Thoubal directed him to execute a bond under Section 107, Criminal Procedure Code for keeping the peace in N. F. 1 R. case No. 21 of 1963. Vide Ext. A/10 certified copy of the police report and the order of the S D. M. dated 21-2-1964. Again, when the third respondent interfered with the petitioner's possession of the land, the S D M, Thoubal restrained him by an order under Section 144 (2), Criminal Procedure Code from causing any interference. Vide Ext. A/8 certified copy of his order in Criminal Misc Case No 6 of 1964 dated 9-4-1964. Subsequently, the S D M, Thoubal, restrained both the parties from interfering with the disputed extent of area. Vide Ext A/9 certified copy of his order in Criminal Misc Case No. 8 of 1964 dated 17-7-1964. Finally, the third respondent entered upon the disputed land and raised a long bund.

7. The petitioner's Society filed an application dated 15-5-1964 before the Director of Settlement and Land Records stating the facts and requested him to assess all the available land within the boundaries described in Exts A/1 and A/2 in favour of the petitioner. It also objected to proposal for settlement of any portion of the land with the third respondent. On the report of the Assistant Survey and Settlement Officer, Thoubal and of Shri A. K. Biswas, Deputy Settlement Officer having the powers of the Survey and Settlement Officer under the Act of 1960, Shri A. C. Bhattacharyee Settlement Officer having the powers of the Director of Settlement and Land Records passed an order on 12-8-1964 approving of the recording of the entire area of 1662 acres in the name of the petitioner's Society and recording the third respondent as an encroacher in respect of 1.77 acres within the said land. Vide Ext. A/3 certified copy of their orders.

8. The third respondent preferred a memorandum of appeal D/- 26-9-1964 under S. 93(1) (c) of the Act of 1960 to the first respondent against the order of the Settlement Officer D/- 12-8-1964 in C. C. Revenue Appeal No. 5 of 1964. The first respondent allowed the appeal on 8-12-1964 and granted settlement of 1.77 acres out of the disputed land in favour of the third respondent and ordered that the remaining excess land should be settled with the petitioner society.

9. Hence, the present petition for an appropriate writ to quash the order of the first respondent dated 8-12-1964.

10. The respondents 1 and 2 filed a counter affidavit narrating the facts that the third respondent filed N. L. Case No. 261 of 1962 on the file of the A. S. & S. O. (B), Thoubal seeking settlement of 3 sangams within Waithou Fishery area claiming that it was in his possession, that the Supervisor Kanungo recommended his application, that the third respondent had also filed another petition Misc. Case No. 333 of 1963 A. S. & S. O. (B) before the Director of Settlement and Land Records for the same relief, that the petitioner filed Misc. Case No. 986/1964/A. S. & S. O. Thoubal for assessment of land revenue in respect of the excess area of acres 4.12, claiming that it was included within the area settled by the Deputy Commissioner on 8-12-1962 as seen from Exts. A/1 and A/2 and that the Director of Settlement and Land Records held in favour of the petitioner while the first respondent set aside his order on appeal by the third respondent.

11. The third respondent stated in his counter affidavit that the order of the Director of Settlement and Land Records dated 12-8-1964 is illegal, that the third respondent has been in possession and enjoyment of the excess land, that only 5 paris, i.e., ac. 12.50 of land was settled with the petitioner's Society, that the Society has no right to the remaining excess land and that the first respondent properly settled 1.77 acres of land in favour of the third respondent.

12. The first question that arises for determination is whether the land mentioned within the 4 boundaries described in Exts. A/1 and A/2 which has been subsequently found to be 6¾ paris, that is, 16.62 acres was settled with the petitioner or whether only 5 paris, equal to 12.50 acres of land mentioned in Exts. A/1 and A/2 was settled in favour of the petitioner society. In other words, the question is whether the boundaries prevail over the extent. Though the extent of the land was described as 5 paris i.e., 12½ acres of land in both Exts. A/1 and A/2, the land, which was settled with the petitioner, was described by boundaries. The northern boundary was described as Waithou Fishery and foot-path. The eastern, western and southern boundaries were described as "Burma Road and hill". It transpired in the Survey and Settlement operation of 1962-63 that the land is actually 6¾ paris, equal to 16.62 acres and not 5 paris i.e., 12½ acres. The contention of the respondents' counsel is that the extent was described as 5 paris in both Exts. A/1 and A/2 and that therefore 5 paris of land only were settled with the petitioner's Society.

Though, it is true to say that the extent was described as 5 paris, the land which was settled with the petitioner was further identified by boundaries. It appears that there is a mound between the low-lying area and the Burma Road and the hill on the southern side which is the material boundary in this case. It also appears that when the land was enjoyed by Waithou Soirel Fishery No. 226, the third respondent was employed as Chowkidar of a brick-field and was allowed to occupy a portion of the mound. So, he has been in possession of the elevated portion of the mound. But, in view of the fact that the land described within the boundaries mentioned in Exts. A/1 and A/2 was settled with the petitioner's Society, it follows that the boundaries must prevail. It can be seen from Ext. A/3 also that the area allotted is bounded by Burma Road and hill on the southern and the western sides. According to the petitioner's counsel the Burma Road and the hill on the southern side are in a zig-zag condition. It is immaterial whether a portion of the land settled with the petitioner is low-lying and another portion is like a mound, inasmuch as, the fixed boundaries have to prevail over the wrongly mentioned measurements. The incorrectly described quantity has to be rejected as falsa demonstratio. This proposition of law cannot be disputed. Vide passage at page 760 of the Indian Evidence Act by Sarkar 8th Edition and Subbayya Chakkiliyan v. M. Muthia Goundan, AIR 1924 Mad 493, Baker Ali v. Amir Ali Meah, AIR 1939 Rang 396, Palestine Kupat Am Bank Co-operative Society Ltd. v. Govt. of Palestine, AIR 1948 PC 207 and A. Basavapunnareddy v. K. Krishnayya, AIR 1966 Andh Pra 260. That the respondents 1 and 2 understood that the settlement covered the entire land within the 4 boundaries described in Exts. A/1 and A/2 is clear from Exts. A/5 and A/6, under which the arrears of land revenue and other dues were realised from the former Waithou Phumnom Fishing Co-operative Society Limited for the entire area and from Ext. A/7 under which the name of the petitioner's Society was registered with reference to the entire 16.62 acres of land. Though the record of rights under Chapter V of the Act of 1960 is not yet finally published, Ext. A/7 is admissible in evidence to show that the entire land in question was mutated in the name of the petitioner's Society. The weight to be attached to this entry is, of course, a different matter. Exts. A/8 to A/10 show that the third respondent was also restrained by the S. D. M. from interfering with the disputed land.

The learned Counsel for the respondents argued that the petitioner did not rely on Exts. A/5 to A/10 before the 1st respondent and that it cannot rely on them in the High Court. He cited Basant Singh v Janak Singh, AIR 1954 All 447, Gandhinagar Motor Transport Society v State of Bombay, AIR 1954 Bom 202, M/s Pannalal Bijraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397, Nawasaiah v District Collector, Kurnool, AIR 1961 Andh Pra 253 and Commr of I-T, Andhra Pradesh, Hyderabad v Sri Raja Reddy Mallaram, AIR 1964 SC 825 in support of his contention. The first three decisions lay down that the question of jurisdiction of a Tribunal to pass an order cannot be challenged in a writ petition. The fourth case lays down that the plea of illegality of assessment, which was not raised at any stage cannot be raised in a writ petition. The last case decided that a question, not arising out of the order of a Tribunal and out of the question referred to the High Court by the Tribunal, cannot be raised before the Supreme Court in an appeal against the answer given by the High Court upon the reference. But, Exts A/5 to A/10 were filed by the petitioner along with the reply affidavit. They too can be looked into. Disputed questions of fact have to be decided on the basis of affidavits and a plea taken in the affidavit-in-rejoinder can also be considered. Vide Sri-L. Sri Subramania Desika Gnanasambanda Pandarasanna v State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 1578 and Barum Chemicals Ltd. v Company Law Board, AIR 1967 SC 295.

13. Secondly, it is to be seen from Ext. A/1 that the first respondent accorded sanction to the de-reservation of the land within the 4 boundaries for piscicultural purposes. In Ext. A/2 the petitioner was directed to use the land in question only for piscicultural purposes. So, the de-reservation of the land within the 4 boundaries was made only for piscicultural purposes. Under Section 2 (b) of the Act of 1960, "Agriculture" includes "pisciculture". But, the first respondent did not mention in his order in C. C. Revenue Appeal Case No 5 of 1964 (vide Ext. A/4) for what purpose 1.77 acres of land, out of the excess land, were settled with the third respondent, though he settled the remaining excess land of 2.35 acres with the petitioner's Society. The land could be settled only for some agricultural purposes including pisciculture. But, Ext. A/4 does not show that the excess of 1.77 acres was granted to the third respondent for agricultural purposes. Besides, no order was passed for fresh de-reservation of the excess land in favour of the third respondent.

14. Thirdly, according to the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Allotment of Land Rules, 1962, which were framed by the first respondent in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Section 98 of the Act of 1960, the third respondent could not be preferred for allotment of the land in question. For, under Rule (6) (u) of the said Rules, in allotting land for agricultural purposes, a landless agricultural worker should be preferred in the order of preference individually mentioned in Rule 6. Under Rule 8 of the said Rules, when there are claims by an individual and a registered Co-operative Society constituted for the purpose for which the land is to be allotted, then the Society has to be given the land in preference to the individual. So, in this regard, the learned Chief Commissioner erred in allotting the land to the third respondent in preference to the petitioner's Society.

15. Fourthly, there is also a lacuna in the order of the first respondent. Under Section 14 (1) of the Act of 1960, it is the Deputy Commissioner who alone can allot land belonging to the Government for agricultural purposes or for construction of dwelling houses, in accordance with the rules. The Administrator can allot land under sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act for the purpose of an industry or for any purpose of public utility on such conditions as may be prescribed or he may entrust the management of any such land or any rights therein to the Gram Panchayat of the village established under any law for the time being in force. Under Rule 6 of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Rules of 1961, a Revenue Officer may exercise any power or discharge any function, which may be exercised or discharged as the case may be by any officer subordinate to him, save as otherwise provided by the Act of 1960. So, the first respondent could not exercise the powers of the Deputy Commissioner, who is subordinate to him, in view of sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act, under which it is only the Deputy Commissioner who can allot land of the Government for agricultural purposes. But, the first respondent could direct the Deputy Commissioner to allot the land of 1.77 acres (if he is otherwise competent to do so) to allot the land to the third respondent. But, Ext. A/4 shows that the learned Chief Commissioner stated that the third respondent encroached upon 1.77 acres of land out of the excess area of 4.12 acres, that considering that he is also a landless person, that he encroached upon the land and that he was in possession of it for about 7/8 years, it would meet the ends of justice, if 1.77 acres of land were settled with him, while the remaining excess land was settled with the petitioner's Society. The third respondent states in para 4 of his counter affidavit that the first respondent acted within his jurisdiction in granting settlement of the land in favour of the third respondent. The order of the first respondent as per Ext. A/4 is an order granting settlement of the land of 1.77 acres in extent in favour of the third respondent and not a mere direction to the Deputy Commissioner to allot the said land to him. So, in this regard also the order of the first respondent is illegal.

16. The petitioner's learned Counsel contended that under S. 94(1)(a) of the Act of 1960, the third respondent should have filed C. C. Revenue Appeal Case No. 5 of 1964 within 30 days from 12-8-1964, the (date of) order of the Settlement Officer in N. L. Case No. 61 of 1962-A. S. S. O. (B) and Misc. Case No. 986/1964-A. S. & S. O. Thoubal and that, therefore, the appeal was incompetent. No doubt, under S. 94(1)(a) of the Act of 1960, the appeal should have been preferred within 30 days from the date of the order. But, the Settlement Officer decided the case in the absence of the third respondent. Under Rule 135 of the Manipur Land Revenue and Land Reforms Rules of 1961 he was bound to follow the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in deciding the cases. But, he passed the order without hearing the third respondent. So, his order is a void one. A "void" judgment has been defined as one which has no legal force or effect, invalidity of which may be asserted by any person whose rights are affected at any time and at any place directly or collaterally. Vide the definition of "void judgment" at page 1745 of Black's Law Dictionary — 4th edition. Vide also Haopha Tangkhul v. Vakam, AIR 1958 Manipur 20. The order of the Settlement Officer does not bind the 3rd respondent and can be ignored by him. As such, it cannot be said that C. C. Revenue Appeal Case No. 5 of 1964 could not be entertained by the first respondent after the expiry of the period of 30 days.

17. The learned counsel for the respondents formulated the following contentions in support of their plea that the writ petition is not maintainable. Firstly, he urged that under Section 85 of the Assam Co-operative Societies Act (Assam Act 1 of 1950), which is applicable to Manipur the writ petition by the Chairman of the Society is not maintainable. This contention is not correct. Section 85 lays down that every registered Society shall be deemed to be a body corporate by the name, under which it is registered with perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to hold property, to enter into contracts, to institute and defend suits and other legal proceedings and to do all things necessary for the purposes for which it was constituted. In the present case the petitioner is the Society. But, the petitioner has further added in the cause title that it is represented by the Chairman Maimom Ibotoon Singh. So, the petitioner filed the writ petition as a body corporate.

18. The second contention of the respondents' Counsel is that the petitioner also applied to the Director of Settlement and Land Records on 15-5-1964 to grant excess land in its favour and that, therefore, it is estopped from contending that the entire land within the 4 boundaries was settled in the first instance with the petitioner. An estoppel may operate under Section 115, Evidence Act, if a person, by his declaration, act or omission intentionally causes or permits another person to believe a thing to be true and act upon such belief, then the former is estopped from denying the truth of the thing. Vide also page 1559 of Vol. 2 of AIR Commentaries on the Constitution of India — First Edition and Shiv Narain v. Regional Transport Authority, Jaipur Region, Jaipur, AIR 1953 Raj 1. But, in the present case it is clear from para 5 of the writ petition that the petitioner never alleged that the excess land should be granted to it under a fresh settlement. But para 5 shows that the petitioner laid a claim to the excess land on the ground that it was included in the original settlement of the entire land included within the boundaries mentioned in Ext. A/2. So, there is no question of estoppel.

19. The third contention of the respondents is that this writ petition is barred by the provisions of Section 159, of the Act of 1960, which bar any suit or other proceedings in respect of any matter arising under the Act, and which provide for remedy by way of a suit if a question of title is involved between the parties, except as otherwise provided in the Act and that the petitioner had a remedy under sub-section (4) of Section 11 of the Act to file a civil suit within a period of six months from the date of the order of the Deputy Commissioner whom the petitioner should have approached for settlement of the excess land or within a period of six months from the date of the order passed in appeal or in revision against his order and that the petitioner should have resorted to the special procedure prescribed by the Act of 1960. He relied on G. Veerappa Pillai v. Raman and Raman Ltd., Kumbakonam, AIR 1952 SC 192, Ram Chandra Malpani v. State of Assam, AIR 1963 Assam 168 and Kailashchandra v. District Judge, Bhopal, AIR 1963 Madh Pra 218, in support of his contention that when there is an alternative remedy, no writ petition lies. But, now it is too late in the day to advance such an argument. The Supreme Court has made it clear that the existence of an alternative remedy is not always a bar. It is pre-eminently a matter of discretion. Where the remedy suggested is not equally convenient or efficacious or effective and when it involves very onerous, expensive and lengthy proceedings, a writ lies. Vide Municipal Council, Khurai v. Kamal Kumar, AIR 1965 SC 1321, Addl. Collector of Customs, Bombay v. Shantilal & Co., AIR 1966 SC 197, Ist I.T. Officer, Salem v. Short Brothers (P) Ltd., AIR 1967 SC 81, Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co. Ltd. v. Asstt. Commr. of Com- mercial Taxes, AIR 1967 SC 1401 and Surgical Dressings Mfg. Co., Pvt. Ltd., Amritsar v Punjab State, 1968 Lab IC 722 (Punjab), Vide also my own latest decision in Juwang-jao Kabui v. Union of India, 1968 Lab IC 1145 (Manipur).

20. The last contention of the respondents' Counsel is that the High Court cannot sit as an appellate authority and interfere with the orders of the tribunals. He relied on the passage at pages, 2882, 2884, 2885, 2892 and 2903 in Vol III of AIR Manual, 2nd Edition and AIR 1952 SC 192 and Sangram Singh v. Election Tribunal, Kotah, AIR 1955 SC 425. But, the foundation for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution of India is the existence of a legal right and its infringement. Vide K. S. Rashid and Son v. Income-tax Investigation Commission, 1954 SCR 738 (AIR 1954 SC 207), Pramad Nath Mitter v. Chief Justice of Calcutta High Court, AIR 1961 Cal 545 (SB), Calcutta Gas Company (Proprietary) Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1044, State of Punjab v. Suraj Parkash Kapur, AIR 1963 SC 507 and State of Orissa v. Ram Chandra, AIR 1964 SC 685. In the present case, the petitioner had legal right to the entire land covered by the 4 boundaries mentioned in Exts A/1 and A/2. Its right was infringed by the order of the first respondent and it is, therefore, liable to be set aside.

21. The respondents' counsel pointed out that the petitioner did not make any prayer for any relief in the writ petition and that, therefore it is liable to be dismissed. It may be seen that this contention is not wholly correct. In paragraph 10 (a) the petitioner states that a rule nisi should be issued to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not be issued quashing the impugned order and the proceedings mentioned in the writ petition. No doubt, if the entire order of the first respondent evidenced by Ext. A/5 is set aside, that portion of the order under which he granted the settlement of the remaining 2.35 acres in favour of the petitioner will also be quashed. But, the petitioner will be entitled to settlement of the entire excess land.

22. In the result, the rule nisi is made absolute and the order of the first respondent evidenced by Ext. A/4 is set aside. It is hereby ordered that all the excess land should be settled with the petitioner Society and that the 3rd respondent should be recorded as an encroacher. The petitioner is entitled to costs. Pleadings fee — Rs 100 00 NP.

Petitioners v. Haojam Damudor Singh, Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 9 of 1968, D/ 8-1-1969, against order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Manipur, D/- 6-5-1968.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 107 — "Is informed" — No restriction as to source of information — Action on basis of police report and complaint petition — Action, held, not incompetent. Note 3 at p. 395 of Vol. I of AIR Commentaries on Cr. P. C. 6th Edn. and AIR 1953 Cal 109, Rel. on. (Para 7)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 107, 112 and Proviso to 114 — On facts, held, order passed under the above provisions was proper.

The order of the Magistrate showed that he was satisfied that there was imminent breach of the peace between the parties and that it could only be prevented by the immediate arrest of the petitioners. He, therefore, directed the petitioners to show cause why they should not execute a bond for Rs. 500/- with one surety for a like amount for keeping the peace for 12 months from date of disposal of the proceedings and issued warrant of arrest against the petitioners.

Held, that under S. 112 and the proviso to S. 114, Criminal P. C. he was competent to pass the above order, as he deemed it necessary to require the petitioners to show cause why action should not be taken under S. 107, Criminal P. C. (Para 8)

(C) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 117 (3), 112 and 114 — Composite order — Appending of an order under S. 117 (3) to an order under S. 112, held, illegal.

In a case, the Magistrate passed a composite order made up of three portions. The first portion of the order related to initiation of proceedings under Section 107 Criminal P. C. on the basis of police report and a complaint petition. Considering the fact that the existing imminent breach of the peace could only be prevented by the immediate arrest of the petitioners, he passed the second portion of the order directing execution of a bond and further issued a warrant of arrest against them. In the third portion of the order he stated that he had reason to believe that the petitioners would not attend his court unless compelled to do so and therefore he ordered the officer-in-charge of the outpost to arrest and produce them on the hearing date. This portion of the order appeared to have been passed under S. 117 (3).

Held, that the third portion of the order under S. 117 (3) appended to the order under Sec. 112 was bad and liable to be set aside, because, before the Magistrate proceeded to take action under S. 117 (3), the order passed by him under S. 112 must have been read or explained to the petitioners. It was, however, not necessary that the Magistrate should have commenced taking evidence before he passed the order under S. 117 (3).

The impugned portion of the order if construed as one under S. 114 must be upheld, though it would be redundant in the face of the order of arrest passed in the second portion. (Para 9)

The Magistrate could pass the order subsequently under Sec. 117 (3), Cr. P. C. if he was satisfied that an emergency existed and that urgent orders were necessary by acting upon the application of the police officer or upon the oral testimony of the police prosecutor etc. Pt. 4, Note 6, Page 472 of AIR Commentaries on Cr. P. C. Vol. I, 6th Edn., AIR 1953 Cal 238 & AIR 1962 Pat 51, Foll. (Para 9)

(D) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 117 (3) and 112 — Magistrate passing an order under S. 112 — Subsequently, emergency compelling him to make an order under S. 117 (3) — Order under S. 117 (3) not bad for being on the same information and evidence as the order under S. 112. (E) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 435, 438, 117 (3) and 514 — Composite order of Magistrate — Illegal order under S. 117 (3) with consequential order under S. 514 — One revision petition challenging the composite order maintainable. AIR 1958 Pat 314 & AIR 1968 Mani 74, Dist. (Para 11)

R. K. Nokulsana Singh, for Petitioners; Ng. Mohendra Singh, for Respondent.

ORDER: This is a revision petition filed by the petitioners in Criminal Revision Case No. 1 of 1967 on the file of the Additional District Magistrate Manipur under Sections 435 and 439, Cr. P. C. to set aside his order dated 6-5-1968, under which he upheld the order of the S. D. M., Bishenpur passed in Criminal Misc. Case No. 37 of 1967 under Section 107, Cr. P. C.

2. The Police Officer in charge of Kumbi Outpost filed a report on 7-8-1967 before the S. D. M. Bishenpur recommending the initiation of proceedings under Section 107, Cr. P. C. against the petitioners. The learned S. D. M., Bishenpur passed a composite order on the same date of 7-8-1967 stating, firstly, that he heard the respondent herein, who stated that certain land in dispute mentioned in the schedule of the order passed by him was cultivated by him for about 11 years, that on 3-8-1967 the petitioners ploughed away the land and threatened to murder the respondent if he interfered that the learned S. D. M. was satisfied with the information filed by the Police, which was supported by the complaint petition, that there was imminent breach of the peace between the parties and that the only measures to be taken to prevent the breach of peace was immediate arrest of the petitioners.

So, he registered the case as Criminal Misc. Case No. 37 of 1967 under Section 107, Cr. P. C. Secondly, he directed the petitioners to show cause why they should not execute a bond for Rs. 500/- with one surety for a like amount for keeping peace for a period of 12 months from the date of the disposal of the proceeding and ordered issue of a warrant of arrest against the petitioners returnable at 9-30 a.m. on 16-8-1967 and appended schedule of the disputed land to his order. Thirdly, below the schedule he passed another order on the same day of 7-8-1967 stating that the petitioners committed an offence under Section 107, Cr. P. C. in respect of the disputed land by entering into it forcibly with deadly weapons, that the Magistrate had sufficient reason to believe that the petitioners would not attend his Court for hearing of the case unless they were compelled to do so and that, therefore, they should be arrested and brought before him before 9-30 a.m. on 16-8-1967.

3. On 16-8-1967, 10 of the petitioners were brought under arrest and produced before the learned Magistrate. They moved for bail. But, the Magistrate remanded them to Jail on the ground that they did not produce sureties and directed that they should execute interim bonds. He posted the case to 31-8-1967.

4. On 17-8-1967, the petitioner executed interim bonds and they were released from Jail.

5. On 31-8-1967, the Magistrate posted the case to 28-9-1967 to enable the petitioners to file their statements to show cause against the notices issued to them. In the meanwhile the S. D. M. started proceedings in Criminal Misc. Case No. 37 of 1967 under Section 514, Cr. P. C. against six persons out of the petitioners on the ground that they violated the terms of the interim bonds executed by them.

6. The petitioners filed Criminal Revision No. 1 of 1967 on the file of the Additional District Magistrate, Manipur u/ss. 435 & 438, Cr. P. C. to make a reference to this Court to set aside the various orders of the S. D. M. The learned Additional District Magistrate dismissed the petition. Hence, the present revision petition.

7. The first question that arises for determination is whether the composite order of the learned S D M dated 7-8-1967 (consisting of three portions mentioned above) under Sections 107 and 112 and evidently under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. is a valid one. Regarding the first portion of his order, it is seen that he was entitled to act upon the Police report as well as the complaint petition filed by the respondent. There is no restriction as to the source of the information, on which a Magistrate can act under Section 107, Cr. P. C. Vide also Note 3 at page 395 of Vol I of AIR Commentaries on Cr P C 6th Edition and also Tulsibala Rakhut v. N N Khosal, AIR 1953 Cal 109. As such, the Magistrate was competent to initiate the proceedings under Section 107, Cr P C.

8. The second portion of the order of the S. D. M. dated 7-8-1967 shows that he was satisfied that there was imminent breach of the peace between the parties and that it could only be prevented by the immediate arrest of the petitioners. He, therefore, directed the petitioners to show cause why they should not execute a bond for Rs 500/- with one surety for a like amount for keeping peace for a period of 12 months from the date of the disposal of the proceedings and issued warrant of arrest against the petitioners. Under Section 112 and the proviso to Section 114, Cr P C. he was competent to pass the above order in question, as he deemed it necessary to require the petitioners to show cause why action should not be taken under Section 107, Cr P C.

9. Then, the third portion of the order of the S D M dated 7-8-1967 shows that he attached a further order stating that he had sufficient reason to believe that the petitioners would not attend his Court for the hearing of the case, unless they were compelled to do so and that, therefore, he authorised the Officer in charge of Kumbi Outpost to arrest the petitioners and produce them before him on 16-8-1967 at 9-30 a.m. Under Section 114, Cr. P. C. the Magistrate shall issue a summons to the person against whom proceedings are drafted under Section 112 read with Section 107, Cr P. C. if he is not present in the Court. But, under the proviso to Section 114, Cr P C he is competent to issue a warrant of arrest if he is of the opinion that the commission of the breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of the person, against whom proceedings are taken under Section 107 read with Section 112, Cr. P. C. So, if this order of the Magistrate is to be construed only to show that the Magistrate issued the warrant of arrest under the proviso to Section 114, Cr. P. C. it is not illegal, though it is redundant, as he had already passed an order of arrest of the petitioners in the second portion of his order. But, the notes paper maintained by the Magistrate shows that this order was construed by him as one under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C., whereunder pending the completion of the inquiry under sub-section (1) of Section 117, Cr. P. C. he could call upon the petitioners by passing a separate order recording his reasons to execute bonds with or without sureties for keeping the peace until the conclusion of the enquiry, etc.

That the Magistrate construed it as an order under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. is clear from the fact that he initiated separate proceedings against some of the petitioners under Section 514, Cr. P. C. in Criminal Misc. Case No 37 of 1967 on the ground that they violated the terms of the interim bonds. An order under sub-section (3) of Section 107, Cr. P. C. can be passed when the proceedings have reached the stage of enquiry under Section 117 (1), Cr. P. C. The latter stage arises after the order under Section 112, Cr. P. C. had been read or explained to the petitioners after they were produced before the Magistrate and when the Magistrate proceeded to enquire into the truth of the information, upon which he took action. The Magistrate need not commence to take evidence before he passes the order under sub-section (3) of Section 117, Cr. P. C. But, it is necessary, before he proceeds to take action under sub-section (3) of Section 117, Cr. P. C., that the order passed by him under Section 112, Cr. P. C. has been read or explained to the petitioners. That this is the correct view is also evident from Pt. 4 note 6, page 472 of AIR Commentaries on Cr P. C.—Vol. I—6th Edition. The learned Commentators state that an order under sub-section (3) of Section 117, Cr. P. C. is not a mere routine order to be appended to an order under Section 112, Cr. P. C. and is not meant merely to anticipate the final order which may be made under Section 118, Cr. P. C., that it is designed to meet an emergency and that a composite order drawing up a proceeding under section 107, Cr. P. C. and calling upon the parties to furnish interim bonds under Section 117 (3), Cr P C is irregular in law. But, the Magistrate can pass the order subsequently under Section 117 (3), Cr P. C. if he is satisfied that an emergency exists and that urgent orders are necessary by acting upon the application of the Police Officer or upon the oral testimony of the police prosecutor, etc. The order is not bad merely on the ground that the Magistrate passed it on the same information and on the same evidence, which were the basis of his order under Sec 112, Cr P. C. Vide also Dulal Chandra Mondal v. The State, AIR 1953 Cal 238 and Amir Singh v. State, AIR 1962 Pat 51 in this connection which support this view.

10. Thus, the composite order passed by the S D. M. by appending an order under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. to the order under Section 112, Cr P C. is illegal. The proceedings taken by the learned S. D. M. under Sections 107, 112 and the proviso of Section 114, Cr. P. C. will stand. But, the proceedings taken by him under Sec. 117 (3), Cr. P. C. and subsequently under Sec. 514, Cr. P. C. are hereby set aside. If the Magistrate feels that action has to be taken under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. he is at liberty to do so by following the provisions of Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C.

11. The learned counsel for the respondent contended that the present Revision Petition is bad in law as it was filed to set aside the orders of the S. D. M. in two different cases. He relied on Bankim Chandra Chakravarty v. Regional Provident Fund Commissioner, AIR 1958 Pat 314 and my own judgment in Aribam Pishak Sharma v. Aribam Tuleswar Sharma, AIR 1968 Mani 74, where it was held that a single writ petition does not lie in respect of different cases. But, the present one is not a matter of this type. It is the composite order dated 7-8-1967, which was passed by the S. D. M., which is now in question. It includes an illegal order under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. and consequential further action taken by the S. D. M. under Section 514, Cr. P. C. against the petitioners for violating the irregular order. So, these rulings have no application to the facts of the present case.

12. In the result, the revision petition is allowed in part. The interim bonds executed by the petitioners pending enquiry under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. and the subsequent action taken by the Magistrate under Section 514, Cr. P. C. are quashed. The Magistrate is directed to pass a fresh order under Section 117 (3), Cr. P. C. if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of the breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or for the public safety. He should record his reasons in writing, if he passes the order.

TVN/D.V.C. Petition partly allowed.

N. Ibotombi Singh, for Petitioner; R. K. Manisana Singh, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT: This appeal under Sec. 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act hereinafter referred to as the Act is directed against the judgment dated 19-3-1969 by which the Additional District Judge, Manipur, dismissed the petition of Narendra Nath Kochar claiming a decree for judicial separation from his wife Sudershan Sekhar.

2. Narendra Nath Kochar had sought judicial separation on the sole ground that Sudershan Sekhar had deserted him for more than two years before the presentation of the petition. Sudershan Sekhar opposed that prayer by traversing the allegation that she had deserted her husband. She pleaded that after their marriage had been solemnised at Delhi they both came to Imphal, where her husband is engaged in business, and took up residence there. The petitioner, however, began to treat her with cruelty. In May 1964 the petitioner took her to Delhi and there she underwent an operation in the Irwin hospital. The petitioner left Delhi for Imphal without caring to attend on her during convalescence at Delhi, nor cared thereafter to bring her back to Imphal. It was, therefore, the petitioner who had deserted her and not the other way about. She offered to live with the petitioner as behoves a dutiful Hindu wife.

3. The learned additional District Judge found, on the basis of evidence led before him, that the petitioner had failed to establish that his wife had deserted him. In consequence, he dismissed the petition with costs.

4. The sole question debated in this Court was whether the additional District Judge had the jurisdiction to try the petition. It was vigorously contended by Shri Ibotombi Singh, appearing for the appellant, that since according to Section 19 of the Hindu Marriage Act a petition under the Act has to be presented to the District Court and since the Court of the Additional Distdict Judge is not the District Court within the meaning of that expression as defined in clause (b) of Section 3 of the Act, the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to try the petition. Shri Manisana Singh, representing the respondent, urged, on the contrary, that in view of the definition of District Court given in Section 2 (iii) of the Manipur (Courts) Act, 1955, hereinafter called the Manipur Act, the Court of Additional District Judge is a District Court and as such the Additional District Judge had the jurisdiction to try the petition.

After examining the relevant provisions of the two Acts, the Hindu Marriage Act and the Manipur (Courts) Act, and the authorities cited at the bar, I have reached the conclusion that the submission made by Shri Manisana Singh, is well founded and so must prevail. I may mention here, before proceeding with the discussion of the relevant provisions of the two Acts and the authorities, that the petition was originally presented to the District Judge Manipur, and since he was taken ill this Court transferred that petition to the Additional District Judge for disposal.

5. Section 19 of the Act prescribes that every petition under the Act shall be presented to the District Court within the local limits of whose ordinary original civil jurisdiction the marriage was solemnized or the husband and the wife reside or last resided together. In Section 3 (b) of the Act, the expression "District Court" is defined to mean, in any area for which there is a City Civil Court, that Court, and in any other area the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, and includes any other Civil Court which may be specified by the State Government by notification in the Official Gazette, as having jurisdiction in respect of the matters dealt with in the Act. There is no dispute on the point that the Court of Additional District Judge, Manipur, is neither a City Civil Court, nor is it a Court which has been specified by the State Government as having jurisdiction in respect of matters dealt with in the Act. Therefore, we are left to examine whether that Court is the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the territory of Manipur.

The expression "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" is not defined in the Act. It was not disputed by Shri Ibotombi Singh that the meaning of that expression shall have to be determined with the aid of the Manipur Act. Shri Ibotombi Singh invited my attention to Sections 16, 17 and 18 of the Manipur Act to convince me that they do not contemplate any Court of Additional District Judge and as such the Additional District Judge, Manipur, cannot be described as the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction. Section 16 enacts that in addition to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the Courts of Small Causes established under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and the Courts established under any other law for the time being in force, there shall be the following classes of Civil Courts in the State of Manipur—

- (i) the District Court;
- (ii) the Court of Subordinate Judge;
- (iii) the Court of a Munsiff.

Section 17 provides that the Chief Commissioner, Manipur, may divide the State of Manipur into civil districts and appoint as many persons as he thinks necessary to be District Judges. He shall then post those persons as District Judges in charge of the various districts. Section 18 (1) states that when the business pending before the Court of District Judge requires the aid of Additional District Judge for its speedy disposal, the Chief Commissioner may appoint such number of Additional District Judges as may be necessary. Sub-section (2) of Section 18 prescribes that the Additional District Judges appointed under sub-section (1) shall discharge any of the functions of a District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them and in the discharge of those functions they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge.

The provisions contained in Sections 16 to 18 have to be read in conjunction with Sections 2 (iii) and 20 of the Manipur Act to comprehend their exact scope. According to Section 2 (iii) the expression "District Court" means "the Court of the District Judge and includes the Court of the additional District Judge." This definition makes it abundantly clear that the District Court in Manipur means not only the Court of District Judge but it also includes within its ambit the Court of the additional District Judge. Section 20 of the Manipur Act states that the District Court shall be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the District. Therefore, the District Court in Manipur, which comprises the Courts of District Judge and that of the additional District Judge, is the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction. As such, the expression "District Court" as defined in Section 3 (b) of the Act comprises in the territory of Manipur not only the Court of District Judge but also the Court of the Additional District Judge. The matter appears to be so clear and simple as to not to necessitate the consideration of authorities cited at the bar by the parties' Counsel. In fairness to them, however, I have decided to make a short reference to them.

6. Shri Ibotombi Singh placed reliance on the authority reported in AIR 1959 Punj 50, Janak Dulani v. Narain Dass, to support the contention that the Court of Additional District Judge in Manipur cannot be said to be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction under Section 19 of the Act. The Punjab High Court undoubtedly held that the Court of an Additional District Judge in the Punjab cannot be considered to be the principal Civil Court of original civil jurisdiction within the meaning of Section 19 of the Act, and that as such a District Judge to whom a petition under the Act is presented cannot transfer it to an Additional District Judge, and if such a transfer is made the latter Court would have no jurisdiction to hear and decide the case. This decision was founded on the authority of Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 391, wherein the Supreme Court held, after examining the various provisions of the Punjab Courts Act of 1918, that the Court of the Additional Judge or Additional District Judge in the Punjab is not a Division Court of the Court of the District Judge but is a separate and distinct Court of its own. The Division Bench of the Punjab High Court in the case of Janak Dulari, AIR 1959 Punj 50 (supra) held that although they were bound to accept and act upon the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the case of Kuldip Singh, AIR 1956 SC 391 (supra), they could not "refrain from observing with the utmost respect that it runs counter to the way in which the Punjab Courts Act has been interpreted and acted upon in the State of Punjab and also the State of Delhi to which Punjab Courts Act has been 'extended'". It would, therefore, appear that the Punjab High Court left to itself would have negatived the contention that the Court of Additional District Judge in the Punjab does not answer the description of the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction contemplated by Secs. 19 and 3 (b) of the Act.

Further, it remains to be emphasised that the Supreme Court gave its finding on the basis of the specific provisions of the Punjab Courts Act and if those provisions happen to differ from the provisions of the Manipur Act, there would be no obligation on this Court to hold that in Manipur the Court of Additional District Judge is either not the "District Court" or "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction". The Supreme Court clarified the position by observing as under in para 24 of the judgment:

"We make it clear that our decision on this point is confined to the Punjab Act. We understand that similar Acts in other States are differently worded so that what we decide for the Punjab may not hold good elsewhere. We say this because rulings were cited before us from other parts of India which take differing views. We do not intend to refer to them because it would not be right to examine the language of Acts that are not directly before us. Accordingly, we confine ourselves to the Punjab Act (Act VI of 1918)".

The Punjab Courts Act contemplates three classes of Civil Courts, besides the Courts of Small Causes and Courts established under other enactment. The three classes of Civil Courts are:

- (1) the Court of District Judge;
- (2) the Court of Additional Judge; and
- (3) the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Shri Ibotombi Singh was not able to bring to my notice any provision of the Punjab Courts

Act corresponding to Section 2 (iii) of the Manipur Act, where the expression "District Court" is defined to mean the Court of the District Judge including the Court of the Additional District Judge. Therefore, the Supreme Court and the Punjab High Court authorities relied upon by Shri Ibotombi Singh are clearly distinguishable and so are not helpful in comprehending the meaning and scope of the expressions "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" and "District Court" as used in Section 3 (b) of the Act for the purposes of the territory of Manipur.

7. Shri Manisana Singh cited before me the authorities reported in AIR 1960 Cal 565, Ajit Kumar Bhunia v. Sm. Kanan Bala, and AIR 1962 J & K 41, Ram Pal v. Mst. Ajit Kaur, to support the rival contention propounded by him. On the basis of their respective Acts, the two High Courts, of Calcutta, AIR 1960 Cal 565, and of Jammu & Kashmir, AIR 1962 J & K 41, held that the Additional District Judge is competent to decide a petition lodged under the Act if transferred to him by the District Judge. Since the decisions given by the two High Courts turned on the provisions of the Acts prevalent in the two States, I feel clear that not much help can be derived from them in deciding the point canvassed before this Court. I feel clear that in each State the answer to the question raised in this appeal will depend upon the provisions of the respective Act under which the Courts are constituted. Since, however, in Manipur the Court of the Additional District Judge is specifically declared as constituting or forming part of, the "District Court" within the meaning of that expression as defined in Section 2 (iii) of the Manipur Act, and since Section 20 of that Act provides that the District Court shall be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, I have no misgivings that the Additional District Judge had the necessary jurisdiction to decide the petition made by Narendra Nath Kochhar to the District Judge after this Court had transferred the same to him for disposal.

8. The decisions of the Calcutta and Jammu & Kashmir High Courts however, call for one observation. It appears that both the High Courts tried to distinguish the Supreme Court decision from the cases they had to deal with on the assumption that the appeal by Kuldip Singh, AIR 1956 SC 391 in the Supreme Court case against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge Mr. Pitam Singh had been filed directly in the Court of the Additional District Judge. The two High Courts also appear to be of the opinion that if Kuldip Singh had filed the appeal in the Court of the District Judge and the latter had assigned the same to the Additional District Judge for disposal, the order made by the latter would not have suffered from any legal infirmity. However, the factual assumption made by the two High Courts, viz. that the appeal had been filed directly in the Court of the Additional District Judge, does not appear to be correct. I know it from my personal experience in the Punjab that all cases are filed in the Court of the District Judge and it is he who assigns some out of them to the Additional District Judge for disposal. No case is directly instituted in the Court of the Additional District Judge. Exactly this practice appears to have been followed in the case of Kuldip Singh. I invite reference in this connection to Para 35 of the Supreme Court judgment. It is mentioned there that even after Mr Pitam Singh had passed an ineffective order, that still left the District Court free to act under Section 476-A Cr. P. C. when the matter came back to it again. This time, the Supreme Court observed further, the matter came by way of appeal from the order made by Mr Pitam Singh. It was incumbent on the District Judge, the Supreme Court emphasised, either to make an appropriate order himself under Section 476-A Cr P C, or to send the matter for disposal to the only other Court that had jurisdiction, namely, the original Court. But the District Judge, the Supreme Court pointed out, did not deal with it himself and instead the matter went to the Additional District Judge. Therefore, it is abundantly clear from the facts mentioned in the Supreme Court judgment that the appeal was filed by Kuldip Singh in the Court of the District Judge and it was the District Judge who assigned it to the Additional District Judge for disposal.

Hence, the distinction drawn by the High Courts of Calcutta and Jammu and Kashmir between the facts of the cases dealt with by them and those of the Supreme Court case simply does not exist. The true ratio of the decision of the Supreme Court was that the Punjab Courts Act does not contemplate the appointment of Additional Judges to the District Court and as such the Court of Addditional District Judge is not a Division Court of the Court of the District Judge but a separate and distinct Court of its own. This conclusion was founded on the specific provisions enacted in Section 18 of the Punjab Courts Act. The Supreme Court clarified the situation by making reference to Articles 214 and 216 of the Constitution. It is mentioned in Article 216 that every High Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the President may from time to time deem it necessary to appoint. In para 37 of their judgment the Supreme Court pointed out that the Punjab Courts Act nowhere speaks of an Additional District Judge or of an Additional Judge to the District Court, and then observed that the Additional Judge is not a Judge of co-ordinate judicial authority with the District Judge. These distinctive features of the Punjab Courts Act are not to be found in the Manipur Act. As pointed out above, the definition of the expression "District Court" given in Section 2 (iii) of the Manipur Act read with Section 20 thereof leaves no room for doubt that the Additional District Judge is a part and parcel of the District Court in the same way as are the Judges of the various High Courts in India. Looked at from this standpoint, there is no scope for criticism against the judgment of the Punjab High Court in the case of Janak Dulari (supra)

9. Shri Ibotombi Singh was frank in conceding that on merits his client has no case. The Additional District Judge recorded the finding that Narendra Nath Kochar had failed to prove that his wife had deserted him for a period of more than two years and this finding was not challenged in this Court.

said thing delivering the said thing he must not intend to act gratuitously; and the third is that the other person for whom something is done or to whom something is delivered must enjoy the benefit thereof. When those conditions are satisfied S. 70 imposes upon the latter person the liability to make compensation to the former in respect of, or to restore, the thing so done or delivered. In appreciating the scope and effect of the provisions of this section it would be useful to illustrate how this section would operate. If a person delivered something to another it would be open to the latter person to refuse to accept the thing or to return it; in that case Section 70 would not come into operation. Similarly, if a person does something for another it would be open to the latter person not to accept what has been done by the former; in that case again Section 70 would not apply. In other words the person said to be made liable under Section 70 always has the option not to accept the thing or to return it. It is only when he voluntarily accepts the thing or enjoys the work done that the liability under S. 70 arises."

These observations clearly lay down that the person who gets the benefit must have the option to refuse to accept the benefit. It also implies that the benefit accepted must be voluntary. These tests have to be applied to the facts of this case and I shall examine this aspect a little later. In the latter part of the judgment, the Supreme Court observes as follows:—

"..... It is of course true that between the person claiming compensation and person against whom it is claimed some lawful relationship must subsist, for that is the implication of the use of the word "lawfully" in S. 70; but the said lawful relationship arises not because the party claiming compensation has done something for the party against whom the compensation is claimed but because what has been done by the former has been accepted and enjoyed by the latter. It is only when the latter accepts and enjoys what is done by the former that a lawful relationship arises between the two and it is the existence of the said lawful relationship which gives rise to the claim for compensation"

From this observation it follows that the lawful relationship is not what is precedent to the act done by the plaintiff, but the lawful relationship that arises after the act is done. The Supreme Court further observes:

".... Therefore, in our opinion, all that the word "lawfully" in the context indicates is that after something is delivered or something is done by one person for another and that thing is accepted and enjoyed by the latter, a lawful relationship is born between the two which under the provisions of Section 70 gives rise to a claim for compensation."

The object of Section 70 is also referred to in the judgment and it is stated that:

".... Section 70 is not intended to entertain claims for compensation made by persons who officiously interfere with the affairs of another or who impose on others services not desired by them. Section 70 deals with cases where a person does a thing for another not intending to act gratuitously and the other enjoys it. It is thus clear that when a thing is delivered or done by one person it must be open to the other person to reject it. Therefore, the acceptance and enjoyment of the thing delivered or done which is the basis for the claim for compensation under S. 70 must be voluntary. It would thus be noticed that this requirement affords sufficient and effective safeguard against spurious claims based on unauthorised acts. If the act done by the respondent was unauthorised and spurious the appellant could have easily refused to accept the said act and then the respondent would not have been able to make a claim for compensation."

They also refer to the observations of Chief Justice Jenkins which are as follows:

"The terms of S. 70", said Jenkins, C. J., "are unquestionably wide, but applied with discretion they enable the courts to do substantial justice in cases where it would be difficult to impute to the persons concerned relations actually created by contract. It is, however, especially incumbent on final Courts of fact to be guarded and circumspect in their conclusions and not to countenance acts or payments that are really officious."

The facts of this case indicate that the contract for construction was entered into by plaintiff not in his personal capacity, but as agent of the defendant. The liability, if any, under the contract was against the defendant. If the Contractor had any claim, it could be only against the defendant. It is undisputed that the power of attorney was cancelled on 24-3-1955. The payment is made on 20-9-1956. This payment was made without any knowledge of the defendant. He had no option either to accept or reject it. Shri Mohandas Hegde the learned counsel for the appellant invited my attention to Ex. P-11, a reply issued by the defendant to the Contractor. The defendant in it states that the entire expenses incurred in connection with the repairs has been paid to Devoraj and this reply was of 5th September 1955. This document instead of being of any assistance to the plaintiff, supports the case of the defendant that there could have been no acceptance of any benefit by the defendant by the plaintiff's payment. The stand of the defendant is that the plaintiff has paid the contractor whatever was due to him from out of the defendant's monies and not that he had any benefit from the plaintiff's payment. Therefore, the payment alleged to have been made by the plaintiff to the Contractor would not be a lawful payment within the meaning of Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. The payment under Section 70 should be by a person who has a lawful interest in making the payment at the time when the payment was made. In this connection, the respondent's counsel invites my attention to the decision of the Madras High Court in AIR 1950 Mad 817 where it is stated that,

"Where a person divests himself (of) all his interests in the property and has ceased to have any interest in the same by reason of a valid transfer he cannot be said to be within the relationship contemplated either by S 69 or S 70 Contract Act."

In this case the relationship of principal and agent had come to an end. The plaintiff was not interested in any of the transactions of the defendant. Therefore if the plaintiff in those circumstances made a payment, it would be voluntary and officious and cannot secure him the benefit of S 70 of the Contract Act. This decision also lays down the proposition that in order to claim the benefit of S 70, it must be shown that the defendants had the opportunity of accepting or rejecting the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiff. The words in the section "he enjoys such benefit" must be taken to mean that he does it as a result of his volition. As I have already stated, Exhibit P-11 indicates a denial of any benefit having been conferred on him by the payment. It is further contended by the respondent's counsel that the benefit contemplated in S 70 must be a direct benefit. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the observations at page 432 of Pollock and Mulla on The Indian Contract Act, where it is stated that the benefit must be direct and not indirect. Reliance is also placed on a decision of the Privy Council reported in AIR 1949 P C 39. In the instant case it cannot be said that the benefit is direct. As Sri Mohandas Hegde submitted the benefit accrues to the defendant by the improvements and addition or alterations effected by the contractor. The benefit accruing by the payment is only indirect, in view of the fact that the payment discharges the liability of the plaintiff (defendant?) which would arise on the basis of the benefit derived by him owing to the improvements, alteration or repairs effected by the contractor. For this reason also the claim of the plaintiff is not covered by the provisions of S. 70 of the Contract Act. It is not in every case in which a man is benefited by the money paid by another that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit, there must be an obligation express or implied to repay. It is well settled that there arises no obligation to the case of a voluntary payment by one person of another's debt. Applying this principle which has been enunciated in AIR 1945 PC 23, it appears to me that the present case is one where the plaintiff has discharged the obligation of the defendant. This by itself would not create a legal obligation against the defendant to repay the plaintiff. In this connection I may refer to page 572 of Anson's Law of Contract wherein an apt illustration is given — viz.,

"So, for example, if A pays the premiums of B on insurance policy in order to prevent the policy from lapsing, he cannot recover the money from B"

In this case, if the plaintiff has paid the money to the contractor to discharge the obligation of the defendant, that by itself would not create a liability on the defendant to pay the plaintiff. Further, even if the plaintiff had paid the contractor in order to avoid the possibility of a claim being made by the contractor against him, even then, it would not give rise to a claim against the defendant; in this particular case such a contingency does not arise. It is clear from the documents that I have referred to that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the contractor for and on behalf of the principal, i. e. the defendant. Knowing this well, if the contractor had chosen to initiate any legal action against the plaintiff, he could not have sustained such action in view of the plaintiff's stand. Therefore, there is no basis for the apprehension referred to in the plaint. As mentioned already, the payment is made long after the cancellation of the power of attorney by which whatever interest the plaintiff had in the defendant's transactions, had come to an end. Therefore, Sri Mohandas Hegde, the learned counsel for the appellant, tries to sustain the case of the plaintiff on the basis of a decision in AIR 1943 Mad 85. This was a case where the tank in question was owned jointly by the Government and also the shrotriamdars. The tank being in need of repairs, the Collector caused an estimate to be prepared and also got the tank repaired. The shrotriandars were asked to contribute their proportionate shares payable by them. The shrotriandars did not object to the estimate or to the work being carried out, but they objected to making any contribution to the cost of the repairs. The fact that they had the benefit of enjoying the result of the repairs got effected by the Government was undoubted and the Government and the shrotriandars being jointly interested it was held that the shrotriandars were liable to contribute to the cost of the work which the Government had carried out. The facts of the present case stand on a different footing. The case referred to in AIR 1943 Mad 85 and the other cases referred to therein are cases where there are joint interests between those that incur the expenses and the persons who are sought to be made liable. Such cases do not have any bearing on the plaintiff's case before me.

6. So, in view of the legal position discussed above, and the facts of this case I confirm the findings of the learned District Judge and the payment made by the plaintiff was voluntary and does not secure him the benefit of the provisions of Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed and in the circumstances of the case I direct each party to bear his own costs.

AIR 1969 MYSORE 355 (V 56 C 86)

A. NARAYANA PAI AND
M. SANTHOSH, JJ.

Chhotalal Morarji Dhami and others, Petitioners v. Regional Provident Fund Commissioner and others, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 326, 538, 539 & 540 of 1966, D/- 21-10-1968.

(A) Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952), Section 1(3)(a) and (b) — Composite factory engaged in manufacturing and other commercial activities — Test to determine whether it comes within purview of Act indicated.

Whether an establishment, which is engaged in more activities than one, some of which are manufacturing activities and some merely commercial or other activities, but employs on the whole 20 or more persons, can be brought within the scope of the Statute must be answered by examining which among the activities of the establishment is the dominant or primary activity and which the secondary or ancillary activity. If the dominant activity is manufacturing activity, the establishment will necessarily have to be classified or identified as a factory. If such a factory is engaged in more industries than one, some of which are enumerated in I Schedule of the Act and some not, it will have to be seen if its dominant or principal activity is an industry mentioned in the Schedule. If it is, the factory will come within the purview of Cl. (a) of sub-sec. (3) of S. 1, and, if it is not, it will not come within the purview of the said clause. If, upon applying the test, it is found that the dominant activity is a non-manufacturing activity or an activity other than manufacturing activity, the establishment will go out of the purview of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 1. In such a case if the establishment is within the description of an establishment given in any of the Notifications made by the Central Govt. pursuant to Cl. (b), the Act can be validly applied to it. AIR 1962 SC 1536 & AIR 1964 SC 314, Foli. (Para 15)

(B) Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952), S. 1(3)(b) — Notification No. GER 346 dated 7-3-1962 under — Is not ultra vires power of Central Government delegated under Cl. (b).

The Notification No. GER 346 dated 7-3-1962 issued by Central Government under Cl. (b) of S. 1(3) of the Act is not ultra vires the power of Central Government delegated to it under Cl. (b).

The Notification does not apply the Act to all types of trading and commercial establishments but only to trading and commercial establishments engaged in the purchase, sale or storage of any goods. Other establishments like Exporters, Importers, etc., which will not come within the strict limitation of the said description are specially brought within its scope, apparently because, the activities of Exporters, Importers, etc., are closely connected with the activity of the establishments first mentioned. There is also a clear statement of the principal characteristic which distinguishes the class selected for action and keeps out of it establishments not sought to be covered by it. The addition of other enumerated categories of establishments is also clearly understandable on the footing of intimate relationship that exists between them and the first named establishments. So, it cannot be said that the Government have exceeded the scope of the power delegated to them under the Act. AIR 1964 SC 980, Foli.

K. Jagannatha Shetty, for Petitioners (in all W. Ps); B S. Keshava Iyengar, Central Government Pleader, for Respondents 1 and 3

NARAYANA PAI, J.:— These petitions have been heard together because they raise a common question of law as to the applicability of the provisions of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952, and the propriety of the action taken by the authorities functioning under the said Statute to apply the same, to the Establishments run by the petitioners in these four cases.

2. We shall deal in detail with the facts of and points of law raised in the first of the petitions W. P. No 326/1966 because a decision thereon will govern the other three cases also

3. The petitioner describes himself as the proprietor of a Cardamom Factory. According to his case, his establishment is only a factory within the definition of the term contained in clause (g) of Section 2 of the Act. But, because the industry in which it is engaged is not one of the industries enumerated in Schedule I of the Act, it is not possible to apply the provisions of the Act. The stand taken up by the 1st respondent, the Regional Provident Fund Commissioner, Bangalore, is that the petitioner's Establishment comes within the description of a trading and commercial establishment falling within the category to which the Statute has been made applicable by a Notification of the Government issued pursuant to clause (b) of sub-section (3) of Section 1 of the Act. The answer to this contention of the respondent on behalf of the petitioners is that the Notification itself is ultra vires of the powers of the Government or is liable to be struck down as one made in excess of the power conferred by the Statute.

4. Although there is some dispute between the parties regarding such matters as the exact number of employees working in the establishment, there is not any dispute on or in respect of the following facts—

5. The petitioner purchases cardamom, subjects it to a certain process coming within the meaning of manufacture as defined in clause (i-a) of Section 2 of the Act to make it marketable and then either sells locally or exports the processed cardamom. He engages manual labourers for the said manufacturing process. He also has a clerical staff attending to details of the working of his establishment other than manufacturing. He therefore, purchases goods, stores them for some time and then sells them.

6. On the assumption for the purposes of this discussion that the total staff engaged by him numbers 20 or more, the establishment may be regarded as either a factory or an establishment engaged in buying, storing and selling goods.

7. If it is to be regarded merely as a factory or to the extent it may be regarded as a factory, the processing of cardamom is admittedly not one of the industries enumerated in the I Schedule of the Statute. This position is also not disputed by the 1st respondent.

8. Before proceeding to formulate the exact controversy between the parties it is necessary to set out sub-section (3) of Section 1 of the Act. That reads as follows:

"1. (1) xx xx xx

(2) xx xx xx

(3) Subject to the provisions contained in Section 16 it applies.—

(a) to every establishment which is a factory engaged in any industry specified in Schedule I and in which twenty or more persons are employed; and

(b) to any other establishment employing twenty or more persons or class of such establishments which the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, specify in this behalf." There is a proviso appended to this with which, however, we are not concerned in this case.

9. Under or pursuant to clause (b), the Central Government issued various Notifications from time to time. The Notification which is of relevance to the present case is No. GER 346 dated 7-3-1962, brought into effect from 30th April 1962. By the said Notification, the Act was applied or was made applicable to:

"Every trading and commercial establishment engaged in the purchase, sale or storage of any goods including establishments of exporters, importers, advertisers, commission agents, and brokers, and commodity and stock exchanges, but not including banks or warehouses established under any Central or State Act."

10. The contention on behalf of the 1st respondent is that whereas, as a cardamom factory, the establishment of the petitioner cannot be brought within the purview of clause (a) of sub-s (3) of Section 1, it is an establishment which answers the description of trading and commercial establishment given in the said Notification, and is therefore within clause (b) of the said sub-section

11. Once it is conceded that on the I Schedule as it now stands, cardamom industry is not enumerated therein and that, therefore, the establishment of the petitioner to the extent it may be regarded as a factory is not within the purview of clause (a), but it is, in some respects, also an establishment which is not a factory, the question does arise as to how an establishment which is a factory as well as an establishment other than a factory, can be brought within the purview of either clause (a) or clause (b). In other words, the question does arise as to how an establishment which when viewed from one point of view answers the description contained in clause (a) and from another point of view answers the description of clause (b) can be clearly placed within one or the other clause and what the tests for the determination should be.

12. The answer, according to Mr. B. S. Keshava Iyengar, learned counsel for the 1st respondent, is contained in the principles stated by the Supreme Court of India in two rulings reported in Regional Provident Fund Commissioner Bombay v. S. K. M. Mfg. Co., AIR 1962 SC 1536 and Associated Industries (P) Ltd. v. Regional Provident Fund Commissioner, Kerala, AIR 1964 SC 314. Both the cases dealt with establishments which were clearly factories but which were engaged in more industries than one. Some of which were among the industries enumerated in the I Schedule and some not. The question was whether and in what manner the factories may be classified so as to determine whether the Statute could or could not be applied. The more detailed discussion of principles is contained in the first of the cases. Among other propositions, the most important propositions laid down were:—

“the Statute, in terms, applies to establishments of two categories, viz., establishments which are factories and establishments which are not factories;

(ii) an establishment for the purpose of the Statute need not necessarily be engaged in a single activity or located in a single place, especially after the introduction of Section 3-A by the Amending Act 46 of 1960 making it clear that an establishment may consist of different branches whether situate in the same place or in different places;

(iii) it is not the intention of the Statute that factories should be exclusively engaged in any one of the industries specified in the I Schedule before they can be brought within the purview of the Statute; and

(iv) in determining whether a particular factory engaged in several industries, some of which are those enumerated in the I Schedule and some not, comes within the purview of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 1, the test to apply is which is the primary or dominant activity of the establishment; if the dominant activity is an industry enumerated in the I Schedule, then the factory will come within the purview of clause (a) notwithstanding the fact that it engages itself in other industries or activities as well.”

13. The same principles were reiterated in the subsequent decision reported in AIR 1964 SC 314.

14. In both the cases, the further question was also discussed, viz., whether the necessary minimum strength of staff to attract the provisions of necessary minimum strength of the Statute should be the staff working in respect of the industry enumerated in the I Schedule, or staff working in respect of the entire establishment. The answer was latter.

15. From the principles so laid down by the Supreme Court, it follows that just as the Statute does not require that for a factory to come within the purview of clause (a) it should engage itself exclusively in one or more of the industries enumerated in the I Schedule, so also there is nothing in the Statute to indicate that before an establishment can be brought within its purview, it should be either exclusively an establishment which is a factory or exclusively an establishment which is not a factory. In actual practical working also, it may not be possible to have such clearly distinguishable establishment engaged purely or exclusively in one activity alone. Modern economic and commercial life necessarily involves the combination of more activities than one for the purpose of profitable working of any establishment or venture. When, therefore, one is met with an establishment which for the stated reasons may be regarded as a composite establishment, that is, an establishment engaged in more activities than one, some of which are manufacturing activities and some merely commercial or other activities, but employs on the whole 20 or more persons, the question whether such an establishment can be brought within the scope of the Statute must be answered by applying the test laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the above cases. That is to say, one has to examine which among the activities of the establishment is the dominant or primary activity and which the secondary or ancillary activity. If the dominant activity is manufacturing activity, the establishment will necessarily have to be classified or identified as a factory. If in such a situation, the factory is engaged in more industries than one, some of which are enumerated in I Schedule of the Act and some not, the further question will have to be examined as to whether the dominant or principal activity is an industry mentioned in the Schedule or not. If the answer is the former, the factory will come within the purview of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 1. If the answer is latter, it will not come within the purview of the said clause. If upon applying the test it is found that the dominant activity is a non-manufacturing activity or an activity other than manufacturing activity, the establishment will go out of the purview of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Sec 1. The next question in that situation would be, is it an activity which would bring the establishment within the description of an establishment given in any one of the Notifications made by the Central Government pursuant to cl (b). If it answers any one of those descriptions the Statute can be validly applied, if it does not, the Statute cannot be validly applied.

16. The contention of the 1st respondent, as already stated, is that the establishment of the petitioner in this case is an establishment which comes within the description of trading and commercial establishment engaged in purchase, sale or storage of goods.

17. Whether that contention is right or wrong or supportable on the material placed before Court will not arise if Mr Jagannatha Shetty, the learned counsel for the petitioner is right in saying that the Notification itself is ultra vires of the powers of the State Government.

18. He relies strongly on the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Mohamedali v Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 980. In that case it was argued that the power given to the Central Government under clause (b) of sub-s (3) of Section 1 of the Act was an unguided uncanalised power and that therefore the Statute itself was bad as amounting to excessive delegation of legislative powers beyond constitutional limits. In repelling that contention and upholding the validity of the Statute, their Lordships made the following observations in paragraph 6 of the judgment at page 983 of the report.

"It cannot be asserted that the power entrusted to the Central Government to bring within the purview of the Act such establishments or class of establishments as the Government may by notification in the Official Gazette specify is uncontrolled and uncanalised. The whole Act is directed to institute provident funds for the benefit of employees in factories and other establishments, as the preamble indicates. The institution of provident fund for employees is too well established to admit of any doubt about its utility as a measure of social justice. The underlying idea behind the provisions of the Act is to bring all kinds of employees within its fold as and when the Central Government might think fit, after reviewing the circumstances of each class of establishments . . .

So far as establishments which do not come within the descriptions of factories engaged in industries the Central Government has been vested with the power of specifying such establishments or class of establishments, as it might determine, to be brought within the purview of the Act. The Act has given sufficient indication of the policy underlying its provisions, namely, that it shall apply to all factories engaged in any kind of industry and to all other establishments employing 20 or more persons. This Court has repeatedly laid it down that where the discretion to apply the provisions of a particular statute is left with Government, it will be presumed that the discretion so vested in such a high authority will not be abused. The Government is in a position to have all the relevant and necessary information in relation to each kind of establishment enabling it to determine which of such establishments can bear the additional burden of making contribution by way of provident fund for the benefit of its employees x x x"

19. Mr Jagannatha Shetty's argument is that in upholding the constitutionality of the Statute, the Supreme Court has proceeded upon the footing that the control or guidance given to the Government by the Statute in the matter of exercising the delegated power consists in this, viz, that it should examine the position and the desirability of applying the Statute with reference to each kind of establishment or each category of establishments. If, therefore, the Government goes beyond these directions or principles of guidance and purports to bring within the fold of the Statute an heterogeneous body of establishments, the obvious inference could be that the Government have not applied their mind to the desirability or otherwise of applying the Statute to the different kinds of establishments and that therefore the exercise of the power itself must be struck down as either in excess of the power or in contravention or opposition of the policy of the Statute.

20. Now the Notification depended upon the 1st respondent, which we have already copied operates to apply the Statute in every trading and Commercial establishment engaged in purchase sale or storage of any goods. The characteristic of the establishment or class of establishments selected which distinguishes it from the class of establishments kept outside the scope of the classification is said to be its trading and commercial activity. This description according to Mr Shetty, is too wide, and the subsequent portions make it clear that it is too wide. The subsequent portions include certain specially described establishments within the scope of the description 'trading and commercial establishments' and exclude certain others therefrom.

21. Even in regard to the class selected it appears to us that it may not be quite right to say that it applies to all types of trading and commercial establishments. It is limited in its application to trading and commercial establishments engaged in the purchase, sale or storage of any goods. There may be several activities which may be brought within the scope of either trade or commerce. Indeed, the latter word is wider in its connotation than the former. By restricting the category to establishments engaged in purchase, sale or storage of any goods, the commercial activity of such establishments is sought to be brought nearer an activity which can be clearly described as trade, because, primarily trade consists in buying and selling of goods, whereas the commercial activity is wider than mere buying and selling of goods. It is on account of this clear intention to limit the class in the manner indicated, that it becomes necessary to include within the definition certain categories of establishments which would not otherwise have fallen within the limited category so described. These are the establishments of Exporters, Importers, Advertisers, Commission Agents, Brokers, Commodity Exchanges and Stock Exchanges, all or any of whom may or may not, under all circumstances, purchase goods or store goods or sell goods. But, they do engage themselves in commerce under all circumstances. This slight widening of the definition apparently would bring within its scope banks and warehouses in certain circumstances. Obviously, with a view to make the position clear, the notification expressly excludes banks and warehouses from its scope. In the last analysis, therefore, establishments to which the notification primarily applies the Statute are trading and commercial establishments engaged in the purchase, sale or storage of any goods. Other establishments like Exporters, Importers, etc., which will not come within the strict limitation of the said description are specially brought within its scope, apparently because, the activities of Exporters, Importers, etc., are so closely connected with the activity of the establishments first mentioned that it was considered desirable to name them along with the first mentioned category of establishments.

22. So understood, we find it difficult to accept the criticism of Mr. Shetty that the Notification purports to deal with different varieties of establishments as belonging to one class. There is a clear statement of the principal characteristic which distinguishes the class selected for action and keeps out of it establishments not sought to be covered by it. The addition of other enumerated categories of establishments is also clearly understandable on the footing of intimate relationship that exists between them and the first named establishments.

23. In that view, we are unable to agree that the position is such that if examined in the light of the principles stated by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in case of Mohamedalli, AIR 1964 SC 980 it could be regarded as one in which the Government have exceeded the scope of the power delegated to them under the Statute.

24. What remains now is that application of the principles to the facts of this case. As already discussed, the one or the primary question of fact for investigation is which of the two activities of the petitioner is a dominant activity of his establishment. Is it manufacturing activity or is it the commercial activity? Although an assertion has been made in the affidavit of an Inspector of Provident Funds working under the 1st respondent that the dominant activity is clearly commercial activity, it does not appear that the position was clearly examined from the point of view of principles now discussed. The correspondence or the contents of the notices issued on behalf of the 1st respondent and replies on behalf of the petitioner disclose that the parties were at issue on various other matters which may or may not be of relevance to the main issue. Neither the petitioner nor the 1st respondent or any officer working under the 1st respondent had clearly applied his mind to the main question about the relative importance of the different activities engaged in by the petitioner's establishment. As we have already pointed out, if the dominant activity can be regarded as the manufacturing activity, then the petitioner's establishment is clearly outside the scope of the Statute. It is only if, upon fact, it can be held that the dominant activity is the commercial activity, then the 1st respondent can sustain his case that the petitioner's establishment comes within the scope of the Notification mentioned.

25. As facts and circumstances of the case have not been examined from the point of view of, and in the light of the principles stated above there is no alternative but to quash the demands for deposits impugned in these various petitions. At the same time, the liberty should be reserved to the 1st respondent to examine the position in the light of the principles stated above, and then decide whether the Statute can or cannot be validly applied to the establishment of the petitioner.

26. In each of these writ petitions, therefore, we make an order quashing the demands impugned and declare that the said quashing will not preclude the 1st respondent from examining the facts and circumstances, either himself or through his authorised subordinate, in the light of the principles stated in this order and then take a decision as to whether or not the Statute can be validly made to apply to the establishment of the petitioner.

27. In each of these cases, the parties will bear their own costs.

A NARAYANA PAI AND M.
SANTHOSH, JJ.Doddahalli Shivane Gowda, Petitioner v.
District Registrar of Registration, Banga-

1969

Registration Act (1908), Ss. 72, 75 (1), (2), 58 (1), (c) and (2), 59 and 60 — Powers of District Registrar under S. 72 — Powers same as that of original authority — He cannot impose payment of consideration as a condition precedent for registration.

The District Registrar while disposing of an appeal under S. 72 of the Registration Act has no power or jurisdiction to direct payment of any sum of money as a condition precedent for getting the document registered (Para 9)

Under the provisions of Section 58, the registering officers under the Act have no power to enforce payment of any consideration as a condition precedent for the registration of the document. Where money is paid in the presence of the registering officer, he is required to endorse the fact on the document at the time of registration. The question whether a statement contained in the document regarding payment of consideration is or is not true, is also not a matter for the registering officer to examine and decide. The appellate authority has no wider powers than the original authority in the matter of examining and deciding facts or questions of fact. The appellate authority can himself register the document or direct registration by the original authority (Paras 6 to 8)

Balagopalan for Doddakalegowda, for Petitioner, Ramdas for Advocate General, for Respondents Nos 1 and 4, B S Somasundara, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3

ORDER :— Respondents 2 and 3 Guruskar Veerabhadrapa and S. V. Shivakumaraswamy executed on 22nd April 1963 a deed of sale in respect of survey Nos 491, 492 and 493 of Morale Village, Kanakapura taluk, in favour of the petitioner Doddahalli Shivane Gowda. When the petitioner presented the same for registration before the 4th respondent the Sub-Registrar of Kanakapura, he refused to register the same for the reason that the executants did not present themselves before him. The petitioner thereupon presented an appeal under Section 72 of the Registration Act to the District Registrar, Bangalore District, the 1st respondent. It was disposed of by him on 2nd March 1966. On an examination of the material placed before him he came to the definite conclusion that there was overwhelming evidence that the sale deed had been duly executed. While observing that the legal position was that he should confine himself to an examination of the question whether or not there had been execution of the deed, he adverted also to certain other circumstances relating to a dispute or difference of opinion between the parties as to payment of consideration or delivery of possession and also whether one of them had any effect upon the other, and ultimately made the following order:

"In the result, I uphold the contention of the petitioner, and I order that the Sub-Registrar may register the document provided he (the petitioner) pays the balance of Rs. 15,000/- to the respondents."

2. The petitioner having taken back the deed filed before the District Registrar in connection with the appeal on 11th March 1966, presented it to the Sub-Registrar, Kanakapura, on 21st March 1966. As the exact date on which the petitioner had so presented the deed to the Sub-Registrar after the disposal of the appeal, was not capable of being gathered on the affidavits and materials placed before us, we directed the Government Pleader on the last occasion to obtain a report from the Sub-Registrar on the matter. The said report, now received, is taken on file of this writ petition. It is from the said report that we get the information that the deed was re-presented to him on 21st March 1966 for registration pursuant to orders of the District Registrar.

3. This Writ petition was filed by the petitioner on 13th April, 1966 with a prayer that the direction contained in the appellate order of the District Registrar that the deed should be registered only upon the petitioner paying Rs. 15,000/- may be quashed as illegal and beyond the powers of the District Registrar.

4. The only point for consideration is whether a District Registrar disposing of an appeal under Section 72 of the Registration Act, has the power to impose such a condition. The relevant section is Section 75 of which sub-ss (1) and (2) have a direct bearing on the question now before us. Those sub-sections read

"75 (1) If the Registrar finds that the document has been executed and that the said requirements have been complied with, he shall order, the document to be registered

(2) If the document is duly presented for registration within thirty days after the making of such order, the registering officer shall obey the same and thereupon shall, so far as may be practicable, follow the procedure prescribed in Sections 58, 59 and 60."

5. Of the three sections enumerated above, it is sufficient to refer to Section 58. The said section requires the Registrar to endorse on the document certain particulars among which are those stated in Clause (c) of sub-section (1), viz.,

"Any payment of money or delivery of goods made in the presence of the registering officer in reference to the execution of the document, and any admission of receipt of consideration, in whole or in part, made in his presence in reference to such execution."

Then follows—Sub-section (2) which reads: "If any person admitting the execution of a document refuses to endorse the same, the registering officer shall nevertheless register it, but shall at the same time endorse a note of such refusal."

6. These provisions of Section 58 make it abundantly clear that the registering officers under the Act have no power to enforce payment of any consideration as a condition precedent for the registration of the document. Where money is paid in the presence of the registering officer, he is required to endorse the fact on the document at the time of registration. The question whether a statement contained in the document regarding payment of consideration is or is not true, is also not a matter for the registering officer to examine and decide.

7. The appellate authority cannot, of course, in the ordinary circumstances, and in the absence of special provision in the relevant statute, have wider powers than the original authority in the matter of examining and deciding facts or questions of fact. Normally the appellate authority can either do itself or direct the original authority to do what under the law the original authority ought to have or should have done.

8. In the case of the Registration Act, the sections extracted above make it perfectly clear that the appellate authority, upon being satisfied as to the execution and the requirements of law referred to in Section 74 (b), is bound to order registration. Once that order is passed, it is for the original authority, the Sub-Registrar, to follow the procedure prescribed in Sections 58, 59 and 60 to the extent applicable in the changed circumstances.

9. We, therefore, accept the argument that the District Registrar, while disposing of the appeal under Section 72, had no power or jurisdiction to direct payment of any sum of money as a condition precedent for getting the document registered. That direction, therefore, alone is hereby quashed.

10. As it appears from the report of the Sub-Registrar now received that the document has been re-presented before him within one month of the date of the appellate order of the District Registrar, the Sub-Registrar will now proceed to register the document in accordance with law.

11. The parties will bear their own costs.

C. Lakshminarayana Rao, for Petitioner; G. Vedavyasachar, for Respondent No. 9.

ORDER: In respect of a controversy between the members of a Hindu Joint Family who submitted their disputes to the arbitrators appointed by them so that they might make an award, an award was made on April 18, 1964, and respondent 9 in this revision petition instituted a suit in the court of the Civil Judge, Tumkur in Original Suit No. 40 of 1964 for the enforcement of the award. But, he withdrew from that suit which was not maintainable, and, before he withdrew from that suit, the umpire produced the copy of the award before the Civil Judge on June 15, 1966 under Section 14 (2) of the Arbitration Act. The copy was produced since the original award had already been produced in Original Suit No. 40 of 1964 when a summons had been issued by the court for the production of the original award at the instance of respondent 9 in this revision petition.

2. In the proceedings which commenced with the production of the copy of the award by the umpire a contention was raised by the petitioner in this revision petition that the production of the copy of the award by the umpire as late as on June 15, 1966, was affected by Article 119(a) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1963 which prescribes a period of thirty days for "application for the filing in court of an award" under the Arbitration Act of 1940.

3. The view taken by the Civil Judge who overrules the plea of limitation was that that Article of the Limitation Act was applicable only to an application by a person for a direction that the arbitrators should produce the award in court and that it did not control the production of the award by the arbitrators themselves.

4. In this revision petition Mr Lakshminarayana Rao appearing for the petitioner contends that that view taken by the Civil Judge does not fit into the language of Article 119(a) of the Limitation Act, 1963. It was maintained by him that even an arbitrator who wishes to produce his award in court under Section 14(2) of the Arbitration Act must do so within the period of thirty days prescribed by Article 119(a) and that the production of the copy by the umpire after the expiry of that period of thirty days was not permissible.

5. I do not agree.

6. Article 119(a) governs only an application by a person who seeks the direction of the court under Section 14(2) that the arbitrators or the umpire as the case may be should produce the award in court that is so clear from the words "Application in specified cases" appearing on the top of Part I of the Third Division of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1963 which have to be read with Article 119(a) which reads

THIRD DIVISION — APPLICATION

Description of Application	Period of Limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
----------------------------	-----------------------	---------------------------------------

PART I. APPLICATION IN SPECIFIED CASES.

119. Under the Arbitration Act 1940 (10 of 1940) (a) for the filing in Court of an award.

Thirty days.

The date of service of the notice of the making of the award.

The language of this part of Art 119 makes it clear that the period of limitation which it prescribes does not govern the production of an award by the arbitrator or the umpire as the case may be but governs only an application made to the court by a person other than the arbitrator or the umpire for a direction that the arbitrator or the umpire should produce the award. But, the production of the award by the arbitrator or the umpire as the case may be is not within that Article of the Limitation Act and there is no period of limitation prescribed by the Act for such production.

7. The view that I take receives support from the decision of the High Court of Patna in Mohd Hasan v. Mohd Anwar, AIR 1968 Pat 82 with the enunciation made in which I respectfully agree.

8. But Mr Lakshminarayana Rao maintained that the provisions of Article 119 became applicable by reason of the fact that, as stated by the umpire, he produced the award at the instance of the parties. The fact that he did so does not in my opinion make any difference so long as the production was by the umpire and there was no application by the parties to the submission that he should be called upon to produce the award in court.

9. I dismiss this revision petition. The costs of this revision petition will be costs in the cause and will abide the eventual result.

States Reorganisation Act (1956), S. 115 — Preparation of Inter-State seniority list — Criteria for equation of posts laid down in conference of Chief Secretaries of States, HM/HM/D61/69/B 1956 — Court can consider whether those criteria have been followed while preparing final Inter-State Seniority list — Held criteria not followed — Seniority list set aside, AIR 1969 Punj 34, held not good law in view of AIR 1968 SC 850 — Constitution of India, Art. 226.

Court has power to investigate the question whether the equation and determination of Inter-State Seniority list under Section 115, States Reorganisation Act has been made by the application of the relevant criteria laid down in the conference of the Chief Secretaries of States, 1956 or no, and if it transpires that the equation does not rest upon a proper application for the four principles on which that equation should have rested, the Court can disturb the equation on which the impugned seniority lists depended. (Para 21)

Section 115 (5) of the States Reorganisation Act directs an integration which ensures fair and equitable treatment to all persons affected by the provisions of that section, and it is to afford such fair and equitable treatment that the conference of the Chief Secretaries deduced the four principles by the application of which alone the equation had to be made. So it cannot be contended that those four principles which were formulated solely and exclusively for the guidance of the Central Government, can have no relevance when the equation is assailed on the ground that it does not rest upon the principles so formulated. AIR 1968 SC 850, (1969) 17 Law Rep 591 (Mys). Relied on; AIR 1969 Punj 34, held not good law in view of AIR 1968 SC 850. (Para 23)

Two of the four criteria by the application of which an equation has to be made are: (1) the nature and duties of post and (2) the responsibilities and powers exercised by the officers holding a post. (Para 27)

Held that the equation of the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer of Bombay to the post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore made on the basis of that discussion by the Advisory Committee could not be sustained. (Para 30)

Equation of a post of District Co-operative Officer of Bombay to the post of an Inspector of the new State of Mysore and the equation of the initial cadre posts with promotional posts of Bombay, did not rest upon the application of any of the four principles by which it stood regulated. Moreover the equation so made introduced an element of incongruity. (Para 32)

Equation with respect to the other posts also could not be defended. (Para 37)

SOMNATH IYER J.: In these 40 Writ Petitions in which we heard arguments with respect to each of the writ petitions on the basis of its own facts and pleadings, we find it possible to pronounce a common order and we accordingly do so.

2. These 40 writ petitions concern two final inter-State seniority lists made by the Central Government under the provisions of Section 115 of the States Reorganisation Act in respect of the post of an Inspector and a junior Inspector of Co-operative Societies in the new State of Mysore which came into being on November 1, 1956. These inter-State seniority lists related to the Department of Co-operation in which there was a concourse of civil services from five different areas of which the new State was composed. These lists rested principally upon equations made by the Central Government on the advice tendered by the Advisory Committee of which Section 115 (5) of the States Reorganisation Act speaks.

3. The list pertaining to the post of an Inspector integrated twentyone species of posts. Sixteen of them were of the then State of Bombay, the holders of which were allotted to the new State of Mysore one, of the then State of Hyderabad, two, of the State of Madras, one, of the State of Coorg and one more, of the former State of Mysore. These posts were considered to be equivalent posts.

4. The other final list as already stated appertained to the post of a junior inspector of Co-operative Societies in the new State of Mysore. This integration appertained to eight different kinds of posts which were held in five different areas which became part of the new State of Mysore to which we have referred. One of them was in the former State of Mysore, two were in the State of Bombay, three in the State of Hyderabad, one in the State of Coorg and one in the State of Madras. The Central Government thought that these posts were also equivalent posts and the equated post was that of a junior inspector.

5. We have before us in these Writ petitions more than one kind of challenge to the two final inter-State seniority lists prepared by the Central Government in that way.

6. But the main criticism made of these two lists is that they depended upon an equivalence of posts deduced without the application of the relevant criteria, and incidentally it is also contended that even the process by which there was a determination of seniority and the ranks to be assigned was not made in accordance with law.

7. It appears to us for reasons to be presently stated that the complaint with respect to the assignment of ranks based upon the determination of seniority is one which really concerns the complaint against equation, except in some cases in which the complaint that a proper rank has not been assigned has no association with the complaint against the equation.

8. We are therefore, asked in these writ petitions to quash the two final inter-State seniority lists.

9. Those of the petitioners who challenge the list appertaining to the cadre of Inspectors fall into more than one category. Some of them contend that their posts should have been equated to a post higher than that of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore. The others impeach the inclusion of some of the posts in the different areas. Some of them make the impeachment that inferior posts have been equated to the post of an Inspector in the new State.

10. Some of them, as for example in W. P. 1991 of 1966 and W. P. 2416 of 1966, make a complaint that in the determination of the length of continuous officiality in the equated post, some part of the service rendered by them in, what according to them was an equivalent post, has been illegitimately excluded from consideration, and that had there been no such exclusion they would have been entitled to the assignment of higher ranks.

11. With respect to the impugned list appertaining to the cadre of Junior Inspectors in the new State of Mysore, the most outstanding complaint is that they should have been included in the Inspectors' list and not in the Junior Inspectors' list, and that their exclusion from the Inspectors' list is attributable to an unsupportable equivalence of posts.

12. We shall first address ourselves to the criticism of the equations on which the impugned lists rest. But before we do so it should be observed that the challenge to the equation in the writ petitions before us does not extend to all the twentyone posts to which the Inspectors' list refers, nor does it extend to all the eight posts to which the Junior Inspectors' list appertains. We have been taken through the pleadings in all the writ petitions before us, and it is undisputed that with respect to the post of a Senior Inspector in the erstwhile State of Hyderabad, the post of a Co-operative Sub-Registrar in the State of Madras and the post of Inspectors in the former State of Mysore, the equation made by the Central Government is not the subject matter of challenge.

13. We do not accede to Mr Motiah's submission that there is any challenge in W. P. 2469 of 1966 in which the restricted claim made by the petitioner is that he should be made available the benefit of the service which he had rendered as Junior Inspector in the State of Coorg in the same way in which, according to him, the determination of the aggregate length of officiality was made in the case of the employees of the former State of Mysore.

14. Mr. Datt, on behalf of one of the petitioners, maintained that in some of the representations made to the Central Government under Section 115(5) of the States Reorganisation Act, there was a contention that the equation concerning the old Mysore Post made by the State Government on the basis of which they prepared the provisional inter-State seniority list was not correct, but that matter was not pursued after the Central Government prepared their final inter-State seniority list, and so, the position is that in the petitions before us today, the equation made by the Central Government with respect to the post of a Senior Inspector of the erstwhile State of Hyderabad, the post of a Co-operative Sub-Registrar of the State of Madras and the post of inspectors of Co-operative Societies in the former State of Mysore, remains unchallenged.

15. So, what we should do in these writ petitions is to investigate into the criticism of the equation in so far as it relates to the remaining posts. Sixteen of them relating to the Inspectors' list, were in the State of Bombay, one is the post of a Senior Inspector of Co-operative Societies in the State of Madras and the remaining was the post of a Senior Inspector in the State of Coorg.

16. Some of the petitioners who were the holders of those sixteen posts in the State of Bombay namely, the post of a District Co-operative Officer of grade I in the pay scale of Rs. 200-300 and the post of an Auditor, grade I in the pay scale of Rs. 200-300 made the claim that their posts were superior to the equated post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore, and that the equivalence deduced between that post and the posts held by them was an unsupportable equivalence.

17. The petitioner in W. P. 8 of 1967 who was a Senior Inspector of the State of Hyderabad has put forward a grievance that the rank assigned to him was lower than the rank to which he was entitled and that the assignment of the lower rank is attributable to the equation which was made by the Central Government between some of the inferior posts in the State of Bombay and the equated post. Similarly that is also the complaint made with respect to the equation of the Senior Inspector's post in the State of Madras and the Senior Inspector's post in the State of Coorg with the equated post. According to him those inferior posts in the State of Bombay and the two posts in Madras and Coorg were not equivalent to the equated post and should have been included in the Junior Inspectors' list.

18. The petitioner in W. P. 2141 of 1966 also makes a similar complaint with respect to the equation concerning some of the posts in Bombay.

19. Now, the equivalence between the various posts should have rested on four principles which were evolved during the conference of the Chief Secretaries of various States convened in the year 1956, and, with respect to that matter the Supreme Court said this in Union of India v. P. K. Roy, AIR 1968 SC 850 at p. 852:

"With regard to the principle for determining the equation of posts and relative seniority the following conclusions were reached at the conference of the Chief Secretaries:

It was agreed that in determining the equation of posts, the following factors should be borne in mind:—

- (i) the nature and duties of a post;
- (ii) the responsibilities and powers exercised by the officers holding a post; the extent of territorial or other charge held or responsibilities discharged;
- (iii) the minimum qualifications, if any, prescribed for recruitment to the post;
- (iv) the salary of the post.

It was agreed that in determining relative seniority as between two persons holding posts declared equivalent to each other, and drawn from different States, the following points should be taken into account:—

- (i) length of continuous service, whether temporary or permanent, in a particular grade; this should exclude periods for which an appointment is held in a purely stop-gap or fortuitous arrangement;
- (ii) age of the person; other factors being equal, for instance, seniority may be determined on the basis of age.

20. It was said on behalf of the petitioners that the impugned equations did not rest upon the four criteria evolved during the Chief Secretaries' Conference, and that therefore, there should now be a fresh determination of the equation and the determination of seniority which would ordinarily be a corollary of the former.

21. But Mr. Rama Jois appearing on behalf of the allottees from the former State of Mysore advanced the contention that this court has no power to investigate the question whether the equation has been made by the application of the relevant criteria or no, and that even if it transpires that the equation does not rest upon a proper application for the four principles on which that equation should have rested, we could not disturb the equation on which the impugned seniority lists depended.

22. We are of opinion that Mr. Central Government Pleader is right in not subscribing to the postulate so placed before us by Mr. Rama Jois. This court has expressed the view more than once and in more than one case that an equation which it made except on a proper application of those four principles, cannot be maintained.

23. It should be observed that Section 115 (5) of the States Reorganisation Act directs an integration which ensures fair and equitable treatment to all persons affected by the provisions of that section and it is to afford such fair and equitable treatment that the conference of the Chief Secretaries deduced the four principles by the application of which alone the equation had to be made. So it is far too unreasonable for Mr. Rama Jois to contend, as he did contend, that those four principles which, according to him, were formulated solely and exclusively for the guidance of the Central Government, could have no relevance when the equation is assailed on the ground that it does not rest upon the principles so formulated.

24. In Venkatachalarachar v. Union of India, (1969) 17 Law Rep 591 (Mys) this court set aside the equation on the ground that it was not preceded by a proper application or consideration of those four principles, and, we see no reason to take a different view in the cases before us.

25. But Mr. Rama Jois asked us to say that the decision of the Punjab High Court in K. C. Gupta v. Union of India, AIR 1969 Punj 34 which takes a contrary view should commend itself to us. But it is not however possible for him to ask us to do so since the view expressed by the Punjab High Court on which Mr. Rama Jois depends can no longer be sustained after the clear enunciation made by the Supreme Court in AIR 1968 SC 850 which emphasises the importance of the four principles evolved during the Chief Secretaries' Conference and their application in obedience to the rules of natural justice.

26. We therefore now proceed to consider the ratiocination on which the impugned equation rests. From the proceedings of the Advisory Committee made available to us by Mr. Central Government Pleader, it becomes clear that in the context of the discussions appertaining to the impugned equations, the Advisory Committee proceeded to discuss the question whether a dichotomy with respect to the post of an Inspector in the form of two lists, one relating to the cadre of Inspectors and the other relating to the cadre of Junior Inspectors was appropriate and reached the conclusion that it was. Then the discussion related to sixteen different posts of Bombay and the two posts of Madras. The Advisory Committee thought that it was not clear "whether the duties of each of the posts from Bombay differed materially and substantially from those of the other and if so, to what extent." So they proceeded to discuss the process of recruitment to those posts and the prescribed qualifications. This discussion was in the main restricted to the question whether the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer which is the 9th post in annexure II to the provisional inter-State seniority list which was prepared on April 8, 1965, of the State of Bombay, was inferior to the post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore, and the conclusion reached was that it was not.

There was next the discussion of the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer of Bombay and whether that post was equivalent to the post of a senior Inspector of Co-operative Societies of Mysore and other integrated areas, and the view expressed by the Advisory Committee with respect to that matter is of some importance supporting as it does the complaint made by the petitioners before us with respect to the equation. This is what the Advisory Committee said:

"Having regard to the nature of duties performed by the incumbents of the post of District Co-operative Officer and the Assistant District Co-operative Officer and their jurisdiction, it was felt that it would be reasonable to equate the post of Assistant District Co-operative Officer from Bombay with the Senior Inspector of Co-operative Societies from Mysore and other integrating areas. The post of District Co-operative Officer from Bombay might have involved the assumption of somewhat higher duties and responsibilities, but the position of the incumbents of those posts would be safeguarded by the principle of maintaining inter se seniority and by the fact that those of them who had been promoted to that post would be allowed to count all the service rendered by them as Assistant District Co-operative Officer towards seniority in the integrated list".

27. It will be remembered that two of the four criteria by the application of which an equation has to be made are: (1) the nature and duties of post and (2) the responsibilities and powers exercised by the officers holding a post. The investigation which was made by the Advisory Committee with respect to the matter to which we have referred was whether the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer of Bombay was equivalent to the post of a senior Inspector in the other integrated areas or the equated post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore. The question did present some importance by reason of the fact that the post of a District Co-operative Officer of grade I and the post of a District Co-operative Officer of grade II in the State of Bombay were both, according to the Advisory Committee equivalent to the post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore. The pay scale of the former post was Rs 200-300 and that of the latter Rs 150-200.

The representation made to the Advisory Committee was that an Assistant District Co-operative Officer of Bombay whose pay scale was Rs 100-150 could not be equated with the Inspector of the new State of Mysore since that post was inferior to the post of a District Co-operative Officer, grade I and grade II.

28. In the context of that representation it was the duty of the Advisory Committee to examine the nature and duties of the three posts and the responsibilities and powers exercised by the officers holding them. And, when they made their investigation they had no doubt in their minds that the post of a District Co-operative Officer involved the assumption of somewhat higher duties and responsibilities than those of the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer, and, unless they found it possible to say that the other criteria, when applied, would yield a different conclusion they could not have deduced any equivalence between the two posts on the one hand and the third on the other.

29. That, prima facie the position, and the disparity between the duties and responsibilities of the two posts on the one hand and those of the other, would not get obliterated by mere maintenance of the inter se seniority of the persons holding those posts, which has no relevance whatsoever in the determination of the equation which has to be made in accordance with the prescribed four criteria, and, that is not one of them. It is difficult to understand how the maintenance of inter se seniority between the holders of two unequal posts, if they are unequal — and on that question it is not for us to express any final opinion in these cases — can make them equal. So, the equation so deduced invites the criticism that it was made by the application of the relevant criteria, since there is no other discussion on that question, save what we have said about it.

30. What we have said so far is the discussion of the Advisory Committee with respect to the equivalence between the post of an Assistant District Co-operative Officer of Bombay which is the 9th post in the second annexure to the provisional seniority list and the equated post of an Inspector in the new State of Mysore. And it is plain that the equation made on the basis of that discussion cannot be sustained.

31. With respect to the remaining thirteen posts among the sixteen posts of Bombay the Advisory Committee did not embark upon any adequate discussion. In that context the committee said this —

"There are some other posts from Bombay which carried the scale of Rs 100-140 and Rs 150-200. These were only an intermediate category of posts to which officers were promoted before they came to hold the post of District Co-operative Officers. The incumbents of those posts also should be included in the seniority list of the equated cadre and should count towards seniority all the service rendered by them in posts on Rs. 100-140 and above".

32. The statement so made by the Advisory Committee suggests that the post of a District Co-operative Officer was a promotional post while the other posts were posts relating to the initial recruitment cadre. But the post of a District Co-operative Officer of Bombay was equated to the post of an Inspector of the new State of Mysore, and the equation of the initial cadre posts with the promotional posts of Bombay appears to introduce an element of incongruity. Moreover the equation so made did not rest upon the application of any of the four principles by which it stood regulated.

33. The concluding part of the discussion of the Advisory Committee related to the post of a Co-operative Sub-Registrar of Madras. But, as we have already observed, there is no challenge to the equation made with respect to that post, and so, it becomes unnecessary for us to investigate its correctness.

34. After the discussion concluded in that way the Committee proceeded to make its comments on individual representations. But before doing so, there was no discussion of the attributes of the post of a Senior Inspector of Madras or of a Senior Inspector of Coorg.

35. It is thus clear that with respect to the Bombay posts, the post of a Senior Inspector of Madras and the post of a Senior Inspector of Coorg, the equation was not made by the application of the relevant criteria, and so, cannot be sustained.

36. It would be recalled that the equation made with respect to the post of a Senior Inspector of Hyderabad, the post of a Co-operative Sub-Registrar of Madras and the post of an Inspector of the former State of Mysore is not the subject matters of any challenge in these writ petitions, and since according to Mr. Central Government Pleader not even a representation with respect to those matters was made to the Central Government under Section 115 (5) of the States Reorganisation Act, it becomes unnecessary for us to embark upon a discussion of its validity.

37. If the equation with respect to the other posts cannot be defended, and so must be set aside, except in the cases in which the complaint with respect to the determination of seniority rests upon some other ground, the assignment of ranks on the basis of the equation which now falls to the ground must also stand set aside. That determination has to be made in manner prescribed by the conference of the Chief Secretaries, and so, we set aside the final inter-State seniority list relating to the post of an Inspector, in so far as it relates to the sixteen posts of Bombay, the post of a Senior Inspector of Madras and the post of a Senior Inspector of Coorg. We make a direction that the equation with respect to those posts should now be made afresh and in accordance with law. But we, however, make it clear that the determination of seniority with respect to everyone of the persons included in the final inter-State seniority list relating to the cadre of Inspectors, including those who were attotees from the former State of Mysore and the State of Hyderabad and those from Madras who held the post of a co-operative sub-registrar in the State of Madras should be made afresh and on the basis of the new equation to be evolved in accordance with the direction made by us.

38. With respect to the equation evolved for the preparation of the inter-State seniority list in respect of the cadre of Junior Inspector of Co-operative Societies in the new State of Mysore, it appears from the proceedings of the Advisory Committee made available to us by Mr. Central Government Pleader that there was again in this context no application of the four criteria by the application of which alone that equation should be made. All that the Advisory Committee stated with respect to that matter was to allude to the argument advanced on behalf of the representationists that the duties and responsibilities of the Senior Inspectors of the State of Coorg and the Junior Inspectors of that State were identical and that they should not be put into two different classifications. The Advisory Committee did not say that duties and responsibilities and the jurisdictions appertaining to the one post were not identical with those of the other, but proceeded to observe that since the erstwhile State of Coorg had maintained two different classes of posts on two different scales of pay and recruitments to those posts were made by two different methods, the two distinct classifications must remain.

39. It is obvious that the perpetuation of those two distinct classifications could not be made to rest on any such ground. So, the complaint made by the petitioners in W. P. 2469 of 1966 and W. P. 1991 of 1966 against the exclusion of the service rendered by them in the cadre of Junior Inspectors of the State of Coorg has to be sustained on the ground that, into the validity of such exclusion, there has been no proper investigation.

40. With respect to the exclusion of the Junior Inspectors of the State of Madras from the list of Inspectors it appears from the Advisory Committee's proceedings that there is little or no discussion supporting the equation. It appears from those proceedings that here again there was no application of the relevant principles formulated in that regard.

41. So we set aside the final inter-State seniority list concerning the cadre of the Junior Inspectors in so far as it relates to the posts of Junior Inspectors of the then State of Coorg and the posts of Junior Inspectors of the State of Madras. As to equation made with respect to the post of a Junior Inspector of the former State of Mysore which existed only in the area of the Bellary District which became part of the former State of Mysore in the year 1953 but was in the State of Madras until then, and with respect to the other posts of the Hyderabad and Bombay areas which were equated with the post of a Junior Inspector of the new State of Mysore, the final inter-State seniority list will remain undisturbed, but subject to the re-assignment of ranks on a proper determination of seniority on the basis of the equation which may now be evolved or deduced by the Central Government as directed by this order.

42. In W P 1952 and W P 2003 of 1966, the controversy surrounds the question whether the petitioners are entitled to higher ranks than those assigned in them in the impugned final inter-State seniority list relating to Inspectors, and that claim to no extent rests upon any complaint about equation. Their contention is that even on the basis of the equation deduced by the Central Government the ranks which should properly be assigned to them are higher than those which they have now secured. With respect to that matter it is admitted that they have made representations to the Central Government, and now that the entire equation with respect to the post concerning those two petitioners has to be made afresh in accordance with the directions issued in this order, even the determination of the seniority of these two petitioners and of the ranks to be assigned to them has to be made once again in accordance with law.

43. Mr. Central Government Pleader raised a contention that the Central Government is normally not the repository of the power to decide controversies concerning inter se seniority. On that question we do not express any opinion in these writ petitions. It will be open in the petitions to contend before the Central Government that that power resides in the Central Government and the Central Government, when it determines seniority, will do so in accordance with law by the exercise of all the powers which reside in them. If these two petitioners are aggrieved by any adverse decision either with respect to competence or in respect of the determination of seniority in be so made by the Central Government, they would of course be at liberty to seek appropriate redress at the appropriate stage.

44. Now, the other incidental directions that we issue are these: The Central Government will not call for representations with respect to the matters to be decided by them. The petitioners in all these writ petitions and others who wish to do so shall make their representations to the Central Government with respect to the matters to be decided now by the Central Government in accordance with this order within six weeks from this date. Those representations which have to be transmitted to the Central Government will be forwarded by the State Government in the Central Government within two months thereafter. The Central Government will proceed to prepare the final inter-State seniority list within four months next following.

45. The petitioners before us and the others who can make representations in manner directed, can raise in those representations every contention available to them.

46. Mr. Central Government Pleader says that in the context of an undertaking given by the Central Government to the Supreme Court when a writ petition presented by persons who held the posts of District Co-operative Officers Grade I, of the Bombay State was disposed of, the Central Government is now making an equation with respect to those posts, and that the Central Government should therefore be at liberty to make a consolidated equation of all the posts in respect of which such equation has now to be made. We grant them liberty in do so.

47. Let the usual copies of this order be supplied to Mr. Government Advocate and Mr. Central Government Pleader, and to such others who make applications within a week from this date.

48. No costs.
R.G.D.

Order accordingly.

END

It has already been stated that the deceased was in very angry mood. He filthily scolded the accused. He also raised the axe M. O. I to kill the accused. All these facts were sufficient to give grave and sudden provocation to the accused to the extent of his being deprived of the power of self-control. If in such circumstance the accused caused the death of the deceased, Exception 1 to Section 300, I. P. C. in terms applies. We accordingly hold that the offence committed by the accused comes within the mischief of Section 304, I. P. C.

8. For the reasons given above, we set aside the order of acquittal and convict the respondent (accused) under Section 304, I. P. C. and sentence him to undergo R. I. for five years. Appeal is allowed.

9. ACHARYA, J.:— I agree.

Bisipati Padhan, Appellant v. State, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 13 of 1969 and Death Ref. No. 1 of 1969, D/- 21-2-1969, from order of S. J. Gunjam Boudh, Berhampur, D/- 16-1-1969.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 288 — Depositions before committing Court brought on record of Sessions Court are substantive evidence — Such statements conflicting with those made before Sessions Court — Duty of Court, pointed out.

The deposition before the committing Court brought into the record of the Sessions Court under S. 288 Cri. P. C. constitutes substantive evidence before the Sessions Court. If the witness is produced and examined, the evidence can be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act.

Further, when a person has made two conflicting statements on oath, it is not possible to safely rely on a particular version. The statement before the committing Court being substantive evidence, as a matter of law no corroboration is necessary for acceptance of the same. But in order to decide as to which version out of the two is true, as a matter of prudence some corroboration is necessary through extrinsic evidence, in arriving at a conclusion whether one version is to be preferred to the other. However there may be some cases in which even without corroboration one version may be preferred to the other from the intrinsic circumstances themselves, if the Court of fact keeps in its mind the position that the matter is to be carefully sifted in view of the two conflicting versions. AIR 1964 SC 1357, Foll.

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 164 — Evidence Act (1872), Sections 145 and 157 — Statement of witness under Section 164 — Can be used for purposes of corroboration or contradiction of the witness.

A statement of a witness under Section 164, Criminal P. C. is not substantive evidence, but is a former statement made before an authority legally competent to investigate the fact. Such a statement can be used either for corroboration of the testimony of a witness under Section 157 or for contradiction thereof under Section 145 of the Evidence Act. H G Panda for Appellant, Govt Advocate, for Respondent

G. K. MISRA, J. — The appellant has been convicted under Section 302 I P C and sentenced to death. A reference has been made under Section 374 Cr P. C to the High Court for confirmation of the sentence of death.

2. The prosecution case may be stated in short. One Badal (dead) had four sons Krushna (dead), Kalisingi (P W. 2), Suma (dead) and Arjun (the deceased). Out of them, only Krushna had 2 sons Tunde (P W 1) and Bisipati (the accused). Others had no issues. The four sons of Badal were having joint cultivation of their lands. They had however separate messings. On 28-2-68 at about 4 P M the deceased Arjun, P W 2 and the accused were sitting in the Bari of the accused. The deceased asked the accused as to why he was loitering with the gun and was not doing work in the fields. The accused went inside his house, brought out his gun (M O I) and shot the deceased. The deceased instantaneously fell down dead. The accused threw away the gun in the Bari and entered into his house. P. W 1 had gone out to the jungle to bring fuel. P W 2 went out and called P. W 1. Both P. Ws 1 and 2 tied the accused with a rope to a pole on the verandah of the accused. The dead body was carried to the house of the accused. P. Ws 4 and 5, the ward members of the village Panchayat, were informed. Before them the accused made an extra-judicial confession that he killed the deceased as the latter asked him as to why he was not doing work in the fields. F I R was lodged on that very day at about 8 P M before a head-constable. The formal F I R (Ext 2) was drawn up at 3 P. M next day. The defence of the accused before the sessions court was that he came out of his house with the gun (M O I). He stumbled in his own Bari where the deceased and P W 2 were sitting. The gun accidentally went off and the deceased was killed. On an analysis of the materials on record, the learned Sessions Judge held that the death of the deceased was homicidal and that the accused killed the deceased.

3. The finding that the death was homicidal is not assailed before us. In fact it is the very defence case that as a result of an accident the deceased died of the shot from the gun (M O I).

4. The only question for consideration is whether the accused killed the deceased with the gun (M O I) or the deceased died as a result of accidental gun-shot. The only eye-witness is P W. 2. In the committing court P. W. 2 fully supported the prosecution story. There is also no divergence between his statement in the committing court and that before the Sessions Judge, except to the limited extent that he speaks of accidental firing of the gun in the sessions court though he clearly stated in the committing court that the accused killed the deceased deliberately. The essential part of his statement in the committing Court runs thus—

"The deceased Arjuna told the accused Bisipati as to why he was loitering with the gun without doing work in the fields. The accused Bisipati went inside his house and brought out his gun and shot the deceased Arjuna with that gun in the Bari of the accused Bisipati at village-Rasinaju."

In cross-examination in the committing court, a suggestion regarding accidental gun-firing was made. P W 2 however stoutly denied it. The statement runs thus—

"It is not a fact that the accused did not shoot the deceased Arjuna. It is not a fact that the accused was holding the gun and that by accident his hand fell on the trigger and that accidentally there was firing."

It would thus be seen that the suggestion of accidental firing was repelled by P. W. 2. One more significant feature to be noted at this stage is that the story of stumbling and falling down of the accused on the ground with the gun (M O I), taken up in the Sessions Court, was not advanced in the committing court. On the contrary, a different story regarding accidental firing was taken. It was to the effect that by accident the hand of the accused fell on the trigger and there was firing. Before the learned Sessions Judge P. W. 2 deposed thus—

"The deceased Arjuna told the accused as to why he (the accused) was simply moving about with a gun instead of doing cultivation, when he (the deceased) had grown old and was incapable of doing cultivation. Then, the accused had not the gun with him. At this, the accused did not reply, but went inside his house and came out with his gun. This is the gun (M O I). The accused then gave out that he was going to the forest for hunting. When the accused was going out with his gun, he suddenly fell down on the ground by the left side, hardly at a distance of about six cubits from me and the deceased. When the accused fell down on the ground as above with the gun in his hand, its muzzle towards us, the gun fired one shot at us, hitting directly the belly of the deceased Arjuna. At this, Arjuna died and fell down on the ground Then myself and the P. W. 1 tied the accused by means of a rope."

In cross-examination P. W. 2 however admitted that his statement in the committing court to the effect "The accused Bisipati went inside his house and brought out his gun and shot the deceased Arjuna with that gun" is a truth. He admits that in his statements under Section 164 and Section 162 Cr. P. C. he did not say about accidental firing out of fear for the police. He further says that he deposed about the accused killing the deceased intentionally, as tutored by the police.

5. As has already been stated, P. W. 2 is consistent in his narration of the story regarding other matters both in the committing court and the sessions court. The divergence in his statements is confined only to the question whether the accused killed the deceased intentionally and deliberately, or whether the deceased died as a result of accidental firing of the gun in the hand of the accused. When there are conflicting versions, the question for consideration is as to which version is true. It is to be noted that the deposition before the committing court brought into the record of the Sessions Court under Section 288 Cr. P. C. constitutes substantive evidence before the Sessions Judge. The section lays down that the evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVII may, in the discretion of the Presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Sessions Judge resorted to the legal formalities in bringing the statement before the committing court to the records of the Sessions Court in accordance with the provision of this section. Thus, there are two substantive pieces of evidence before the Sessions Judge — One supporting the prosecution version and the other the defence theory.

6. When a person has made two conflicting statements on oath, it is not possible to safely rely on a particular version. The statement before the committing court being substantive evidence, as a matter of law no corroboration is necessary for acceptance of the same. But in order to decide as to which version out of the two is true, as a matter of prudence some corroboration is necessary through extrinsic evidence, in arriving at a conclusion whether one version is to be preferred to the other. It is however to be noted that there may be some cases in which even without corroboration one version may be preferred to the other from the intrinsic circumstances themselves, if the court of fact keeps to its mind the position that the matter is to be carefully sifted in view of the two conflicting versions. A masterly exposition of the law is to be found in AIR 1964 SC 1357, Sharnappa v. State of Maharashtra, (see para 10).

7. In the light of the principles laid down, it is now necessary to examine whether the statement of P. W. 2 in the committing court is to be preferred to his statement in the Sessions Court that there was accidental firing. One of the most important circumstances in this case is that in his earliest version before a Magistrate under Section 164 Cr. P. C. P. W. 2 fully supported his version in the committing court that the accused killed the deceased intentionally and deliberately. The statement before the committing court is substantive evidence. Under Section 157 of the Evidence Act a former statement made by such witness, relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved. A statement of a witness under Sec. 164 Cr. P. C. is not substantive evidence, but is a former statement made before an authority legally competent to investigate the fact. Such a statement can be used either for corroboration of the testimony of a witness under Section 157 or for contradiction thereof under Section 145 of the Evidence Act. The statement of P. W. 2 made on 28-2-68 before a Magistrate, first class, under section 164 Cr. P. C. corroborates the statement in the committing court and contradicts the evidence before the Sessions Court. On this basis the statement before the committing court can be preferred to the evidence before the Sessions Court (see AIR 1954 Orissa 163 — State of Orissa v. Banshi Nayak).

The second circumstance which probabilises P. W. 2's statement in the committing court as reliable is the admitted fact by P. W. 2 even before the Sessions Judge that after the deceased was shot down, both P. Ws. 1 and 2 tied down the accused with a rope. If the story of accidental firing was true, P. W. 2 would have immediately stated that the accused had no fault and the deceased died as a result of accidental firing, and there was no justification for tying down the accused when he lacked guilty animus. The tying down of the accused, in which P. W. 2 played a significant role, indubitably points to the conclusion that because the accused deliberately murdered the deceased, he was tied down.

The third circumstance is that P. W. 2 has no issues. He was also having joint cultivation with P. W. 1 and the accused along with the deceased. The deceased cannot now be brought back to life. P. W. 1 and the accused being the only issues in the family, P. W 2 is interested in saving the life of the accused. They are aborigines. At the initial stage P W 2 came out with the truth, but with the lapse of time the desire to save the accused has impelled him to resile from his earlier statement.

The fourth circumstance is that in his statement under Section 342 Cr P C before the committing court the accused did not advance the story of accidental firing. He resorted to a plea of complete denial of his knowledge as to how the deceased was killed. Under Section 267 Cr P C the examination of the accused recorded by or before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence. The committing court statement was put to the accused in his statement under Section 342 Cr P C in the Sessions Court and he admits to have made such a statement. The fact that in the committing court the accused made a denial of the occurrence runs counter to his present story that he fell down by stumbling with the gun in hand which resulted in accidental firing and death of the deceased. Clearly the present plea is an after-thought. That apart, in cross-examination of P W 2 before the committing Court the plea of accidental firing was suggested in a different manner. The story of stumbling and falling down was not at all presented. On the other hand, it was suggested to P W 2 that accidentally the hand of the accused fell on the trigger which resulted in accidental firing and death of the deceased. The divergence between the nature of accident affects the truth of the statement of P W 2 in the Sessions Court that he fell down as a result of stumbling.

The next circumstance is that the plea of the accused that the earlier statement before the committing court was made under Police pressure has not been established. The onus is on the accused to establish it (see AIR 1952 SC 214, Bhagwan Singh v State of Punjab).

8. In his statement under Section 162 Cr P C before the police, P W 2 had stated that the accused deliberately killed the deceased. Such a statement is not substantive evidence and cannot be used for any purpose other than contradicting P W 2. The statement of P W 2 before the Sessions Judge thus stands contradicted by his statement under Section 162 Cr P C which proves the falsity of the statement before the Sessions Judge.

9. For the aforesaid reasons, there can hardly be any doubt that the version of P W 2 before the committing court that the accused killed the deceased is true, and his plea before the Sessions Judge that there was an accidental firing as a result of which the deceased died is false. The conviction is well founded on the statement of P. W 2 before the committing court.

10. The learned Sessions Judge also placed reliance on the extra-judicial confession of the accused before P Ws 4 and 5. Both these witnesses resile from their statements in the committing court, before the Sessions Judge. We do not place much reliance on the extra-judicial confession and it is not necessary to discuss the reasons at length.

11. On our conclusion that the statement of P W 2 before the committing court is true, the conviction must be affirmed. As to the question of sentence, we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the accused deliberately killed the deceased and the murder was cold-blooded. We however take note of the fact which the learned Sessions Judge ignored that the accused is an aborigine and appears to be of volatile temperament. He purchased the gun M O I and was whiling away his time in hunting without doing manual work in the field which was being jointly cultivated. At the time of occurrence the deceased chastised the accused as to why he was not doing work in the fields, this appeared to have aroused his anger and passion suddenly. The aborigines are more or less of animal instinct. For no reason they use their bow and arrows, and it makes no difference if in this particular case a gun was used. Accordingly we are of opinion that ends of justice would be met if the extreme penalty of death is not imposed upon the accused. We accordingly reduce the sentence to one of imprisonment for life.

12. In the result, the Death Reference is discharged and the Criminal Appeal is dismissed subject to the modification in the sentence.

13. We however cannot part with this case without observing that the learned Sessions Judge ought not to have hurriedly disposed of this case by ignoring certain provisions of law. The accused made a judicial confession before Shri K. V. Patra, Magistrate, First Class, on 9-3-68. This confessional statement has not been marked as an exhibit and has not been brought into record. No opportunity was also given to the accused in his statement under Section 342 Cr P C to say whether the confession was voluntary and true. We therefore express no opinion on the confession itself. From the order dated 9-1-1969 recorded by the learned Sessions Judge it appears that Shri K. V. Patra did not attend the court in obedience to the summons though he received a copy of the summons on 27-12-68. The learned Judge observed "In the above circumstances, we cannot wait for his evidence and the Associate P. P. gives him up." If the learned Judge had cared to look into law, the confessional statement could have been admitted into evidence and made an exhibit without the Magistrate being examined in court. In AIR 1952 SC 159 Kashmira Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, their Lordships observed thus:—

“The prosecution were criticised for not calling the Magistrate who recorded the confession as a witness. We wish to endorse the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nazir Ahmed v. King Emperor, AIR 1936 PC 253 (2) at p. 258, regarding the undesirability of such a practice. In our opinion, the Magistrate was rightly not called and it would have been improper and undesirable for the prosecution to have acted otherwise.”

If the confessional statement as recorded is not in conformity with law, the examination of the Magistrate would not have cured it. The learned Sessions Judge and the Associate P. P. should not have ignored this elementary proposition of law.

14. Similarly the learned Judge and the Associate P. P. and the Advocate for the accused did not care to bring into record the injury report of Dr. R. C. Misra with regard to the injuries on the accused. The injury report was an admissible piece of evidence in proof or disproof of the theory of accident. We have however looked into the injury report. The location and nature of the injuries do not in any way militate against the theory of deliberate gun-shot.

O. J. C. No. 288 of 1965, D/- 2-9-1968.

Education — Orissa Education Code, Art. 336 — Procedure — Managing Committee of school resolving to recommend termination of services of headmistress — Appeal of headmistress against that resolution rejected — No personal hearing given to her despite her prayer for such opportunity: Held that an opportunity should have been given to her to meet the charges against her — Procedure adopted by authorities not regular and was against principle of natural justice and that rejection of appeal was unsustainable. and G. N. Sengupta, for Opposite Parties.

BARMAN, C. J. :— In this writ petition the petitioner—an ex-Head Mistress of the Urdu Girls School, Oriya Bazar, Cuttack—challenges the order of the District Inspectress of Schools, Central Circle, Cuttack, dated January 5, 1965 rejecting an appeal by way of representation filed by the petitioner against the resolution dated October 24, 1964 of the Managing Committee of the School by which the Managing Committee recommended that the services of the petitioner be terminated.

2. On September 9, 1964 the petitioner was called upon to show cause against certain charges including the charges that the petitioner remained absent from the school, without any application, from August 7, 1964 to August 9, 1964 and then from August 11, 1964 to August 18, 1964 causing dislocation of normal school work and further that she failed to intimate the President of the school about the holding of the public meeting on August 7, 1964 within the school premises. On September 29, 1964 the petitioner submitted an explanation purported to meet the charges against her; she also requested in her explanation for an independent enquiry or causing an enquiry to be made with proper notice to her before the concerned authorities proceeded to take any action against her interests.

On October 24, 1964 the Managing Committee passed a resolution giving findings on matters not included in the charges, namely, that she instigated the School Mistresses to go on strike and she was also found guilty of subsequent insubordinate behaviour with the President, as recorded in the resolution purported to give findings on the charges. As against the decision of the Managing Committee the petitioner appealed to the District Inspectress of Schools under Article 336 of the Orissa Education Code. The District Inspectress of Schools rejected the said appeal by way of representation. It is against this decision of the District Inspectress of Schools that the petitioner has filed this writ petition.

3. The main ground on which the petitioner challenges the impugned order is that no opportunity was given to her for a personal hearing although she prayed for the same in her explanation to the charges. We are satisfied that she should have been given such opportunity to meet the charges as prayed for by her. The procedure adopted by the concerned authorities was not regular and against the principle of natural justice.

4. In this view of the matter, the order of the District Inspectress of Schools dated January 5, 1965—in appeal by way of representation—is quashed It is however open to the District Inspectress of Schools to deal with the said representation after giving the petitioner a personal hearing and dispose of the case according to law The writ petition is accordingly allowed in terms aforesaid There will be no order as to costs

ORDER — Deceased KISSORE MOHAN and defendant No 1 were brothers They were separate in status, but their dwelling house was not partitioned by metes and bounds Subasini (defendant no 2), widow of Kishori Mohan, transferred undivided 8 annas interest in the disputed house and homestead by a registered sale deed to Gita Debi (plaintiff) on 27-4-62 for Rs 2000/- Gita Debi filed T S No 23 of 1963 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Balasore, for partition. Defendant no 1 claimed to repurchase the property sold to the plaintiff under Section 4 of the Partition Act As to the value of the house, there was contest Ultimately a compromise petition was filed on 17-1-67 whereby the plaintiff and defendant no 1 agreed that the value of the homestead would be Rs 550/- per decimal It was stated therein that defendant no 1 would repurchase the disputed homestead within two months of the compromise, failing which the plaintiff would be entitled to partition This compromise was accepted by the court on 18-1-67 Within the stipulated period defendant no 1 did not pay the money and did not repurchase the property from the plaintiff On 4-4-68 Gangamani (wife), Chintamani and Chandramohan (sons) and Sebamani (daughter) of defendant no 1 filed an application under Order 1, Rule 10 C P C that they should be permitted to intervene and were prepared to repurchase the disputed homestead on payment of proper consideration This application was accepted by the learned subordinate Judge who allowed them to be impleaded in the partition suit Against this order the Civil Revision has been filed by the plaintiff

2 The learned Subordinate Judge held that defendant no 1 did not act in the interest of the family and that the compromise to purchase the disputed homestead at the rate of Rs 550/- per decimal which is higher than the rate fixed by the Commissioner which was Rs 400/- per decimal, establishes the fact that defendant no 1 did not act in the interest of the family He further held that even though the wife, the sons and the daughter of defendant no 1 were not co-sharers of Kishori Mohan in respect of the disputed homestead, they were entitled to exercise the right of repurchase under Section 4 of the Partition Act by virtue of their right of residence in the house of defendant no 1

3. Mr Sinha was unable to support the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge on the grounds advanced therein There are no materials that defendant no 1 acted against the interest of the family There was contest between the plaintiff and defendant no 1 regarding valuation A commissioner was deputed who fixed the value at Rs 400/- per decimal The plaintiff challenged the value and claimed at a much higher rate In such a circumstance, if a compromise was entered into fixing the value of the land at Rs 550/- per decimal, it cannot be said without some other evidence that defendant no. 1 acted against the interest of the family. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is speculative and cannot be accepted without more solid evidence.

4. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge that the wife, the sons and the daughter of defendant no. 1 can exercise the right of repurchase under Section 4 of the Partition Act, because they reside with defendant no. 1 in a portion of the house occupied by him, is also not correct in law. Section 4(1) of the Partition Act runs thus:—

"Where a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family, and such transferee sues for partition, the court shall, if any member of the family being a shareholder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share in such manner as he thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such shareholder and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf."

It is to be noted that in order to exercise this right of pre-emption the claimant must be a member of the undivided family qua the dwelling house. The wife, the sons and the daughter of defendant no. 1 are undoubtedly members of the undivided family qua the dwelling house. But the further condition to be fulfilled is that, they must also be shareholders. Admittedly those persons are not cosharers of Kishori Mohan or his widow. Kishori Mohan died in a separated status. In respect of the undivided dwelling house his only cosharer is Madan Mohan. The wife, the sons and the daughter of defendant no. 1 cannot therefore claim any right under Section 4 of the Partition Act.

5. Mr. Sinha last contended that time is not the essence of the contract, and though the period of two months stipulated in the compromise expired the court has got power to extend time. It is not necessary to examine the law relevant on the point as defendant no. 1 to whom opportunity was given to repurchase the property did not ask for any extension of time. Even in this court defendant no. 1 does not appear to ask for extension of time. Time cannot be extended at the instance of persons who have no locus standi to exercise the right of pre-emption under Section 4 of the Partition Act.

6. All the contentions urged by Mr. Sinha fail. The impugned order is set aside and the prayer of the wife, the sons and the daughter of defendant no. 1 P. C. is rejected. The Civil Revision is to be impleaded under O. 1, Rule 10 C.

allowed. In the circumstances parties to bear their own costs throughout.

G. K. MISRA, J.:— There were 8 issues in the suit. An application was filed by defendant no. 1 that issues 7 and 8 should be tried as preliminary issues. Those issues are:—

"(7) Is the suit maintainable in view of Article 113 of the Limitation Act?

(8) Is the suit barred under Order 2, Rule 2 C. P. C.?"

The learned Munsif rejected this prayer. Against the order this Civil Revision has been filed.

2. The other important issues are issues nos. 3 to 5. They are:—

"(3) Is the suit barred by principle of constructive res judicata?

(4) Has the plaintiff acquired right of easement either by grant or necessity?

(5) Is the deed of agreement dated 19-3-57 a fraudulent document?"

3. Mr. Mohanty contended that on the face of the averments in the plaint the suit is barred by limitation under Article 113 of the Limitation Act, and on the face of the judgment in certain previous suits the present suit is barred by Order 2, Rule 2 C. P. C.

4. It is well known that the suit must be tried as a whole and not piecemeal unless it involves the question of jurisdiction. For instance, if the valuation of the suit be such that it will oust the jurisdiction of the court before whom it was instituted, then in such cases ordinarily this issue should be tried as a preliminary issue to prevent unnecessary harassment to the litigants. But in all other matters it is always desirable that the cases should be tried as a whole, so that it would not be remanded times without number from the appellate court to re-examine other matters left undecided. The learned Munsif took the correct view in not deciding issues 7 and 8 as preliminary issues. At any rate, it cannot be said that he exercised his jurisdiction either illegally or with material irregularity.

5 In the result, the Civil Revision is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee Rs 32/- The learned Munsif is directed to dispose of the suit within three months from today with intimation to this Court. LGC/DVC Revision dismissed

Criminal Misc Cases Nos 62, 76, 77, 81, 82, 83, 84 and 95 of 1969, D/- 14-7-1969

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 167 and 344 — Distinction between — Order of remand under S. 344 by a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to try case is illegal — Detention under such order is illegal — Accused subsequently produced by police before Magistrate having jurisdiction to try case and remanded to jail custody under S. 344 — Subsequent detention is legal — (Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Habeas Corpus)

A Magistrate passing an order of remand under S. 167 Cr P C need not always be the Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try the case. But if any detention beyond the period of 15 days from the date of arrest is sought, that can be ordered only by the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case and this power can be exercised by the Magistrate not under Section 167 Cr P C, but under Section 344 Cr P C. (Para 4)

It is not always necessary that to enable a Magistrate to pass an order of remand under Section 344 Cr P C, the accused persons concerned must have been arrested by the Police. There may be cases where a person accused for a cognizable offence may surrender himself in Court and it cannot be said, that in such a case, the Magistrate cannot commit him to jail custody. (Para 5)

Where the accused petitioners were remanded under S. 344 to jail custody from 8-3-69 to 17-4-69 by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try their case and were ultimately produced by the Police before the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case to be dealt with under S. 344 Cr P C and were again remanded to jail custody by that Magistrate on 17-4-69

Held, that the orders of remand passed by the Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case were illegal and therefore the detention of the accused from 8-3-69 to 17-4-69 was illegal. The preceding illegal detention could not affect the powers of the Magistrate having jurisdiction to take action under S. 344 Cr P C and as such the detention of the accused subsequent to 17-4-69 was perfectly legal. PATRA, J. — These eight applications (CrI Misc 62/69 and 95/69 being by the same person) have been filed praying that this Court should issue directions in the nature of habeas corpus under Section 491 Cr P C to produce the petitioners before this Court and set them at liberty.

2. All the petitioners excepting the one in Cr Misc 77 of 69 were arrested by the police of Gunupur Police Station of Gunupur Sub division in Koraput district on charges under Sections 120B/399 I P C on different dates between 30-1-1969 and 2-2-1969, and were duly produced before the Sub Divisional Magistrate at Gunupur, who remanded them to custody till 14-2-69. A proceeding under Section 109 Cr P C having been initiated against the petitioner in CrI Misc. 77/69, he was arrested by the Gunupur Police on 2-3-69 and was duly produced before the Magistrate at Gunupur, who remanded him to custody pending further investigation. It appears from the record that besides these petitioners a large number of other persons, about 52 in all, were also arrested on charges under Sections 120B/399, I. P. C. As there was insufficient accommodation in Gunupur Sub-jail, these petitioners were transferred to be lodged in Koraput District Jail on 6-2-1969. They were produced before the Sub Divisional Magistrate at Koraput on the 14th February, 1969. On that very day, the other accused persons involved in this case who had been kept at Gunupur Jail were produced before the S. D. M., Gunupur. On the same day, the Investigating Officer filed an application in Gunupur court praying for further remand as investigation was not complete. The Court directed that charge sheet should be filed by 27-2-1969 and also directed that the remands in respect of not only the accused persons actually produced before him, but also the accused persons who were transferred to Koraput jail should be extended till 27-2-1969. On 19-2-69, the charge sheet was filed before the S. D. M. at Gunupur. Meanwhile, on 14-2-69, the petitioners were produced before the Sub Divisional Magistrate at Koraput who remanded them to custody till 20-2-69. On 28-2-69, the petitioners were produced before the S. D. M. at Koraput who remanded them to custody till 8-3-69. The order sheet shows that this was done in pursuance of a wireless message received from the S. D. M., Gunupur. On 8-3-69, in the absence of any further instructions from the S. D. M., Gunupur, the Magistrate at Koraput extended the remand till 22-3-69. Thereafter, no further instruction appears to have been received by the Magistrate at Koraput, from the Magistrate at Gunupur, and in the absence thereof, he went on remanding the petitioners from time to time to 22-3-1969, 5-4-69, 16-4-69 and 17-4-69. On the last mentioned date, the petitioners were forwarded in custody to Gunupur. It is not disputed, that after being taken to Gunupur, the petitioners were produced before the S. D. M. at Gunupur who obviously under Section 344 Cr. P. C. has remanded them to jail custody.

3. These, in short, are the facts of the case. The present applications were submitted by the petitioners while they were still in Koraput Jail complaining that they were being illegally detained there. The three short points that arise for consideration in these cases are —

(1) Whether the detention of the petitioners in Koraput Jail under orders of the Magistrate at Koraput is illegal.

(2) if the aforesaid detentions are illegal whether in view of the fact that they were subsequently produced before the Gunupur Magistrate, who has jurisdiction to try them and under whose orders they are at present remanded to Jail custody, their present detention can still be illegal; and

(3) assuming that their present detention is legal, whether the petitioners are entitled to be released merely by reason of the fact that at the time they made these applications they were held in illegal custody.

4. Section 167 Cr. P. C. provides that whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody of the Police and it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded, he must be produced within 24 hours of the arrest before a Magistrate who from time to time may authorise the detention of the accused person in such custody, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole. Such a Magistrate need not always be the Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try the case. But if any detention beyond the period of 15 days from the date of arrest is sought, that can be ordered only by the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case and this power can be exercised by the Magistrate not under Section 167 Cr. P. C., but under Section 344 Cr. P. C. What has happened in these cases is that the original production of the accused persons was before a Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try the case, namely, the Magistrate of Gunupur. Thereafter, the petitioners were transferred to the Koraput Jail and were produced before the Magistrate who admittedly had no jurisdiction to try the case and it is under his orders that the petitioners were being ordered to be detained from time to time. They were ultimately produced before the Magistrate Gunupur sometime about the 24th of April, 1969. The learned Advocate General appearing for the State sought to justify such detention in Koraput Jail on the ground that although the accused persons were being produced before the Magistrate at Koraput, the latter in extending the remands was acting on instructions from the Magistrate at Gunupur. Whether actual production of the accused before the Magistrate entitled to pass an order of remand is necessary or not is a question which is not free from doubt. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in AIR 1948 Mad 100 In Re: M. R. Venkatraman, had taken the view that a Magistrate commits illegality in issuing an order of remand without having the prisoner produced before him. Thadani C. J. in AIR 1952 Assam 167, Prabhat Malla v. D. C. Kamrup had taken the view that neither Article 22 of the Constitution of India nor Section 167 Cr. P. C. requires the production of an accused person before the Magistrate on the occasion of a subsequent remand. For the disposal of the present applications it is unnecessary to decide these questions, because, on facts we find, as revealed from the order sheet of the Court of the Magistrate at Koraput, that although he purported to act under instructions from the S D M at Gunupur in extending the remand of the petitioners till 8-3-69, he had no such instructions thereafter till the petitioners were sent back to Gunupur sometime after 17-4-1969. The detention of the petitioners during this period was clearly illegal and it was during this period that the petitioners have filed the present applications for their release. It is, however, not disputed that after their retransfer to Gunupur Jail the petitioners were produced before the Magistrate at Gunupur who acting under Section 344 Cr P C has remanded them to Jail custody.

5. Mr Palit, appearing amicus curiae for the petitioners contended that since the detention of the petitioners during the period preceding their production before the Magistrate at Gunupur on the 24th of April, 1969 was illegal, the order of remand passed by the Gunupur Magistrate in the absence of fresh arrests of the petitioners is not legal. We are unable to accept this contention. It is not always necessary that to enable a Magistrate to pass an order of remand under Section 344 Cr P C, the accused person concerned must have been arrested by the Police. There may be cases where a person accused for a cognizable offence may surrender himself in Court and it cannot be said, that in such a case, the Magistrate cannot commit him to Jail custody. If a person is illegally detained, he is entitled to make an application to the High Court under Section 491 Cr P C as has been done in these cases, and one of the powers the High Court would exercise in such a case is to direct that person concerned may be brought before the Court to be dealt with according to law. In these cases the Police themselves produced the petitioner before the Magistrate at Gunupur to be dealt with according to S 344, Cr P C. The preceding illegal detention of the petitioners cannot affect the powers of the Magistrate to take action under Sec 344 Cr P C. Mr Palit has not been able to produce before us any decision where a contrary view has been taken. We, therefore, hold that the detention of the petitioners at the present moment is legal.

6. The question then arises, whether by reason of the fact that the detention of the petitioners was illegal at the time they made these applications, they are entitled to be set at liberty, notwithstanding the fact that they are held in legal custody from 24th April 1969 onwards. There is nothing in Section 491 Cr P C to persuade us to hold the view that notwithstanding the legal detention of the petitioners at the present moment, they are to be released merely because of the antecedent illegality in their detention. We are fortified in this conclusion by a decision of the Federal Court in AIR 1945 FC 18, Basanta Chandra v Emperor. The appellant in that case was arrested on 27th March 1942 under an order dated 19th March, 1942 made by the Governor of Bihar in exercise of his power under Rule 26 of the Defence of India Rules. The application under Section 491 Cr P C was filed on 28th April 1943. Before the matter was heard in the High Court, an Ordinance had been promulgated on the 15th January, 1944 and thereafter the application was dismissed by the High Court. On appeal, the Federal Court held that the new Ordinance did not take away the power of the High Court to deal with the matter and accordingly on 23rd May, 1944 remitted the case back to the High Court for disposal. On the 3rd July, 1944 the Governor of Bihar passed two orders. By the first, he cancelled the order of detention dated 19th March 1942 and by the second, he directed the detention of the appellant on the ground that it was necessary so to do "with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and the efficient prosecution of the war". When the application again came on for hearing before the High Court, reliance was placed on behalf of the State on the order dated 3rd July, 1944, and it was contended that it was unnecessary in the circumstances to enquire into the validity of the order of the 19th March, 1942. The High Court dismissed the application. On appeal before the Federal Court, it was contended that it was not open to the High Court to base its decision on the subsequent order of 3rd July, 1942 (which the Federal Court considered to be legal order), and that the legality of the detention of the appellant should be decided on the basis of the detention order dated 19th March, 1942. Repelling these contentions, their Lordships observed—

"The analogy of civil proceedings in which the rights of parties have ordinarily to be ascertained as on the date of the institution of the proceedings cannot be invoked here. If at any time before the Court directs the release of the detainee, a valid order directing his detention is produced, the Court cannot direct his release merely on the ground that at some prior stage there was no valid cause for detention. The question is not whether the later order validates the earlier detention but whether in the face of the later valid order the Court can direct the release of the petitioner."

In later decisions of the Supreme Court AIR 1952 SC 106, Naranjan Singh v. State of Punjab 1, AIR 1953 SC 277, Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Delhi, Their Lordships held that in habeas corpus proceedings, the Court is to have regard to the legality or otherwise of the detention at the time of the return, namely, the date on which the State shows cause in answer to the rule issued and not with reference to the institution of the proceedings. It is, therefore, clear that the legality of the detention of the petitioners cannot be determined with reference to the dates on which they have made these applications. Whether the relevant date is the date on which the State shows cause in answer to the rule as indicated by the Supreme Court or the date on which this Court passes the final order as indicated by the Federal Court, it is immaterial so far as the present proceedings are concerned, because, even by the time the State showed cause in these proceedings, the petitioners are being held in lawful custody by virtue of orders under Section 344 Cr. P. C. passed by the Magistrate at Gunupur.

7. In the result, the applications are dismissed.

Ginger is a vegetable, though it is not used for the primary purpose of food, but is used to give flavour or taste to the food. It satisfies the tests that it is grown in kitchen garden and is used for the table. This being so in Orissa, it is not taxable under the Orissa Sales-tax Act. Whether in common parlance a particular vegetable would be vegetable or not would depend on the particular area or locality. What may be a vegetable in Kerala may not be a vegetable in Orissa on the application of the aforesaid restricted definition of the expression 'vegetable'. N. N. Bhattacharya, for Appellant;

Govt. Advocate, for Respondent.

G. K. MISRA, C. J. :— The Sales Tax

Tribunal has referred the following question under Section 24(1) of the Orissa

Sales Tax Act for the opinion of the High Court:

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case, ginger is not a vegetable according to the test as finally settled by the Supreme Court."

"Vegetables" are not taxable under the Orissa Sales Tax Act. If ginger is vegetable, it is not taxable. This is how the question gathers importance.

2. The Tribunal has found that ginger is not vegetable. Its view is based on

ILR (1961) Cut 175, Dhadi Sahu v. Commissioner of Sales Tax, Orissa. In paragraph 8 their Lordships laid down the following test:

"On the basis of those decisions one can safely find that 'vegetables' would cover only such plants which are grown in the kitchen garden and cultivated for the purpose of food. In other words vegetables shall include such plants, roots, etc. which are primarily used for the purpose of food. The description of the word 'vegetable' as appears from the authorities stated above, only means that if a particular plant or vegetable is used for the primary purpose of being served as a food, then it will be treated as a vegetable. As is well known, while giving a meaning to the word 'vegetable' we have to look to the meaning of the law as is intended by the Legislature, the people for whom it is intended, and the area or place for which it is intended to apply. The test therefore would be whether green pepper are treated as a principal item of food in Orissa as vegetables like brinjals, tomatoes, potatoes etc., or it is applied to other vegetable or non-vegetable preparations for the purpose of adding taste or flavour."

Mr Government Advocate also relies on this Division Bench decision. If the aforesaid passage represents the correct law, the conclusion of the Tribunal is unassailable. Ginger is never used in Orissa for the primary purpose of being served as food. It is definitely used in this part of the country for the purpose of adding taste or flavour to the main item of food whether vegetarian or non-vegetarian.

3 It is to be noticed that this is the only decision in India which lays down the test that, in order to come within the meaning of 'vegetable' the particular vegetable must be used for the primary purpose of food. Mr Bhattacharya contends that the aforesaid decision is directly contrary to the view expressed by the Supreme Court and can no longer be held to be good law. The view of the Division Bench was based on a passage appearing in Corpus Juris Secundum (91 C J S 804) which is as follows—

"It has been held that in the common language of the people, whether sellers or consumers of provisions, all these are vegetables which are grown in kitchen gardens, and which, whether eaten cooked or raw, are like potatoes, carrots, parsnips, turnips, beets, cauliflower, cabbage, celery and lettuce, usually served at dinner in, with or after the soup, fish or meats which constitute the principal part of the repast, and not, like fruits generally, as dessert."

The meaning given to this passage by the Division Bench is quite different from the meaning it conveys. In the passage the principal items consist of soup, fish or meats. Other items like potatoes, carrots etc. are served at the dinner as subsidiary items. Though so served as subsidiary items still they were construed as vegetables. Unfortunately, the Division Bench by mistake was of the impression that in order to be vegetables they must be used for the primary purpose of being served as food. The passage quoted above does not support the conclusion of the Division Bench. We are aware of the position that a subsequent Division Bench cannot overrule an earlier Bench decision by pointing out certain palpable errors. If this were the only ground on which we were to take a different view, the question would have been referred to a larger Bench but the necessity for referring to a larger Bench does not arise on account of the consistent view taken by the Supreme Court laying down the meaning of the expression 'vegetable'. It is to be remembered that in a wide sense all things belonging to the vegetable world are vegetables, but in the taxing statutes they have been construed to be used in a restricted sense.

In AIR 1961 SC 1325, Ramavatar v Assistant Sales Tax Officer, Akola, the question for consideration was whether betel-leaves were vegetables. After reviewing the entire law on the question their Lordships laid down the following tests:

"The word 'vegetables' in taxing statutes is to be understood as in common parlance, i.e. denoting class of vegetables which are grown in a kitchen garden or in a farm and are used for the table."

This decision was followed in AIR 1962 SC 660, Motipur Zamindari Co (Private) Ltd v State of Bihar and applying that test sugarcane was held not to be a vegetable. Though sugarcane and betel-leaves might be grown either in a kitchen garden or in a farm they are not used for the table. It is to be noticed that the test laid down by the Supreme Court does not refer to the use of vegetable as primary or subsidiary for the purpose of food. Take for instance Podina (mint) or Dhania (coriander). They are used for the purpose of preparation of chutney, but are not used for the primary purpose of food and are used to give flavour or taste to the food. In common parlance in Orissa they are vegetables, are grown in the kitchen garden and are used for the table.

Judged by the Supreme Court decisions indicated above, the view taken by the Division Bench of this Court is no longer good law. As there is direct authority of the Supreme Court on the point which is the law for the country, there is no necessity to refer the question to a larger Bench. The Orissa decision however remains good law so far as the second test is concerned, namely whether in common parlance a particular vegetable would be vegetable or not would depend on the particular area or locality. What may be a vegetable in Kerala may not be a vegetable in Orissa on the application of the aforesaid restricted definition of the expression 'vegetable'.

On the aforesaid analysis ginger is a vegetable. Doubtless it is not used for the primary purpose of food but is used to give flavour or taste to the food but it is grown in the kitchen garden and is used for the table.

4 The same view has been taken in 1962-13 STC 838 (Ker) (FB) Krishna Iyer v State of Kerala and (1967) 20 STC 234 (Cal) Wazi Ahmed v. State of West Bengal and no contrary view has been brought to our notice.

5. In the result we hold that the Tribunal took a wrong view. We would answer the question by saying that ginger is a vegetable. In the circumstances parties to bear their own costs. The petitioner is however entitled to refund of the money deposited under Section 24(1) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act.

ORDER:— The plaintiff's suit was for recovery of Rs. 690/- on the basis of a promissory note Ext. 1 executed by late Kasinath Das, an advocate, on 2-1-41 for Rs. 660/-. He paid Rs. 630/- in six instalments, the last payment being Rs. 30 on 14-2-57. On 13-2-60 the executant wrote the letter Ext. 3 acknowledging the loan payable under Ext. 1. The defendants are the heirs of late Kasinath Das. Their defence is that the handnote Ext. 1 was executed on 2-1-40, and not on 2-1-41. The payment made on 14-2-57 towards the suit handnote is challenged and it is asserted that this payment was made towards the dues of a loan incurred by late Gopinath Das in which Kasinath Das was his surety. Ext. 3 is said to be not genuine. It is alleged that late Kasinath Das was appearing as a junior with late M. S. Rao in many cases. He used to send blank papers with signatures authorising late M. S. Rao to appear on his behalf. One such paper containing the signature of late Kasinath Das has been used for fabrication of Ext. 3. There was no acknowledgment and the suit was barred by limitation.

2. To have a clear picture, it would be profitable to note the various payments with dates.

under which Gopinath Das incurred the loan. He further held that the letter Ext. 3 dated 13-2-60 sent by Kasinath Das acknowledging the loan was genuine. Having held that the suit handnote was barred by limitation as the payment on 14-2-57 did not relate to it, he dismissed the suit. He also held that Ext. 3 did not constitute a fresh agreement within the scope of Section 25(3) of the Contract Act.

The learned lower appellate court recorded the following findings—

(i) The handnote Ext 1 was executed on 2-1-40 and not on 2-1-41

(ii) The payment made on 14-2-57 did not relate to the suit handnote

(iii) The letter Ext 3 is not genuine

(iv) Ext 3 even if genuine is not an agreement within the meaning of section 25(3) of the Contract Act

The appeal was accordingly dismissed. Against the confirming judgment dismissing the plaintiff's suit, this Civil Revision has been filed.

3. The following questions arise for consideration on the basis of arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the parties—

(1) Was Ext 1 executed on 2-1-40 or on 2-1-41?

(2) Does the payment of Rs 30/- on 14-2-57 under Ext 2 relate to the suit handnote?

(3) Is Ext 3 genuine?

(4) If it is genuine, does it furnish a fresh cause of action under Section 25(3) of the Indian Contract Act?

4. The first question whether the suit handnote was executed on 2-1-40 or 2-1-41 is wholly academic. There is no dispute that the payments made under Exts 1/a to 1/e relate to the suit handnote Rs 500/- was paid under Ext 1/a on 6-3-42. Even if the handnote was executed on 2-1-40, it was not barred by limitation by 6-2-42. The payments are definitely endorsed on Ext. 1. Judged from this aspect it is immaterial whether the handnote was executed on 2-1-40 or 2-1-41 as its execution and passing of consideration thereunder are not disputed.

Going into the merits of the case, the learned trial court reached the correct conclusion in holding that the handnote was executed on 2-1-41. Obviously by mistake late Kasinath Das had given the date "2-1-40". The year 1940 had come to an end, but the habit of noting the past year does not sometimes cease. This is evidenced by the fact that there is a clear endorsement in the handwriting of late M S Rao made on 2-1-41 itself. Some of the subsequent endorsements are in the handwriting of Kasinath Das himself. The learned lower appellate court indulged in surmises and speculation without any materials that Kasinath Das made the endorsement, without seeing the noting of late M S Rao that Rs 660/- was advanced on 2-1-41. Late Kasinath Das was an advocate of eminence. The learned trial court reached the correct conclusion in holding that the date of the handnote is 2-1-41 and not 2-1-40.

5. It is conceded by Mr. R N. Misra for the plaintiff that the payment of Rs 30/- on 14-2-57 does not relate to the suit handnote. On this concession, the handnote would be barred by limitation unless the letter Ext 3 sent on 13-2-60 furnishes a fresh cause of action under Section 25(3) of the Contract Act. Even if this letter constitutes an acknowledgment under Section 19 of the Limitation Act, it will not save limitation, as by then the handnote was not saved by any payment.

6. The further question for consideration therefore is whether Ext 3 is genuine, and if so, whether it comes within the scope of Section 25(3) of the Contract Act. Ext 3 bears the signature of late Kasinath Das and it comes from the custody of the plaintiff. It is written on a paper containing the letter-head of Kasinath Das. It runs thus—

"With reference to handnote for Rs 660/- dated 2-1-41, as yet I have not been able to repay your dues in full. Please allow me time till the end of March 1960 for repaying in full.

Yours faithfully,

K. N. Das, Advocate."

Admittedly the body of the letter is not in the handwriting of Kasinath Das. Mr. Kartik Rao (Advocate, Plaintiff and P W 1) states on oath that a relation of Kasinath Das, whom he cannot subsequently trace out, wrote the letter to the dictation of late Kasinath Das and the latter signed the same. The counter evidence is given by the widow of late Kasinath Das that P W. 1 never came to the office of Kasinath Das and no such letter was dictated by Kasinath Das. The evidence of the widow, though she is a respectable lady, cannot be given much importance. She is not likely to come to the office of her husband and was not in a position to know any transaction in between Kasinath Das and P W 1. Her denial therefore does not carry any value. P W. 1 is an advocate of some standing and is a respectable person. It is not the case of either party that Kasinath Das was unconscious while the signature was given on the letter. He was an advocate of eminence and it is a matter of common sense that he could not have put his signature to such a letter without going through it.

The case of the defendants that late Kasinath Das used to send blank papers for use in court does not carry much conviction. P W. 1 denies the fact of any such blank paper being handed over to late M S Rao by late Kasinath Das. Mr. M S Rao was a top ranking senior advocate of this Bar. In the absence of very strong evidence it is difficult to accept the defence story that a blank paper was used by Mr. M. S. Rao or Mr. Kartik Rao to fabricate Ext. 3. Doubtless the onus of proving the genuineness of Ext. 3 is on the plaintiff. Even if the scribe is not examined and the scribe is not known to the plaintiff, the execution can be proved on the basis of the evidence that a relation of Mr. Kasinath Das scribed the letter to the dictation of Mr. Kasinath Das, after which the latter signed it. Such cases are somewhat unusual. But the evidence given by P. W. 1 in the aforesaid strain cannot be rejected as not being admissible in evidence. I am satisfied that P. W. 1 is a witness of truth and the letter Ext. 3 is genuine and was written to the dictation of late Kasinath Das.

Even if Ext. 3 is genuine and constitutes an acknowledgment under Section 19 of the Limitation Act, the suit cannot be decreed on its basis as by then any suit on the basis of the handnote would be barred by limitation, there being no payment in between 14-2-54 and 13-2-60. It is therefore necessary to examine if Ext. 3 can be a valid agreement within the meaning of Section 25(3) of the Contract Act.

7. Section 25, sub-section (3) of the Contract Act runs thus:—

"25. An agreement made without consideration is void, unless —

(3) it is a promise, made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorised in that behalf, to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits."

In any of these cases, such an agreement is a contract."

The juristic theory behind this sub-section is that the right of a lender to receive payment and the obligation of the borrower to repay never dies by lapse of time. The sub-section merely resuscitates the remedy to enforce payment by suit (See AIR 1947 Cal 267, Suresh Chandra v. Benoy Kumar). The letter Ext. 3 prima facie satisfies all the elements required under this section. There is a clear reference to the handnote under which the loan had been incurred. Late Kasinath Das made a clear admission that the dues had not been repaid in full. In express terms he asked for time to make payment in full by March 1960. There was thus a promise made in writing signed by Kasinath Das to pay the dues under the handnote which had been barred by limitation.

8. Mr. Rath however contends that the section has no application as Ext. 3 does not indicate that Kasinath Das was conscious that the debt had been barred by limitation. The letter Ext. 3 does not indicate his awareness that the debt had been barred by limitation and his preparedness to repay the debt, even though it had been barred by limitation. He further contends that Ext. 3 is not a promise within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the Contract Act. Both these contentions require careful examination.

9. In support of his contention that the debtor must be conscious of the debt being barred by limitation before a promise is made, reliance is placed by Mr. Rath on (1910) 20 Mad LJ 656, Ramaswami Pillai v. Kuppuswami Pillai and AIR 1963 Andh Pra 337, Sambayya v. Shemsherkhan. Both these cases are single Judge decisions and support the contention of Mr. Rath. In (1910) 20 Mad LJ 656 his Lordship observed that there was nothing to show that the debtor recognised that the debt was irrecoverable and still promised to pay it, and the promise to which Section 25 refers seems to be a promise to pay despite the consciousness that the debt is barred. This case came up for consideration in (1913) 18 Cal LJ 269, Mati Sheikh v. Baikantha Nath and was dissented from. It was held not to have laid down good law. Their Lordships observed that the legislature did not insist on the consciousness of the debtor about the debt being barred by limitation before promise was made. Such words cannot be imported into the section which are not to be found there. The identical view was taken also in (1913) 18 Cal LJ 329, Bhowani Misser v. Peari Jha. Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was a party to both these Division Bench decisions. In AIR 1915 Mad 242, Mrs C. Simon v. Arogiasami Pillai and AIR 1951 Mad 903, Muthayee Achi v. Sabbiah Chettiar similar views were taken by two Division Benches of the Madras High Court. (1910) 20 Mad LJ 656 thus stands overruled even in Madras. AIR 1963 Andh Pra 337 did not make reference to any of these Calcutta and Madras decisions and does not lay down good law.

I am clearly of opinion that a barred debt is a valid consideration for a promise to pay under Section 25(3) even if the promisor did not know it to be barred on the date of the promise. The first contention of Mr. Rath is accordingly rejected.

10. The next contention of Mr. Rath is that Ext. 3 is merely a proposal given by late Kasinath Das, and there is no material to show that the plaintiff accepted the proposal. There is therefore no promise within the meaning of Section 2(b). Reliance is placed on AIR 1952 Cal 443, Sriram Arjundas v. Governor General in Council wherein his Lordship observed thus:—

"It seems to me that Section 25 requires that before the writing is made and signed there must be an agreement by the acceptance of a proposal and that agreement is to be recorded in writing and signed in accordance with the requirements of the section"

Mr Rath contends that there are no materials on record to show that Ext 3 was accepted by the plaintiff before it was put into writing. The law laid down in the Calcutta case cannot be construed to mean that acceptance cannot be inferred from the facts and circumstances of a case. Section 2(b) of the Contract Act runs thus —

"2 In this Act the following words and expressions are used in the following senses unless a contrary intention appears from the context

(b) When the person to whom the proposal is made signifies his assent thereto, the proposal is said to be accepted. A proposal, when accepted becomes a promise"

In this case the evidence of P W 1 is that the letter was signed by Kasinath Das after going through the contents and was given to the plaintiff. Obviously the plaintiff accepted it, kept it with him and has used it. The circumstances are clear that the plaintiff accepted the proposal made by late Kasinath Das, as a result of which the promise given in Ext 3 came into existence. That the proposal was accepted ultimately culminating in the promise embodied in Ext 3 can be reasonably inferred from the facts and circumstances of this case. The second contention has accordingly no force.

11. In the result, the plaintiff's suit must succeed. The judgments of the courts below are set aside and the Civil Revision is allowed. In the circumstances, parties to bear their own costs throughout.

connection that in a large number of cases industrial disputes are raised by or on behalf of the entire body of workmen working in a particular industry, which industry by and large compared to the Shops and Establishments' employers or employees governed by the Bihar Shops and Establishments Act is much bigger and substantial. In Shops and Establishments of the kind which are governed by the Act, the employer and the employee daily work in close contact and company. Both must work for the harmonious running of the establishment in mutual trust and confidence. It will be almost impossible for them to work if one has lost confidence of the other. The Supreme Court has in the case of Punjab National Bank, AIR 1960 SC 160 quoted with approval the principle laid down by the Full Bench of the Labour Appellate Tribunal in Buckingham & Carnatic Mills Ltd. v. Their Workmen, (1951) 2 Lab LJ 314 (LATI-Cal) (FB) in paragraph 36 of the judgment of the Supreme Court. The Full Bench has said:

"..... in so ordering the tribunal is expected to be inspired by a sense of fair-play towards the employee on the one hand and considerations of discipline in the concern on the other. The past record of the employee, the nature of his alleged present lapse and the ground on which the order of the management is set aside are also relevant factors for consideration."

The principle to be applied for ordering reinstatement under Section 26(5) of the Act can never be more lenient, if not stricter, than the one initiated by the Full Bench of the Labour Appellate Tribunal. Even on applying all those principles which the Labour Court in this particular case has failed to notice or apply, it would be manifest that Barman is not an employee, in whose case, for the various reasons already stated by me in my judgment above, an order of reinstatement could be or should have been made. Since the Labour Court has completely failed to direct itself in this regard, it must be held that the order giving the relief of reinstatement suffers from an infirmity of the kind which obviously can be called an error of jurisdiction warranting interference by this Court in exercise of its revisional power or power of superintendence.

26. In C. W. J. C. 509 of 1967, Mr. Ghose contended that once an order of reinstatement is made the Labour Court has no power to give by way of compensation only six months' pay and not the entire wages for the idle period. In the view I have taken on the question of reinstatement, the point becomes academic and does not arise. I, therefore, express no opinion on it.

27. In the result, Civil Revision 371 of 1965 fails and is dismissed and Civil Revision 320 of 1967 is partly allowed. The order of the Labour Court is modified, in that the relief of reinstatement given to the employee is set aside; it is held that his services will be deemed to have been dispensed with not from 8-9-1964 but from 14-9-1964, on and from which date, in view of the finding of the Labour Court that the services were dispensed with without reasonable cause, the employee will get by way of compensation six months' pay at the undisputed rate of Rs. 189 per month which he was drawing at that time. The order of the Court below granting Rs. 200 by way of cost to the employee is also maintained. C. W. J. C. 509 of 1967, in view of the order of modification passed in Civil Revision 320 of 1967, fails and is dismissed. I shall make no order as to costs in any of the three applications in this Court.

M/s. Luxmi Narayan Arjundas and others, Appellants v. State Bank of India, Respondent.

A. F. O. D. No. 324 of 1963 dated 5-11-1968, from decision of 3rd Addl. Sub. J. Purnea dated 7-2-1963.

(A) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 18, 21, 115 — Admission in the pleading of a previous suit — Admission binds the party making it in a subsequent suit — Admission can be used against him in the subsequent suit — Admission by agent without instigation of or without benefit to principal is not binding on principal. AIR 1967 SC 341, Foll. (Para 20)

(B) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35(2) — Commissioner dying after filing his report — His report is admissible in evidence under the provision. (Para 22)

(C) Contract Act (1872), Ss. 176, 211, 214 and 215 — Right of pawnee to sell the goods pledged — Nature of right — Pawnee's duty when the purchaser raises a dispute regarding quality of goods — First sale being good and not annulled, the pawnee cannot resell under S. 176.

Although by virtue of the special property which passes to the pawnee, he gets a right to sell the thing pledged, as expressly engrafted in Section 176 of the Contract Act, he still does so not as a full owner of the thing, but by virtue of an implied authority from the pawnor to do so. The sale must be held for the benefit of both the parties. The sale proceeds are the property of the pawner. The pawnee has a right to appropriate the sale proceeds or any portion thereof for satisfaction of his dues from the pawner. The surplus has got to be accounted for and refunded to the pawner. At no point of time the entire property in the goods in the sense of ownership passes from the pawner to the pawnee. Before the sale, the property is of the pawner in the custody of the pawnee, and after the sale, if it is a completed sale, in the sense of the passing of the property, it is of the purchaser. In a case where there had been a completed sale and the property in the goods had passed, the purchaser raises a dispute regarding the quality of the goods then, the pawnee cannot proceed in the matter without referring to the pawner. He must inform the pawner, treating himself as his agent, and cannot proceed in the matter without instructions of the principal, namely, the pawner. In such a situation, the provisions contained in Sections 211, 214 and 215 of the Contract Act will be attracted and it becomes the duty of the pawnee to use all reasonable diligence in communicating to the pawner seeking his instructions.

In a case, a bank who held some jute bales under pledge for moneys due to it from their owner, sold them by public auction and realised the price. Later on the purchaser refused to take some of the bales alleging that they contained gudri which the purchaser said was non-jute substance. The purchaser sued the bank for refund of the part of the sale consideration. The bank not only contested the matter all by itself without reference whatsoever to the pawner but also entered into a compromise with the purchaser by which it had agreed to and in fact refunded the amount claimed by the purchaser. The bank later on resold the remaining bales at a lower rate and sued the pawner for reimbursement. The evidence also disclosed that the bank had not conducted the matter with due diligence.

Held, that, under the circumstances the bank was not entitled to get reimbursement from the pawner whom it had not consulted in the matter, and itself having been negligent.

(Paras 28, 30 & 32)

Held further, that the first sale being good and not having been set aside the bank had no right to resell the goods under Section 176 of the Contract Act.

J C. Sinha, H L Agarwal, Girijapati
Sanyal and Kedar Nath Tulsyan for Appellants, Syed Akbar Hussain and P. C. Mukharji, for Respondent.

UNTWALIA, J.:— This is an appeal by the defendants from the judgment and decree of the Court of the 3rd Additional Subordinate Judge at Purnea in Title Mortgage Suit 29 of 1957, whereby the suit of the plaintiff respondent for realisation of Rs 65,555/3/9 has been decreed in full, and a preliminary mortgage decree has been passed.

2 The defendants were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family, of which the karta was Luxmi Narayan Changotia (defendant 2). The managing members of the business were also Ram Chandra Changotia (defendant 5) and Sheodayal Changotia (defendant 14). Defendant 2 died during the pendency of the appeal here, and his heirs have been substituted. They all carried on their business under the name and style of M/s Luxmi Narayan Arjundas (defendant 1) in village Banmankhi in the district of Purnea. They opened a cash credit account in the year 1948 with the Imperial Bank of India, which undertaking has been taken by the State Bank of India under the State Bank of India Act, 1955 (Act 23 of 1955) with all its assets, liabilities, etc. As the relevant transactions and facts took place and occurred when the bank was known as the Imperial Bank of India, for the sake of brevity, hereinafter in this judgment, the reference to the plaintiff will be by the word 'Bank' only, which term, unless otherwise indicated in the context, will ordinarily and generally mean Imperial Bank and may mean the State Bank, as the suit has been instituted by the latter Bank. Since the argument in the appeal has been confined to two points only to be stated hereafter, I shall state the relevant facts of this case only so far as they are necessary for the decision of the two points aforesaid.

3. After the opening of the cash credit account, there were several transactions between the defendants and the Bank in pursuance of eight written agreements executed by and on behalf of the defendants from the year 1948 to January, 1952, as detailed in paragraph 4 of the plaint. The Bank advanced money to the defendants against pledge of jute which was stored in the godown of the defendants situated near their residential house. There was a fall in the jute market in the year 1952 and the value of the pledged security became considerably low. Considerable amount was outstanding due from the defendants to the Bank, and when called upon by the Bank to cover the margin of the fall, the defendants failed to do so. They failed either to pay up the dues of the Bank or to cover the short fall in the value of the security. Hence, according to the case of the Bank, on or about the 14th January, 1953, the defendants created an equitable mortgage by delivering to the Bank in the town of Calcutta the documents of title of their immovable properties comprising their gaddi, residential houses and godown in Banmankhi Bazar and cultivable lands in Banmankhi and Rupouli which are fully described at the foot of the plaint.

It may be made clear here that there are five lots of the property described at the foot of the plaint, out of which lots 1 and 2 are situated in village Banamankhi, lot 3 is described as situated in village Rashar and the properties described in lots 4 and 5 are situated in village Rupouli. It seems that village Rashar is either a suburb of Banmankhi Bazar or very near it, and that is the reason why all throughout properties of lots 1 to 3 have been described as Banmankhi properties and will be described as such hereinafter in my judgment, and the properties of lots 4 and 5 will be called Rupouli properties.

4. The properties given in equitable mortgage were made further security for the Bank's dues against the defendants for advancements to be made. The defendants, however, could not redeem the mortgage and pay the Bank's dues in spite of several notices. Finally, in the last quarter of the year 1953 a sum of Rs. 1,48,399/9/6 remained due to the Bank from the defendants. After requisite notices and information to the defendants, the pledged jute, the weight of which was 6479 maunds as per Bank's records, was sold by public auction on 21-1-1954 to the highest bidder, Messrs. Rai Bahadur Hurdutrai Motilal Jute Mills Ltd. (for the sake of brevity hereinafter to be referred to as R. B. H. M. Jute Mills) at Rs. 17/10/- per maund. The said Mills agreed to take delivery on full payment after actual weighment of the goods.

5. The plaintiffs' case further is that the entire stock of pledged jute was in packed bales, some in 3½ maunds and some in 1½ maunds per bale. R. B. H. M. Jute Mills after their purchase paid to the Bank Rs. 1,14,192/6/- subject to adjustment by actual weighment. They were to start taking delivery of the goods from 24-1-54. A portion of the goods was delivered to the purchaser after actual weighment after keeping its record. 448 bales of jute weighing 1506 maunds 28 seers were taken delivery of by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills but they refused to take further delivery on the ground that many of the bales contained non-jute, that is, worthless materials described by them as gudri.

So the purchaser wanted to pick out good bales for delivery, but the Bank refused to allow the purchaser to pick and choose, as the entire stock was sold and purchased by the purchaser irrespective of quality as also because, as the case of the plaintiff in paragraph 14 of the plaint is; the Bank officers were under the impression that the bales contained jute and not worthless materials which were not jute, as stated by the purchaser. R. B. H. M. Jute Mills therefore filed Money Suit 75 of 1954 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Purnea, for refund of the part of the purchase money and also for damages for failure of the Bank to deliver the balance of the goods according to the contract. The total claim in the suit was to the tune of Rs. 1,00,106/10/6.

6. The plaintiffs' case further is that the Bank which was defendant in Money Suit 75 of 1954 applied to the Court for the sale of the balance of the stock. The prayer was allowed and the remaining goods were sold through Sri Ajab Lal Mandal, pleader commissioner, on 21-12-1954 to the highest bidder by public auction at Rs. 18/8/- per maund. This purchaser deposited Rs. 75,267/11/3 with the plaintiff Bank. The pleader commissioner weighed each bale and kept proper records and submitted a report to the Court. The plaintiffs' case further is that the pleader commissioner's report would show that there were altogether 1595 bales, out of which 1368 bales were normal and contained jute. They weighed 3821 maunds 4 seers and the remaining 227 bales contained gudri and weighed 247 maunds 17 seers. The pleader commissioner had opened one such bale, and it was found that it weighed 1 maund 11 seers, out of which the jute contents were 12 seers only and the rest 39 seers were gudri.

The case of the Bank is that 227 bales were tied, bound and packed and made in such a way that they looked like normal bales, and it was impossible to know that they contained gudri. The Bank had accepted them in good faith as good bales containing jute upon representation by the defendants that the bales did contain jute. The fact that a large quantity of gudri was packed in 227 bales was an act of fraud on the part of the defendants practised by them upon the Bank which was detected at the time when the purchasers of the first sale, R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, were taking delivery. The main cause of the filing of the suit by the said Mills against the Bank was the fraud practised by the defendants, as a result of which the Bank had to spend and incur costs and expenses to the tune of Rs. 3,948/9/- in the said suit. The Bank is entitled to be indemnified against the said loss. In the 19th paragraph of the plaint the case made out is that the entire stock of the jute weighing 6479 maunds was sold on 24-1-1954, but owing to the fraud practised by the defendant, the purchasers refused to take delivery, instituted the money suit, and so the remaining stock left after the part delivery to the first purchaser remained lying in the godowns at Banmankhi which had earthen floor and tatti wall for full one year and the entire stock got deteriorated and became short in weight thereby by 903 maunds 31 seers. The Bank states that the loss on account of the shortage was also to fall on the shoulders of the defendants. As per accounts given in Schedule A appended to the plaint, the total claim of the plaintiff of the amount of Rs 65,555/3/9 consists of the principal Rs 46,516/4/8, insurance charges Rs 4515/10/-, interest Rs. 10,574/12/- and cost of the money suit Rs 3,948/9/-.

7. Several pleas were taken up in the written statement to defeat the entire suit of the plaintiff Bank. Both the sales, one held in January, 1954 and the other in December, 1954 were attacked on several grounds. The transaction of equitable mortgage was denied. It was asserted that the title deeds were not deposited by defendant 2 at the Calcutta head office of the Bank on 14-1-1953 or on any other date. As a matter of fact, the Bank's officers took away the sale-deeds from the custody of the defendants on one pretext or the other. The suit was barred by limitation. The allegations of the plaintiff that certain number of bales of jute contained gudri, that fraud was practised by the defendants, that the filing of the money suit was a result of the alleged fraud were all denied.

It was asserted that the Bank had taken entirely a different stand in its written-statement filed in the money suit and it cannot be allowed to change its stand in this suit. The defendants asserted further that they had no knowledge of the suit and they were not bound by the sale held during its pendency. R. B. H. M. Jute Mills wrongly refused to take delivery of the entire stock of jute, and in collusion with the plaintiff Bank and for their mutual benefit they made up their matters causing loss to the defendants. Thus, the defendants' liability to the various amounts claimed by the Bank in the suit was refuted.

8. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has held that the auction-sales held on 21-1-1954 and 21-12-1954 are valid and binding on the defendants; they had knowledge of both the sales; they are liable to pay to the Bank not only the amounts of principal and interest claimed by the plaintiff but also the amounts on account of the shortage of the goods, insurance charges and costs of the money suit. He has further held that equitable mortgage was created on 14-1-1953 by delivery of all the title-deeds relating both to Banmankhi and Rupouli properties by defendant 2 at the Bank's Calcutta head office. Hence, the suit is not barred by limitation. In that view of the matter, the suit has been decreed for the full amount with interest pendente lite and future at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The defendants have come up in appeal.

9. Mr. J. C. Sinha, learned counsel for the defendants, to put broadly, attacked the judgment and decree of the Court below on two grounds only, (1) that no equitable mortgage was created in respect of any property, and that being so, the suit filed on 20-9-1957 on the basis of the transaction which admittedly had closed in the year 1953 must be held to be barred by limitation under Article 57 of the Limitation Act, 1908, and (2) that in any view of the matter, the defendants are not liable to reimburse the Bank on account of any loss said to have been sustained by it for the failure of R. B. H. M. Jute Mills to take delivery of the entire stock of jute purchased by them on 21-1-54, either on account of the shortage in weight, insurance charges or costs of the suit nor are the defendants liable to pay any interest on the excess of the amount said to have remained due after the first sale as a result of the deficit caused by the second sale.

10. At the outset, I may make it clear that learned counsel for the appellants conceded, and in my opinion rightly, that if an equitable mortgage in respect of the properties or any portion of them is held to have been created on 14-1-1953, the suit will not be barred by limitation. The first question, therefore, which falls for our decision is whether an equitable mortgage was created on 14-1-1953 if so, in respect of what properties?

(In paragraphs 11 to 14 the judgment discusses the oral and documentary evidence in the case regarding the creation of an equitable mortgage in respect of all the 5 sets of properties and comes to the following conclusion. The judgment then proceeds)

I, therefore, hold that an equitable mortgage was in fact and validly in law created by and on behalf of the defendants on 14-1-1953 in so far as the Banmankhi properties described in lots 1 to 3 in Schedule B of the plaint are concerned. In view of my finding in regard to the Rupouli properties, it is manifest that the preliminary mortgage decree which is going to be upheld by me for a part of the amount will be operative on the Banmankhi properties only; that is to say, the Banmankhi properties will be liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree in accordance with law, and a personal decree will have to be passed if and when it is found that the sale proceeds from the Banmankhi properties are not sufficient to satisfy the entire decretal dues.

15. Coming to the second ground of attack on the judgment and decree of the Court below, I would like to state first that it is not necessary to refer to the various letters written or notices given by the Bank to the defendants in the year 1953 or in January, 1954, before exercising its right under Section 176 of the Contract Act to sell the pledged property, the sale of which took place on 21-1-54. Exhibit 24 is a copy of the relevant entries in the ledger relating to cash credit accounts of the defendants. This would show that after debiting of various sums on account of insurance charges and other expenses which were liable to be made by the pawner, and after debiting interest up to 21-10-1953, the balance shown due on October 22, 1953 is Rs. 1,48,339/9/6. Exhibit A(5) is a letter dated 21-11-1953 from the Agent of the Purnea branch of the Bank to the Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank in Calcutta. The contents of this letter show that various qualities of jute, including as the evidence shows, the highest quality known as Tossa and the lowest quality of cross bottom were pledged with the Bank. The total number of bales pledged was 2042, out of which 334 bales only were weighing one and half maunds and the rest were weighing 3 and half maunds each. Thus, the total bales of jute pledged weighed 6479 maunds, on checking and verification of which a shortage in weight to the extent of 180 maunds was detected. But it appears from the evidence of P. W. 9, an Assistant of the Bank, as also from the evidence of P. W. 16, A. N. Gangoli, the Agent of the Bank, that this shortage was made good. This will also find support from the pleader commissioner's report (Ext. 6), reference to which will be made later on.

16. Exhibit I dated 12-1-1954 is a public notice notifying that baled jute weighing 6479 maunds will be sold by auction at the premises of Luxmi Narayan Arjundas, Banmankhi, at 12 noon on 21-1-1954. It was further notified that the stocks were held at the above place and could be inspected at any time before the auction. Exhibit 19 is the proceeding at the auction sale held on 21-1-1954. This, in short, contains the broad terms which were agreed upon between the Bank and R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, the purchaser at the said auction. It clearly recites that 2042 bales (1708 bales of 3 and half maunds each and 334 bales of 1 and half maunds each, total being 6479 maunds) pledged by Luxmi Narayan Arjundas, were sold to the highest bidder, R. B. H. M. Jute Mills at the highest bid rate of Rs. 17/10/- per maund. It was further stated that the weight given was as per the Bank's books, and the final amount of money will be calculated and adjusted after the actual weighment of the stock. The purchaser agreed and deposited a sum of Rs. 25,000 by cheque on the Central Bank of India

Ltd., Katihar and undertook to pay the difference on 27-1-1954. It may be stated here that no other term in regard to the quality of the goods in express language was inserted in Ext. 19, which seems to have been signed also by the purchaser's representative at the auction.

17. Before I refer to Ext. 15, the plaint filed on 25-6-1954 by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills against the Bank in Money Suit 75 of 1954 I would refer in this connection to the evidence of some of the plaintiff's witnesses as to what happened at the time of delivery of the jute bales to R. B. H. M. Jute Mills in or about the last week of January, 1954. P. W. 10, S. C. Dutta, was a godown-keeper at Banmankhi under the employment of the Bank at the relevant time. He says that R. B. H. M. Jute Mills took delivery of the other bales saying that the jute was of bad quality as it contained gudri. They wanted to pick and choose among the bales in the godown; the Bank refused them to pick and choose. He further stated even in examination-in-chief that the jute pledged by the parties is not taken by the Bank on quality basis; they take it as jute only. In cross-examination, when he was asked as to whether he knew as to what was gudri, he answered the gudri means non-jute consisting of sticks, and then said jute sticks. P. W. 15, C. K. Puri, is a person who was giving delivery to R. B. H. M. Jute Mills on behalf of the Bank. He speaks about the dispute which cropped up after part-delivery, as the purchaser contended that it was not jute but was gudri. In cross-examination, P. W. 15 stated that although he was not an expert, he did know that Tossa is a good quality and cross bottom is an inferior quality of jute. He further stated that the auction purchaser wanted to pick and choose from the various qualities of jute, to which he did not agree.

18. Admittedly, as is clear from the evidence also, R. B. H. M. Jute Mills had paid the entire price of the jute amounting to Rs. 1,14,192/6/- within a few days of the auction sale. It is also undisputed that they had taken delivery of jute weighing 1506 maunds and odd, which was worth Rs. 26,555/9/6. The balance which remained with Bank out of the price paid was Rs. 87,636/12/6 on account of refusal of the representatives of R. B. H. M. Jute Mills to take delivery after they had taken delivery of a part of the goods. In Ext. 15, the plaint in Money Suit 75 of 1954, R. B. H. M. Jute Mills made out a case that there were transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant Bank from a long time and it was known to the defendants that the plaintiff required jute which was of merchantable quality and fit for manufacturing jute products. Hence, they stated that in the circumstances there was an implied condition and warranty that the jute should be in terms of the details given out by the Bank's Agent at the time of auction.

Their further case was that after delivery of 1506 maunds of jute, the goods which were offered for delivery were only gudri which did not come within the category of jute. In spite of repeated demands, the Bank which was defendant No 1 or its Agent, A. N. Gangoli (who is P W 16 in the case and defendant 2 in the money suit) did not deliver the balance of the goods. Hence, they claimed a decree for refund of the sum of Rs 87,636/12/6 as also for decree for damages and interest, the total claim being to the tune of Rs 1,00,106/10/6. In the said money suit, two written statements were filed on identical lines—one filed on 16-9-1954 Ext. H (1) was on behalf of the Bank and the other, Ext. H was filed on 24-9-1954 on behalf of defendant 2. I shall here refer to the written statement filed on behalf of the Bank which also was verified by A. N. Gangoli, Agent of the Bank, who is P W 16 in the suit and was defendant 2 in the money suit. In this written statement, he stated that, even in December, 1953 R. B. H. M. Jute Mills had made an offer to purchase the entire stock at a flat rate of Rs. 17/8/- per maund and their representative Gurdhari Mull had inspected the stock of jute at Banmankhi on 19-12-1953. It was further stated in the sixth paragraph.

"The allegation that only Gudris which did not come within the category of jute were sought to be delivered to the plaintiffs' agent is deliberately false. The plaintiffs had purchased the entire stock of the two godowns in one lot after thorough inspection of the same consisting of 6479 maunds as per Bank's Book. The plaintiffs had made inspections of godowns twice, once in December 1953 and again on the date of sale and having purchased with their eyes open cannot no make any objection regarding the quality of jute".

The case of R. B. H. M. Jute Mills as made up in the plaint that there was an implied condition or warranty was denied in the written statement filed on behalf of the Bank.

19. P W 16 stated in his evidence (vide page 102 of the paper-book) that the written statement filed by him, in Money Suit 75 of 1954 contained a true statement of his and the Bank's written statement filed in that money suit also contained true statement and that written statement was also signed by him.

20 The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has taken the view that an admission in the pleading of a previous suit is not binding on the party making that admission or (nor?) is to be used against it in a subsequent suit. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Basant Singh v Janki Singh, AIR 1967 SC 341, the opinion of the Court below is erroneous Gangoli (P. W. 16), instead of explaining the admission in the previous written statement admitted it to be correct. At this stage, I may only point out that the case made out by the Bank in the written statement, Ext H (1), is inconsistent with the case made out in the plaint of the present suit. It is not the case of the Bank that the previous written statement was filed at the instigation or persuasion of the defendants of this suit and for their benefit. In that situation, it is difficult to follow the contradictory case made out by the Bank in the 17th paragraph of the plaint of this suit that the non-delivered bales of jute contained gudri and the fraud practised by the defendant firm on the Bank was detected at the time when the purchaser of the first sale R B H M Jute Mills, was taking delivery. If that was so, how is it that such a case was not made out in Money Suit 75 of 1954? Apart from the other reasons which I shall be giving hereinafter in my judgment, I have no difficulty in rejecting the case of fraud set up in the plaint of the present suit on this ground alone.

21. The entire stock of jute lying in the godown of the defendants which was kept in charge of the Bank had been sold to R. B. H. M. Jute Mills on 21-1-1954. They had paid the full price also. In such a situation, there is no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the property in the goods under the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, had passed to the purchaser viz., R. B. H. M. Jute Mills. This finds further support from the pleadings in Money Suit 75 of 1954, as in the plaint there was no case made out by the purchaser that the property had not passed and from the written statement it would appear, according to the case of the Bank that property had passed. Ext 7 is the petition filed by the Bank on 5-11-1954 in Money Suit 75 of 1954, praying to the Court for arranging for the sale of the balance of the goods by appointment of a pleader commissioner. In this petition it was stated by the Bank.

"That the balance of the undelivered stock of jute lying in this defendant's godowns at Banmankhi is the property of the plaintiff company by virtue of purchase in public auction on 21-1-1954 and is lying at the godown at the risk and responsibility of the buyer."

To the same effect is the evidence of Gangoli (P W 16) when he said in cross-examination that the Bank had been holding the stock as a custodian on behalf of the purchasers who refused to take delivery of the goods from 21-1-54 to the end of December, 1954.

22. In pursuance of the order of the Court dated 4-12-1954 the Commissioner proceeded to sell the remaining quantity of jute during the pendency of the money suit. By the said order which is Ext. 33, the commissioner was also directed to ascertain if any gudri, which was called non-jute by the plaintiff, was mixed up with the stock of jute in the godown of the defendant. If so, he was directed to ascertain further the quantity of such gudri. Sri Ajab Lal Mandal was dead, as deposed to by certain witnesses, when the trial of this suit commenced in the Court below. His report, however, was admitted in evidence and marked Ext. 6. This is dated 3-2-1955. The statements in the report obviously are admissible in evidence under Section 32(2) of the Evidence Act.

(In the rest of paragraph 22 the judgment deals with the report of the Commissioner and oral evidence in the case regarding the content of Gudri in the jute bales and comes to the conclusion that gudri is not foreign matter unconnected with jute, that gudri is bound to be present especially in the cross bottom quality jute and that the auction-purchasers were not justified in refusing delivery of about 1600 bales of jute on the ground that all of them contained gudri. The judgment then proceeds:)

23. I think, it is neither necessary nor possible or permissible to give a decision upon the merits of the dispute between R. B. H. M. Jute Mills and the Bank in Money Suit 75 of 1954. On the pleadings of the parties and the facts as they emerge from the evidence in this suit, it is definitely clear that the Bank had a very good case for trial by way of defence against R. B. H. M. Jute Mills. At no point of time they gave any information to the defendants about the refusal of the delivery of the jute by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills or institution of their suit. At no point of time they sought any instruction from the defendants what the Bank was to do in the case of the dispute raised by the purchaser of the goods at the auction held on 21-1-1954. They did not ask the defendants as to what steps were to be taken in respect of the undelivered quantity of jute. All what was done in the money suit on behalf of the Bank was on its own. It may well be, as found by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, that the defendants had knowledge of the facts. In all probability, they must have knowledge. When the delivery was not accepted by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, the defendants must have known about the dispute raised by them. Nonetheless, the fact to be emphasised is that at no point of time the Bank thought it obligatory or proper to consult the defendants in regard to the dispute raised by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills.

The funniest thing which happened thereafter is that the Bank entered into a compromise with R. B. H. M. Jute Mills and filed a compromise petition on 10-2-1956 in Money Suit 75 of 1954. This is Ext. 7. In this compromise petition, it is stated that the defendants had deposited Rs. 87,636/12/6 in cash on 28-9-55 in favour of the plaintiff which had been withdrawn by the plaintiff. As against the balance of the amount paid by them, jute worth Rs. 26,555/9/6 had been delivered. Then, it is said in the third paragraph:

"That in order to restore good feelings between the parties the plaintiff will not press his further claim against the defendant and as such nothing remains due to the plaintiff from defendant in respect of the claim of this suit and neither party has got any claim against the other nor will lay any claim against the other in respect of the subject-matter of the suit or relating to the transaction of jute in question."

It is remarkable that without reference to the defendants, on whom, the Bank thought, will fall the ultimate loss brought about as a result of the money suit, the Bank entered into this compromise. Not only that, actually the money was refunded about five months earlier than the filing of the compromise petition. The statement contained in paragraph 3 of the compromise petition, which I have extracted above, read in the light of the case of R. B. H. M. Jute Mills in their plaint that they had transactions with the Bank since long would clearly go to show that the compromise was effected to restore good feeling between the parties to the money suit and not for the benefit of or in the interest of the defendants who obviously were not parties to the money suit.

(In paragraphs 24 and 25 the judgment works out the details of amounts which the plaintiff can claim by way of deficit, insurance charges and interest. The judgment then proceeds:)

26. The question now arises as to whether the defendants are liable to reimburse and pay to the Bank the sums of Rs. 12,369/1/3. Rs. 4515/10/. Rs. 3948-9-0 and Rs. 1440.00 on account of the various items discussed above which are, as a result of the dispute raised by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills after their purchase at the auction in January, 1954. The answer to this question created some difficulty during the course of the argument at the bar. No direct case on the point of any Court, either in India or in England, could be cited before us, nor could we find any. The point fell for our decision on appreciation of the well-established principles which should govern the rights and liabilities of pawner and pawnee.

"If the pawnor makes default in payment of the debt, or performance, at the stipulated time of the promise, in respect of which the goods were pledged, the pawnee may bring a suit against the pawnor upon the debt or promise, and retain the goods pledged as a collateral security, or he may sell the thing pledged, on giving the pawnor reasonable notice of the sale

If the proceeds of such sale are less than the amount due in respect of the debt or promise, the pawnor is still liable to pay the balance. If the proceeds of the sale are greater than the amount so due, the pawnee shall pay over the surplus to the pawnor."

In Volume II of Chitty on Contracts, 22nd Edition, at page 107 in paragraph 218, 'pledge' is defined thus

"A pledge or pawn is 'a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor to be kept by him till the debt be discharged', the bailment is intended to be a security for some debt or engagement. The general property in the goods pledged remains in the pledgor, but a special property in them passes to the pledgee in order that he may be able to sell the goods if his right to sell arises. This 'special property' is strictly only a right to possession of the goods, together with a power of sale upon default....."

At page 111 in paragraph 225 in the same volume, it is stated

"If the pledgor makes default in payment at the stipulated time, the pledgee may sell the pledge, even although there is no express agreement to that effect, or he may sue the pledgor for his debt, retaining the pledge as a security.... He sells by virtue of an implied authority from the pledgor and for the benefit of both parties, hence, he must, after deducting his debt, account to the pledgor for any surplus of the proceeds of the sale...."

To the same effect is the law enumerated in Volume 29 of Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, at pages 218 and 221 in Articles 415 and 421. I would only quote a few words from the latter passage which are to the effect—

"If the pawnee sells he does so by virtue and to the extent of the pawner's ownership, and not with a new title of his own. The right of sale is exercisable by virtue of an implied authority from the pawner and for the benefit of both parties...."

It would thus be seen that although by virtue of the special property which passes to the pawnee he gets a right to sell the thing pledged, as expressly engrafted in Section 176 of the Contract

Act, he still does so not as a full owner of the thing, but by virtue of an implied authority from the pawner to do so. The sale must be held for the benefit of both the parties. The sale proceeds are the property of the pawner. The pawnee has a right to appropriate the sale proceeds or any portion thereof for satisfaction of his dues from the pawner. The surplus has got to be accounted for and refunded to the pawner. In such a situation, what is the legal position after the pawnee has exercised the right of selling the goods under Section 176 of the Contract Act when a dispute is raised by the purchaser of the goods? Can it be said that the pawnee then becomes entitled to deal with the dispute and bring it to an end, as he likes or as he thinks best, without referring the matter to the pawner? It is to be remembered that at no point of time the entire property in the goods in the sense of ownership passes from the pawner to the pawnee. Before the sale, the property is of the pawner in the custody of the pawnee, and after the sale, if it is a completed sale, in the sense of the passing of the property it is of the purchaser. The right to sell may and must include a right to enter into an agreement to sell which will be a completed sale on the passing of the property to the purchaser. In that situation, let us take an instance to explain the view point. If the pawnee agrees to sell the goods to a person who agrees to purchase them, but the property does not pass, the ownership in the goods remains with the pawner. If the goods are destroyed by fire or otherwise for no fault of the pawner, the pawnee or the person who has agreed to purchase, it is manifest, the loss will fall on the head of the pawner. If, however, the goods are so destroyed after the property in them had passed to the person who had agreed to purchase them, it goes without saying on the well-established principles of law, that the loss will have to be borne by the purchaser. In that case, the pawner will not be liable for the loss. If in such a situation a dispute is raised by the purchaser asserting that since the property in the goods had not passed the loss was not his and he must get back the price which he had paid for the goods from the pawnee, while, on the other hand, the pawnee asserts that the property had passed and, therefore, he was not liable to refund the price, can it be said that in such a dispute the pawnee can proceed as he likes without any reference to the pawner? The answer, to my mind, obviously must be against the pawnee. The pawnee has no special property or right left, after he has exercised his right of sale under Section 176 of the Contract Act. Incidental to the sale, he may have the right of effecting delivery or the like. But on the raising of the dispute by the purchaser, he cannot proceed in the matter without referring to the pawner. He must inform the pawner, treating himself as his agent, that such and such disputes have been raised by the purchaser. In my opinion, on the raising of such a dispute, the pawnee becomes a mere agent of the pawner and cannot proceed in the matter without instructions of the principal, namely, the pawner.

28. That being so, the provisions of law contained in Sections 211, 214 and 215 of the Contract Act are attracted. It was the Bank's duty to deal with the dispute raised by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills and conduct the money suit according to the directions given by the pawners, the defendants of this suit. A difficulty and of a great magnitude was created by the purchaser, R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, by stating that they were not bound to take delivery of the balance of the goods. In terms of Section 214, therefore, it was the duty of the Bank to use all reasonable diligence in communicating to the defendants and in seeking their instructions. The Bank did nothing of the kind. It may well be that on seeking such instructions, if the money suit would have been decided against the Bank, the loss resulting from the decision in the suit would have fallen on the defendants of this suit. They would have been bound to reimburse the bank for all kinds of losses resulting from the decision in the suit.

29. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, I am constrained to hold that the Bank dealt on its own with the dispute which was raised by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, without obtaining the consent of the defendants and acquainting them with all material circumstances which came to its knowledge on the subject. In such a situation, the defendants are justified in contending that the dealings of the Bank had been disadvantageous to them and they are entitled to repudiate them and refuse to reimburse the Bank for the losses incurred by it as a result of such dealings, in accordance with Section 215 of the Contract Act.

30. Even assuming for argument's sake that seeking of such instructions was not essential or obligatory if the money suit would have proceeded to trial and disposal by a judgment of the court and that on the strength of that judgment with the aid of some more evidence the Bank would have been entitled to ask the defendants to reimburse it for the losses caused to the Bank as a result of the judgment, even though it had failed to seek instructions from the defendants, but I am definitely of the view that the Bank had no right to enter into a compromise with R. B. H. M. Jute Mills, treating the sale held on 21-1-1954, as annulled and repudiated, after the part delivery, and retain the balance of the price which undoubtedly in law was the property of the defendants, without referring the matter to them or without their consent. I find no principle or authority to support the contention put forward on behalf of the Bank by their learned counsel, Mr. Syed Akbar Hussain, that all that was done by the Bank in regard to the dispute raised by R. B. H. M. Jute Mills was incidental to the power of sale of the Bank under Section 176 of the Contract Act. It will be disastrous for the commercial world to accept this contention and hold it to be good. In the drastic example which I have given above, it will be noticed then that even in a dispute of the kind which crops up on the loss of the entire goods, the Bank will be at liberty to refund the entire price to the purchaser without referring the matter to the pawner or without his consent, even though the money obviously would be the money of the pawner and must go to satisfy the debts due to him from the Bank.

In my opinion, there is no reasonable or legal solution of the problem with which we are faced in this appeal on account of the dispute raised by the purchaser after the auction sale held in January 1954 which sale, as I have said above, has been held to be a good sale by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge and could not be otherwise attacked before us by the learned Advocate, other than the one which I have endeavoured to arrive at on the basis of certain principles of law.

31. I may also add that the Bank in its present plaint nowhere referred to the fact of entering into the compromise with R. B. H. M. Jute Mills in Money Suit 75 of 1954; nowhere it stated in the plaint as to under what circumstances and why it entered into a compromise with the plaintiff of that suit. The whole and sole basis in the plaint of this suit for throwing the burden on the shoulders of the defendants was that they had practised fraud on the Bank in that they had mixed gudri in a large number of jute bales. In the first instance, it is to be reiterated that this was not the case of the Bank in Money Suit 75 of 1954. Secondly, evidence is absolutely lacking on the point of fraud said to have been practised by the defendants. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge abruptly has arrived at the finding of fraud in paragraph 60 of his judgment, without referring to any relevant evidence, merely on the basis of the fact that, according to the pleader commissioner's report, some bales of jute contained gudri. No one has come forward on behalf of the Bank to say that the defendants at the time of pledging those bales had represented that the bales said to contain gudri contained jute Nobody has come forward to say that even in ordinary course of business some bales of jute cannot contain any quantity of gudri I have also referred to the fact that there is paucity of evidence in this case as to what was the gudri content in 227 bales which formed part of the undelivered goods If I may express the view, on the basis of the terms of sale held on 21-1-1954, the only right of the purchaser was to an adjustment of the total price on reweighment of the goods Even assuming that they were entitled to reject a portion of the goods which were found to be gudri and not pure jute, at best their right was not to take delivery of gudri and pay the price of the jute portion of the goods which was quite a considerable and major portion. I see no justification, nor could any be pointed out to us from the records of this case, which led the Bank to refund the entire sum of Rs 87,636/12/6 to the purchaser and thus bring about an annulment of the first sale So long as the first sale stood and was not annulled either by a judgment of the court or by consent of the parties, which must include the consent of the defendants of this suit, it was a good sale. There was no question of re-selling the goods by a second sale in exercise of the power under Section 176 of the Contract Act.

32. On a careful consideration of the matter, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that the defendants are not liable to reimburse or pay to the Bank such amounts as have been claimed, as a result of the dispute raised by R B H M Jute Mills The total of such amounts, as has already been discussed and mentioned is Rs 22,273/4/3 The Bank, in my opinion, is not entitled to get a decree against the defendants for this amount.

33. In the result, the appeal is allowed in part and the judgment and decree of the Court below are modified The plaintiff-respondent will have a decree against the defendants for a sum of Rs 43,281/97 P (Rs 65,555/3/9- Rs. 22,273/4/3) only as against the decree for Rs 65,555/3/9- passed by the court below The plaintiff will have also the proportionate costs in the court below on the said sum of Rs 43,281/97 P As the success is divided in this court, I shall make no order as to costs in appeal Interest pendente lite and future at the rate of 6 per cent, per annum will run on the amount of Rs 43,281/97 P from the date of the suit till realisation The preliminary mortgage decree in terms of the decree of the Court below will be passed and be operative in respect of the properties described in lots 1 2 and 3 of schedule B in the plaint. There will be no mortgage decree in respect of lots 4 and 5

UNTWALIA, J.:— In this writ application we are called upon to decide a very important question of law with reference to Article 30 of the Constitution of India. It is, therefore, necessary to state briefly in the beginning as to who are the parties to the application and what led to its filing.

2. The first petitioner is Rt. Rev. Bishop S. K. Patro, Chairman of the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association and ex-officio President of the Managing Committee of the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School, Bhagalpur, hereinafter shortly called C. M. S. School or the School. The second petitioner Ven. Archdeacon E. A. B. Hughes and the third petitioner, Rev. J. E. Ghosh are respectively Treasurer and Secretary of the Trust Association aforesaid. The fourth petitioner is Miss V. M. Peacock, Secretary of the Managing Committee of the C. M. S. School. The impugned orders are (i) order of the Secretary to the Government of Bihar, Education Department, dated 22-5-1967, a copy of which is annexure 18 to the writ application, and (ii) order of the Regional Deputy Director of Education, Bhagalpur, dated 22-6-1967, a copy of which is annexure 19 and a translation of which in English is annexure 19-A.

I propose to state some facts first from the order (Annexure 18) before I refer to the facts stated in the petition. Before coming into force of the Bihar High Schools (Control and Regulation of Administration) Act, 1960 (Bihar Act XIII of 1960) an old Managing Committee was in charge of the affairs of the School, and was running its administration from day to day. In the Managing Committee were Rev. Bishop Philip Parmer as the President of the Committee, Rev. R. W. I. Ghest as its Secretary, the Principal, a teacher's representative and five more persons, out of whom, four are respondents 6 to 9, who were added as intervenor respondents for the reasons to be stated hereinafter. The Director of Public Instruction who is also the President of the Board of Secondary Education, by his order dated 31st (sic) of April, 1962, nominated three persons for inclusion in the Managing Committee according to the rules which, he thought, governed the constitution of the Managing Committee of the School in question. After that, the Sub-divisional Education Officer, Bhagalpur, convened a meeting of the above nominees along with two nominees of the Mission, Principal and teachers' representative and got a President and Secretary elected, which election was approved by the Director of Public Instruction by his order dated 4-9-1963. It is said that the intervenor-respondents filed an appeal before the Secretary to the Government, Department of Education, and in this appeal, the Secretary took the view that the order of the Director of Public Instruction approving the election of the President and the Secretary of the School was not correct.

The School authorities also were aggrieved by that order as they claimed that this being a school established and administered by a minority within the meaning of Article 30 of the Constitution had a fundamental right to administer it in the way they thought fit and proper; the Government could not interfere. The Secretary, in his impugned order, did not decide the question as to whether the School had the protection under Article 30 of the Constitution, and hence, was not subject to Bihar Act XIII of 1960 in view of the provision contained in the 9th Section of the Act. He left it to the School authorities to get a declaration from the proper authorities as to the character of the school to attract protection under Article 30 of the Constitution. What he did by his impugned order was that he set aside the order of the President of the Board of Secondary Education, approving the appointment of the President and the Secretary of the School.

"In accordance with the Irregular procedure adopted by the SDEO for the constitution of the Committee on receipt of DPI's decision nominating three persons on the Managing Committee".

By the time he came to pass his order, there had come into force the Bihar High Schools (Constitution, Powers and Functions of the Managing Committee) Rules, 1964 hereinafter to be referred to as the 1964 Rules. The Regional Deputy Director of Education, Bhagalpur, Region, then wrote the letter dated 21st of June, 1967, a copy of which is annexure 19, to the Secretary of the C. M. S. School, drawing his attention to the order dated 22-5-1967 passed by the Secretary to the Government to take steps to constitute the Managing Committee in accordance with the aforesaid order. The petitioners feeling aggrieved by the direction of the Regional Deputy Director of Education and thinking that not only in view of Section 9 of Bihar Act XIII of 1960 but also because of Rule 41 of the 1964 Rules, which says—

"These rules shall not apply to the schools established and administered by the minorities whether based on religion or language", and claiming that their School is of the kind to which the provisions of Bihar Act XIII of 1960 and the 1964 Rules in the matter of administration of the School or constitution of the Managing Committee do not apply, moved this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution impugning in the writ application the State of Bihar as respondent No. 1, the Director of Public Instruction and President of the Board of Secondary Education as respondent No. 2, the Secretary to the Government of Bihar, Department of Education, as respondent No. 3, the Secretary, Board of Secondary Education, as respondent No. 4, and the Regional Deputy Director of Education, as respondent No. 5. The application was filed on 23-8-1967. It was admitted on 6-3-1968 and it was directed that the status quo should be preserved and the Managing Committee appointed in the year 1962 should continue to manage the C. M. S. School till the disposal of the writ application.

On the 25th of March, 1968 the four added respondents, namely, respondents 6 to 9 who were at one time, as stated above, the members of the Managing Committee of the C. M. S. School, filed an application for being added as party respondents. Their application was allowed by a Bench of this Court by order dated 1-4-1968. Thereafter they put in a long counter-affidavit on the 20th of August, 1968 along with many annexures to resist the writ application filed by the petitioners. An affidavit-in-reply and a supplementary affidavit-in-reply have been put in by the petitioners. It may be stated here that no counter-affidavit has been filed by or on behalf of the original five respondents, namely respondents 1 to 5. None appeared to show cause even at the time of the argument of the case on behalf of respondents 2 to 5. The learned Advocate-General, however, appeared for the State of Bihar, respondent No. 1. Petitioners' case was ably presented by Mr. S. N. Bhattacharyya, and cause was shown on behalf of respondents 6 to 9 by their learned Counsel, Mr. Shreenath Singh.

3. The question which has been canvassed before us and falls for our decision in this case is the following—

Whether the C. M. S. School is an educational institution which can be held to have been established and administered by a minority within the meaning of Article 30(1) of the Constitution?

In the main, this question will have two facets—(i) whether this is an educational institution which was established by a minority and (ii) whether it has been administered by the minority. Incidentally, a question will also arise and will be briefly referred to hereinafter as to whether the C. M. S. School is an educational institution of the kind which attracts protection under Article 30(1). We think it advisable to decide all the questions in this case.

4. Many points of law have been firmly settled by the Supreme Court as also by this Court in relation to educational institutions for which protection under Article 30(1) was claimed. I shall first refer to some of these decisions and the principles which have been enunciated therein, and then I shall show that the point of importance which falls for our decision in this case is still res integra and no authority of any court was cited to cover it.

5. In "In re The Kerala Education Bill, 1957," AIR 1958 SC 956, it was held—

(i) "It is obvious that a minority community can effectively conserve its language, script or culture by and through educational institutions and, therefore, the right to establish and maintain educational institutions of its choice is a necessary concomitant to the right to conserve its distinctive language, script or culture and that is what is conferred on all minorities by Article 30(1) which has hereinbefore been quoted in full.

(ii) that "Article 30(1) is wide enough to cover both pre-Constitution and post-Constitution institutions", and that the said Article "gives the minorities two rights, namely (a) to establish and (b) to administer educational institutions of their choice," and

(iii) that the "real import of Article 29(2) and Article 30(1) seems to us to be that they clearly contemplate a minority institution with a sprinkling of outsiders admitted into it. By admitting a non-member into it the minority institution does not shed its character and cease to be a minority institution. Indeed the object of conservation of the distinct language, script and culture of a minority may be better served by propagating the same amongst non-members of the particular minority community."

I shall refer to some other points from this decision later.

6. In Rev. Sidhrajibhai Sabbai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1963 SC 540, it was pointed out by Shah, J., delivering the judgment on behalf of the Court, with reference to the Kerala Education Bill case already referred to, that—

".....notwithstanding the absolute terms in which the fundamental freedom under Article 30(1) was guaranteed, it was open to the State by legislation or by executive direction to impose reasonable regulations," but—

"The right established by Article 30(1) is a fundamental right declared in terms absolute. Unlike the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by Article 19 it is not subject to reasonable restrictions. It is intended to be a real right for the protection of the minorities in the matter of setting up of educational institutions of their own choice. The right is intended to be effective and is not to be whittled down by so-called regulative measures conceived in the interest not of the minority educational institution, but of the public or the nation as a whole."

7. In a recent decision of the Supreme Court in S. Azeez Basha v. Union of India, AIR 1968 SC 662, it has been pointed out at p. 670 (column 1) that—

"The words 'establish and administer' in the Article must be read conjunctively and so read it gives the right to the minority to administer an educational institution provided it has been established by it....."

If the educational institution has not been established by a minority it cannot claim the right to administer under Art. 30(1)."

On a consideration of the Act which was passed by the Central Legislature in the year 1920, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the Aligarh University was not an educational institution which was established by the Muslim minority assuming that to be a minority within the meaning of Article 30. They further held that the institution, namely, the University after its establishment in the year 1920 was not being administered by the said minority, and, for both the reasons the claim of the petitioners in the Supreme Court for enforcement of fundamental right under Article 30(1) of the Constitution was negatived. In regard to the point of administration, a passage was quoted from the judgment of the Supreme Court in Durgah Committee, Ajmer v. Syed Hussain Ali, AIR 1961 SC 1402, which runs thus—

"If the right to administer the properties never vested in the denomination or had been validly surrendered by it or had otherwise been effectively and irretrievably lost to it, Article 26 cannot be successfully invoked."

Applying the parity of reasonings with reference to the word "administer" occurring in Article 30 Wanchoo, C. J., delivering the judgment on behalf of the Court, came to the conclusion that the Aligarh University was not administered by the minority. Their Lordships also interpreted the word 'established' in Article 30(1) to mean 'to bring into existence'—that is to say—"the right given by Article 30(1) to the minority is to bring into existence an educational institution, and if they do so, to administer it. "When a question was raised before their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Azeez Basha's case AIR 1968 SC 662 whether Article 26 would take in its sweep educational institutions on the ground that such institutions are for charitable purposes, they did not decide it observing, however, that there was much to be stated in favour of the contention that Article 26 will not apply to educational institution for there is a specific provision contained in Article 30(1) with respect thereto and therefore, institutions for charitable purposes in clause (a) of Article 26 refer to institutions other than educational ones I am referring to this aspect of the matter also as hereinafter I shall have the necessity of deciding whether an educational institution attracts the protection of Article 26(a) of the Constitution.

8 I may refer to only one decision of this Court although there are some others and it is the Full Bench decision in Dipendra Nath Sarkar v State of Bihar, AIR 1962 Patna 101 (FB) Relying upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Kerala Education Bill case it was pointed out by Ramaswami, C.J. at page 106 (column 2)—

"The language of the Article does not require that the majority of the students in the school must belong to the religious faith of the minority. The Article does not also impose any limitation that the subjects taught in the school must be connected with the religion of the minority

"It does not say that the minorities based on religion should establish educational institutions for teaching religion only it is open to the religious minority to establish educational institutions for the purpose of conserving its religion, language or culture. It is also open to the religious minority to establish educational institutions purely for the purpose of giving a thorough good secular education to their children"

While laying stress upon the above view I may say that the question of interpreting Art. 30 with reference to Art 29 did not arise in Sudrajat's case, AIR 1963 SC 540 because from the facts stated in the very first paragraph of the judgment it appears that the Primary Schools and the Training College were conducted for the benefit of the religious denomination of the United Church of Northern India and Indian Christians generally, though admission is not denied to students belonging to other communities. It has been said that the teachers trained in the Training College in regard to which the interference was sought to be made by the Government for reservation of seats for teachers, were absorbed in the Primary Schools conducted by the Gujarat and Kathiawar Presbyterian Joint Board called the Society.

9. In Aldo Maria Patroni v E. C. Kesavan, AIR 1965 Ker 75 a Full Bench of the Kerala High Court enunciated four propositions on the basis of the two Supreme Court decisions, namely, AIR

"(1) A school established by a minority — whether before or after the Constitution — will come within the ambit of Article 30(1) of the Constitution, even though what it imparts is a general education and its students are drawn not merely from the minority community but from other communities as well"

10 Now I proceed to state the facts from the petition, the counter-affidavit and the affidavit-in-reply, in the first instance for deciding the question as to when and by whom the C M S School, in regard to which the controversy about the formation of the Managing Committee has arisen, was established. In the very first paragraph of the petition, it is said that the school was "established by the Church Missionary Society London in 1854 now owned by the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association and administered by the Bhagalpur Diocese of the Church of India"

In the various sub-paragraphs of paragraph 3 of the petition, the history of the School and of its administration has been given. The School was established first in the year 1854 as a Primary School at Fort Nathnagar, which, as subsequently stated in the other affidavit, is known as Champanagar. In 1887 it was raised to a High School. The School shifted to Addampur in a rented building taken on lease by the Church Missionary Society by a registered deed of lease executed between the lessor and the lessee on the 5th of June, 1903 a copy of the lease is annexure 3 to the writ application. Subsequently, on the 9th of March, 1910 the property where the school was run was purchased by the Church Missionary Trust Association, a company duly incorporated and registered in England in 1885, from proprietors of Ral Srinagar, a copy of the registered sale-deed is annexure 4. About 2 bighas of land were purchased by two sale-deeds, copies of which are annexures 7 and 8 in the year 1912, for a total sum of about Rs 2000 by the Church Missionary Trust Association, London for the purposes of the School.

11. The case of the petitioners further is that the School has been controlled administered and managed by the Church Missionary Society through a Managing Committee constituted from time to time retaining its Christian character and working according to the policies, decisions and directions of the Diocesan Standing Committee or Diocesan Board of Education. Copy of minutes of the Committee is annexure 9. As per special arrangements with the Government, the key posts of the president and the secretary have always been in the hands of the Church Missionary Society, the Principal of the School has all along been a Christian and representative of the Church, the School has been financed and maintained by the Church and the Church has been responsible for its control, administration and management.

12. In the year 1957 the Church Missionary Society, London, passed the following resolution as quoted in paragraph 3 (xi) of the petition—

"That the C. M. S., having founded, supported, and assisted certain Christian Schools situated in the Bhagalpur Diocese in the State of Bihar, and having hitherto held the position of proprietor, founder and benefactor, of these Schools, now wishes to hand over these responsibilities to the Church of India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon, in the said Diocese; it, therefore, appoints the Diocese, at whose head is the Bishop of Bhagalpur, who is responsible for the spiritual welfare of the same and for the proper administration of all Church affairs therein, to be the proprietor of these Schools, with full authority, through the Diocesan Trust Association or other appropriate domestic organisation, to direct their policy and carry on all negotiations with Government."

It is then asserted that though the property of the School was transferred to the trust of the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association, the administration and management of the School remained in the hands of the Bhagalpur Diocese which controls the administration of the School through its Council, Standing Committee and Education Board. The principal of the School was always appointed by the Bishop of the Diocese. The Standing Committee saw no harm in allowing the rest of the members of the managing committee to contain persons other than the representatives of the Diocese and accordingly it was allowed to be done, in deference to the desire of the Government's educational authorities.

13. As to the denominational character of the School, the facts stated in the petition are that a big cross has been fixed in the front of the School building which is conspicuous in itself and proves that the School belongs to, and is administered by, the Church. From time to time the authorities of the Education Department on inspection of the School, noted in the Visitors' Book that it is a Mission School; extracts from the Visitors' Book are annexure 20. It is further said that regular scripture classes are held in the School and lessons on the life and teaching of Lord Jesus Christ are taught and examinations are held in the subject for all students, as will appear from the examination programmes and the annual returns and the Church Missionary Gleaners 1905, 1911 and 1914, copies of which are annexures 21 to 25. Every morning, before the classes begin, the Lord's Prayers from prescribed Church books are offered by the students and staff. Each meeting of the Managing Committee of the School begins and closes with prayers from the "Book of Common prayer". Thus claiming the C. M. S. School to be a Christian religious denominational institution, it is asserted that it is not governed by the 1964 Rules; the impugned orders are ultra vires of Arts. 26 and 30 of the Constitution. Upon these grounds, the petitioners have asked this Court to restrain the respondents from interfering with the right of the petitioners to control, administer and manage the affairs of the C. M. S. School.

14. The salient facts which may be noted from the counter-affidavit of Shri K. C. Mukherjee, respondent No. 7, which is the only counter-affidavit filed on behalf of respondents 6 to 9, are these. It is not correct to state that the School was established or founded by the Church Missionary Society of London and is owned by the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association or that it is administered by the Bhagalpur Diocese or the Church of India. The Bihar Act XIII of 1960 and the 1964 Rules framed thereunder do apply to the School in question. The Church Missionary Society started a lower primary school in Champanagar 4 miles west of Bhagalpur. Subsequently, in course of time a High School came into being with manifold help and contributions from the public and public funds. The School may have been initially sponsored by the Society and that is the reason that it was called the C. M. S. High School. The School was originally started in a rented building belonging to Srinagar Raj. The primary school started by the Society is still in existence at Champanagar. The rented building and the compound were purchased in the year 1910 with Government grant of Rs. 10,000 besides financial help from other sources. The money was received by the School authorities on the usual conditions laid down in the rules relating to the grant in aid to native schools and further specific conditions as laid down in the aforesaid order of the Director of Public Instruction. The Managing Committee of the School was duly constituted in accordance with the rules of the Government and properties, assets, management and administration and all the interests of the institution vested in the said Managing Committee as constituted from time to time in accordance with the Government rules. A sum of Rs. 28,200 was paid by the Government to the School authorities for the purpose of building a hall and six class rooms on certain conditions including that the School shall be governed by a regular Managing Committee, the constitution of which was to be approved by the Director of Public Instruction and it was to be in accordance with the grant-in-aid rules.

Further numerous substantial grants were made to the institution by the Government, several donations and contributions were made by various individuals including the Bakhtiarpur Estate, Sri R N Lal and Dipnarain Singh, large areas of land were acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act for purposes of the School as public purposes and were given to the School on lease on nominal rent or otherwise. The lands acquired by the Government continued to belong to Government and they were leased out to the School on nominal rent under agreements in the form provided in Appendix A to the General Rules relating to grants-in-aid to Schools. Similarly, grants by the Government of money to the school used to be made under agreements in the form provided in appendix B to the aforesaid Rules. All properties acquired by and for the School have always been the properties of the School vested in its Managing Committee as would be evidenced by the entries in the assessment list of the Bhagalpur Municipality. The claim of the petitioners that the Bishop of Bhagalpur Diocese has always been the president and the representatives of the Missionary and the Secretary and Principal have always been appointed by the Missionary has been refuted.

It is claimed that they were elected by the Managing Committee. The School authorities submitted to the Government regulations in the years 1958 and 1959 when at their instance they separated the post of the principal and the Secretary. Some instances have been quoted to show that the principal has been removed or appointed by the Managing Committee and not by the Bishop of the Standing Committee of the Bhagalpur Diocese. The claim of the petitioners that the School maintains its Christian character by the various facts stated in the petition has been refuted in the counter-affidavit wherein it has been asserted that on the walls of the School there are inscriptions from the Hindu religious text books, in the School there is a Hindu hostel in which Hindu prayers are offered, and various other facts are asserted to attack the claim of the petitioners as to the School being of a religious denominational character.

15. In the affidavit-in-reply, it is reiterated in paragraph 3—

"It is strongly asserted that the School was established, owned and, as always it has been, administered by the said Society from beginning, and after the transfer of ownership to the above Diocese, administered by the said Diocese", meaning by the word 'Society' with reference to the context the 'Church Missionary Society, London', and by the word 'Diocese' the 'Bhagalpur Diocese owning the School through Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association'. It is explained in the affidavit in reply that the present C M S. School is the one, which was established by the London Society in 1854, as will appear from the Bihar Government District Gazetteer, 1962 Edition, relating to Bhagalpur, extracts from pages 115 and 116 of which have been annexed as Annexure 28. The existence of a lower primary school in Champanagar is explained by the fact of establishment of another school by one Mrs Perfect. The emblems of the School and the crest inscribed at the top of the wall have been explained in paragraph 3 (i) (e) of the affidavit in reply. As to the acquisition of property from Srinagar Raj in 1910, it is asserted that the property was purchased for Rs 25,000/- before the Government grant of Rs 10,000/- was received. The sale-deed was executed on 19th of March, 1910, and registered on 14th of April, 1910. The amount of Rs 10,000/- was received from the Government in September, 1910, as is the case of the respondents also in their counter-affidavit. The document of sale, a copy of which is annexure 4 to the writ application, shows that the Society was the vendee of the property and continued to be so till 1958, when the Society transferred the said property by registered deed of transfer to the Diocese, a copy of which deed is annexure 15 to the writ application.

The definite case of the petitioners is that the School was established by the Church Missionary Society of London and its property is now legally held by the Bhagalpur Diocese. The Bhagalpur Diocese was established in 1943. Before 1913 the permanent proprietary powers to control and direct the Managing Committee of the School were exercised by the agent of the Society in Calcutta named the Calcutta Corresponding Committee, shortly known as C C C Annexure 32 series to the affidavit in reply are the copies of minutes of the Board of Education and Standing Committee to substantiate the fact of control and management. Thereafter, details have been mentioned in the affidavit in reply as to how from time to time only Christian Principals were appointed in the School and that also always by the Church Missionary or the Bishop. The documents executed when the acquired lands were leased out to the School authorities or grants of money were made by the Government from time to time have been stated to be documents of guarantee to secure the payment of the money under certain circumstances which had not the effect of surrendering the administration or management of the School.

16. It may be stated here that one Shri A. K. Mukherji, who had been removed from the post of Principal of the School some years ago, had filed a writ application numbered as M. J. C. 899 of 1961 in this Court, which was dismissed by a Bench of this Court to which I was a Party. Some references to some affidavits and annexures have been made with reference to the record of M. J. C. 899/61. I do not consider it necessary to give any details from them except in regard to one annexure which will be referred to hereinafter. Some reference has been made to the filing of a title suit in court below by some persons, which, according to the petitioners, was dismissed as being infructuous and according to the counter-affidavit of respondents 6 to 9 was withdrawn. A reference has been made to the petition of show cause filed on behalf of the Government in that suit, but I do not think it necessary even to refer to that. Over and above these facts, reference has been made by the petitioners to some resolutions of the Managing Committee passed in a meeting held in the year 1960 or later on to show that some of the respondents 6 to 9 had attended those meetings in which it was asserted that the School is a minority school and some resolutions have been used by the said respondents to show that the School authorities had submitted to be governed by the rules of the Government as then existing and had surrendered their right of claiming the School to be a minority School.

In the view which I am going to take with reference to some of the salient features, I do not think that on the principle of estoppel, waiver or acquiescence either the petitioners can be defeated in this case or the contesting respondents can be estopped from challenging the claim of the petitioners as to the character of the C. M. S. School. It is, therefore, not necessary to give the facts relating to them in any detail.

17. The learned Advocate General appearing for the State of Bihar conceded and, in my opinion, rightly that the present C. M. S. Higher Secondary School is the one which was established as a Primary School in the year 1854; it was established, as is the case of the petitioners, by the Church Missionary Society, London. On a consideration of the various statements made in the petition and affidavits of the parties and on going through the various annexures appended thereto, it is abundantly clear that the present educational institution, namely, the C. M. S. School, in respect of which the controversy has arisen in this writ application, is the same School which was established in the year 1854 by the Church Missionary Society, London. The Lower Primary School existing at Champnanagar these days is another school and not the Lower Primary School which was established by the Church Missionary Society in 1854. Even though after the School was raised to the high school standard in 1887, there was some break in the matter of recognition for a period of about 5 years as mentioned in the Gazetteer referred to by the petitioners, there was no discontinuance of the educational institution at any time. The educational institution continued without any break from 1854 and continued till to-day.

For the purpose of deciding the question of establishment of the educational institution within the meaning of Article 30 of the Constitution, it is not quite relevant to take into consideration the subsequent acquisitions of property either by the Church Missionary Society or grant of properties by the Government by money grants or by acquiring lands under the Land Acquisition Act; endowment of properties or money by some other persons later on is also of no consequence. The educational institution, which was established in the year 1854, had no immovable property of its own. It must have started with some movable properties provided by the Church Missionary Society, London. It's not known who were the trustees on behalf of the Society, in the second half of the 19th century. What we get however, from annexure 3 is that the leasehold interest in Adampur Premises of the School was acquired in the year 1903 in the name of a company registered and incorporated in England in 1885 under the English Companies Act having its registered office at 16, Salisbury Square, London F.C. The name of the Company was Church Missionary Trust Association and the lease was taken by the Company "for the purpose of holding therein a School for the education of Children and young persons and for other similar purposes".

This indicates that the Trust Association had become trustee of the property on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, London. There does not seem to be a dispute in this regard, and that is the reason that all the sale-deeds, copies of which are annexures 4, 7 and 8, taken in the year 1910 or 1912, were in the name of the Church Missionary Trust Association. They were for the purposes of the School. It is not necessary to examine as to who contributed the money for acquisition of the property in the year 1910. The property was acquired for Rs.

25,000 A substantial portion of it was contributed by the Church Missionary Society and other persons, who were all Christians. It is not clear as to how the sum of Rs 10,000/- received from the Government later was utilised. Even assuming in favour of respondents 6 to 9 that it went towards the payment of the consideration money of Rs 25,000/- in the sense that the loan which was raised for purchasing the property was liquidated by the sum of Rs 10,000/-, the fact remains that the acquisition of property was made by the Church Missionary Trust Association which became the legal owner of the property for the purposes of the School which was founded and established by the Church Missionary Society. The founder of the Trust was the Society; the trustee was an incorporated company, namely, the Church Missionary Trust Association. Annexure 2 to the writ application which is an extract from the Church Missionary Gleaner of the year 1913 to which reference was made by the learned Advocate General says—

"The C. M. S. High School is the oldest educational institution in Bhagalpur, having been started as far back as 1854 by the Rev Mr Droese, for the purpose of giving an Anglo-vernacular education to Indian lads desirous of obtaining such."

18. I may now refer here to one fact mentioned in the Gazetteer, certain passages from pages 115 and 116 of which were placed before us by the petitioners. But in this connection I would like to refer to a fact mentioned at page 113 wherein it is stated that in 1848 the Chaplain of Bhagalpur, the Rev Mr. Vaux wrote to the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society in Calcutta pleading the need of Bihar, and especially for the Paharias and Santhals, asking for a missionary to be sent there, and promising the local congregation would provide a house and a school building, and pay for the expenses of a school. The response of the Church Missionary Society (C. M. S.) in England was to send to Bhagalpur the Rev E. Droese a German Missionary who had been working in India since 1842 with the Berlin Mission and had recently been ordained by Bishop Wilson of Calcutta. And then at page 115 it is said that the C. M. S. School traces its origin back to the primary school which was opened at Champanagar in 1854 by Rev. E. Droese and which was raised to high standard and affiliated to Calcutta University in 1887.

19. Nowhere in the petition or in the affidavit-in-reply it is asserted by the petitioners that the School was opened, started, founded or brought into existence, and thus established by Indian Christians. Surprisingly enough, even in regard to the present ownership and administration, nowhere it is stated by the petitioners that it is the Christian minority of the Indian citizens who are seeking protection of their School under Article 30 of the Constitution. It is not the case of the petitioners, anywhere that Indian Christians were members of the Church Missionary Society, London, or the Christians residing or domiciled in India had any hand in the establishment of the educational institution, namely, the C. M. S. School. In such a situation it has got to be held that the petitioners have failed to prove that C. M. S. School was established by the minority, which is entitled to protection under Article 30 of the Constitution. This brings us to the question as to what is meant by the term 'minority' occurring in Article 30.

20. In State Trading Corporation of India, Ltd. v. The Commercial Tax Officer, AIR 1963 SC 1811 when a question arose whether an artificial person, namely, a company can be held to be a citizen for the purpose of claiming the various fundamental rights recognised for the citizens only in Part III of the Constitution, it was held by the majority that the word 'citizen' meant a natural person who was a citizen of India as described in Part II of the Constitution, and not an artificial or a juristic person. In that connection, B. P. Sinha, C. J., pointed out at page 1816 that some fundamental rights dealt with in Part III of the Constitution are available to 'any person' whereas the other fundamental rights can be available only to all citizens. In the category mentioned in paragraph 10 of the judgment, it has been pointed out that fundamental rights engrafted in Articles 14, 20, 21, 22, 25, 27, 28 and 31 are available to 'any persons' which term would include all sorts of persons — aliens, artificial or juristic persons — while fundamental rights stated in Articles 15, 16, some of the sub-Articles of Article 18, Articles 19 and 29 are available to the citizens only. No reference was made to Articles 23 and 24 because in those Articles neither the word 'person' is there nor does the term 'citizen' occur.

The other two Articles omitted from the catalogue aforesaid are Articles 26 and 30. It is, however, significant to note here that except Article 25 all the other Articles, in which catalogue may be included Articles 23 and 24, give protection to all kinds of persons including aliens, because protection afforded therein has been put in a negative form. To illustrate my point, with reference to Article 31 wherein it has been provided that no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law, it should be borne in mind that in regard to deprivation of property no distinction has been made between a citizen or an alien or even a juristic person, but where fundamental rights have been stated to exist in an affirmative sense, they have been mostly stated to exist for the citizens only.

21. Articles 25 to 28 occur under the heading "Right to Freedom of Religion". Article 25 states that subject to certain matters all persons are equally entitled to freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess, practise and propagate religion. That means that this right has been stated to exist not only for the citizens of India but for all persons including the aliens. The Constitution-makers, in their wisdom, decided not to interfere with the freedom of conscience and the right of all people freely to profess, practise and propagate religion. But it is important to remember that a very vital safeguard was provided for curtailment of that right in Sub-Article (2) of Article 25 whereby it was provided that—

"Nothing in this article shall affect the operation of any existing law or prevent the State from making any law—

(a) regulating or restricting any economic financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practice;"

If in this background the expression "every religious denomination or any section thereof" occurring in Article 26 is interpreted, it would be quite reasonable to take the view that the word 'denomination' takes in its sweep not only the citizens of India but all persons. There is no question of the denomination being a minority or a majority. In Commr., Hindu Religious Endowments v. Sri Lakshminidra Thirtha Swamiar of Sri Shirur Mutt, 1954 SCR 1005=(AIR 1954 SC 282) it has been stated at p. 1022 by Mukherjee, J., as he then was, that the word 'denomination' means a collection of individuals classed together under the same name: a religious sect or body having a common faith and organisation and designated by a distinctive name. On reading the judgment of the Supreme Court in this case as well as in another case of Ratilal Panachand Gandhi v. State of Bombay, 1954 SCR 1055=(AIR 1954 SC 388), it would be clear that Articles 25 and 26 have got to be read and interpreted together. So read and interpreted, the word 'denomination' will include a denomination not only of Indian citizens but of all persons.

22. In contra-distinction of Article 25 the term used in Article 29 which along with Article 30 occurs under the heading "Cultural and Educational Rights" is "Any section of the citizens". This fundamental right has not been extended to aliens. The marginal note of Article

29 is "Protection of interests of minorities" and the marginal note of Article 30 is "Right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions". It is true that in Article 30 the expression used is "All minorities". But, in my opinion, that cannot but mean all minorities of Indian citizens. There are two reasons for this interpretation. One is, as pointed out with reference to some of the decisions of the Supreme Court and other Courts, that Article 30 has got to be read with Article 29. The second reason is that even apart from Article 29 the word 'minority' necessarily suggests a contrast with the term 'majority', unlike the word 'denomination'. As I have said above, 'denomination' may consist of people who are in majority, may consist of people who are in minority. That aspect has got no importance for the purpose of Article 26. But as soon as the Constitution makers used the word 'minorities' in Article 30, obviously and undoubtedly they used it in relation to majority.

What is then meant by such comparison or contrast between minority and majority? Was it meant that the minority based on religion or language as compared to the majority of the world population based on religion or language shall have the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice? Or, was it meant that the minority based on religion or language as compared to the majority of the Indian citizens whose religion or language was distinct from that of the majority shall have the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice? The answer to my mind obviously is that by 'minority' would be meant the minority of the Indian citizens based on religion or language, which shall have the right stated in Article 30(1) of the Constitution; otherwise, the comparison would be impossible. A question arose before the Supreme Court in the Kerala Education Bill case, AIR 1958 SC 956 as to what was meant by the word 'minority' but on the facts which were placed before the Supreme Court with respect to the Indian citizens of Kerala the only dispute was in which particular area the comparison was to be confined. It was held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that since they were examining the State law, the comparison should be made between minority and majority population of the State of Kerala, obviously meaning thereby the population of the Indian citizens of Kerala. This finds further support from some of the observations of S. R. Das, C. J., occurring at page 986. Learned Chief Justice said:

"So long as the Constitution stands as it is and is not altered, it is, we conceive, the duty of this Court to uphold the fundamental rights and thereby honour our sacred obligation to the minority communities who are of our own."

23. One thing more may be pointed out in this connection that while no obligation has been cast under Article 26 on the State to grant any aid to institutions for religious and charitable purposes established and maintained by any religious denomination, Sub-Article (2) of Article 30 of the Constitution says—

"The State shall not, in granting aid to educational institutions, discriminate against any educational institution on the ground that it is under the management of a minority, whether based on religion or language."

It has been held that the State while granting aid to educational institution administered by a minority cannot impose restrictions so as to annihilate its power of management. The right under Article 30 has not been curtailed by any restrictive provision while the right under Article 25 and consequently under Article 26 can be subjected to some kind of restriction for the safety of the State or in the interest of the State or the general public. Can it then be said that the right under Article 30 has been recognised to exist for all minorities irrespective of the question as to whether the minority consists of Indian citizens alone or consists of aliens also? The answer must be that the Constitution-makers could never have intended to recognise the existence of a fundamental right of the kind engrafted in Article 30 for non-citizens.

24. I may lend support to the view which I have taken above by referring to some special provision for special grants for the benefit of Anglo-Indian Community made in Article 337 of the Constitution. What is meant by 'Anglo-Indian community' has been defined in Article 366(2). This was an important community which was claiming protection of its educational institutions before the Supreme Court in the Kerala Education Bill case, AIR 1958 SC 956 and reading the definition of 'Anglo-Indian community' in Article 366(2), it should be clear further that what was meant by the expression 'All minorities' in Article 30 was minority constituted of Indian citizens.

25. If that be so, there cannot be any doubt that a minority which seeks to establish an educational institution of its choice after the commencement of the Constitution must be a minority of Indian citizens. If aliens residing in India claiming to constitute a minority on the basis of religion or language want to establish and administer an educational institution of their choice, they cannot claim protection under Article 30. Unless there be a law forbidding them to establish an educational institution, it may well be that they can establish an educational institution. But they cannot resist interference with the administration of the institution by the Government or any law made by the State. That being so, even assuming in favour of the petitioners, although this is also not claimed by them, as I have said above, that C. M. S. School is being administered by a minority which consists of Indian citizens, namely, the Indian Christians, can it claim that it has a right to administer the School even though it was established by the Church Missionary Society of London and not by a Society of which the Indian Christians were the members?

In a situation like this, one may be tempted to take the view that the word 'and' which occurs between the words 'establish' and 'administer' in Article 30 should be read as 'or' and the two words — 'establish' and 'administer' — should be read disjunctively. But in view of the clear exposition of law by the Supreme Court in the case of Aligarh University, AIR 1968 SC 662 it is not open to do so, the word 'and' means 'and' and the phrase has got to be read conjunctively.

26. The next question of difficulty then arises as to how it is to be determined whether the section of the people who established the educational institution consisted of Indian citizens or not at the time of establishment of the institution. Hidayatullah, J., as he then was, in his separate judgment but concurring with the majority, has traced the history of the law and concept of citizenship and nationality from ancient times upto the present day. In that connection his Lordship has pointed out at page 1827 that there was no law of citizenship in India before the commencement of the Constitution. Thus comes the difficulty for giving the answer to the question just posed by me. But if the words 'establish' and 'administer' in Article 30 have got to be read conjunctively, the reasonable and rational answer to give to the question is thus. After finding who were the persons who had established the educational institution, it has to be seen with reference to what has been stated in part II of the Constitution as to whether those persons could be deemed to be citizens of India, by a legal fiction, on application of what has been engrafted therein.

To illustrate my point with reference to the facts of the two cases before the Supreme Court, namely, the Kerala Education Bill case, AIR 1958 SC 956 and Sidhrajbal's case, AIR 1963 SC 540, if the School would have been established by a Society consisting of Indian Christians or those who were generally or ordinarily residing in India or domiciled in India one could say that the School was established by a minority consisting of persons who will be deemed to be Indian citizens and would thereby fulfil the requirement of Article 30 both of establishing and administering if that minority has been administering the institution. But, unfortunately for the petitioners, there is no statement or averment by them—and, perhaps, it could not be so—that the School was established by Christians residing in India or domiciled in India. Their case in clearest terms, as I have said above, is that the School was established by the Church Missionary Society of London. It is difficult to assume or presume in their favour that it was established by Indian Christians.

27. Although, as I have said above, the question was left open in Azeez Basha's case, AIR 1968 SC 662 by the Supreme Court as to whether an educational institution can be said to be an institution for religious and charitable purposes within the meaning of clause (a) of Article 26 of the Constitution, I am under a necessity to decide this matter as, according to the view I have expressed above, the freedom guaranteed in Article 26 to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes is available not only to Indian citizens but also to aliens. In my opinion, however, the educational institution of the kind with which we are concerned in this case cannot be and has not been claimed to be an institution for religious and charitable purposes. It is not an institution for propagation of Christianity, it is not an institution where the education mainly consists of teaching tenets of Christianity. The institution is for imparting secular education and, as I pointed out from annexure 2 to the writ application, the purpose was to give Anglo-vernacular education to the Indian lads.

Nor was it an institution for charitable purposes in any sense of the term. It is not the claim of the petitioners that no fee is charged in the institution and education is imparted by way of charity to Indian lads. The mere fact of the Cross being there or some of the prayers at some moments being from the Bible either in the School or in the Managing Committee and the mere fact of teaching of Bible in some period although the last fact is controverted by respondents 6 to 9 as having been introduced very late in the year 1960 or afterwards, are not sufficient to indicate that the C. M. S. School is an institution for religious or charitable purposes. The School was affiliated to the Calcutta University. Now examinations are held under the Bihar School Examination Board. Students from all communities are imparted education in the School. Hostels for Hindu students are separately situated in the School compound. It is an educational institution pure and simple for imparting secular education. And, to crown all, nowhere it is stated on behalf of the petitioners that there is a single Christian student in the School, although from the counter-affidavit of respondents 6 to 9, it appears that some Christian students are there in the School and they reside in a separate hostel.

A religious institution may have one of its functions of imparting of religious education as pointed out by the Supreme Court in the two cases referred to above in 1954 SCR 1005 and 1055 = (AIR 1954 SC 282 and 388). But the kind of educational institution, pure and simple, which has been specially dealt with under Article 30 cannot be characterised as an institution for religious and charitable purposes within the general provision of Article 26. Although in some respects in the functions of the institutions there may be some overlapping, the pith and substance of the functions of the institution of the kind with which we are concerned in this case cannot but make this to be an educational institution within the meaning of Article 30. It cannot be an institution for religious or charitable purposes within the meaning of Article 26(a). Although Article 26 has been referred to at one or two places in the petition, the facts to found the claim of protection of Article 26 are singularly lacking in the petition as also in the affidavit-in-reply. And that is the reason that all the arguments which have been advanced on behalf of the petitioners have been with reference to Article 30 of the Constitution.

28. The next argument on behalf of the petitioners was that since the establishment of the Bhagalpur Diocese in the year 1943, the Diocese came to administer the affairs of the School. It should, therefore, be held that the institution was re-established in the year 1943 and was re-established by the Bhagalpur Diocese. This point has been stated merely to be rejected. It is difficult—rather impossible—to take the view that the School was established or re-established in any sense of the term in the year 1943 when the Bhagalpur Diocese was established. Moreover, according to the case of the petitioners, as I have pointed out above, before the passing of the resolution in 1957 in pursuance of which the transfer-deed of 1958 was executed by the Church Missionary Trust Association, a company incorporated in England, in favour of the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association which is incorporated under Section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, the entire management and the control of the affairs of the School was in the hands of the Church Missionary Society of London The Calcutta Corresponding Committee (C. C. C.) and even the Bhagalpur Diocese were all functioning on behalf of or as agents of the Church Missionary Society itself they were not managing the affairs of the School in their own right.

That is also clear from the resolution passed in 1957 by the Church Missionary Society London as quoted from paragraph 3(xi) of the petition. By the resolution, the Church Missionary Society, London, wished to hand over the responsibility of the Church of India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon to the Bhagalpur Diocese and appointed the Diocese at whose head was the Bishop of Bhagalpur who is responsible for the spiritual welfare of the Diocese and for the proper administration of all the Church affairs therein, to be the proprietor of the Schools, with full authority, through the Diocesan Trust Association or other appropriate domestic organisation, to direct their policy and carry on all negotiations with Government. The deed which was executed in the year 1958, a copy of which is annexure 15 was executed by the Church Missionary Trust Association Ltd., in favour of the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association stating therein that the instrument of transfer was "from one trustee to another" meaning thereby that the instrument of transfer transferred the trusteeship from one trustee to another and along with that were transferred the properties not only of the educational institutions but also the other properties for other purposes belonging to the Church Missionary Society, London, or the Church Missionary Trust Association. In the recital it is said that the Church Missionary Society was for Africa and the East and the term 'East' would include India too. But thereafter it is said that the Society was merely a voluntary association of persons on whose behalf the Company acted as trustee. The transferee has been made the trustee of the Trust property in place of the transferor Company and very many properties have been transferred including the properties which existed for extension of education as mentioned in paragraph 3 of the deed.

29. The argument on behalf of the petitioners was that if not from 1943 then in any event from 1958 onwards the Bhagalpur Diocese through the Bhagalpur Diocesan Trust Association became the founder and proprietor of the School entitled to carry on its administration. I am unable to accept this argument. The word 'institution' according to Webster's Third International Dictionary means "something that is instituted as a significant and persistent element (as a practice, a relationship, an organization) in the life of a culture that centres on a fundamental human need, activity, or value occupies an enduring and cardinal position within a society and is usually maintained and stabilized through social regulatory agencies". In this background it is to be remembered that an institution as such is not capable of being transferred in the sense of transfer of a property. It cannot be transferred from one hand to another without an element of discontinuance. The organization was not transferred as it could not be. What was transferred by annexure 15 was the trusteeship as well as the trust property including the School property. The clear case of the petitioners is that the educational institution which was established in the year 1854 continued even till today. It is not claimed, nor could it be so claimed in law that the institution itself was transferred.

It will be of use here to refer to Articles 1277 and 1278 at pages 612-613 of the Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, Volume 13, as to what is meant by transfer of schools and substitution of schools. The former means a transfer of the school from one site to another and the expression "substitution of schools" has been used to mean that under certain law the Minister is entitled to allow substitution of school without discontinuance of the school. It would be clear from passages occurring therein that the notion of transferring a school from one founder to another or by one trustee to another is not known to law. To all intents and purposes the transfer of the trusteeship or the properties of the institution may vest the right to administer the school in the transferee. Yet it is difficult to take the view that the educational organization which was founded, created or brought into existence and thus established by one founder by such transfer becomes transferred to, and re-established by, the transferee. If I may draw an analogy from our experience of religious institutions like math, temple, mosque or church, it has never been heard that the institution has ever been transferred by a transfer deed. What can be the subject-matter of transfer is the property appertaining to the institution including the right of management. But in a continuing institution when its property or trusteeship or right to management is transferred, I cannot persuade myself to take the view that by such transfer the transferee brings into existence or re-brings into existence, to quote the phrase used by the learned counsel for the petitioners, and establishes the institution within the meaning of Article 26 or 30 of the Constitution.

I am, therefore, definitely of the view that in no sense of the term the petitioners can be said to have established the C. M. S. School in the year 1958. It would have been a different matter if the institution which was brought into existence in the year 1854 was discontinued, if legally under the terms of the trust it could be discontinued and if on transfer of the trust property a new institution was established by the transferee. In that event, it was possible to take the view that it was a new institution which was established or even, to use the word 're-establish', it was re-established by the transferee of the trust properties, may be, in the same premises. In my opinion, therefore, the petitioners have failed to make out a case that the C. M. S. School is an educational institution which has been established by a minority based on religion or language within the meaning of Article 30 of the Constitution. That being so, they are not entitled to enforce the fundamental rights guaranteed under the said Article.

30. As I have said above, incidentally a question arises as to whether the educational institution is an institution of the kind which can be said to have been established by a minority for conservation of its language, script or culture within the meaning of Article 29. In that connection, I have already referred to, and extracted, passages from the Supreme Court decisions as also from the Full Bench decision of this Court, which point out that it is not necessary that all the students of such an institution should be of the minority. But that is not to say that the protection under Article 30 will be available even to an educational institution in respect of which there is no averment in the petition that any student belonging to the minority is receiving education in the institution. On the facts stated in the petition and in the affidavit in reply, I am inclined to hold in favour of the petitioners that the insignia of Cross is there in the School, the emblem of the School shows that it has the character of showing that this is a Missionary School in the sense of having been established by a Christian Missionary. I am also inclined to hold in their favour that prayers are held in the school from Bible and some teaching, although it may be of late, is imparted from the Bible.

The case of respondents 6 to 9 in that regard does not seem to be correct. Their explanation of the 4 things appearing in the emblem of the School seems to be ridiculous. Yet I am doubtful whether those things by themselves would be sufficient to indicate that the C. M. S. School is an educational institution established and administered by the Christian minority for the purpose of conserving their language, script or culture when, I find, no student of the minority community is stated to be receiving education in this institution for such preservation along with the secular education. It is not claimed by the petitioners that by adopting or maintaining Christian character of the school in some respect an attempt is made, much less with any success, to convert the students of other communities or of other religion to their faith through this educational institution. The totality of the facts rather indicates the other way that no interference is sought to be made through this educational institution in the matter of conserving of their own language, script or culture.

31. Now coming to the second question which falls for our decision, as stated earlier in this judgment, as to whether the C. M. S. School has been administered by the minority assuming that it has been established by the minority, I do not propose to refer to the numerous facts as they appear from the various petitions and affidavits and their annexures as, I think, it is not necessary to refer to all of them. I however propose to take up the salient facts with reference to which arguments have been advanced by learned counsel for respondents 6 to 9 in a different way and the learned Advocate-General in a different form.

32. It has already been stated that the School was being managed for day to day affairs by a Managing Committee. It is not known whether there was any grant of money or property by the Government or any member of the public between the year 1854 and 1909. During that period, undoubtedly the School was under the exclusive control of the Church Missionary Society or its delegates or agents. When the Bakhtiarpur Estate or any other member of the public donated any land or any amount to the institution, it is not claimed that in pursuance of that donation any special rights were claimed by, or conferred on, them giving them a seat in the Managing Committee as a matter of right or even otherwise. The only thing which requires consideration is as to what were the conditions imposed by the Government when grants of money were made by it or when lands were leased out to the school after acquiring them under the Land Acquisition Act for public purposes. It is not necessary to enter into the controversy of there being any deed or instrument on all the occasions of the grants. It will be sufficient to refer to only two documents which are on the records of this case. Before I do so, I would like to refer here to the general rules relating to grant in aid to schools in Bihar and Orissa payable from Provincial revenues as published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, February 3, 1915, Part I, page 113, the notification is dated the 29th January 1915. The general conditions attachable to grants are to be found in Appendix A appended to the rules in form of agreement for grant of land or building under Rule 7(4) of Section 1. In Appendix B is given the form of agreement for grant of money to extend existing buildings or construct buildings on land belonging to an educational institution under Rule 7(4) of Section 1. The salient terms from these forms have been quoted in the counter-affidavit as also verbatim are to be found in the two documents which I am going to refer.

33. Annexure G/1 to the counter-affidavit is a copy of the reply to the supplementary affidavit filed on behalf of the School authorities in M. J. C 899/61 along with the annexures Annexure 2 of the said reply is a true copy of the trust deed executed on 10-2-1916 by Rev. E. T. Sandys, constituted Attorney of the Church Missionary Trust Association and members of the Managing Committee of the School, of whom Rev. E. T. Sandys was one. This document was executed when a grant of Rs. 28,200 was made to the School. Out of this grant, the price of the acquired land was paid by the School authorities. The condition of the grant is—

"(a) Save as the Local Government may permit the said building shall not be used by the School authority for any other than educational purposes prior to the lapse of a period of 20 years from the date on which the said sum of Rs.28,200 is paid to the School authority.

(b) The said School shall be governed by a regular managing committee, the constitution of which shall be approved by the Director of Public Instruction and shall be in accordance with the grant-in-aid rules.

(g) The School shall be managed as regards control, maintenance, staff, fees, free studentships, curriculum, discipline residential arrangements and in all other respects in accordance with the Government grant-in-aid rules and to the satisfaction of the local Government."

34. Ext. G is an Indenture executed on 18-11-1919 by Rev. E. T. Sandys and others as members of the Managing Committee of the School and the Secretary of State acting through the Collector of Bhagalpur. The deed is a deed of agreement and the facts of mutual agreement are enumerated in it. It was executed when a piece of land acquired was leased out to the School. The important conditions to be noted from this deed are as follows—

"(1) Save as the local Government shall permit the said land shall be used solely for the purposes of the school,

(2) The school shall be governed by regular Managing Committee the constitution of which shall accord with the Rules of the Education Department of Bihar and Orissa for the time being in force, governing schools in receipt of grants-in-aid.

(6) The School shall be managed as regards control, maintenance, staff, fees, free studentships, curriculum, discipline, residential arrangements and in all other respects in accordance with the Rules of the Education Department of Bihar and Orissa for the time being in force, governing schools in the receipt of grants and to the satisfaction of the local government,"

35. The sum and substance of the conditions imposed are that the Managing Committee was to govern the school, the Managing Committee was to be constituted with the approval of the Director of Public Instruction, it was to be constituted in accordance with the rules governing schools receiving grants-in-aid and it was to be constituted according to the rules for the time being in force. For violation of the terms of the deed of 1916, it was provided that in case of remediable defects the school authorities shall remedy them on demand, and if they fail to do so, they were to be bound to repay to the Secretary of State the said sum of Rs. 28,200 or the portion thereof, and the Secretary of State shall have the power at his option either to have the defect caused by such breach remedied at the expense of the School authority or to require or sue for the repayment of the said amount by the School authority. In the deed of 1919 it was provided that if the conditions at any time were broken from any cause whatsoever then the Secretary of State shall be entitled to re-enter upon the said land and the school authority shall be bound to give him or any officer authorised in his behalf quiet and peaceable possession of the said land and of all buildings on certain further conditions provided in the deed.

36. On the basis of these documents Mr Shreenath Singh submitted that the case is covered by the principles of law laid down by the Supreme Court in paragraph 37 of its judgment in AIR 1961 SC 1402, the relevant lines from which are quoted in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Azeez Basha's case, AIR 1968 SC

662 have already been quoted by me. The learned Advocate-General, however, submitted that he was not prepared to go so far as to say that the right to administer the school never vested in the minority or had been voluntarily surrendered by it or had otherwise been effectively or irretrievably lost to it, but the Government grants in the form of either land or money were conditioned by the term that the School will be maintained by a Managing Committee which will be constituted according to the rules as mentioned therein in force from time to time. The grant being subject to those conditions, the trustees or the school authorities receiving the grant are bound by those conditions. The conditions were not matters of law but of contract. Learned Advocate General, therefore, submitted that even after the commencement of the Constitution those conditions appended to the grant have got to prevail and to be given effect to. The conditions of contract of the grant cannot be held to be void because they infringed the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 30 of the Constitution.

37. I may, however, refer here to Annexure 10 to the writ application which is dated 3-5-1918. This is a copy of the resolution of the Managing Committee of the C. M. S. High School held on the 3rd May, 1918. On a consideration of the model rules for Managing Committee sent by the Director of Public Instruction, it was resolved to point out to the Government certain modifications in those rules. The modifications suggested were—

"The Church Missionary Society reserve to themselves the right to have the following Ex-Officio members in and appoint the President and Secretary of the Managing Committee:—

1. The Secretary of the C. M. S.
2. The Senior C. M. S. Missionary in Bhagalpur as President of the Committee.
3. The C. M. S. Missionary Principal as Secretary of the Committee."

Annexure 11 is the copy of the letter dated 21-9-1918 from the officiating Inspector of Schools, Bhagalpur Division, communicating to the Secretary of the C. M. S. School that the modifications proposed in the case of the C. M. S. High School at Bhagalpur as stated in the letter of the Secretary dated 4th of May, 1918, which must have been written in pursuance of the resolution dated 3-5-1918, were approved. Annexure 35 to the affidavit-in-reply is a copy of the minutes of the Managing Committee meeting held on 25th June, 1919. The rule sent by the Inspector of Schools with the modifications incorporated therein were read in the meeting and sanctioned, and it is specifically stated that they were so done with the approval of the Director of Public Instruction.

38. I would now refer to two letters copies of both of which are contained in annexure 36 to the affidavit-in-reply. The first is the letter dated 12th September, 1944 from the Secretary, Board of Secondary Education, Bihar, written to the Inspector of Schools, copy of which was forwarded to the Secretaries of the non-government High Schools in the Bhagalpur Division. A query was made on the assumption that proprietary schools did not raise any subscription or donation, whether the proprietors of such schools were willing to transfer the school buildings to the Managing Committee by deed of gift. The reply given by the Secretary of the C. M. S. High School is dated October 20, 1944. The letter is addressed to the Inspector of Schools wherein it is said that the proprietors would not consider it wise to transfer the school buildings to the Managing Committee by deed of gift, nor would the Managing Committee desire to undertake the responsibility of holding possession of the buildings.

39. I may also note here that on a consideration of the various matters stated by the parties in the various affidavits, the clear picture which emerges is this, that even after the Government grants which, as stated on behalf of respondents 6 to 9, were quite substantial having been made from time to time, the President of the School was always the head of the Missionary who was the Bishop after the establishment of the Bhagalpur Diocese in the year 1943, and the Principal, although he was not always a Missionary, was invariably a Christian. He was acting as the Secretary also but in the year 1958 the two posts were bifurcated at the instance of the Government and Rev. Ghose was eventually made the Secretary of the School. From the copies of the resolution of the Standing Committee of the Diocese or the Education Board, some of which have been appended to the writ application, and some to the affidavit in reply, it is clear that the Bishop of the School as the head of the Missionary had the dominating hand in the management of the School.

It is not correct to say that the Principal was appointed, suspended or dismissed by the Managing Committee. The Managing Committee, as it appears, was merely carrying out—formally in effect—the decisions of the Diocese or the Bishop. The Managing Committee was electing the Bishop as the President of the Managing Committee but that was also a mere formality as even in the resolution it was said that the President was elected ex-officio, meaning thereby that the Managing Committee had no volition in the matter; it was merely to accept the Bishop as its President by a formal resolution. Even after the separation of the posts of Principal and Secretary, the Secretary was a representative of the Church. It is therefore, abundantly clear that the modification rules suggested and approved in the year 1918 and 1919 were always given effect to. The pivotal decisions were taken by the representative or the nominee of the Church Missionary.

Under the rules which were stated in the Government notification dated 29-1-1915 for constitution of the Managing Committee it was provided that the members of the Committee should be representative of the various classes of the community. The number of members of the Managing Committee has been varied from time to time. In that notification the minimum fixed was 6 and the maximum was 10. The constitution of a committee of a school seeking a grant-in-aid or the renewal of a grant-in-aid should be approved by the authority competent to renew the grant after consultation with the District Magistrate or the Director of Public Instruction as provided in the deeds of 1916 and 1919. All intermediate resignations, removals or appointments were to be reported to the Inspector and all such appointments should be approved by the Inspector in consultation with the District Magistrate. Even though in regard to some of the matters under the terms of the grant the authorities of the School were obliged to constitute the Managing Committee according to the grant-in-aid rules but that was in no way tantamount to the effect that the Church Missionary Society had voluntarily surrendered its right of administering the School or it was otherwise irrevocably lost to it.

Allowing some interference with the constitution of the Managing Committee in accordance with the grant-in-aid rules, and that also not to the fullest extent but truncating it to the considerable extent by the modifications made in 1918 and 1919 to my mind, it is clear, cannot lead to that conclusion. The Church has been administering the School and although for getting Government grant it allowed governmental interference as it was obliged to do in the management of the day to day School affairs, it is difficult to say that it surrendered its right of management. The facts of the Durgah Committee case were so very different that it is difficult to apply the principle laid down by the Supreme Court in that case to the facts of the instant case.

40. The argument put forward by learned Advocate-General is also not acceptable to me. Reading the two documents — one of the year 1916 and the other of the year 1919 — separately but as a whole, I am not prepared to hold that the grants conditioned with certain terms had the effect of creating a trust impressed with those conditions which must be fulfilled in any event. If such conditions are sought to be imposed by the Government today on an educational institution established by a minority entailing refusal of the grant if such conditions are not accepted, it is manifest, the imposition will be hit by Article 30(2) of the Constitution. There was no such fundamental right in existence at the time the documents of 1916 and 1919 were executed. The conditions imposed therein were not of a kind which can be said to be enforceable for all times to come. Certain rights were given to the Government for recovery of the money or the taking back of the land on breach of the conditions. It is remarkable in this case that no counter-affidavit has been filed, as stated above, by respondents 1 to 5 claiming the enforcement of the conditions on the basis of the documents of 1916 and 1919. No show cause petition has been filed on their behalf.

One could appreciate the arguments put forward on behalf of the learned Advocate-General to defeat the petitioners on the first point, but it is difficult to follow his argument on the second point with the aid of some of the annexures appended to the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of respondents 6 to 9. On the other hand as stated in paragraph 3(xvi) of the petition, in Title Suit 81 of 1962 the Director of Public Instruction who is respondent No 2 had filed a show cause petition in which the stand taken by the Education Department was that the School was started by the Church Missionary Society, London, and was managed by the said Society and that the Church had control over the School and was represented in the Managing Committee by the President, Secretary and Principal of the School. This statement of the Director of the Public Instruction in the show cause petition filed in Title Suit 81 of 1962 cannot help the petitioners on the first point, but surely it does help them on the second point which I am at present discussing and specially in absence of any other affidavit in the present writ proceeding.

In answer to our query, the learned Advocate-General could not tell us any reason as to why a counter-affidavit has not been filed on behalf of respondents 1 to 5. I am constrained to observe that if the School in question could be held to be an educational institution established by a minority within the meaning of Article 30, on the materials as they are and in absence of a counter-affidavit on behalf of respondents 1 to 5, an attempt to defeat the fundamental right to administer the School by the minority, in any event, should not have been made on behalf of respondents 1 to 5. The case made out by respondents 6 to 9 is not such as to defeat the claim of the petitioners if otherwise they were entitled to succeed. At one time they were members of the Managing Committee. They did not claim that they had made any contribution of money or land to the institution at any time. It is remarkable that they have taken upon themselves, ostensibly for a public cause but may be for a different reason, the burden to defeat the rights of the minority, if it could be held to be so, in administering the C. M. S. School.

It is a common place, as even stated by the learned Advocate-General that the Christian Missionaries have rendered yeoman service through their educational institutions of the kind with which we are dealing in this case by virtue of their efficient administration of such institutions. I am sorry to say that we have still to reach our cherished goal of having even an equally efficient administration of an educational institution with the governmental interference and the goal of an abler administration seems to be lost in remote future.

41. In my opinion, one short point also gives a complete answer to the contention of the learned Advocate-General. If the School was to be administered by the rules for the time being in force according to the deed of 1916 or 1919, the rules in force at the present moment are the 1964 Rules, rule 41 of which clearly shows that they do not apply to the Schools established and administered by the minorities whether based on religion or language. If this School could be held to have been established and administered by the minority, under the present Rules of 1964 even under the terms of the deeds of 1916 and 1919, it will be exempt from being governed under the said Rules. As I have said above, the School was administered by the Church Missionary Society or the Bhagalpur Diocese, some amount of interference was not tantamount to non-administration of the School by them and, therefore, under Rule 41, if otherwise they were entitled to the protection, I would have felt no difficulty in giving this protection to the C. M. S. School from interference with its administration on the second ground urged either on behalf of respondents 6 to 9 or by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the State. Mainly on the first point decided by me against the petitioners and somewhat on the incidental point decided by me against them, as stated above, I have come to the conclusion that the C. M. S. School is not an educational institution which can be held to have been established by a minority nor does it seem to be an educational institution of the kind which can be given protection under Article 30 of the Constitution.

Tara Kant Jha, for the Reference and the State; Thakur Gurusewak Singh (Amicus Curiae) against the Reference and for Appellants.

BAHADUR, J.:— This is a reference under Section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from the Sessions Judge of Purnea for the confirmation of the sentence of death imposed upon two persons, namely, Chukia Uraon and Birwa Uraon, on their conviction for the offence of murder under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code. Chukia Uraon and Birwa Uraon have also appealed from jail and their appeals are respectively numbered as criminal appeal No. 404 of 1968 and criminimal appeal No 403 of 1968. The reference and the two appeals have been heard together and they will be governed by this judgment. Mr. Thakur Gurusewak Singh has appeared in the case as an amicus curiae in support of the appeals.

2. It appears that Chukia Uraon is the younger brother of Dasu Uraon, the husband of Mosst Dasia (P. W. 5) of village Korgama within the jurisdiction of police station Kahtiar. Birwa Uraon is the son of the sister of Dasu Uraon. Dasu died about nine years before the alleged occurrence which took place on the 23rd of December, 1965 Dasu had left behind him his widow Dasia and a son named Shyam Lal Uraon (P. W. 1) On Dasu's death, his land came in possession of Mosst. Dasia who had them cultivated through her brother Tetar Uraon (P. W. 2). One Dewani who was a distant cousin of Shyam Lal Uraon (P. W. 1) assisted Mosst. Dasia in her cultivation. Chukia is said to have been creating obstruction in the way of Mosst Dasia in having her lands cultivated and barvested, after the death of her husband. Some litigation took place between Chukia and Dasia over the lands and a suit was pending between them at the time of the occurrence. The prosecution case is that at about 12 noon on the afore-mentioned date, namely, 23-12-1965, Budhu Uraon (P. W. 6), while he was taking rest in his house, heard a hulla and came out and proceeded towards the house of Chukia where he found Chukia with a blood-stained kudal in his hand and Birwa with a Pharsa fleeing away towards the west and found Tetar Uraon (P. W. 2), Shyam Lal Uraon (P. W. 1) and Hathi Uraon (P. W. 3) and others collected at the place of occurrence. On going there, he found his son Dewani fallen dead in a pool of blood on the ground. Budhu also noticed Tetar being injured who told him (Budhu) that his son Dewani had been killed by accused Chukia Uraon and Birwa Uraon who had fled at the arrival of the witnesses Budhu was also informed that Chukia had forcibly harvested the Tori crop of Mosst. Dasia over which there was some altercation between Dewani and Chukia as a result of which both the accused had killed his son. This was the information given by Budhu at the police station at 4 P.M. on the said date, which was the basis of the first information report and it was recorded by Ram Narain Singh (P. W. 10) who was officer-in-charge.

3. The prosecution case further is that on the date of occurrence Chukia along with Birwa had forcibly harvested the Tori crop in the morning and sent them to the house of Chukia upon which there was some exchange of hot words between Dewani and Chukia, after which Dewani and other persons returned to the house of Chukia and at about 12 noon both the accused persons came armed with Kudal and Pharsa and caused hurt to the various persons as stated by Budhu in his first information report.

4. The Sub-Inspector of police (P. W. 10), after recording the first information report, reached the place of occurrence the same evening at 7.50 P.M. and found it to be a field belonging to one Mathura Mahto on the contiguous west and backside of which was the house of one Khirdhari Mahto, also known as Girdhari. He found the dead body lying with his head towards south and feet towards north. He held inquest over the dead body and arranged to send the corpse for post-mortem examination. P. W. 10 examined some persons and stayed on the night at the place.

5. On the next date, 24-12-1965, he examined P Ws 3, 4 and some other persons and searched the houses of Birwa and Chukia, and recovered a blood-stained Kudal (Ext. 1) from the house of Birwa. He had on the previous day collected blood-stained earth from near the dead body. He also inspected the Tori field and prepared the sketch map which is Ext. 4. He had found P Ws 1, 2 and 5 to be injured and had sent them to Katiyar hospital. He had sent the blood-stained earth, blood-stained Kudal and blood-stained Charkhana half shirt and a dhoti to the Chemical Examiner for examination. He found village Korgama to be a scattered village where there were only about 8 houses near the place of occurrence. The village Korgama was also known as village Kelabari. After completing the investigation in due course, P. W. 10 submitted chargesheet against these two persons who are hereafter referred to as the appellants.

6. The defence of the appellants at the trial, as can be gathered from their statements under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and from the trend of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was that Dewani and Chukia were jointly in possession of the family lands and the Tori crops which had been barvested by the accused on the date of occurrence had been grown by Chukia and not by the widow of Dasu, namely, Mosst. Dasia. Their further plea was that the deceased Dewani was a wrestler type of man who had been engaged by Dasia for fighting with accused Chukia and that on the date of occurrence after the harvesting of the Tori crops, Dewani along with Tetar and Shyam Lal had gone to the house of Chukia and adopted a threatening attitude, which resulted in a serious altercation between them. Their further plea was that Dewani used to be engaged by the villagers in their quarrels and it is possible that he may have been killed in one of those encounters. The specific defence of Birwa was that he was not at all present in village Korgama on the date of occurrence and he denied the presence or the recovery of the blood-stained Kudal from his house.

7. The learned Judge on consideration of the evidence led by the prosecution came to the conclusion that the charge under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code had been established against the appellants. He further found that Chukia Uraon was also guilty under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code for causing hurt to P. W. 5 Mosst. Dasia; and Birwa Uraon was further guilty under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code for causing hurt to P. Ws. 1 and 2, namely, Shyam Lal Uraon and Tetar Uraon. The learned Judge, however, passed on separate sentence under the said count.

8. There can be no doubt that Dewani was brutally assaulted on the day in question as alleged by the prosecution. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses, namely, P. Ws. 1, 2, 3 and 4, clearly shows that Dewani had been assaulted which resulted in his death. Their evidence finds support from the medical evidence, namely, that of P. W. 12, Dr. S. S. Prasad who was at the relevant time the Civil Assistant Surgeon of Purnea Sadar Hospital. He held the post-mortem examination on the corpse of Dewani on 25-12-1965 and found the following nine ante-mortem injuries:

- II. Three incised wounds on left side of head, behind left ear:—
 - (a) 2"x1/2"x bone cut.
 - (b) 3"x1/2"x bone cut.
 - (c) 2 and half inches x 1/2"x bone cut.

Thick marks due to pressure of weapon were present at the end of each of the injuries contiguous to the injuries due to the heavy-cutting weapon used and were soiled with dry earth and mud.

2. Incised wound on the back of head 2 and half inches x 1/2"x bone cut and also fractured depressed in bone with the cut over the bone due to heavy-cutting weapon.

3. One punctured wound with incised margins 1/4"x1/6"x3/4" on left side of the neck by sharp pointed weapon.

4. Three punctured wounds with incised margins on left cheek:—

- (a) 1/4"x1/6"x bone fractured.
- (b) 1/2" x 1/4" x bone fractured.

(c) 1/2" x 1/6" x bone fractured, caused by sharp-pointed weapon.

5. Two incised wounds on back of left forearm in lower part above the wrist.

(a) 1/2" x 1/6" x bone fractured left radius.

(b) 1/2" x 1/6" x 1/4" with the pressure marks of the weapon connecting the two injuries in the same bone. This was due to heavy cutting weapon.

6. Incised wound on left calf 2 1/2" x 1/2" x 3/4" due to sharp cutting weapon.

7. A thick linear impression two inches long caused by a heavy cutting weapon.

8. Two superficial linear incised marks in upper part of right arm on its back and inner aspects:—

(a) 1/4" long.

(b) 1-1/6" long.

Both caused by heavy cutting weapon.

9. Incised wound on upper part of right arm on its back and inner aspects raising a slanting flat of skin 1" x 1/2" x 3/4" situated at a higher level than injury No. 8 caused by sharp cutting weapon.

On dissection, the membrane of brain was found cut at the site corresponding to injury No. 2. The brain was found injured. The time between death and the post-mortem examination was about two or three days, i.e., between 48 to 72 hours. In the opinion of the doctor, death was due to haemorrhage, shock and injuries caused to the vital organs. The injuries appeared to have been caused by a heavy cutting weapon which may have been by a Kudal. The doctor further stated that a Pharsa could cause both punctured and cut wounds if both the ends were pounced. It was elicited from him in his cross-examination that injury No. 3 could be caused by a bhala, if gently used. He further stated that if a Pharsa had no pointed end, it could not cause punctured wounds. The learned Judge has also considered this matter in great detail and has come to a finding that Dewani was murdered on the date as suggested by the prosecution. This part of the prosecution case is, therefore, clearly established and it is not necessary to deal further with this aspect of the matter.

9-11. The only question that requires consideration is whether these two appellants were the assailants of Dewani as also of the three other persons, namely, P. Ws. 1, 2 and 5. The evidence of the eye witnesses has, therefore, to be examined. (After examining the evidence of prosecution witnesses, his Lordship proceeded) If the evidence of these witnesses are accepted, as has been accepted by the trial Judge then there can be no doubt that the charges have been clearly established against these appellants

12. Learned counsel arguing the case for the appellants has raised a number of points which may now be noticed. His contention is that the prosecution has failed to establish the place of occurrence in the case and it is not known whether it was the angan of Dasia where the occurrence took place or whether at the place where the Pual was kept. The consistent evidence of the eye witnesses is that Dasia was assaulted by Chukia with a Kudal and when Dewani wanted to intervene, then the two accused persons ran up to him and when Dewani fled for his life, he was assaulted by them in the field of Mathura Mahto on the back of Khirdhari's house at a distance of half a rasi north-west of the house of Mosst. Dasia. This evidence finds full support from the evidence of the Investigating Officer who had occasion to inspect the place of occurrence as already stated in the earlier part of the judgment. He had also found the dead body to be lying close to the place. Learned counsel endeavoured to support his contention by taking us through the evidence of P W 1 where slight discrepancy appears in his evidence, but that has been clarified by the learned Judge. We have also examined the evidence of the other witnesses and I have no hesitation in holding that the place of occurrence has been established as alleged by the prosecution and the slight difference that appears from the evidence of P W 1 is not of material importance as the map clearly shows that the places are quite close to each other.

13. Learned counsel has then contended that the manner of occurrence has not been proved in this case and, therefore, the appellants are entitled to an acquittal. It is difficult to accept this contention as the witnesses are quite consistent in their evidence about the manner of occurrence also. This evidence can be divided into three parts, namely, the incident in the morning and then the assault on the three other persons followed by the chase and assault on Dewani and there is no serious discrepancy in the evidence of any of the eye witnesses so as to accept the submission made on behalf of the appellants

14. Learned counsel has also urged that none of the witnesses should be accepted as eye witnesses. In view of the reappraisal of the evidence of the witnesses, I am satisfied that the evidence of P Ws 1, 2, 3 and 4 has been rightly accepted to be the evidence of eye witnesses.

15. Lastly, learned counsel has urged that the application of Section 34 with Section 302 is erroneous and that it should be held that there is no evidence worth the name to sustain the conviction of these appellants for the murder of Dewani and for the assault on the three persons. I am not persuaded by this argument because on clear and consistent evidence of the eye witnesses there can be no doubt that the three persons, namely, P Ws 1, 2 and 5 had been assaulted as also Dewani had been seriously assaulted which resulted in his death as alleged by the prosecution. There is also clear evidence that there was enmity between Mosst Dasia and Chukia and Dewani was helping Dasia in her cultivation. It has been found that there was an incident in the morning and later in the day these two appellants came together armed concealing weapons in their clothes and they caused injuries to the three persons and then also pursued Dewani and caused injuries on his person. The common intention to kill Dewani of these two appellants which must have suddenly developed can, therefore, be gathered from their act, namely, their conduct and the weapons they had used and the injuries which they caused on Dewani. In this view of the matter, I am satisfied that they had common intention to kill Dewani and, therefore, the appellants have been rightly convicted under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code, which is affirmed. In view of the evidence the conviction of the appellants under S 324 of the Indian Penal Code, which is affirmed. In view of the evidence the conviction of the appellants under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code of Chukia for the injury on P. W 5, and of Birwa for the injury on P. Ws. 1 and 2, are also upheld.

16. There is, however, a question regarding the sentence which should be imposed upon the appellants for their conviction under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code. I have examined this matter very carefully and have also considered the reasons given by the learned Judge for imposing the sentence of death on them. I do not agree with the observation of the learned Judge that the murder was committed in a well planned manner. It is true that the appellants had pursued Dewani and then assaulted him and caused a number of injuries on his person, but it must also be borne in mind that there was admittedly enmity between Chukia and Mosst. Dasia over the land, and Birwa had also a grievance that his claims as a near relation were also being ignored. It will not be, therefore, unreasonable to hold that these persons being Uraon and being aged about 30 years each were liable to sudden accession of rage when they were not perhaps entirely responsible for their action. Having regard to these circumstances, I do not think that the extreme penalty provided by law is necessarily called for. I think, therefore, that on the facts and circumstances of this case, the ends of justice would be met by commuting their sentence to rigorous imprisonment for life.

17. For the foregoing reasons, the reference is discharged and the appeals are dismissed with the modification that the sentence of death imposed upon the two appellants is altered to one of rigorous imprisonment for life.

Parmeshwar Prasad Sinha and Arun Behari Mathur, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This application in revision is directed against an order of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, permitting the prosecution to cross-examine P. W. 10.

2. The case of the complainant-opposite party was that she was married to one Gultain Pasi of village Chatneshwar but she later developed intimacy with the petitioner and started residing with him since about one year before the filing of the complaint. Thereafter she became pregnant. Her further case is that the petitioner wanted her to agree to abortion, which she refused. Thereafter, the petitioner gave blows with his foot on the abdomen of the complainant and after she fell down, he further assaulted her and after retaining her box containing her belongings worth Rs. 525/-, he ousted her from the house.

After cognizance was taken on the complaint filed by the opposite Party, the petitioner was committed to the Court of Session for trial under Sections 312, 403 and 511 of the Indian Penal Code.

3. At the trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge, Jadu Pasi (P. W. 10) was tendered on behalf of the prosecution and was cross-examined on behalf of the petitioner on the 19th December, 1967. The prayer of the prosecution to cross-examine this witness was, however, rejected. Subsequently, a petition was filed on behalf of the prosecution by the Assistant District Prosecutor on the 20th December, 1967, for permission to cross-examine P. W. 10, which has been allowed by the order giving rise to the present application.

4. Mr. Parmeshwar Prasad Sinha, on behalf of the petitioner, has urged that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, having rejected the prayer for cross-examination of P. W. 10 on the 19th December, 1967, should not have allowed the same prayer on the 13th January, 1968, on the same set of facts. It is true that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge rejected the prosecution prayer for cross-examining P. W. 10 on the 19th December, 1967, which he has allowed on the 13th January, 1968, for the reasons stated in the order. The order passed by the Assistant Sessions Judge on the 19th December, 1967, not being a judgment within the meaning of Section 369 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no error seems to have been committed by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge in ordering for recall of the witness for his cross-examination. After all, the earlier order being in the nature of an interlocutory order it was open to the court below, in the ends of justice, to order for cross-examination of P. W. 10.

5. Mr. Sinha next urged that as P. W. 10 was not examined at any earlier stage and before the Sessions Court also he was only tendered, there was no previous statement of the witness from which it could be said that he had been gained over and there was no occasion for declaring him hostile. It will be relevant at this stage to refer to Section 154 of the Evidence Act, which lays down —

"The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which may be put in cross-examination by the adverse party."

From a bare reading of the aforesaid section it is apparent that there is nothing in Section 154 of the Evidence Act to warrant an inference that only when any previous statement of the witness is available and if he is alleged to have departed from that that the court can declare that witness hostile. To accept this extreme submission of the learned counsel is to read in the section such limitation, on the power of the court to allow cross-examination of a witness, by the party calling the witness, which is not there. This will very much limit its scope.

In the instant case, P. W. 10, in cross-examination on behalf of the petitioner on the 19th December, 1967, stated that the complainant was living with the petitioner only for the last about six months and prior to that she was living with her husband Gultain Pasi. It was on this account that the prosecution prayed to the court for cross-examining this witness.

6. Learned Counsel has urged that it is to do away with the effect of the statement which is advantageous to petitioner that permission has been sought on behalf of the prosecution to cross-examine this witness. Simply because permission has been granted to cross-examine a witness by itself, is not enough to discredit the witness. It will be useful to refer in this connection to the case of Sarjug Prasad v. The State, AIR 1959 Pat 66, wherein the legal position in this regard has been enunciated as follows —

"When a public prosecutor declared a prosecution witness to be hostile and cross-examines him after taking the Court's permission, it merely amounts to a declaration by him that the witness is adverse or unfriendly to the prosecution and not that the witness is untruthful. Reference may be made in this connection to Emperor v Haradhan, AIR 1933 Pat 517. The true rule is that either party may rely upon the evidence of such a witness, and the Court can come to its own conclusion after a consideration of the whole of his evidence."

That a party can cross-examine even a witness tendered by it cannot be disputed in view of the Bench decision of this Court in the case of Manzurul Haque v State of Bihar, 1958 Pat LR 18 = (AIR 1958 Pat 422).

7. No other point was urged.

8. In the result, there is no merit in this application and it is accordingly dismissed.

MKS/D.V.C.

Application dismissed.

a compromise is primarily one of fact and if the parties to the litigation are not at issue on that particular point, in my view, the Court is not competent to go into that matter and say that the said decree was not based on a compromise. The function of the Court is to give decision on a disputed question of fact. But when both the parties are agreed about a particular fact, the Court cannot take upon itself to say, in the first instance, that there is such a dispute and then proceed to settle it. It was contended by the learned counsel for the petitioner that the statements of the parties in the present divorce proceedings should be ruled out of consideration under the provisions of section 92 of Evidence Act. The said section has nothing to do with the point in dispute. In the application under section 9, the statements of the parties were recorded and thereafter the Court passed the order after which a decree followed. The present statements made by the parties in the divorce proceedings do not in any way contradict, vary, add to or subtract from their earlier statements or from the order or decree of the Court passed thereafter. In the present statements, nothing is being said by the parties to contradict, vary, add to or subtract from their previous statements. Both the parties are agreed that the said decree was based on a compromise. At the utmost what could be said was that they merely explained that the earlier decree was passed on the basis of a compromise.

40. It was suggested on behalf of the appellant that the parties, in the instant case, did not jointly make a request in writing to the Court that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights be passed.

41. All that is needed is that the parties should settle their differences and make statements before the Court. It is then for the Court to act on those statements and pass a decree on their basis. This was precisely what was done in the instant case. In the order that followed, it was specifically mentioned that the petition for restitution of conjugal rights was accepted in accordance with the statements of the parties. In the decree also that followed the order, the same thing was repeated. That clearly shows that but for the statements of the parties, the petition under section 9 would not have been granted, unless, of course, the husband had been able to prove, by reliable evidence, that the respondent had withdrawn from his society without any reasonable excuse and, admittedly no such evidence had been adduced by him, so much so that even the issues had not been framed in the case.

42. It was then argued by the appellant that the statements made by the parties were the result of the efforts of reconciliation having been made by the Court under the provisions of S. 23 (2) of the Hindu Marriage Act. The court did its duty in trying to bring the parties together and as it had succeeded in doing so, the parties, as a consequence, made those statements. The decree that followed, according to the learned counsel, was thus not based on any consent, but was the outcome of the efforts of reconciliation.

43. This contention has also no merit. If the suggestion is that the Court succeeded in reconciling the parties in bringing them together and persuading the wife to go and live with her husband, then the only proper course for the Court was to dismiss the petition for restitution of conjugal rights as having become infructuous, because the wife had agreed to go back to the husband and that is what he wanted. If, on the other hand, the result of the efforts of reconciliation on behalf of the Court was that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights be passed, then obviously since the wife agreed to such a course, the said decree was based on consent, because otherwise in law, a decree under section 9 could not have been made, unless the Court was satisfied, on evidence, that the wife had withdrawn from the society of her husband without any reasonable excuse and such evidence was, admittedly, not produced before the Court. The object of sub-section (2) of section 23 is not that if the Court is successful in reconciling both the parties, then it is bound to pass a decree under the Act. The idea of reconciliation is that the parties should not break their home. It obviously could not be the intention of the legislature that the reconciliation should result in a decree which, if not satisfied, might further end in proceedings for divorce. Reconciliation naturally does not mean that one of the parties should be provided with a handle for starting divorce proceedings which might end in breaking the matrimonial home.

44. In England, if such a situation, as in the instant case, had arisen, two courses were open to the Courts to deal with the matter. After reconciliation, either the proceedings would have been stayed at the instance of the wife or else if the Court was not satisfied that the wife really wanted to go back to the husband, the husband's petition would have been tried on merits. In India, the procedure for staying the proceedings is not there. Either the petition in such circumstances would have been dismissed as having become infructuous or the matter would have been tried on merits. In the present case, the petition was neither dismissed as infructuous nor was the controversy between the parties tried on merits. If a decree has followed, in such a situation as was the case in hand, there is no other conclusion possible except this that the said decree was based on the consent of the parties. The Court could not otherwise make such a decree, unless the husband had produced evidence on the basis of which the Court could have been satisfied that the wife had withdrawn from the society of her spouse without any reasonable excuse. As I have already said, no such evidence was adduced in the instant case and the Court was not competent to pass the said decree. If the Court knew that under the law, a decree under section 9 could not be passed on the basis of a compromise between the parties it would have framed issues and tried the case on merits because there was no other course open for it except to satisfy itself about the existence of the ground mentioned in section 9 and then pass a decree if it was so satisfied. If the Court, at that time did not believe that the wife was genuinely interested in going back to the husband, it would not have passed the decree but would have resolved the controversy on merits. Likewise the husband in such a situation, would also have immediately come forward saying that he did not believe a word of what the wife was saying and would have further stated that she was merely wanting to get his petition dismissed and would have insisted on the trial of the dispute on merits. The Court, it appears was under the impression, rightly or wrongly, that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights had to be passed when the parties had agreed to such a course and it actually did make such a decree, without having satisfied itself about the ground mentioned in section 9 for passing such a decree. If it knew at that time that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights could not be passed on the basis of a compromise between the parties he would have insisted on the trial of the petition on merits and then passed a decree and that also if it was satisfied about the ground mentioned in section 9, otherwise it would have dismissed the petition. It could not be said that the trial Judge passed the decree for restitution of conjugal rights in the instant case, because he did not believe that the intention of the wife to go back and live with her husband was genuine. If that had been so, he would have tried the husband's petition under section 9 on merits.

45. In view of what I have said above, I have not the least hesitation in holding that the decree dated 18-5-1960 was a consent decree.

46. Having held that the said decree was a consent decree, the next question that requires consideration is whether such a decree is a nullity or not. If it is a nullity, then it will be taken as if it does not exist in the eye of law and it can be completely ignored. In that contingency, it could not form the basis of divorce proceedings on the ground that it had not been complied with within a period of two years from the date on which it was passed. The Letters Patent Appeal in that case would have to be dismissed, because the husband would not be able to get a decree of divorce on its strength.

47. When does a decree passed by a Court become a nullity? This is the point which needs decision. In Wharton's Law Lexicon, the word 'nullity' has been defined as "a thing which is null and void, an error in litigation which is incurable." According to Concise Oxford Dictionary, 'nullity' means "nothingness, a mere nothing, a non-entity." Undoubtedly, a thing which is a nullity will be treated as non est and having no existence in the eye of law. A decree, in my opinion, becomes a nullity if either the statute under which it is passed expressly declares that such a decree cannot be made and if made, it will be treated as a nullity or the Court, in which the proceedings had been taken which ultimately resulted in that decree, had no jurisdiction to try that matter. It is undisputed that in the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (hereinafter called the Act) under the provisions of which a petition for restitution of conjugal rights is made, it is nowhere laid down that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights cannot be passed on the consent of the parties and if so passed, it becomes a nullity. Therefore, one thing is clear that the statute, under which such decrees are made, does not prescribe that a consent decree of this kind is a nullity. Such a decree, therefore, is not expressly declared to be a nullity by the statute. Learned counsel for the respondent did not bring to our notice any other statute whereunder such a decree had been declared a nullity.

48. Now, what do we mean when we say that a court has no jurisdiction to try a matter? This question has been answered by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in AIR 1921 Cal 34 (FB), where it was observed:

"The authority to decide a cause at all and not the decision rendered therein is what makes up jurisdiction and when there is jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, the decision of all other questions arising in the case is but an exercise of that Jurisdiction." Jurisdiction merely means authority to decide. Had the Subordinate Judge, who passed the decree, authority to decide the petition for restitution of conjugal rights made under section 9 before him? According to section 19 of the Act, every petition under the Act was to be presented to the District Court within the local limits of whose ordinary original civil jurisdiction the marriage was solemnised or the husband or wife resided or last resided together. "District Court" has been defined in S. 3 (b) of the Act. It means "in any area for which there is a city civil court, that Court and in any other area the principal civil court of original jurisdiction and includes any other civil court which may be specified by the State Government, by notification in the Official Gazette, as having jurisdiction in respect of the matters dealt with in this Act". The learned Judge who was dealing with that petition, had been empowered by the State Government to deal with all the matters dealt with under the Act. Indisputably therefore, he had the authority to decide the matter and he had the necessary jurisdiction.

49. Learned counsel for the respondent submitted that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass a consent decree under section 9 of the Act. According to section 9, when either the husband or the wife had without reasonable excuse, withdrawn from the society of the other, the aggrieved party could apply, by petition, for restitution of conjugal rights, and the court on being satisfied of the truth of the statements made in such petition and that there was no legal ground why the application should not be granted, could decree restitution of conjugal rights. According to the learned counsel, before the Court could grant a decree under section 9, it had to be satisfied that the wife in the instant case, had withdrawn from the society of the husband without reasonable excuse. No such evidence had been produced by the husband and, therefore, there was no basis on which the learned Judge could have been so satisfied. His satisfaction with regard to the truth of the statements made in the petition filed by the husband, was a condition precedent for passing the decree. Then again under section 23 of the Act, the Court had to be satisfied that any of the grounds for granting relief existed and further that the petition was not presented or prosecuted in collusion with the respondent and then and in such a case, but not otherwise, the court could pass a decree. In the instant case, according to the learned counsel, there was absolutely no material before the learned Judge on the basis of which he could be satisfied that the wife had withdrawn from the society of the husband without reasonable excuse and that any of the grounds for the granting of the decree for restitution of conjugal rights existed. On the other hand, there was evidence before the Court on which it could be said that the petition under Section 9 of the Act was being prosecuted in collusion with the wife. Under these circumstances, according to the learned counsel, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

50. Learned counsel for the respondent, in my view, is confusing the lack of jurisdiction of a Court to deal with a matter with the erroneous exercise of that jurisdiction. If a Court has either mis-interpreted or mis-construed certain provisions of the Act or has ignored them or not complied with them before passing a decree, all that could be said was that he had not properly exercised the jurisdiction vested in him and thus given an erroneous decision in the case. It could not, however, be said that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the case. A court, as is often said, can decide rightly as well as wrongly, but if its decision is wrong, it cannot be held that the court lacked inherent jurisdiction to deal with that matter. In this connection, Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in Hriday Nath Roy's case, AIR 1921 Cal 34 (FB), has again observed:

"Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine and it does not depend upon the regularity of the exercise of that power or upon the correctness of the decision pronounced, for the power to decide necessarily carries with it the power to decide wrongly as well as rightly."

Even assuming that the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent was correct that no decree of restitution of conjugal rights could be passed on the basis of consent of both the parties, and that there was no material on the record in the instant case on which the court could be satisfied that the wife had withdrawn from the society of her husband without reasonable excuse and further that the petition under section 9 was being prosecuted with the collusion of the wife, it could not, in my opinion, be said that the decree ultimately passed in the case was without jurisdiction and, therefore, a nullity. It could, at the most, be held that the decree was erroneous or contrary to law. If that was so, it could be set aside by taking appropriate proceedings by way of appeal under section 28 of the Act or by a separate suit, if one is competent under the law. If no action was taken, that decree though erroneous, had become final between the parties. Such a decree would be considered to be valid for all purposes. It is capable of execution and the executing court would not be able to go behind it. It can be set up as a defence in a subsequent suit. It can form the basis of another suit or proceeding if certain rights flow therefrom. But it cannot be challenged or reversed in collateral proceedings. A decree which is void or which is a nullity, on the other hand, could be completely ignored, as if it never existed and it could be challenged even in collateral proceedings.

51. The Supreme Court in Kiran Singh v. Chaman Paswan, AIR 1954 SC 340, observed that it was a fundamental principle that a decree passed by a court without jurisdiction was a nullity and that its invalidity could be set up whenever and wherever it was sought to be endorsed or relied upon even at the stage of execution or even in collateral proceedings.

52. Shamsher Bahadur J. and myself bad, on an earlier occasion, to deal with a somewhat similar problem in Amar Sarjit Singh v. State of Punjab, Civil Writ No 575 of 1966 D/- 3-11-1967 (Pun). The following observations in that judgment prepared by Shamsher Bahadur J. could be quoted with advantage:

"The learned Advocate-General, on behalf of the State, has submitted that the power to decide a matter carried with it the right of deciding both rightly or wrongly. It is only the absence of jurisdiction vested in an authority that makes an order passed by it a nullity. If an authority has a power to pass an order and passes wrongly, it has only erred in the exercise of its undoubted power and the wrong or erroneous decision is only reversible at the instance of the appellate or revisional authority. . . . The Advocate General in his submission has sought the support of the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in ILR 48 Cal 133 : AIR 1921 Cal 34 (FB), where in the leading judgment of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Acting Chief Justice, the following passage of the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in (1900) 27 Ind App 216, was approved:

"A court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right, and if that course is not taken, the decision, however, wrong, cannot be disturbed."

As put by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, "jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine, and it does not depend either upon the regularity of the exercise of that power or upon the correctness of the decision pronounced, for the power to decide necessarily carried with it the power to decide wrongly as well as rightly" As observed by the learned Judge, "we must not thus overlook the cardinal position that in order that jurisdiction may be exercised, there must be a case legally before the Court and a hearing as well as a determination." The jurisdiction, according to the Full Bench decision, may have to be considered with reference to place, value and nature of the subject-matter, and the power of a tribunal may be exercised within defined territorial limits. The gist of the matter, as observed by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, is that "the authority to decide a cause at all and not the decision rendered therein is what makes jurisdiction; and when there is jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, the decision of all other questions arising in the case is but an exercise of that jurisdiction" The existence or the continuance of jurisdiction is not dependent upon the correctness of the determination. In AIR 1962 SC 1621, the Supreme Court through Mr. Justice S. K. Das, observed "Jurisdiction means authority to decide whenever a judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal is empowered or required to enquire into a question of law or fact for the purpose of giving a decision on it, its findings thereon cannot be impeached collaterally or on an application for certiorari but are binding until reversed on appeal. . . . The question whether a tribunal has jurisdiction depends not on the truth or falsehood of the facts into which it has to enquire, or upon the correctness of its findings on these facts, but upon their nature, and it is determinable at the commencement, not at the conclusion, of the inquiry."

Giving instances of the absence of jurisdiction it was stated by the Supreme Court at page 1629 that:

"A tribunal may lack jurisdiction if it is improperly constituted, or if it fails to observe certain essential preliminaries to the inquiry. But it does not exceed its jurisdiction by basing its decision upon an incorrect determination of any question that it is empowered or required (i.e. has jurisdiction) to determine."

A similar principle was enunciated in an earlier Supreme Court decision in Ebrahim Aboobakar v. Custodian General, AIR 1952 SC 319, where Chief Justice Mahajan, speaking for the Court, said:

"Want of jurisdiction may arise from the nature of the subject-matter so that the inferior Court might not have authority to enter on the inquiry or upon some part of it. . . . But once it is held that the Court has jurisdiction but while exercising it, it made a mistake, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right inasmuch as a Court has jurisdiction to decide rightly as well as wrongly."

Even when a question which falls within the powers of a tribunal is decided wrongly, it becomes binding on the principle of constructive res judicata. In other words, a wrong decision given on a question which the tribunal undoubtedly has the power to determine is not a question which is at large or open for determination for all times."

In view of what I have said above, I would hold that a consent decree for restitution of conjugal rights passed under the Act, would not be a nullity and when the same has become final between the parties, it can form the basis of divorce proceedings.

53. I want to make it clear that in the present case it is unnecessary for me to decide as to whether a court is competent to pass a consent decree in a matrimonial cause under the Hindu Marriage Act and whether such a decree, if passed, would be erroneous and contrary to law or not. For answering the question whether a consent decree was a nullity or not, I have assumed that a decree of that kind could not be passed under the Act.

54. It may be stated that during the course of his arguments, learned counsel for the respondent also made a reference to a Bench decision of this Court to which I was a party in 1962-64 Pun LR 1091 where it was held that before a valid decree for ejectment was passed against a tenant, the satisfaction of the court as to the existence of one or the other ground mentioned under section 13 of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952, was essential and further that an ejectment decree passed only on the statement of parties without the Rent Controller satisfying himself on merits, was contrary to the statutory provisions of the Act and was a nullity. In that case, the main judgment was prepared by Bedi, J. and while agreeing with my learned brother that the revision petition should be accepted, I had added a few words and towards the end I had stated that the decree for eviction was, consequently, a nullity and was not enforceable. I must confess that the word 'nullity' therein, had been used by me rather loosely or inadvertently and the only justification for doing so, which I could now give, was that the precise matter, as to whether the decree in that case was a nullity or merely erroneous and contrary to law, was perhaps not debated before us. It would be apparent from the judgment of Bedi, J. that the respondents' counsel in that case, had raised a contention that if it be held that the decree was defective and a nullity, it could have been challenged in appeal and not in execution proceedings. After giving certain facts, the learned Judge, however, had held that the respondents were estopped from raising the above objection, because they could not blow hot and cold in the same breath. In the circumstances of that case, I should have held that the decree was erroneous and contrary to law and not a nullity and it could be executed. I may also point out that in a later decision in 1964-66 Pun LR 347, where the same point was involved, though I had followed the Bench decision in K. L. Bansal's case and held the decree to be a nullity, but while determining the next question, namely whether such an objection could be taken in the executing court or a separate suit had to be filed for that purpose, I observed:

"It is undisputed that an Executing Court cannot go behind the decree and is bound to execute it. It cannot refuse to do so, because either the decree is against law or contravenes the provisions of any statute. The only exception to this rule is that when the decree is passed by a Court, which had no jurisdiction to pass it by reason of the inherent defect of jurisdiction in the court passing it, the Executing Court can ignore it (see in this connection Full Bench decision in Pirji Safdar Ali v. Ideal Bank Ltd., AIR 1949 East Punj 94). The Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 340, has observed thus—It is a fundamental principle that a decree passed by a court without jurisdiction is a nullity, and that its invalidity could be set up whenever and wherever it is sought to be enforced or relied upon, even at the stage of execution and even in collateral proceedings. A defect of jurisdiction, whether it is pecuniary or territorial or whether it is in respect of the subject-matter of the action, strikes at the very authority of the court to pass any decree, and such a defect cannot be cured even by consent of parties."

"The present case is not covered by the exceptions in the above-mentioned authority, because the Court had jurisdiction to pass the decree."

This would show that I was of the view that such a decree could not be ignored by the executing court as the court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to do so.

55. With these observations, I agree that the appeal be accepted, the decree of the learned Single Judge reversed and that of the trial Judge restored, but with no order as to costs.

ORDER OF THE COURT

56. In view of the majority decision, it is held that if a consent decree for restitution of conjugal rights under section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, is passed, it will not be a nullity. If it is not challenged in appeal or by way of other remedy available under the law and becomes final. It cannot be ignored and can form the basis of divorce proceedings under section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955

57. It is however, unanimously decided that this appeal be accepted, the decree of the learned Single Judge reversed and that of the trial Judge granting dissolution of marriage by divorce restored but with no order as to costs.

Regular Second Appeal No 1503 of 1965, D/- 18-3-1969, against decree of Dist J Ferozpur, D/- 1-10-1965

Tenancy Laws — Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953), S. 19-A — Does not bar pre-emption suit by landlord holding maximum permissible area. (1967-69 Pun LR 319, Overruled).

Section 19-A of Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act does not create a bar in the way of a land-owner already holding his maximum permissible area under the Act from instituting a suit for pre-emption of land and obtaining a decree for its possession.

It is only when the matter reaches the stage of acquiring possession by depositing the pre-emption amount under R 14 of Order 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and of obtaining possession of the land in execution of the decree, that the bar of S 19-A comes into effect, if at that time the decree-holder already holds the maximum permissible area allowed to him by the Ceiling Act. (Para 10)

Section 19-A has not deprived a big land-owner either of his primary or inherent right to the offer of agricultural land which is intended to be sold nor of the secondary or remedial right to follow the thing sold. It is only the third part of the right of pre-emption i.e. his right of substitution in place of the vendee that has been affected by Section 19-A. The right of substitution is the right to acquire the property sold, and a successful pre-emptor acquires the property sold, for the first time when he deposits the pre-emption money.

(Para 10)

There is nothing in Section 19-A which takes away even by necessary intend-ment the ordinary jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit by a big land-owner for possession of agricultural land in exercise of his right of pre-emption. There is no doubt that if the provisions of Section 19-A stood as an absolute bar in all circumstances to the successful execution of a decree for pre-emption the Court could not possibly be asked to indulge in a mere pastime to pass a decree which would be incapable of execution. But there can be more than one eventualities in which a decree passed in favour of a big land-owner may be successfully executed by such a plaintiff-decree-holder without offending Section 19-A if he ceases to be a big land-owner on the date on which he seeks to acquire title to the property in dispute or wants to obtain its possession. 1967-69 Pun LR 319 Overruled, AIR 1966 Punj 310 and 1965 Cur LJ 519 Rel. on; Case law discussed.

Harnam Singh Wasu, Sr. Advocate with B S Wasu and L. S. Wasu, for Appellants; M L Sethi Sr Advocate with N L Dhillon, for Respondents.

NARULA, J. The solitary question which calls for decision in this reference to the Full Bench is whether section 19-A of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953) as subsequently amended (hereinafter called the Ceiling Act)

creates a bar in the way of a land-owner already holding his maximum permissible area under the Act from instituting a suit and obtaining a decree for possession by pre-emption. The circumstances in which this question has arisen may first be surveyed briefly. One Gurmel Singh sold to Mohna Ram and other respondents 237 Kanals and 2 Marlas of agricultural land for Rupees 22,945/-. Gurdev Singh and his three brothers, the plaintiffs claiming to be the sons of the brother of the father of the vendor, filed the suit from which the present appeal has arisen, for possession of the said land by pre-emption. In paragraph 2 of their written statement, the vendees took a defence to the suit in the following terms:

"In reply to the contents of paragraph No. 2 of the petition of plaint it is submitted that all the plaintiffs have been owners and in possession of more than 30 standard acres of land each prior to the sale of the land in suit. Even if the least area of the land in dispute be added to the land already owned and possessed by them, the area of each of them would exceed 30 standard acres. As such, no plaintiff has got the right of pre-emption regarding the land, in suit, sold to the defendants. None of the plaintiffs is entitled to file a suit for pre-emption against the defendants."

2. By his judgment, dated September 4, 1964, the Subordinate Judge, Fazilka, dismissed the suit for pre-emption on the finding that though the plaintiffs were proved to be sons of the father's brother of the vendor, their right to pre-empt the sale had been taken away by section 19-A of the Ceiling Act, as each of the plaintiffs owned more than thirty standard acres of land on the date of sale of the land in dispute. The learned Subordinate Judge held that inasmuch as section 19-A precluded the purchase of land in excess of the permissible area, the plaintiffs could not claim that they had any preferential or primary right to purchase land in violation of the provisions of that section. Whereas the appeal preferred by plaintiffs-appellants other than Gurtej Singh was dismissed, the appeal of Gurtej Singh plaintiff was allowed to the extent of 3 standard acres and 14 units out of the land in dispute on the finding that he was a small land-owner inasmuch as he owned only 26 standard acres and 2 units of land which was less than his permissible area by 3 standard acres and 14 units.

3. Before Shri Sant Ram Garg, District Judge, Ferozepore, it was conceded on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that acquisition of agricultural land in exercise of the right of pre-emption amounted to "acquisition" of land within the meaning of Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act. The Division Bench judgment of this Court in Bhupinder Singh v. Smt. Surinder Kaur, 67 Pun LR 735 : (AIR 1966 Punj 310) was cited before the District Court, and was noticed in the judgment of that Court. In the face of the binding Division Bench judgment of this Court, the learned District Judge entertained the argument to side-track the issue, and held that the point canvassed before him had not been raised before the Bench of this Court, and that, therefore, what had to be seen was whether at the time of the sale each of the plaintiffs had a cause of action to acquire more agricultural land by pre-emption or not. Thus having evaded the impact of the decision of the High Court on the instant case, the first appellate Court went into the question of the individual holding of each of the plaintiffs-appellants and partially allowed the appeal in favour of Gurtej Singh plaintiff-appellant to the extent indicated above. Regarding the manner in which the learned District Judge avoided following the Division Bench judgment of this Court which fully covered the point in issue, we need not say anything more in this judgment than express our strong disapproval of his conduct in this matter which conduct lacks judicial propriety.

4. Not satisfied with the decision of the first appellate Court on the pure question of law referred to above, the plaintiffs came up to this Court in Regular Second Appeal 1503 of 1965. After hearing the counsel for the appellants to some extent, my Lord Mahajan, J. before whom the appeal originally came up for hearing noticed the conflict between Division Bench judgments of this Court (Dulat and Mahajan JJ.) in 67 Pun LR 735 : AIR 1966 Punj 310 and in Mangla v. Sukhminder Singh (minor) 1965 Cur LJ 519, on the one hand and in the Bench decision of the Court (S. B. Capoor and Gurdev Singh, JJ.) in Kartar Singh v. Ghukar Singh 1967-69 Pun LR 319, on the other, and therefore, directed that it was in the fitness of things that the matter may be examined afresh by a Full Bench in order to finally settle as to which of the two views expressed in the above cases was the correct one. It is in pursuance of the said order of reference of my learned Brother, dated March 27, 1967, that this case has been placed before us for deciding the above-said question.

5. Section 4 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913) as subsequently amended (hereinafter referred to as the Pre-emption Act) which confers the right of pre-empting a sale, is in the following terms:

"The right of pre-emption shall mean the right of a person to acquire agricultural land or village immovable property or urban immovable property in preference to other persons, and it arises in respect of such land only in the case of sales and in respect of such property only in the case of sales or of foreclosures of the right to redeem such property.

Nothing in this section shall prevent a Court from holding that an alienation purporting to be other than a sale is in effect a sale."

Out of the three categories of property mentioned in section 4, we are concerned in this case with agricultural land. Section 5 contains exceptions to the right of pre-emption conferred by section 4. Regarding agricultural land it is stated in clause (b) of section 5 that no right of pre-emption shall exist in respect of such land being waste land reclaimed by the vendee. Section 6 provides inter alia that a right of pre-emption shall exist in respect of agricultural land subject to the provisions of clause (b) of section 5. It further states that "every such right (right of pre-emption) shall be subject to all the provisions and limitations in this Act contained." Section 8 authorises the State Government to declare by notification that in any local area or with respect to any sale or class of sales, no right of pre-emption or only such limited right as the State Government may specify shall exist. Section 9 excludes from the purview of exercise of right of pre-emption sales made by or to Government or by or to any local authority, or to any company under the Land Acquisition Act. A list of persons in whom right of pre-emption vests in respect of sales of agricultural land is given in order of preference in section 15 of the Pre-emption Act. As the sale in the instant case was by a sole owner, the right of pre-emption claimed by the appellants was obviously under sub-clause "Secondly" of clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 15, which provides that the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land shall vest where the sale is by a sole owner in the brother or brother's son of the vendor.

6. Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act runs as follows—

"(1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, custom, usage, contract or agreement, from and after the commencement of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Ordinance, 1958, no person, whether as land-owner or tenant, shall acquire or possess by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, which with or without the land already owned or held by him shall in the aggregate exceed the permissible area:

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to lands belonging to registered co-operative societies formed for purposes of co-operative farming, if the land owned by an individual member of the society does not exceed the permissible area

(2) Any transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement made in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be null and void."

Whereas the appellants claim that Section 19-A (quoted above) merely bars the actual acquisition of title to or possession of land by a plaintiff, who is not a small land-owner though he may take all preliminary steps for acquiring such title or possession such as filing a suit for recovery of possession, and even obtaining a decree in that suit, it has been contended on behalf of the respondents that S. 19-A imposes a disqualification on a big land-owner from making any such claim on the basis of a right of pre-emption. The question as to which of the two contentions is correct came up for consideration for the first time before a Division Bench of this Court (Dulat and Mahajan, JJ.) in Bhupinder Singh's case, 67 Pun LR 725 = (AIR 1966 Punj 310) (Supra) Dulat, J., who prepared the judgment of the Division Bench, made the following observations before entering into the merits of the legal controversy:—

"It does appear and is not disputed before us that the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, Section 19-A, does prohibit the acquisition of land by an individual beyond the permissible area which admittedly is 30 standard acres, and, if we could be persuaded that the effect of the decree granted to the pre-emptor in this case is that the pre-emptor will necessarily acquire more than 30 standard acres, we would refrain from granting such a decree."

The learned Judge then referred to the scope of a pre-emption decree in the following terms—

"The pre-emption decree merely says that in case the amount in question is deposited by a certain date the pre-emptor would be entitled to possession, and it is impossible to say at the time of passing the decree whether the pre-emptor will or will not come to own the land for it can just as well happen, in case the pre-emptor chooses not to deposit the money or is for various reasons unable to do so, that the suit may stand dismissed."

In view of this situation, the Bench held that it was unable to hold as a matter of law that the granting of a pre-emption decree violates or has the effect of violating the provisions contained in S. 19-A of the Ceiling Act and that being so, the Bench held that there seemed to be no reason why a pre-emptor should be debarred from obtaining a pre-emption decree in the terms in which it is framed. The argument of the vendee to the effect that it could be presumed that a pre-emptor would take advantage of the decree and by taking possession of the land covered by the decree he would come to own and possess more than he is entitled to under the law, was repelled by the Division Bench on the ground that the contention amounts to anticipating an event which may never come about, for it can just, as well happen that by the time the pre-emptor comes to deposit the money in Court, he may have parted with all or a substantial part of his own holding. For the foregoing reasons it was held that the question whether the pre-emptor will or will not at any time hold more than the land he is allowed to hold under Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act, can only be decided when, after having deposited the pre-emption money in Court, he seeks assistance of the Court to attain possession, because only if he does get possession of more than the permissible area will the law be violated.

The same question again arose before the same Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mangla 1965 Cur LJ 519 (supra). It was contended before the Bench that what has to be seen is whether the pre-emptor had a right of pre-emption when he filed the suit, and whether that position was maintained at the time when the decree was granted in his favour. After referring to the earlier judgment of the Court in Bhupinder Singh's case, 67 Pun LR 735 = (AIR 1966 Punj 310) the learned Judges disposed of the question in the following words.—

“Ownership passes only after the terms of the decree are complied with. It is, therefore, not right to say that by the granting of a pre-emption decree the pre-emptor becomes the owner of the land he is seeking to pre-empt. The decree is merely contingent and comes into force when the pre-emption amount is deposited in Court and certainly not before this so that there is no way of finding out at the time of the decree whether the pre-emptor will ultimately become the owner of the land in question or not. To say, therefore, that the pre-emption decree in the present case will make the plaintiff pre-emptor the owner of more than permissible area of land, seems to us entirely wrong and an anticipation unwarranted by law. Mr. Aggarwal does suggest that a pre-emption decree should be taken to vest the property in the pre-emptor but this has not been the view of the Courts and the Supreme Court decision in Bishan Singh v. Khazan Singh, AIR 1958 SC 838 makes it quite clear that a pre-emptor does not become the owner of the land and is not substituted for the owner till the terms of the decree are complied with. The Supreme Court has in this connection approved the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Deonandan v. Ramdhari, AIR 1916 PC 179 expressing the same view, namely that the actual substitution takes place when possession is taken under the decree. Nothing happens at the date of the decree and the question, whether any violation of Section 19-A of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act has or has not taken place, cannot be determined at the time of the granting of a pre-emption decree and that question has to be deferred, in our opinion, to the time of the execution of the decree, for only then it can be found out whether the decree-holder seeks to acquire more than the area permitted by Section 19-A of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act. On this view of the matter it is not possible for us to disturb the conclusion reached by the learned Single Judge that the pre-emption decree in this case is not violative of any provision of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act.”

7. Somewhat different view of the matter was taken by the Division Bench of S. B. Capoor and Gurdev Singh, JJ. in Kartar Singh's case, 1967-69 Pun LR 319 (supra). After noticing the earlier Division Bench judgments in Bhupinder Singh's case, 67 Pun LR 735 = (AIR 1966 Punj 310) and in the case of Mangla, 1965 Cur LJ 519, and after referring to the provisions of Section 4 of the Pre-emption Act, the learned Judges found that both the previous decisions were distinguishable on facts, and that the observations of the Court in those earlier cases could not apply to the case of Kartar Singh, 1967-69 Pun LR 319 as Kartar Singh plaintiff was, on the date of the institution of the suit, already in possession of more than the permissible area, and it was, therefore, not open to him to acquire any further agricultural land by transfer etc. without violating the provisions of Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act. In a way the Bench agreed with the contention which is now sought to be advanced before us by Mr. Madan Lal Sethi, the learned counsel for the respondents, that a plaintiff cannot institute a suit for possession in exercise of his right of pre-emption if on the date of the sale which is sought to be pre-empted, the plaintiff had no right to acquire any land as he was already in possession of more than 30 standard acres.

8. After carefully considering all the submissions made before us by the learned counsel for both sides, we are of the opinion that the fallacy in the arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the respondents lies in his equating the qualification for pre-empting a sale, and equating the right to acquire property by pre-emption with the acquisition itself. We put the following hypothetical case to Mr Sethi:—

'A' owns 30 standard acres of land, and enters into an agreement with B to purchase from the latter 10 standard acres of land on March 1, 1969, the sale to be completed within one month. On March 15, 'A' disposes of by absolute sale 15 standard acres of his original holding. After being left with only 15 standard acres out of his original holding, 'A' completes the agreed sale, and purchases on the 20th of March, 10 standard acres of B's land. Will the purchase of the 10 standard acres of land by 'A' from 'B' on March 20 be hit by Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act?

Mr Sethi's reply to the above question was in the negative. We are unable to see any difference between the case of an intending purchaser who is disqualified from purchasing further land agreeing to purchase additional land and removing the disqualification before actual purchase on the one hand, and the case of a plaintiff pre-emptor who owns more than 30 standard acres on the date of the decree who disposes of as much of his original holding as the land which he wants to acquire by pre-emption between the date of the decree, and the date of the deposit of the pre-emption money in terms of the decree. Section 19-A does not fall in the category of exceptions to the right of pre-emption contained in Sections 5, 8 and 9 of the Pre-emption Act. The right to claim property by pre-emption is conferred by Section 4 subject to the exceptions contained in Sections 5, 8, 9 and 23. The qualifications entitling a plaintiff to pre-empt a sale of agricultural property are mentioned in order of preference in Section 15. What is prohibited by Section 19-A is to acquire the title to the land as well as to acquire possession of land in excess of one's permissible area. The question then arises as to when does a successful plaintiff pre-emptor acquire title to the land which is the subject-matter of the sale sought to be pre-empted by him. The answer to this question is contained in the statutory provision of Cl (b) of sub-rule (1) of R. 14 of O. 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sub-rule (1) of R. 14 of O. 20 states as follows:—

"Where the Court decrees a claim to pre-emption in respect of a particular sale of property and the purchase-money has not been paid into Court, the decree shall—

(a) specify a day on or before which the purchase-money shall be so paid and

(b) direct that on payment into Court of such purchase-money, together with the costs (if any) decreed against the plaintiff, on or before the day referred to in Cl (a), the defendant shall deliver possession of the property to the plaintiff, whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment, but that, if the purchase-money and the costs (if any) are not so paid, the suit shall be dismissed with costs."

From a reading of the above quoted provisions, it is plain that the title of the pre-emptor is deemed to accrue to the land which is the subject-matter of the pre-empted sale from the date of payment of the pre-emption money in Court, and neither from the date of the original sale nor from the date of the suit, nor even from the date of the decree. In AIR 1916 PC 179, it was held that in a suit for pre-emption, ownership of the property does not vest in the pre-emptor from the date of the sale notwithstanding success in the suit but from the date of possession obtained on payment of the amount fixed under the decree. It was further decided that till payment of purchase-money on the date fixed in the decree under which pre-emptor obtains possession of property, the original purchaser continues to be the owner of the property and is entitled to rents and profits thereof. While approving the dictum of the Privy Council in Deonandan Prasad Singh's case, AIR 1916 PC 179 their Lordships of the Supreme Court held in AIR 1958 SC 838, as follows:—

"The right of pre-emption could be effectively exercised or enforced only when the pre-emptor has been substituted by the vendee in the original bargain of sale. A conditional decree whereunder a pre-emptor gets possession only if he pays a specified amount within a prescribed time and which also provided for the dismissal of the suit in case the condition was not complied with, could not obviously bring about the substitution of decree-holder in place of the vendee before the condition was complied with. Such a substitution took place only when the decree-holder complied with the condition and took possession of the land."

9. There is no quarrel with the proposition of law canvassed before us by the learned counsel for the appellants, to the effect that the right of pre-emption is a right of a plaintiff pre-emptor to be substituted in place of the original vendee in the sale in question. To support this proposition our attention was invited to the illustrious judgment of Mahmood, J. in Gobind Dayal v Inayatullah, (1885) ILR 7 All 775. The fact, however, remains that according to the authoritative pronouncements of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Bishan Singh's case, AIR 1958 SC 838 such substitution takes place only if and when the pre-emption money is deposited in Court. It is settled law that the exclusion of the general jurisdiction of a Civil Court has not to be readily inferred and such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. If the Legislature intended to bar the institution of a suit for pre-emption by a big land-owner nothing could be simpler than making a provision to that effect either in the Pre-emption Act itself or even in the Ceiling Act. In the absence of any such provision, it cannot be held that the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit for pre-emption by a person who has a preferential right to the vendee, has been barred by implication by Section 19-A.

In Sham Sunder v. Ram Das, 53 Pun LR 159 = (AIR 1951 Punj 52) (FB) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that Section 13 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1947, does not oust the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to grant a decree for eviction, but merely controls the execution of such a decree by prescribing procedure for the eviction of tenants. An illustration of a case where the passing of the decree by the Court was itself barred in the absence of the happening of a specified event, is contained in Section 3 of the Punjab Registration of Money Lenders' Act (3 of 1938), which provides inter alia that notwithstanding anything contained in any other enactment for the time being in force, a suit by a money-lender for the recovery of a loan, shall be dismissed unless the money-lender at the time of the institution of the suit (or at the time of passing the decree) is registered under the Act, and holds a valid licence in the prescribed form. In the Pre-emption Act itself Section 23 provides that no decree shall be granted in a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale of agricultural land until the plaintiff has satisfied the Court that the sale in respect of which pre-emption is claimed is not in contravention of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act (13 of 1900), and that the plaintiff is not debarred by the provisions of Section 14 of the Pre-emption Act from exercising the right of pre-emption. If the Legislature intended to convey what the appellants want us to hold, a provision in the nature of Section 23 would have been made at a proper place either in the Pre-emption Act or in the Ceiling Act. In our opinion there is nothing in Section 19-A which takes away even by necessary intendment the ordinary jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit by a big land-owner for possession of agricultural land in exercise of his right of pre-emption. There is no doubt that if the provisions of S. 19-A stood as an absolute bar in all circumstances to the successful execution of a decree for pre-emption, the Court could not possibly be asked to indulge in a mere pastime to pass a decree which would be incapable of execution. But, as already illustrated, there can be more than one eventualities in which a decree passed in favour of a big land-owner may be successfully executed by such a plaintiff decree-holder without offending against Section 19-A if he ceases to be a big land-owner on the date on which he seeks to acquire title to the property in dispute or wants to obtain its possession.

10. Section 19 of the Pre-emption Act states that when any person proposes to sell any agricultural land in respect of which any persons have a right of pre-emption, he may give notice to all such persons of the price at which he is willing to sell such land. Section 20 provides that the right of pre-emption of any person shall be extinguished unless such person shall within the period of three months from the date on which the notice under Section 19 is duly given or within the permissible extended time allowed by the Court, present to the Court a notice for service on the vendor of his intention to enforce his right of pre-emption. It is quite conceivable that on receipt of such a notice in respect of valuable agricultural land, measuring 10 or 20 standard acres, a land-holder already owning thirty standard acres of his permissible area, may lawfully dispose of ten or twenty standard acres of his original holding which may be of land which is not to his liking and avail of an opportunity given to him by the notice under Section 19 and acquire the land offered to be sold. In such an eventuality, there would, in our opinion, be no violation of the prohibition contained in Section 19-A. On the facts of the same illustration if the person on whom the notice under Section 19 is served, purchases land offered to him which is in excess of his permissible area, the purchase of the said land would be void and ineffective because of the bar contained in sub-section (2) of S. 19-A. The vendor cannot, however, plead that whereas he gave notice to some other possible pre-emptor, he could not be expected to serve such a notice on the person already holding thirty standard acres on the ground that he was not qualified to purchase the land in dispute. The qualifications for exercising the right of pre-emption in respect of the agricultural land are contained in Sections 4 and 15. Sales which are not subject to such right of pre-emption are mentioned in S. 5 (b), Sections 8, 9 and Section 23. The right to file a suit claiming possession by pre-emption is conferred by Section 4 of the Pre-emption Act read with Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

But when the matter reaches the stage of acquiring possession by depositing the pre-emption amount under R. 14 of O 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and of obtaining possession of the land in execution of the decree, the bar of Section 19-A comes into effect. If at that time the decree-holder already holds the maximum permissible area allowed to him by the Ceiling Act. The right to acquire land is a fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution, and cannot be taken away from a citizen save by authority of law. The only person from whom the right to acquire agricultural land has been taken away is the person who already holds the maximum permissible area with him under the Ceiling Act at the time of his acquiring the land in dispute. The primary or inherent right of pre-emption has been described by the Supreme Court in the case of AIR 1958 SC 838, as a mere right to the offer of a thing about to be sold and not as a right to the thing sold itself. Mr. M. L. Sethi contended that a big land-owner has been deprived of his primary or inherent right by Section 19-A. We do not find any warrant for this proposition. In our opinion, S. 19-A has not deprived a big land-owner either of his primary or inherent right to the offer of agricultural land which is intended to be sold, nor of the secondary or remedial right to follow the thing sold. It is only the third part of the right of pre-emption i.e. his right of substitution in place of the vendee that has been affected by Section 19-A. The right of substitution is the right to acquire the property sold, and a successful pre-emptor acquires the property sold, for the first time when he deposits the pre-emption money. It is significant to note that no provision in the Ceiling Act prohibits the sale of the proprietary rights of a land-owner. It is only the acquisition of land beyond the maximum permissible area by a purchaser which is made void by Section 19-A.

11. The right to pre-empt must exist prior to or at the time of the sale. The right to pre-emption must continue to subsist in the plaintiff right from the date of the sale to the date of the decree by the trial Court. The provision of Section 19-A does not in any manner affect the said right. It only bars actual acquisition of title or possession. In Audh Behari Singh v. Gajadhar Jaipuria, AIR 1954 SC 417, the Supreme Court held that the law of pre-emption creates a right which attaches to the property and can be enforced by or against the owner of the land for the time being although the right of the pre-emptor does not amount to an interest in the land itself. Mr. Sethi wanted us to hold that if a person is prohibited from acquiring certain land, he cannot be said to have a preferential right to claim the property in question. The fallacy in this submission of Mr. Sethi is that whereas a person who does not have a preferential right to acquire a property by pre-emption cannot possibly acquire it, the reverse of that proposition is not necessarily correct. A person having a legal and preferential right of pre-emption may still never be able to acquire the pre-emptible property:—

(i) because he may lose the right to pre-empt after the sale and before the filing of a suit by him, or

(ii) because the property may not be offered to him, and he may never exercise the right by filing a suit, or

(iii) because he may file a suit, but lose the preferential right during the pendency of the suit, and before the passing of the decree; or

(iv) because even after obtaining a decree, he may not deposit the pre-emption money within time, or

(v) because some statute may bar the execution of the decree for possession; or

(vi) because some law like Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act may prohibit the decree-holder from actually acquiring or possessing the subject-matter of the suit for pre-emption in case the plaintiff falls within the mischief of such a barring provision at the relevant time.

Mr. Sethi referred to two Full Bench judgments of the Lahore High Court in AIR 1944 Lah 172 (FB) and Zahur Din v. Jalal Din, AIR 1944 Lah 319 (FB) and argued that nothing which happens after the decree is relevant for purposes of deciding a claim for pre-emption. That is indeed so. But while interpreting Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act, we are not concerned with the right of pre-emption, but the right to acquire title to or possession of land.

12. Whereas it was held by Full Bench of this Court in Ramji Lal Ram Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1966 Punj 374 (FB), that the question as to when a decree-holder's title to the property would be completed, seemed to be besides the point for determining the right of pre-emption. It is the said question with which we are concerned for correctly interpreting Section 19-A.

The Full Bench observed:—

"We are only concerned in a suit for pre-emption with a plaintiff's preferential right to acquire the property and to get himself substituted for the vendee in the sale which he wishes to pre-empt and not with the question as to when he becomes the owner of the property after his suit for pre-emption has been decreed."

The dicta of the abovementioned three cases are, therefore, not of much help to us in answering this reference.

13. For the foregoing reasons we are of the opinion that the law laid down by a Division Bench of this Court (Dulat and Mahajan JJ.) in Bhupinder Singh's case 67 Pun LR 735 = (AIR 1966 Punj 310) and in the case of Mangal, 1965 Cur LJ 519 is correct, and that the observations of the other Division Bench (S. B. Kapoor and Gurdev Singh, JJ.) in Kartar Singh's case, 1967-69 Pun LR 319 which are contrary to the pronouncement of the Court in Bhupinder Singh's case, 67 Pun LR 735 = (AIR 1966 Punj 310) do not lay down the correct law. We say this with the greatest respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of 1967-69 Pun LR 319. The Regular Second Appeal will now be placed before the learned Single Judge for being disposed of in accordance with law keeping in view our decision relating to the true scope and interpretation of Section 19-A of the Ceiling Act. Costs of the hearing before the Full Bench shall abide the result of the Regular Second Appeal.

Ram Saran Dass Kapur, Petitioner v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Patiala, Respondent.

Income-tax Ref. No. 3 of 1965, D/-24-3-1969.

Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 28, 5 (7-C) — Proceeding under S. 28 — Transfer of from one Income-tax Officer to another — Latter's failure to give opportunity of being heard — Imposition of penalty is bad — Fact that assessee is already heard by previous Officer or did not specifically request for re-hearing is immaterial — (1961) 42 ITR 129 (Pat), Dissented from.

Where after giving the opportunity of being heard to the assessee, the proceeding is transferred from one Income-tax Officer to another, it is mandatory upon the Officer to whom the case is transferred, to give the opportunity of hearing before imposition of penalty. Even if an assessee does not exercise his statutory right of getting the case reopened or of specifically asking for a re-hearing of the case under Section 5 (7-C) and once he had the opportunity of being heard before different officer he is entitled to allege that sub-section (3) of S. 28 has been violated as he has not been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard, by the Officer imposing penalty upon him. (1961) 42 ITR 129 (Pat), Dissented from. (Case Law discussed). (Paras 5, 6 and 8)

The mandatory requirement of sub-section (3) of S. 28 of the Act is wholly independent of the enabling provision of Section 5 (7-C). An order passed under Section 28 (1) (c) without affording adequate opportunity required to be given to an assessee under sub-section (3) of Section 28 would never be valid. An order which is invalid on account of being violative of the requirements of S. 28 (3) cannot be validated by invoking the first proviso to Section 5 (7-C). So far as personal hearing is concerned, such a hearing can have some meaning only if it is given by the very person who has to ultimately decide the matter. Oral hearing by one officer cannot be of any advantage to his successor in deciding a case. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that the farce of a hearing is equal to a real, genuine and effective hearing. (Para 5)

It is well known that no amount of written representations, howsoever detailed, can in all cases, be treated as an equally effective substitute of a personal hearing. It is easier for an assessee to persuade an assessing authority to his point of view by removing his doubts and by answering his questions at a personal hearing, than by merely availing of the cold effect of a written representation. (Para 5)

Balraj Kohli with Ram Rang for Petitioner, D N Awasthy with B S Gupta, for Respondent.

NARULA J — The following question has been referred to this Court under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act (11 of 1922) (hereinafter called the Act) by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal (Delhi Bench 'B') —

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case, the imposition of penalty by the Income-tax Officer 'F' Ward, (Amritsar) is bad in law?"

2. The relevant facts giving rise to this reference are these

In respect of the proceedings for assessment of income-tax for the assessment years 1946-47 and 1947-48, concealed income of Rs 47,000 and Rs 10,000 respectively was discovered after voluntary disclosure of an additional income of Rs 40,667 in each of the abovesaid years had been made by the assessee in addition to the amount of the original assessment on the income of Rs 19,943 for the first year and Rs 45,824 for the second year. After the conclusion of the proceedings relating to assessment of concealed income, notice dated November 24, 1955, in respect of the assessment year 1946-47 was issued to Shri Ram Saran Das Kapur applicant (hereinafter called the assessee) under sub-section (3) of Section 28 of the Act to show cause why a penalty should not be levied on the assessee for concealing the income in question. Similar notice in respect of the assessment year 1947-48 was served on the assessee on December 26, 1955. In reply to the notice, dated, November 24, 1955, the assessee submitted written objections, dated April 14, 1956 in which he objected to the legality of the notice, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, the vagueness of the notice and various other matters, and in which he finally stated in the penultimate paragraph as follows —

"That a personal hearing may kindly be given to explain the case personally"

A verbatim copy of the objections, dated April 14, 1956, was sent by the assessee to the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, Amritsar (which Income-tax Officer had issued and served the notice, under Section 28(3) of the Act on the assessee) in respect of the assessment year 1947-48. It is the common case of both sides that in pursuance of the specific request contained in the written reply of the assessee, the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, gave an opportunity of personal hearing to the assessee and actually heard his arguments in support of those objections. Before the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, who had heard the assessee, could give a decision in the matter, the cases for the imposition of penalty on the assessee were transferred to the Income-tax Officer, 'F' Ward, Amritsar. There is nothing to show that the assessee sent any communication or made any request to the Income-tax Officer for any further hearing. This fact is also admitted that the Income-tax Officer, 'F' Ward, never gave any opportunity of being heard to the assessee, and merely passed two separate orders, dated July 30, 1959, imposing a penalty of Rs 15,000 in respect of the year 1946-47, and of Rs 4,000 in respect of the year 1947-48. Aggrieved by the orders of imposition of penalty, the assessee went in appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who by his order, dated October 29, 1959, set aside the order under appeal.

The Income-tax Officer went up in appeal against the order of the Income-tax Appellate Assistant Commissioner to the Appellate Tribunal. By order, dated October 30, 1961, the Appellate Tribunal allowed the appeal of the assessing authority, set aside the order of the Appellate Assistant Commr and remitted the appeal of the assessee for re-hearing to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner as he had not dealt with certain objections which were raised by the Department before the Tribunal. By his post-remand order, dated September 24, 1962, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner upheld and confirmed the order of the Income-tax Officer in respect of the imposition as well as the quantum of the penalty in respect of the two years in dispute. In the assessee's appeal preferred against the post-remand order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the Appellate Tribunal by its judgment, dated September 23, 1963, repelled all the contentions of the assessee.

The contention of the assessee with which we are concerned was disposed of in sub-paragraphs (ii) and (iii) of paragraph 8 of the Appellate Tribunal's final order in the following words —

"(ii) 'We have already noted above that the assessee besides filing a written explanation dated April 14, 1956 requested that he may be heard personally. The Income-tax Officer did hear him personally on August 27, 1957. Thereafter the case went to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer 'F-Ward'. Section 5 (7-C) lays down that where an income-tax authority ceases to exercise jurisdiction and is succeeded by another, the income-tax authority so succeeded may continue the proceeding from the stage at which the proceeding was left by his predecessor. The first proviso to the sub-section lays down that the assessee concerned may demand that before the proceeding is so continued the previous proceeding or any part thereof be re-opened. We find that no such demand was made by the assessee (before the Income-tax Officer, F-Ward Shri Gujjar Mal who passed the penalty order on July 30, 1959) to the effect that the assessee be re-heard or any part of the previous proceeding be re-opened. In these circumstances the Income-tax Officer F-Ward Shri Gujjar Mal was perfectly justified in law in passing the penalty order.

(iii) In support of his contention the learned counsel for the assessee relies upon the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Calcutta Tanneries, (1944) Ltd. Calcutta v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Calcutta, reported in 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543), where the facts of the case were almost identical to those of the assessee. This ruling has been considered and dissented from by their Lordships of the Patna High Court in the case of Murlidhar Tejpal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Patna, reported in 1961-42 ITR 129 (Pat). Respectfully following the later ruling of the Patna High Court, we would hold that the penalty order was validly passed by the Income-tax Officer, F-Ward." It was the question of law decided in the above quoted passage of the order of the Appellate Tribunal which was sought by the assessee to be referred to this Court in the assessee's application under Section 66 (1) of the Act. The application of the assessee was allowed and the present reference was made by the Tribunal on July 10, 1964.

3. The relevant questions of fact which have been decided by the Tribunal and with which findings we are bound and on the basis of which we have to answer the question referred to us, are summarised below:—

(i) that the notices under Section 28 (3) of the Act calling upon the assessee to show cause why penalty under Cl. (c) of sub-section (1) of S. 28 should not be imposed on the assessee were issued and served by the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, Amritsar;

(ii) that two separate written replies to the abovesaid show-cause notices were sent by the assessee to the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, on April 14, 1956;

(iii) that a specific prayer had been made by the assessee in writing in paragraph 9 of each of his written replies to the show-cause notices for being afforded "a personal hearing" so as to enable the assessee "to explain the case personally."

(iv) that the opportunity asked for by the assessee was duly granted to him and the assessee did actually show cause against the threatened imposition of penalty at the oral hearing availed of by him before the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward;

(v) that no decision in this respect was given by the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, who heard the assessee and the jurisdiction to levy penalty on the assessee subsequently stood transferred to Shri Gujjar Mal, Income-tax Officer, F-Ward;

(vi) that before Shri Gujjar Mal, Income-tax Officer, 'F' Ward, no request was made by the assessee under S. 5 (7-C) of the Act either for re-opening any of the two cases or for affording the assessee a re-hearing of either of the two cases;

(vii) that the Income-tax Officer, 'F' Ward, did not afford the assessee any opportunity of personal hearing;

(viii) that on the record of the case received by him on transfer from the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, the assessing authority, i.e., the Income-tax Officer, 'F' Ward, imposed penalties on the assessee without any further proceedings or hearing.

4. In order to appreciate and in order to satisfactorily answer the question referred to us, it is necessary to notice at this stage the relevant provisions of Section 28 (1) (c), S. 28 (3) and S. 5 (7-C) (with its first proviso) of the Act, which are reproduced below:—

"28(1)(c) If the Income-tax Officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal, in the course of any proceedings under this Act is satisfied that any person—

(c) has concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, he or it may direct that such person shall pay, by way of penalty, in the case referred to in Cl. (a), in addition to the amount of the income-tax, and super-tax, if any, payable by him, a sum not exceeding one-and-a-half time that amount and in the cases referred to in Cls. (b) and (c), in addition to any tax payable by him, a sum not exceeding

"28(3) No order shall be made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) unless the assessee or partner, as the case may be, has been heard, or has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard."

"5(7-C) Whenever in respect of any proceeding under this Act, an Income-tax authority ceases to exercise jurisdiction, and is succeeded by another who has and exercises jurisdiction, the Income-tax authority so succeeding may continue the proceeding from the stage at which the proceeding was left by his predecessor:

Provided that the assessee concerned may demand that before the proceeding is so continued the previous proceeding or any part thereof be re-opened or that before any order for assessment is passed against him he be reheard."

5 Mr D. N. Awasthi, the learned counsel for the Revenue, has owned and pressed the same arguments which prevailed with the Appellate Tribunal. He has submitted that all the requirements of sub-section (3) of S 28 having once been complied with by the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, the assessee had thereafter no right to have the matter re-opened or re-heard otherwise than by making a specific prayer for that purpose under sub-section (7-C) of S 5 of the Act. Counsel submitted that the operation of Section 5 (7-C) starts from the point where the proceedings under sub-s (1) or (2) of Section 28 have already culminated, and that if an assessee does not exercise his statutory right of getting the case re-opened or of asking for a rehearing of the case under Section 5 (7-C), he cannot allege that sub-section (3) of S 28 has been violated as he has not been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard, if he has once had such an opportunity before any Income-tax Officer even if he is different from the officer who ultimately imposed the penalty. I think there is clear fallacy in the submission of the learned counsel in this behalf. Section 5 (7-C) does not necessarily come into operation after the entire opportunity referred to in Section 28 (3) has already been granted. The point of time when Section 5 (7-C) comes into operation has no relation to the stage at which the proceedings are transferred from the previous Income-tax Officer to the new one. Sub-section (7-C) of S 5 comes into operation as soon as an income-tax authority ceases to exercise jurisdiction and is succeeded by another authority who has and exercises jurisdiction irrespective of whether the assessee had or had not fully availed of the entire opportunity provided to him under Section 28 (3). If all that remained to be done by the preceding officer was to write an order, and everything which such officer was expected to keep in view at the time he ceases to exercise jurisdiction is available in full to the succeeding officer, there is no bar to the latter merely writing out an order after applying his own mind to the whole of that material unless the assessee exercises his right under the first proviso to sub-section (7-C) of S 5, and asks for either the whole case being re-opened or merely for being re-heard before the passing of the final order. But if one of the things which were to influence the decision of the assessing authority was the effect of an oral hearing already granted to an assessee (either because such a hearing had been asked for or was otherwise necessary in law) the succeeding officer must give a fresh opportunity of oral hearing to the assessee before deciding the matter. There is no known method by which the effect of a personal hearing could be transferred by the preceding officer to his successor unless, possibly, the whole discussion is tape-recorded and the tape is played back to the successor. Admittedly no such thing happened in this case. It is well known that no amount of written representations, however detailed, can in all cases, be treated as an equally effective substitute of a personal hearing. It is easier for an assessee to persuade an assessing authority to his point of view by removing his doubts and by answering his questions at a personal hearing, than by merely availing of the cold effect of a written representation. By making these observations, I may not be understood to suggest that it is necessary in all cases to give a personal hearing to an assessee in response to the notice under Section 28 (3) of the Act even if he does not ask for it. Mr. Awasthi frankly conceded that if in the face of the assessee's written request for a personal hearing, the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, had refused to give him an oral hearing, and had passed an order imposing penalty, the order could be successfully impugned, and he would not be able to support it. He, however, submitted that such a personal hearing having once been afforded to the assessee, he was bound to make a fresh specific request to the successor Income-tax Officer, if he again wanted to be heard. We are unable to agree with this submission, as it is based on the assumption that the oral hearing afforded to the assessee by the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, could possibly be utilised to his advantage in making the order of imposition of penalty by the succeeding Income-tax Officer. The mandatory requirement of sub-section (3) of S. 28 of the Act is in our opinion wholly independent of the enabling provision of Section 5 (7-C). An order passed under Section 28 (1) (c) without affording adequate opportunity required to be given to an assessee under sub-section (3) of S 28 would never be valid. An order which is invalid on account of being violative of the requirements of Section 28 (3) cannot be validated by invoking the first proviso to Section 5 (7-C). So far as personal hearing is concerned, it seems to us to be plain that such a hearing can have some meaning only if it is given by the very person who has to ultimately decide the matter. Oral hearing by one officer cannot possibly be of any advantage to his successor in deciding a case. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that the farce of a hearing is equal to a real, genuine and effective hearing.

6. I asked Mr. Awasthi that if the case had been transferred from the Income-tax Officer, Special Ward, to the Income-tax Officer 'F' Ward before the oral hearing was given to the assessee, could the successor officer decide the matter without affording the assessee an opportunity of being heard merely on the ground that the assessee had not made an application under Section 5 (7-C)? Mr. Awasthi frankly submitted that no prayer under Section 5 (7-C) would have been necessary in that eventuality and the successor Income-tax Officer would have been bound to afford a personal hearing to the assessee before passing any valid orders in the matter. Counsel said that this would have been necessary because the assessee had asked for a personal hearing, and he would, in those circumstances, have had no opportunity at all of a personal hearing. Once it is conceded that if personal hearing is required to be given in a case, and is not granted by an Income-tax Officer before he is transferred, his successor is bound to grant such a hearing before he can pass a valid order, it is in our opinion fallacious for the Revenue to contend, as is indeed sought to be contended indirectly, that the oral hearing by the previous officer is as effective and valid for the officer who actually decided a case as it would have been if the successor officer himself had orally heard the assessee. In order to press his submission Mr. Awasthi had to go to the length of stating that technically an order of a successor Income-tax Officer would be perfectly valid if he were to write on the order-sheet of a case under Section 28 (1) something like this:

"My predecessor issued notices under Section 28 (3). The assessee submitted his written replies which were considered by my predecessor. The assessee was also orally heard by my predecessor. At that stage the jurisdiction to hear this case has been passed over to me. The assessee has not made any prayer for re-opening the case or for re-hearing. So I need not re-do what my predecessor has already done, and need not, therefore, again consider the written replies submitted by the assessee, and need not hear him. Accordingly, I impose on the assessee a penalty of Rs."

The hollowness of the argument of the Revenue is, in my opinion, amply revealed by Mr. Awasthi's submitting that so far as strict compliance with law is concerned, no fault can be found with an order of the kind mentioned above. In Nageswara Rao v. Andhra Pradesh State Road Transport Corporation, AIR 1959 SC 308, a somewhat similar question arose relating to the duty of the State Government to give a personal hearing to objectors against a scheme framed under Ch. IV-A of the Motor Vehicles Act (4 of 1939). The procedure which had been prescribed by the State of Andhra Pradesh for the hearing of such objections was that the Secretary to the Government had to give personal hearing, but the decision had to be given by the Chief Minister. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed that personal hearing enables the party appearing at such hearing to persuade the authority concerned by reasoned arguments to accept his point of view. Their Lordships held:—

"If one person hears and another decides, then personal hearing becomes an empty formality."

With the above observations, the Supreme Court held that the procedure followed in the case of G. Nageswara Rao, AIR 1959 SC 308 (of hearing by the Secretary and decision by the Chief Minister) offended against the basic principles of judicial procedure. To accede to the view canvassed before us by Mr. Awasthi would amount to holding contrary to the pronouncement of the Supreme Court in G. Nageswara Rao's case, AIR 1959 SC 308. A Division Bench of this Court (Grover and Khanna, JJ.) held in Amir Singh v. Govt. of India, 1964-66 Pun LR 1037 = (AIR 1965 Punj 84) that where the Collector of Customs who is bound to hear a party against whom he proposes to make an order had granted personal hearing is transferred, an order passed by his successor without granting a fresh personal hearing violates the principles of natural justice. If, therefore, it is once admitted as has been rightly conceded by Mr. Awasthi, that an order passed without giving a personal hearing to an assessee who had specifically asked for one in proceedings for the imposition of penalty under Section 28 (1) (c) of the Act, would not be valid, the enabling provision of Section 5 (7-C) of the Act does not appear to us to remove in any manner the infirmity which would otherwise be apparent in a successor passing an order on the basis of an oral hearing given by his predecessor in office.

7. The question referred to us is fortunately not res integra. It was first considered by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court (Lahiri C. J., and Bachawat, J.) in (1960) 40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543). After the Manager of the assessee had been heard twice in response to a notice of proceedings under Section 28 (1) (c) of the Act, he stated on the second hearing that he had nothing more to submit in support of the assessee's contention. No order was, however, passed by the Income-tax Officer who had given the two hearings, and before whom the proceedings had been closed on behalf of the assessee. Thereafter the proceedings were transferred to another Income-tax Officer before whom no prayer was made by the assessee either to re-open the case or to re-hear the same. Nor did the succeeding Income-tax Officer afford any opportunity of re-hearing to the assessee. The case stood transferred to the succeeding Income-tax Officer before the Income-tax (Amendment) Act (25 of 1953) which introduced Section 5 (7-C) was passed. The Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court proceeded to answer the question whether the assessee loses the right of hearing under Section 28 (3) if he does not exercise his right under the first proviso to Section 5 (7-C) after referring to the distinction between proceedings for assessment and proceedings for imposition of a penalty, and referring to the admitted facts of the case, held as below:—

"The question, however, still remains whether the assessee has lost its right of hearing under Section 28 (3) on account of its failure to exercise its right of having the proceeding reopened under the first proviso to Section 5 (7-C). Mr Meyer appearing for the Commissioner of Income-tax contends that the right conferred by the proviso to Section 5 (7-C) is a substitute for the right conferred upon the assessee by Section 28 (3) so that if an assessee has failed to exercise the right under the proviso there is no further right of hearing under Section 28 (3). I am however unable to accept this contention. The right conferred by the first part of the proviso is a right to have the proceeding reopened whereas the right conferred by Section 28 (3) is a right of being heard. In my opinion, there may be a hearing without having the proceeding reopened and that hearing may be confined to the hearing of arguments only. As a result of the assessee's failure to exercise its right under the first part of the proviso the assessee has undoubtedly lost its right of having the proceeding reopened but I fail to see how it has lost its right of being heard under Section 28 (3) before the officer who has been vested with jurisdiction to continue the penalty proceeding."

Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court held that the combined effect of Sections 28 (3) and 5 (7-C) is to authorise the succeeding Income-tax Officer to pass an order upon the evidence produced before his predecessor-in-office, but the effect is not to authorise the former to pass an order upon arguments advanced before the latter. On the basis of the abovesaid finding, the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court answered the reference in favour of the assessee and observed that the Court could not but hold that the succeeding Income-tax Officer had no authority to pass an order of imposition of penalty without giving the assessee a further opportunity of advancing the arguments before him.

Subsequently a Division Bench of the Patna High Court, while delivering its judgment in (1961) 42 ITR 129 (Pat), expressly differed from the view expressed by the Calcutta High Court in the Calcutta Tanneries' case, 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543) (supra), and held that in their opinion the combined effect of S. 28 (3) and S. 5 (7-C) of the Act is that the succeeding Income-tax Officer has the authority to pass an order upon the explanation of the assessee produced before his predecessor-in-office if the assessee had failed to exercise his right under Section 5 (7-C) demanding that the proceedings should be re-opened. With the greatest respect to the learned Judges of the Patna High Court, we are of the opinion that the distinction so clearly brought out in the Calcutta Tanneries' case, 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543) between the re-opening of the proceedings and the re-hearing of arguments was not succinctly brought to the notice of the Patna High Court. In any event, the facts on which the decision of the Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Murlidhar Tejpal's case, 1961-42 ITR 129 (Pat) was based were clearly distinguishable in material particulars from the facts of the case before us. In that case no request at all had been made by the assessee for an oral hearing even before the original Income-tax Officer. In the absence of such a request oral hearing was not necessary and inasmuch as no oral hearing had been afforded to the assessee by the original Income-tax Officer, there would have been no violation of the principles of natural justice referred to by the Supreme Court in G. Nageswara Rao's case, AIR 1959 SC 308 and even by a Division Bench of this Court in Amir Singh's case, 1964-66 Pun LR 1037 = (AIR 1965 Punj 84) in the proceedings for imposition of penalty against Murlidhar Tejpal.

When a similar question arose before an earlier Division Bench of this Court (Meher Singh, C. J. and Shamsher Bahadur, J.) in Satprakash Ram Naranjan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1969) 71 ITR 646 (Punj) the view of the matter taken by the Calcutta High Court in Calcutta Tanneries' case, 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543) was expressly approved by this Court. The judgments of the Rajasthan High Court in A. C. Metal Works v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi and Rajasthan, (1967) 66 ITR 14 (Raj) and of the Mysore High Court in Shon Siddegowda and Family v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Mysore, (1964) 53 ITR 57 (Mys), were distinguished on the ground that no personal hearing had been claimed by the assessee in those cases even before the original Income-tax Officer, and there had been no oral arguments. It was also noticed that in the Rajasthan case a written explanation had been submitted in place of oral arguments. Likewise it was noticed that in the Mysore case, the assessee had confined himself to an explanation in writing which alone was available for consideration to the original Income-tax Officer, and which alone was considered by the successor authority. Similar distinction was drawn in the facts of the case decided by the Mysore High Court in Hulekar & Sons v. Commr. of Income-tax, Mysore, (1967) 63 ITR 130 (Mys). The case before us appears to fall within the ratio of the judgment of this Court in Satprakash Ram Naranjan's case, 1969-71 ITR 646 (Punj) and does not fall within the compass of the facts which led to the respective decisions in the Rajasthan case and the Mysore cases. For the same reasons, we are unable to derive any assistance from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court, to which Mr. Awasthi has referred in Kanailal Gatani v. Commissioner of Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax, West Bengal, (1963) 48 ITR 262 (Cal). No oral arguments had been advanced by the assessee before the original Income-tax Officer, and the question of the assessee being prejudiced by one officer hearing and the other deciding neither could nor did arise in that case. Mr. Nirmal Mukherjee, who appeared for Kanailal Gatani before the assessing authorities, had stated expressly before the original assessing authority that "beyond his written statement filed in the matter he had nothing to add." It was on the facts and in the circumstances of that case that the Calcutta High Court held that in the absence of a specific request of the assessee under the pressure of Section 5 (7-C) of the Act, the validity of the order of the succeeding officer deciding on the basis of the record already available was not affected. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court emphasised this aspect of the matter by observing as follows:—

"On the facts of the present case, I am of the opinion that Mr. Roy (the succeeding Income-tax Officer) was entitled to make the order, having satisfied himself as to the correctness of it and, inasmuch as no witnesses had been called and no arguments advanced, he was in a position to make the order and that no illegality has been committed."

The Calcutta High Court also made it clear in the penultimate paragraph of its judgment that they had decided the case upon the law as it stood before S. 5 (7-C) was introduced by the Amending Act of 1953, and that the High Court must not be deemed to have expressed any opinion upon the point whether a re-hearing or a fresh hearing was necessary under Section 5 (7-C), unless it was demanded by the assessee. The judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Kanailal Gatani's case, 1963-48 ITR 262 (Cal) is, therefore, not in point for answering this reference.

8. Inasmuch as the Appellate Tribunal repelled the arguments advanced before it by the assessee by following the view of the Patna High Court in Murlidhar Tejpal's case, 1961-42 ITR 129 (Pat) in preference to the view of the Calcutta High Court in Calcutta Tanneries' case, 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543) and inasmuch as we have agreed with the Calcutta view, and have further held that the facts of the Patna case were distinguishable and any observations in the judgment of the Patna High Court which come into conflict with the ratio of the judgment in the Calcutta Tanneries' case, 1960-40 ITR 178 = (AIR 1960 Cal 543) take a rather narrow view of the legal position which would be inconsistent with the authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court in G. Nageswara Rao's case, AIR 1959 SC 308, we have no hesitation in answering the question referred to us in the affirmative, i.e. in favour of the assessee. The costs of the assessee in this reference shall be borne by the Revenue.

Criminal Original No. 96 of 1966, D/- 22-3-1967 against order of J. S. Bedi, J., D/-14-11-1966.

Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 3 — Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (13 of 1955), S. 39 — Financial Commissioner acting under S. 39 is Court subordinate to High Court.

The Financial Commissioner acting under the provisions of Section 39 of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955, is a Court subordinate to High Court for the purposes of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1952, and its contempt can be taken notice of and punished by High Court. (Para 24)

Apart from the specific provision of Section 84 (5) of Punjab Tenancy Act

EM/FM/C360/69/B

1887 making it incumbent upon the Financial Commissioner to hear the parties before interfering with the order against which the revisional proceedings are pending before him, the scheme of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955, itself leaves no doubt that the Financial Commissioner, in exercise of his revisional powers, functions as a Court. That he is a Court subordinate to High Court for the purpose of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act no longer admits of any doubt, as under Art. 227 of the Constitution, the High Court exercises judicial control over all Courts and tribunals functioning within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction. H. S. Wasu, for Petitioners; H. L. Sarin, Balraj Behal and Behal Singh Mahik, for Respondents.

GURDEV SINGH J.:— In this petition under Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act Chhotta Singh and others complain of disobedience of the orders of this Court dated 15th December, 1965 and 11th February, 1966 in Civil Writ No. 2955 of 1965, as well as of the order of the Financial Commissioner dated 5th November, 1965 passed in proceedings between the parties under the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act. The matter came up before my learned brother Bedi J., who being of the opinion that the question whether the Financial Commissioner is a Court subordinate to the High Court, the contempt of which can be punished by this Court was not free from difficulty, referred the case to a larger Bench by his order dated 14th of November, 1966.

2. The petitioners, Chhotta Singh and others, were settled under the orders of the prescribed authority (Naib-Tahsildar) dated 21st December, 1962 on some of the lands that had been declared surplus in the hands of Gurdial Singh, respondent No. 3, a big landowner in village Bugaran, District Bhatinda. An appeal against this allotment of land to the petitioners was preferred by Gurcharan Singh, respondent No. 5, who claimed to be a tenant of the land in question under Gurdial Singh. The Collector, Bhatinda decided this appeal on 5th of August, 1965 and remanded the case for fresh decision. Thereupon the landowner Gurdial Singh (respondent No. 3) dispossessed the petitioners and obtained possession of the surplus area that had been allotted to them by the prescribed authority. The petitioners went up in revision against the Collector's order and the petition was accepted by the Financial Commissioner on 5th of November, 1965. The Financial Commissioner held that Gurcharan Singh was not a tenant of Gurdial Singh and thus not entitled to any part of the surplus area. As a result of this finding, the Financial Commissioner, holding that Gurdial Singh had wrongly taken possession of the surplus land directed that he should be immediately dispossessed and the surplus area originally allotted to the petitioners should be restored to them. The actual possession, however, could not be delivered to the petitioners as crops were standing therein. Before the compensation for those crops, which was assessed by the Gram Panchayat, could be deposited by the petitioners, Gurcharan Singh (respondent No. 5) questioned the validity of the Financial Commissioner's revisional order dated 5th November, 1965 by means of a petition under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution (Civil Writ No. 2955 of 1965). On admission of the writ petition Gurcharan Singh moved for staying the operation of the Financial Commissioner's order, on which Narula, J. on 15th December, 1965 directed: "Status quo regarding possession of the petitioner to be maintained" pending notice to the opposite party. As at that time the possession of the land in dispute was with Gurdial Singh and not Gurcharan Singh and thus the order operated to the benefit of Gurdial Singh and not that of the writ petitioner Gurcharan Singh, the present petitioners applied for the clarification of the order. Thereupon Dua J., after hearing the parties' counsel passed the following order on 11th February, 1966:—

"After hearing both sides it is agreed at the bar that the stay order of this Court should only be operative as against dispossession of Gurcharan Singh petitioner in the writ petition. The actual physical dispossession of Gurdial Singh landlord is not covered by this writ's stay order. It may however, be clarified that actual physical dispossession of Gurcharan Singh is quite clearly being stayed by this order pending the disposal of the writ petition....."

3. The petitioners allege that despite this order Gurdial Singh, in conspiracy with Pritam Singh (Respondent No. 1), S. I. Prem Singh (Respondent No. 2) and with the assistance of Bakhtawar Singh and Gurcharan Singh, (Respondents 4 and 5 respectively) reaped the Sarson crop despite the fact that the compensation for that crop as assessed by the Gram Panchayat had been deposited by the petitioners and realised by Gurdial Singh. The petitioners complain that this conduct of the respondents constituted gross disobedience of the order of the Financial Commissioner dated 5th November, 1965, and the stay order of this Court, as clarified on 11th of February, 1966 by Dua J. for which they be punished.

4. All the respondents have denied the alleged disobedience or defiance of the orders of this Court or that of the Financial Commissioner. The fact that Gurdial Singh had taken possession of the land which was originally allotted to the petitioners as surplus area and had also taken away the crops standing therein on the day the Financial Commissioner passed his order dated 5th of November, 1965 is not disputed by them. Sub-Inspector Prem Singh defended himself by stating that he acted under the orders of his superiors and the order of this Court dated 11th of February, 1966 was never brought to his notice.

5. Naib-Tehsildar Pritam Singh (Respondent No. 1) similarly pleaded that he acted in pursuance of the order of the Collector dated 11th August, 1965 and delivered possession of vacant area measuring 107 Kanals and 17 Marlas to Gurdial Singh through the Kanungo Agrarian, Bhatinda. He further stated that after the acceptance of the revision petition of Chhotta Singh he received an order from the Collector Agrarian, Bhatinda, to deliver possession to the petitioners after dispossessing Gurdial Singh. Thereupon he went to the spot along with the Revenue Patwari when he found that the crops were standing in the land and actual possession could not be delivered. Under the circumstances he delivered symbolic possession to the petitioners and assessing compensation for the standing crops at Rs. 900 sent his proposal to the Collector Agrarian for necessary approval. The amount of compensation proposed by him was, however, objected by both the parties whereupon the Collector Agrarian by his order dated 10th December, 1965 referred the question of assessment of compensation to the Gram Panchayat, Bugran. It was, however, as late as 30th of December, 1965 that the Panchayat moved in the matter and fixed the compensation at Rs. 1300, but the present petitioners did not deposit the compensation. He further asserted that the order of Dua J. dated 11th of February, 1966 was not shown to him and all that he did in that matter after this order was passed was to report to the Collector that since compensation for the standing crops had not been deposited by the tenants, no further action could be taken in the matter till fresh orders were received from the Collector. Long before 30th of April, 1966 this Naib-Tehsildar relinquished the charge of his office and was succeeded by, Shri Gauri Shankar.

6. The Respondents 3 to 5 have defended the cutting of the crops in the disputed land on the plea that the compensation assessed by the Panchayat (Rs. 1300) had not been deposited by the petitioners and they asserted that since the actual possession of the land was still with Gurdial Singh, he was entitled to take away the crops.

7. It is an admitted fact that on acceptance of the respondent Gurcharan Singh's application by the Collector, Gurdial Singh got back the possession of the land that was originally allotted to the petitioners as surplus area. The question whether Gurdial Singh was entitled to take such possession or not does not arise in these proceedings. It is also not disputed that consequent upon the acceptance of the petitioners' revision petition by the Financial Commissioner on 5th of November, 1965, since crops were standing in the land in dispute it was only symbolic possession that was delivered to the petitioners and the actual possession was deferred till the assessment of the compensation by the Panchayat and its payment by the present petitioners. It is common ground that if the compensation was not paid, the present petitioners were not entitled to take actual possession and in those circumstances the crops could be harvested by Gurdial Singh, who was in actual possession of the land at the time the Financial Commissioner passed his order dated 5th November, 1965 In this petition there is nowhere alleged by the petitioners that the compensation assessed by the Gram Panchayat was deposited by them. On the other hand, the respondents have vehemently maintained that this compensation was never deposited by the petitioners or paid to Gurdial Singh. In these circumstances, the crops which were ripe for harvesting could be taken away by Gurdial Singh. It is true that the status quo with regard to possession of the land in dispute had to be maintained pending the disposal of the writ petition, as directed by Narula, J. on 15th of December, 1965 and Dua, J., while clarifying that order on 11th February, 1966 had said that the actual possession of Gurdial Singh was not covered by this order but only that of Gurcharan Singh. The effect of these orders was to leave the present petitioners free to take actual possession of the land in dispute from Gurdial Singh and in terms of the order of the Collector Agrarian, before the actual possession could be taken by the petitioners they had to deposit compensation for crops as assessed by the Panchayat Bugran. Since they had not deposited the compensation, the crops which had ripened could not be allowed to remain standing indefinitely and if Gurdial Singh had harvested that crop it cannot be said that there was any violation of the orders made by this Court.

8 The copy of the Financial Commissioner's order, the disobedience of which is complained of, has not been placed on record. The Financial Commissioner had no doubt reversed the order of the Collector and directed that Gurdial Singh should be immediately dispossessed from the land that had been originally allotted to the petitioners but if in execution of that order the petitioners did not deposit the compensation for the standing crops, and the crop was harvested by Gurdial Singh it cannot be said that there has been any disobedience of those orders, which requires action by this Court under S 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act.

9. We thus find that even assuming that the Financial Commissioner is a Court subordinate to this Court, disobedience of whose orders can be punished as contempt by this Court under Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act, we find that this petition must fail on merits as it has not been proved that any of the respondents had flouted or acted in disobedience of the relevant orders of this Court and that of the Financial Commissioner.

10. In this view of the matter the legal question with regard to the jurisdiction of this Court to punish the disobedience of the orders of the Financial Commissioner under Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act does not arise, but since it was this legal issue that necessitated reference to this Bench, we would like to express our opinion on it.

11. In the course of arguments, the parties' learned counsel have referred to decisions of various Courts in which the question whether the contempt of an authority other than a Civil or Criminal or Revenue Court can be punished by this Court has been considered. None of these authorities, however, relates to the disobedience of an order passed by a Financial Commissioner. In Lakhama Peshva v. Venkatrao Swamirao Nazare, AIR 1955 Bom 103 a Division Bench of that Court, to which Chagla C J., was a party, held that Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, acting as persona designata under City of Bombay Municipal Act was a Court subordinate to the High Court, and if a contempt is committed of that authority, it was open to the High Court to take cognizance of it and commit the contemner as if the contempt had been committed of the High Court itself. Later, in Registrar, High Court, A. S. Bombay v. S K. Irani, AIR 1963 Bom 254, the same Court ruled that the authority constituted under Payment of Wages Act, 1936, is a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act. In Chunnilal Ken v. Shyamlal Sukhran, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 50, an Election Tribunal constituted under the Representation of the People Act, 1951, was held to be a Court subordinate to the High Court under Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act. The majority view taken in the Full Bench case of Ram Saran Tewari v. Raj Bahadur Verma, AIR 1962 All 315 is that Nyaya Panchayats established under the U. P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1947, are Courts subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act. In the Sitamarhi Central Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Thakur Jugal Kishore Sinha, AIR 1965 Pat 227 a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that an Assistant Registrar exercising the powers of a Registrar under Section 48 of Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1935 was a Court subordinate to the High Court.

12. In Malabar Hill Co-operative Housing Society v. K. L. Gauba, AIR 1964 Bom 147, the Bombay High Court held that contempt of a nominee of a Registrar appointed under Section 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, was not punishable as the provision relating to the appointment of a nominee itself indicated that the power which he derived for deciding the dispute was not a power derived from the State, and though he possessed certain trappings of a Court, he had no independent seisin over the case, and the power exercising by him was that of an arbitrator enabling him to make an award, which could not be equated with a judgment or decision of a Court. Similarly, in Raja Himanshu Dhar Singh v. Kunwar B. P. Sinha, 1962 All LJ 57 = 1963 (1) Cri LJ 507 the High Court refused to punish the contempt of an Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies, being of the opinion that "only those arbitrators can be deemed to be Courts who are appointed through a Court and not those arbitrators who function without the intervention of a Court."

13. The last two cases referred to above along with various other authorities bearing upon the interpretation of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act have been considered by their Lordships of the Supreme Court quite recently in Thakur Jugal Kishore Sinha v. Sitamarhi Central Co-operative Bank Ltd. Criminal Appeal No. 18 of 1965, D/-13-3-1967 = (AIR 1967 SC 1494) and it is unnecessary to notice the other decisions of the various High Courts bearing on the point as the matter stands concluded by this latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Supreme Court. In the earlier case of Brajnandan Sinha v. Jyoti Narain, AIR 1956 SC 66, on consideration of the various Indian and English decisions, it has been ruled that a Commissioner appointed under the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1850, does not constitute a Court within the meaning of the term as used in the Contempt of Courts Act.

14. Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act provides:—

"3(1) Subject to the provisions of subsection (2) every High Court shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction, powers and authority, in accordance with the same procedure and practice, in respect of contempts of Courts subordinate to it as it has and exercises in respect of contempts of itself."

15. Before action can be taken under this provision, for the alleged contempt of the Financial Commissioner, two matters have to be considered, viz., (1) whether the Financial Commissioner is a Court, and (2) if the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, whether he is a Court subordinate to this Court.

16. It is now well settled, and this has not been disputed before us, that the word "Court" used in the Contempt of Courts Act is not confined to ordinary Civil, Criminal or Revenue Courts. In fact, both the questions posed above are concluded by the recent decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Criminal Appeal No. 18 of 1965, D/-13-3-1967 = (AIR 1967 SC 1494) to which reference has already been made. In considering what distinguishes a Court from a quasi-judicial or other authority, Mitter, J., delivering the judgment of the Court, relied upon Cooper v. Wilson, (1937) 2 KB 309 where at page 340 of the Report it was observed:—

"It is clear, therefore, that in order to constitute a Court in the strict sense of the term, an essential condition is that the Court should have, apart from having some of the trappings of a judicial tribunal, power to give a decision or a definitive judgment which has finality and authoritativeness which are the essential tests of a judicial pronouncement."

17. His Lordship also referred to the earlier decision of the Supreme Court in Virindar Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, 1955-2 SCR 1013 = (AIR 1956 SC 153) and quoted with approval the following passage from that judgment:—

"It may be stated broadly that what distinguishes a Court from a quasi-judicial tribunal is that it is charged with a duty to decide disputes in a judicial manner and declares the rights of parties in a definitive judgment. To decide in a judicial manner involves that the parties are entitled as a matter of right to be heard in support of their claim and to adduce evidence in proof of it. And it also imports an obligation on the part of the authority to decide the matter on a consideration of the evidence adduced and in accordance with law. When a question, therefore, arises as to whether an authority created by an Act is a Court as distinguished from a quasi-judicial tribunal, what has to be decided is whether having regard to the provisions of the Act it possesses all the attributes of a Court."

18. Proceeding further, reliance was placed upon the following observations contained in 1937-2 KB 309 (supra) which had been earlier approved by the Supreme Court in Brajnandan Sinha's case, AIR 1956 SC 66:—

"A true judicial decision pre-supposes an existing dispute between two or more parties, and then involves four requisites:

(1) The presentation (not necessarily orally) of their case by the parties to the dispute; (2) if the dispute between them is a question of fact the ascertainment of the fact by means of evidence adduced by the parties to the dispute and often with the assistance of argument by or on behalf of the parties on the evidence; (3) if the dispute between them is a question of law, the submission of legal arguments by the parties; and (4) a decision which disposes of the whole matter by a finding upon the facts in dispute and an application of the law of the land to the facts so found, including where required a ruling upon any disputed question of law."

19. In the light of these authoritative pronouncements laying down the tests for determining whether an authority is a Court or not, I now proceed to examine the functions in discharge of which the order, disobedience of which is complained of, was passed by the Financial Commissioner. That order was admittedly made by the Financial Commissioner while exercising his revisional jurisdiction under sub-section (3) of S 39 of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). Under this provision, the Financial Commissioner has the authority to call for, examine and revise the proceedings of the prescribed authority or the Assistant Collector First Grade or the Collector or the Commissioner, as is provided in Section 84 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887. Sub-section (5) of S 84 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887, provides—

"If, after examining the record, the Financial Commissioner is of opinion that it is expedient to interfere with the proceedings or the order or decree on any ground on which the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction may under the law for the time being in force interfere with the proceedings or an order or decree of a Civil Court, he shall fix a day for hearing the case, and may, on that or any subsequent day to which he may adjourn the hearing or which he may appoint in this behalf, pass such order as he thinks fit in the case."

20. Apart from this specific provision, making it incumbent upon the Financial Commissioner to hear the parties before interfering with the order against which the revisional proceedings are pending before him, the scheme of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955, itself leaves no doubt that the Financial Commissioner, in exercise of his revisional powers, functions as a Court. In this connection, it will suffice to refer to Section 41 of this Act, which runs thus:—

"41 Officers holding enquiries to have powers of Civil Courts. Any officer or authority holding an enquiry or hearing an appeal or a revision under this Act shall have the powers of a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Act V of 1908), relating to—

- (a) Proof of facts by affidavits;
- (b) enforcing attendance of any person and his examination on oath,
- (c) production of documents;
- (d) issue of commission;

and every such officer or authority shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of Sections 480 and 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act IV of 1898)"

21. Section 42 then provides for penalty for making a false statement in the course of the proceedings under the Act. Section 47 bars the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to settle, decide or deal with any matter which under this Act is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Financial Commissioner or the prescribed authority, and further provides:—

"No order of the Financial Commissioner, the Commissioner, the Collector or the prescribed authority made under or in pursuance of this Act shall be called in question in any Court."

22. In view of all these provisions and the Scheme of the Act, the conclusion is inescapable that the Financial Commissioner was acting as a Court in making the order, the disobedience of which is complained of before us.

23. That he is a Court subordinate to this Court for the purpose of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act no longer admits of any doubt, as on review of the various authorities, it has been ruled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Criminal Appeal No 18 of 1965, D/-13-3-1967 = (AIR 1967 SC 1494):—

"Under Art. 227 of the Constitution, the High Court exercises judicial control over all Courts and tribunals functioning within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction."

Reiterating the point, Mitter J., observed.—

"Article 227 is of wider ambit; it does not limit the jurisdiction of the High Court to the hierarchy of Courts functioning directly under it under the Civil Procedure Code and Criminal Procedure Code, but it gives the High Court power to correct errors of various kinds of all Courts and tribunals in appropriate cases. Needless to add that errors as to the interpretation of the Constitution is not out of the purview of Art. 227 although the High Court could not, under the powers conferred by this Article, withdraw a case to itself from a tribunal and dispose of the same, or determine merely the question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution arising before the tribunal. In our view, the subordination for the purpose of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act means judicial subordination and not subordination under the hierarchy of Courts under the Civil Procedure Code or the Criminal Procedure Code."

24. For all these reasons, we are of the opinion that the Financial Commissioner acting under the provisions of S 43 (39) of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955, is a Court subordinate to this Court for the purposes of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1952, and its contempt can be taken notice of and punished by this Court.

25. J. S. BEDI J.:— I agree.

CWM/D.V.C. Order accordingly.

Jagdish Mitter, Petitioner v. Union of India and another, Respondents.

Civil Writ No. 2307 of 1965, D/-28-2-1969, decided by Full Bench on Order of Reference made by P. D. Sharma J., D/-15-2-1967.

(A) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 102 — Dismissal of Government servant found illegal and set aside — Servant reinstated — Suit for recovery of arrears of salary — Can claim salary only for a period of three years and two months before the suit — R. 52 of the Fundamental Rules does not apply — ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 & R. F. A. No. 8-D of 1964, D/-6-9-1966 (Punj) & (1967) 1 Ser. LR 594 (Punj) Overruled; AIR 1961 Mad 486 & AIR 1963 Mad 425, Dissented from — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes — Statute of Limitation).

A public servant, after his dismissal or removal has been declared to be unlawful, can claim wages or salary only up to a period of three years and two months in lieu of the notice period under Section 80, Civil P. C. from the date when the cause of action accrued. Case law discussed. ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 and R. F. A. No. 8-D of 1964, D/-6-9-1966 (Punj) and (1967) 1 Ser LR 594 (Punj) Overruled; AIR 1961 Mad 486 and AIR 1963 Mad 425, Dissented from. (Para 21)

When an order of dismissal of a civil servant is declared void or inoperative, the declaration of the Court does not make the order void but merely declares or exposes the already existing infirmity in the order. Such an order of dismissal being ineffective from its inception, the civil servant continues in service in spite of the order and the cause of action for the salary accrues every month. The right to recover wages or salary under Article 102 is a continuing right and each successive breach gives right to a fresh cause of action. (Paras 8, 18)

A legal fiction having been employed for saying that an order of dismissal is non est and non-existing in the eye of law, if it is found to be wrongful and ultra vires, all the consequences flowing from it should be logically pursued and followed and one of such results is that the salary had accrued to the official who had been wrongfully dismissed. The sweep and amplitude of the legal fiction that the employee should be deemed to be in service all along will have the effect of preventing payment of arrears in respect of a period beyond three years when actually the employee was doing nothing for the Government. However, ethical considerations of fairness and equity are hardly relevant or germane in determining the strict and technical rules of limitation. When the terminus a quo is the time when the wages accrue and by a legal fiction the entire period of removal or dismissal is deemed to be one spent in actual service, it is legitimate to give full meaning and content to the words in the third column of Article 102 of the Limitation Act. (Paras 10, 11)

Further, in cases in which the dismissal of a public servant is declared invalid by a Civil Court and he is reinstated, the operation of R. 52 of the Fundamental Rules will come to a stop and it will cease to have any force in the eye of law. An order setting aside the dismissal cannot by its very nature alter the date of accrual of cause of action. (Para 16)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Writ proceedings — Consequential relief — High Court has power to order.

Even in writ proceedings the High Court has, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, power for the purpose of enforcement of fundamental rights and statutory rights to give consequential relief but the Court ought not ordinarily to lend its aid to a party by this extraordinary remedy of mandamus when the relief prayed for raises a triable issue of limitation in which case it would be best to leave the party to seek his remedy by the ordinary mode of action in a civil Court: AIR 1964 SC 1006 Rel. on. Abnasha Singh, for Petitioner; J. L. Gupta, for Respondents.

SHAMSHER BAHADUR, J.— The question which has been referred to this Full Bench by the order of P. D Sharma J of 15th of February, 1967, arises from two sets of Bench decisions of this Court in K. K Jagga v State of Punjab ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302— Regular First Appeal No 8-D of 1964 (Punj) Union of India v Maharaj decided by S B Capoor and H R Khanna JJ. on 6th of September, 1966 and the State of Punjab v. Ram Singh Brar, (1967) 1 Ser LR 594 (Punj) decided by Mahajan and Narula JJ on the one hand and Union of India v Ram Nath, ILR (1966) 2 Punj 907 = (AIR 1966 Punj 500) (Dulat and S K. Kapur JJ) on the other, which though in conflict with each other purport to follow the same authority of the Supreme Court in Madhav Laxman Vaikunte v. State of Mysore, (1962) 1 SCR 886 = (AIR 1962 SC 8). The impasse, which is sought to be resolved centres on the question whether, a Government employee whose dismissal from service has been found to be void and unlawful can recover by a suit or proceeding filed in time his claim for arrears of salary in respect of the entire period when he remained out of employment or is limited only to a period of three years before the institution of the suit or proceeding?

2. The facts with regard to the case in point may now be briefly narrated. The petitioner Jagdish Mitter, a temporary clerk in the office of the Post-Master General, Lahore, since 9th of October, 1946, was discharged from service on 1st of December, 1949. In a suit brought against the Union of India on 11th November, 1952, and dismissed by the trial Court on 22nd March, 1954, the lower appellate Court granted a decree in his favour on May 25, 1954 to the effect that the termination of his service was illegal being in contravention of the relevant Rules and Regulations. In a further appeal of the Union of India, the suit was again dismissed by a Single Judge of the Punjab High Court (S. B. Capoor J) on 10th August, 1959, and the petitioner, though unsuccessful in his appeal before the Letters Patent Bench which dismissed it in limine on 19th August, 1960, eventually gained his point on 20th of September, 1963, before the Supreme Court in a judgment which is often cited as an authority on the question of wrongful dismissal, this being Jagdish Mitter v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 449. According to the judgment of the Supreme Court, the decree passed in favour of Jagdish Mitter by the lower appellate Court was restored.

3. In consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court, which declared that the petitioner was illegally dismissed from service "and that, therefore, he continues in service", the Director, Postal Services, on 2nd July, 1964, passed an order for reinstating him as a lower division clerk with effect from 1st December, 1949. It was further directed that the petitioner would be entitled to such of his pay and allowances for the period between 1st of December, 1949, when his services were terminated and 4th of October, 1963, when he was reinstated by virtue of the Supreme Court decision, as would be permissible under the law of limitation. The petitioner kept on agitating departmentally for the full benefits which he claimed should have accrued to him as a result of his ultimate success in the litigation, but his request was turned down on 6th of November, 1964, and was offered only three years' pay preceding the date of his reinstatement from which the sum which he had already drawn while temporarily employed was to be deducted. A notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was then sent by the petitioner to the Government of India on 3rd of April, 1965, and the present writ petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India was filed on 21st of August, 1965, praying that he should be deemed to be in service right from the date of termination of his service, i.e., 1st December, 1949, and that he should be paid arrears of salary for the entire period without deduction of the amounts which he may have received while in service during that period. Mr. Abnasha Singh, counsel for the petitioner, further submits that some ancillary relief for proper adjustment of seniority has also to be spelled out from the relief claimed in the petition.

4. Sharma J., who heard the petition on 15th of February, 1967, noticed a conflict of judicial view regarding the question formulated aforesaid, and the matter has, therefore, been sent for the authoritative pronouncement of this Bench on the question whether after the cause of action is found to be in time, recovery can be effected for the entire period when the employee was under dismissal or suspension or up to a period of three years and two months in lieu of the notice period?

5. It is common ground that, the time from which the period would begin to run is governed by Article 102, of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 which is to this effect:—

"Description of suit."	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run.
102. For wages not otherwise expressly provided for by this schedule.	Three Years.	When the wages accrue due."

6. The claim of the petitioner is founded on a Division Bench Judgment of Gurdev Singh J. and myself in Jaggia's case ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302, where in a writ petition it was held that the right to recover full pay and allowances for the period of interim suspension was to accrue to the aggrieved person from the date when the order of his dismissal was quashed and under Article 102 of the Limitation Act, if the proceeding was brought within three years from that date, the entire amount of arrears during the period of wrongful suspension became due. Gurdev Singh J., with whom I agreed, directed the respondent State of Punjab to

"pay full salary and allowances admissible to the petitioner for the entire period between the dates of his first suspension and reinstatement, i.e., from 16th May, 1956, to 19th September, 1963, after deducting the amount which the petitioner has already received as subsistence allowance for the period of his suspension prior to his dismissal."

7. Reliance for this conclusion was sought from the Supreme Court authority in Laxman Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) where a public servant reduced in rank on 11th August, 1948, continued in service and retired on superannuation on 29th of November, 1953. In a suit filed by the official against the Government of Bombay on 2nd of August, 1954, for a declaration that the order of reduction in rank passed on 11th August, 1948, was void, inoperative and ultra vires, as also for recovery of arrears of salary, allowances etc., it was held that reduction in rank was unlawful but a decree in respect of three years' period from 2nd June, 1951, that is to say, three years plus two months for notice prior to the date of institution of the suit, was passed. The claim for arrears of salary prior to 2nd of June, 1951, was held to be barred by limitation. The decision of the Supreme Court was relied upon by the Bench in Jaggia's case ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 for the proposition that in a suit to recover arrears of salary the provisions of Article 102 of the Indian Limitation Act are applicable. It seems to me in retrospect that the observation made by the Bench in Jaggia's case ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 that if the suit is within three years the entire arrears of wages or salary could be recovered when a public servant remained under wrongful suspension or dismissal, was not in accord with the relief granted by the Supreme Court in Laxman Vaikunthe's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8). No doubt, their Lordships of the Supreme Court did not give any reasons for this conclusion, but it is manifest from the decree in respect of three years and two months passed by the Court that the claim if otherwise in time was to be restricted to this period.

8. In Laxman Vaikunthe's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) the Supreme Court relied on a decision of the Federal Court in Punjab Province v. Tara-chand, 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC 23) a decision to which reference was also made by Gurdev Singh J. in Jaggia's case ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302. Though the prinprincipal question in Tarachand's case, 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC 23) related to the right of a servant of the Crown for arrears of salary and the decision of that Court that such a right was governed by Article 102 of the Limitation Act and that the word 'wages' was wide enough to include 'salary' Zafrulla Khan J., towards the end of the judgment made mention of the question of limitation which was raised by the counsel appearing for the contesting parties by the leave of the Court. At page 109 (of FCR)=(at p 29 of AIR) of the report, his Lordship observed.—

"It is obvious that if this was a case of breach of contract there were successive breaches at the end of each month and the respondent would still be entitled to recover arrears of pay which fell due within a period of three years before the institution of the suit. On this being pointed out counsel conceded that that was so and the point was not further pressed."

The ratio decidendi of the Federal Court on the aspect of limitation clearly was that, the right to recover wages or salary under Article 102 was a continuing right and each successive breach gave right to a fresh cause of action. The legal consequence which flows from this conclusion is that recovery could be made in respect of dues for a period of three years only before the institution of the suit or proceeding, and such was the implicit assumption of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Laxman Vaikunth's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) when the suit of the aggrieved official which was found to be in time was decreed only for a period of three years and two months.

9. As observed by the Supreme Court in State of Madhya Pradesh v Syed Qamarali, (1967) 1 Ser LR 228 (SC) if an order of dismissal is made in breach of mandatory provisions and is found to be void and inoperative it becomes totally invalid and such an order of dismissal, in the words of Mr. Justice Das Gupta "had therefore no legal existence and it was not necessary for the respondent to have the order set aside by a Court". In the eye of law, therefore, the order of dismissal ceases to have any existence and the period of dismissal in consequence must be regarded as a period for which the dismissed employee must be deemed to be in service. In short, the legal fiction itself regarding the non-existence of the order of dismissal gives rise to the other fiction about his continued accrual of wage or salary dues during the period of dismissal.

10. Mr. Abnasha Singh, the learned counsel for the petitioner, besides Jaggi's case, ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 has placed reliance on two other Bench decisions of this Court. In R F. A. No. 8-D of 1964, (Punj) decided by a Circuit Bench of S B. Kapoor and H R Khanna JJ. of this Court on 6th of September, 1966, Maharaj, an employee of the Military Secretary's Branch, General Headquarters, Government of India, was dismissed from service with effect from 20th of May, 1947, and his suit for reinstatement in service though dismissed in the first instance, was decreed by the lower appellate Court. The Government's appeal was dismissed by the High Court on 25th March, 1955, and the application to file a letters patent appeal was further dismissed on 21st of September, 1956. The employee was in consequence reinstated in November, 1957. In a suit brought by the official for recovery of arrears a point was raised on behalf of the Government that he could not recover more than three years and two months' salary in consequence of the decision in Laxman Vaikunth's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8). The Bench observed that in the Supreme Court decision and the case before it, the essential difference was that the plaintiff before the Supreme Court had not been dismissed or discharged from service but had been reverted from his officiating to his substantive post, while Maharaj was actually dismissed from service. An observation was made that the pay and allowances of a Government servant, who is dismissed or removed from service cease from the date of "such dismissal or removal". As provided in Rule 52 of the Fundamental Rules, "the pay and allowances of a Government servant who is dismissed, or removed from service cease from the date of such dismissal or removal".

'According to the Bench, the continuing breach, to which reference was made in Tarachand's case 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC 23), ceased to be of any effective use in a case of removal or dismissal. As it would be necessary in such a case for the Government servant to have the order of dismissal or removal first set aside for suit for recovery of arrears, the claim should not be restricted to a period of three years and two months. In the words of the Court—

"It is, however, only by a legal fiction that the Government servant in such a case is deemed to have been in service all along, but the hard fact is that in consequence of the order of his dismissal the plaintiff was barred by Fundamental Rule 52 from making any claim to salary until he had the order of dismissal set aside by the Court. It would be absurd and futile to suggest that in the long interval while the litigation remained pending the plaintiff should have periodically filed suits for his salary."

The answer to this argument is that a legal fiction having been employed for saying that an order of dismissal is non est and non-existing in the eye of law, if it is found to be wrongful and ultra vires, all the consequences flowing from it should be logically pursued and followed and one of such results is that the salary had accrued to the official who had been wrongfully dismissed. In a House of Lords case in East End Dwellings Co. Ltd. v. Finsbury Borough Council, (1952) AC 109, Lord Asquith said thus at page 132:—

"If you are bidden to treat an imaginary state of affairs as real, you must surely, unless prohibited from doing so, also imagine as real the consequences and incidents which, if the putative state of affairs had in fact existed, must inevitably have flowed from or accompanied it . . . The statute says that you must imagine a certain state of affairs; it does not say that having done so, you must cause or permit your imagination to boggle when it comes to the inevitable corollaries of that state of affairs."

11. No doubt, Lord Asquith was speaking of the legal fiction in the construction of a statute, but I do not see how the principle will not apply in the case of a legal fiction which has been employed by the highest Court of the land in the case of a wrongful order of dismissal. In fact, the sweep and amplitude of the legal fiction that the employee should be deemed to be in service all along will have the effect of preventing payment of arrears in respect of a period beyond three years when actually the employee was doing nothing for the Government. However, ethical considerations of fairness and equity are hardly relevant or germane in determining the strict and technical rules of limitation. When the terminus a quo is the time when the wages accrue and by a legal fiction the entire period of removal or dismissal is deemed to be one spent in actual service, it is legitimate to give full meaning and content to the words in the third column of Article 102 of the Indian Limitation Act.

12. The reason for distinguishing the case of Maharaj, R.F.A. No. 8-D of 1964 D/- 6-9-1966 (Punj) from that of the Supreme Court in Vaikunth's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) adduced by the learned Bench does not appear to us to be tenable. There is neither any reason nor principle in differentiating a case of reversion or reduction in rank from that of dismissal when the claim for wages or salary is founded on the wrongful act of dismissal or reversion. Moreover, Tarachand's case, 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC

23), on which the decision of Vaikunth's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) is based made it clear about the continuing cause of action which subsisted for the claimant during the period of wrongful dismissal.

13. Before referring to the third decision of this Court in favour of the petitioner, it may be useful to make mention of a Bench decision of the Madras High Court in State of Madras v. Anantharaman, ILR (1963) Mad 1014=(AIR 1963 Mad 425) in which also Laxman Vaikunth's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) and Tarachand's case, 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC 23) are discussed. In speaking of the fiction with regard to the period of wrongful dismissal, the learned Chief Justice Ramchandra Ayyar observed at page 1018 (of ILR)=(at p. 426 of AIR) —

"The fiction that a person who had been illegally dismissed continues to be in service, though one in law, is not a statutory fiction to warrant the application of the rule stated above. Again the purpose of the fiction is merely to regard a public servant as if he had not been legally removed or dismissed. But that cannot necessarily justify the importation of another fiction, namely, that while he was in such fictitious service his salary also accrued every month. No principle of law warrants the second fiction."

Relying also on Rule 52 of the Fundamental Rules, the Madras High Court held that in a case of dismissal of a public servant, his right to salary will accrue only when the order of dismissal has been set aside either by the departmental authorities or by a civil Court and claim made within three years from the date of order setting aside the dismissal must be held to be in time under Article 102 of the Limitation Act. With respect, we consider that the judgment of the Madras High Court in Anantharaman's case ILR (1963) Mad 1014=(AIR 1963 Mad 425) following another Division Bench judgment of Jagadisan and Kailasam JJ. in Union of India v. R. Akbar Sheriff, AIR 1961 Mad 486, is subject to the same attack and criticism as the Circuit Bench decision of this Court in Maharaj's case R. F. A. No. 8-D of 1964 D/- 6-9-1966 (Punj). In Sheriff's case, AIR 1961 Mad 486 the learned Judges in holding that the claim, if in time, would cover the entire period of dismissal, said at page 495 about the Federal Court decision in Tarachand's case 1947 FCR 89=(AIR 1947 FC 23) that "it cannot be that the salary of each month fell due at the beginning of next month on the facts of the present case. So long as the dismissal order was in force against the plaintiff he had no right to claim salary."

14. The decision in the case of Maharaj, R.F.A. No 8-D of 1964 D/- 6-9-1966 (Punj) was followed by a Bench of D. K. Mahajan and Narula, JJ in (1967) 1 Ser LR 594 (Punj) in which reference was made to the Supreme Court decision in Laxman Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8). In that case, the plaintiff was retired compulsorily from service by the Government of Pepsu on 6th of September, 1948, and was reinstated by the order of the Government on 23rd of February, 1951. He kept on agitating for the arrears of salary and a suit was filed for recovery on 23rd April, 1957. Though the suit for arrears of salary was barred under Article 102 of the Limitation Act having been filed more than three years after the date of reinstatement, it was observed at page 596 that,—

"So far as relief qua declaration is concerned, we may safely say that if the suit was within limitation, the plaintiff would be entitled to his salary from the 8th of September, '48, to the 23rd of February, 1951, and for that purpose we need refer only to a Division Bench decision of this Court in Regular First Appeal No 8-D of 1964 (Punj) decided by S. B. Kapoor and H. R. Khanna JJ."

15. Thus, the Bench in the case of Ram Singh Brar (1967) 1 Ser LR 594 (Punj) affirmed unequivocally the principle which had been enunciated by S. B. Kapoor and H. R. Khanna, JJ. in the case of Maharaj R. F. A. No. 8-D of 1964, D/- 6-9-1966 (Punj)

16. The other point of view, which we are inclined to accept being in accord with the decision of the Supreme Court in Laxman Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) was expounded by the Circuit Bench of this Court of Dulat and S. K. Kapur JJ in ILR (1966) 2 Punj 907=(AIR 1966 Punj 500). Ram Nath an employee of the Posts and Telegraph Department, who remained under suspension from 9th April, 1946 to 18th January, 1952, was dismissed on 19th January, 1952 in consequence of a departmental enquiry. A suit was filed by him on 5th March, 1957, to challenge the order of dismissal and a substantial sum was claimed as arrears of his pay till 28th February, 1957. Both the reliefs of declaration that the dismissal was illegal and ultra vires and a decree for Rs. 24,430.65 on account of arrears of salary from 19th January, 1952, to 13th January, 1950, were granted by the trial Court. Both parties appealed and on behalf of the Union of India the only plea raised was that the decree could only be passed for a period of three years and two months, the rest of the claim being barred by time under Article 102 of the Limitation Act. While discussing the case of ILR (1963) Mad 1014=(AIR 1963 Mad 425), which had distinguished the Laxman Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) on ground of applicability of Fundamental Rule 52, S. K. Kapur J., speaking for the Court, observed that their Lordships of the Supreme Court had clearly laid down that "the period of limitation starts, not from the date of declaration by the court, but from the date it accrues due irrespective of such a declaration", this being implicit from the fact that the claim in Laxman Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8), which was otherwise in time was allowed only from 2nd June 1951, uptill the date of the plaintiff's retirement from Government service. If the order of dismissal is illegal, it must follow logically, in the view of Kapur J., that Rule 52 of the Fundamental Rules, regarding which an argument was also raised before us by Mr. Abnasha Singh, never in the eye of law came into operation. An order setting aside the dismissal cannot by its very nature alter the date of accrual of cause of action. With regard to the argument which is pegged to Fundamental Rule 52, it may be mentioned that a similar contention with regard to Fundamental Rule 54, which enables the State Government of Uttar Pradesh to fix the pay of a public servant where dismissal is set aside in a departmental appeal, was raised before the Supreme Court and it was held in Devendra Pratap Narain Rai Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1334, that Rule 54 had no application in cases "in which the dismissal of a public servant is declared invalid by a civil court and he is reinstated". On a parity of reasoning, it can acceptably be urged that the operation of Rule 52 of the Fundamental Rules will come to a stop and it will cease to have any force in the eye of law, as observed by S. K. Kapur J.

17. We agree respectfully with the logic and reasoning of S. K. Kapur J and find that there is no escape from the conclusion that the Supreme Court in Vaikunthe's case (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) had restricted the claim which was otherwise within limitation to a period of three years from the date of institution of the suit or proceeding. With regard to Jagga's case, ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302 it was rightly observed by Kapur J. that the point for decision only related to the question whether the suit was filed within time and the right to recover full pay and allowances for the period of employee's interim suspension accrued to him on the date when the order of dismissal was quashed by the competent Court.

18. Mr. Jawahar Lal Gupta, the learned counsel for the respondent, has relied on various other decisions in support of the result reached by Dulat and Kapur JJ. in Ram Nath's case ILR (1966) 2 Punj 907=(AIR 1966 Punj 500). In Union of India v. P. V. Jagannath, AIR 1968 Madh Pra 204, a Division Bench of T. C. Shrivastava and G. P. Singh JJ. while discussing the entire case law on the subject said that when an order of dismissal of a civil servant is declared void or inoperative, the declaration of the Court does not make the order void but merely declares or exposes the already existing infirmity in the order. Such an order of dismissal being ineffective from its inception, the civil servant continues in service in spite of the order and the cause of action for the salary accrues every month. In that case, the entire claim was found to relate to a period prior to three years and was not to be barred by time under Article 102 of the Limitation Act.

19. The Bench of Chief Justice Narasimham and R. K. Das J. of the Orissa High Court in Syam Sunder Misra v. Municipal Chairman, Parlakimedi, AIR 1964 Orissa 111, has taken a similar view. According to this decision, an employee who feels aggrieved by his dismissal from service by his employer has a right to sue not only for a declaration that his dismissal was wrongful, but also for the consequential relief for payment of arrears of wages and other emoluments. Chief Justice Narasimham, in speaking for the Court, resolved the difficulty with which an aggrieved employee may be confronted by saving that proceedings for declaration and recovery of salary should be initiated by him simultaneously. Said he at page 112:—

"He cannot obviously split up the two reliefs and sue for the former relief only, in view of the express prohibition contained in Order 2, Rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure, and Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Limitation for both the reliefs would therefore, run from the date on which the right to sue accrued to him. If, however, instead of filing a regular civil suit for these reliefs he seeks for an alternative remedy by a direct application to the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution and does not pray for the consequential relief of arrears of salary, etc., he cannot urge that the right to ask for this latter relief accrued only after the date of the judgment of this Court in that writ application."

20. The Bombay High Court in State of Bombay v. Ganpat Dhondiba Sawant, AIR 1966 Bom 228, in a judgment of K. K. Desai and Palekar JJ. observed that the Supreme Court in Vaikunthe's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8) had clearly held that the claim under Article 102 of the Limitation Act could be confined only to the period of three years from the date of institution of the suit in case of arrears of salary in respect of the period of wrongful dismissal. The State appeal with regard to the decree passed in favour of the employee for Rs. 1701-5-0 was held to be barred by the Law of Limitation on the ruling of the Supreme Court in Vaikunthe's case, (1962) 1 SCR 886=(AIR 1962 SC 8).

20A. Mr. Abnasha Singh strongly relied on a Single Bench judgment of Dhavan J. in Hari Raj Singh v. Sanchalak Panchayat Raj, AIR 1968 All 246. What fell for decision by the Court in that case was the right of a civil servant on reinstatement to receive arrears of pay and allowances for the period of his absence from duty under Rule 54 of the Fundamental Rules. No doubt, the learned Judge said in that case that the State Government is not permitted to reject the claim on the ground that it is time-barred after a Government servant has been reinstated, it having been found that his dismissal was unlawful. The views of the Supreme Court have already been noticed on this aspect and it would be an exercise in futility to pursue this matter further about the true effect of Rule 54 of the Fundamental Rules or for that matter of Rule 52 on which reliance has been placed before us. There are some other Single and Division Bench judgments cited at the Bar, such as Sudhir Kumar Das v. General Manager, N. F. Railway, Maligaon, Pandu, 1968 Ser LR 654 = (AIR 1968 Assam 8) decided by Chief Justice Nayudu and Goswami J. of the Assam High Court, but in view of the authoritative pronouncements of the Supreme Court, it is not necessary to subject them to any close analysis.

21. On a review of the authorities which, to emphasise, make no distinction between civil suits and writ proceedings, we are of the opinion that a public servant, after his dismissal or removal has been declared to be unlawful, can claim wages or salary only up to a period of three years and two months from the date when the cause of action accrued. The decisions of this Court in ILR (1966) 1 Punj 302; R. F. A. No. 8-D of 1964 (Punj) and (1967) 1 Ser LR 594 (Punj), in so far as they take a contrary view have not, in our opinion, been correctly decided. Even in writ proceedings, as was held in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhailal Bhal, AIR 1964 SC 1006, the High Court has, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, power for the purpose of enforcement of fundamental rights and statutory rights to give consequential relief but the Court ought not ordinarily to lend its aid to a party by this extraordinary remedy of mandamus when the relief prayed for raises a triable issue of limitation in which case it would be best to leave the party to seek his remedy by the ordinary mode of action in a civil Court.

22. This answer to the reference does not settle completely the case of the petitioner as, according to Mr. Abnasha Singh, his learned counsel, there is still the question of his seniority and other reliefs to be settled. We will, therefore, send back this case to the learned Single Judge for passing appropriate orders. The question of costs does not arise at this stage.

not lose it by the precise ascertainment of its value in cases which do not admit of such ascertainment at the time of its institution. Moreover, in the present case, the defendant completely identified himself with the plaintiff and not only failed to raise any objection regarding jurisdiction but positively agreed to all the assertions made by the plaintiff in the plaint and therefore, it did not lie in the defendants mouth to raise any such objection regarding jurisdiction, unless he was able to show that it was a case of total lack of jurisdiction. R. R. Chacha, for Petitioner; K. M. Singhvi, for Respondents.

ORDER: This is a defendant's revision arising out of a suit for partition.

2. The case has a chequered history. Defendant Mahadeo petitioner is the father and the plaintiff Hanuman Mal (who has died since the institution of this revision petition and is now represented by respondents Nos. 1(a) to 1(j) was the son of Mahadeo. Baboolal respondent is the second son of Mahadeo. Mahadeo had two brothers Chaturbhuj and Kaluram. Chaturbhuj left no issue and Kaluram had one son Gordhan Prasad, who is also one of the respondents before me. Hanumanmal filed the suit for partition in the Court of Civil Judge, Ratangarh on 13-1-1953 against Mahadeo, Baboolal and Gordhan Prasad alleging that his grand-father Chandanmal had left a 'Haveli' in Ratangarh in which Gordhan Prasad had half share which had already been partitioned by metes and bounds and thus there remained the other half share in which he, his brother Baboolal and his father Mahadeo were entitled to get 1/3rd share each. He also averred in the plaint that there was some moveable joint family property belonging to himself and his father and brother which too had to be partitioned. He valued 1/6th share in the Haveli to which he was entitled at Rs. 2000 and 1/3rd share of the moveables at Rs. 500 and thus valued his suit for the purpose of pecuniary jurisdiction at Rs. 2500. It was prayed that the Haveli may be partitioned by metes and bounds and he may be put in possession of 1/6th share of the same. It was also prayed that the moveable property may be partitioned and 1/3rd share in the moveable property may be ordered to be given to him.

3. Defendant Gordhan Prasad remained absent in spite of service and was proceeded against ex parte. Mahadeo filed written statement but did not contest the plaintiff's claim but on the other hand admitted it. Defendant No. 2 Baboolal in his written statement, pleaded that besides the house mentioned in the plaint there were some more properties liable to be partitioned. He pleaded that a suit for partial partition could not lie and that the entire joint family property including the assets of the joint family firm Chandanmal Mahadeo should be partitioned. His case was that if all the properties liable to be partitioned were taken into consideration then the share of the plaintiff alone in those properties would be more than Rs. 10,000. He therefore, contended that the suit was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Civil Judge, Ratangarh, who was competent to try suits of valuation of not more than Rs 10,000. On the pleadings of the parties the learned Civil Judge, Ratangarh framed six issues in all which read as under:-

1. Are the 'Nohra' situate in the Mohalla of Beghrai Maharasiya and the Haveli situate behind the temple of Mahes ancestral properties of the parties, and, therefore, must be included in the suit for partition?

2. Is the suit not triable by the Civil Judge, Ratangarh?

3. Is the firm Chandanmal Mahadeo an ancestral firm of the parties and should be included in the partition suit?

4. Are the silver bar, gold ornaments and utensils etc also the ancestral properties of the parties and should be included in the suit?

5. What should be the scheme of the partition?

6. Relief?

Before any evidence could be led on any of these issues, an application (marked Ex. A1 on the record) signed by Mahadeo Hanumanmal and Baboolal was presented before the Court on 6-4-1954 praying that the parties wanted to get the dispute regarding partition decided by the arbitrators Sagarmal Norangamal and Ghanthamdas. It was prayed in this application that the arbitrators would have full authority to determine the joint family property of the parties and to give any decision in the matter which they thought fit. In other words very wide and comprehensive power was given to the arbitrators to determine the items of joint family property and to carry out the partition in whatever way they liked. The trial court allowed this application and referred the matter to the said arbitrators for filing award. The arbitrators filed their award on 22-4-1954 and besides Immoveable property they also gave directions for partition of certain moveables including ornaments.

4. After the award had been submitted to the Court, Hanumanmal and Mahadeo filed their objections to the award on 1-5-1954. They also led evidence in support of their objections. Here, it may be stated, that one of the objections raised by Mahadeo was that the Court of Civil Judge, Ratangarh had no jurisdiction to make the award the rule of the Court. Inasmuch as the plaintiff's share according to the award was of a valuation of more than Rs 10,000. It will be however interesting to note that without deciding the objections on merits, on 29-9-1955 the learned Civil Judge Ratangarh observed that admittedly the plaintiff's share according to the award was more than worth Rs 10,000 and as such no decree could be passed by him in accordance with the award. He, therefore, referred the case to the District Judge, Bikaner for withdrawing the suit from his Court and transferring it to a competent court. The learned Civil Judge also observed in his order dated 29-9-1955 that the valuation of the plaintiff's share according to the award would be Rs 11,570 and even if the award was set aside, the property which may fall to the share of the plaintiff will not be less than worth Rs 10,000. The learned District Judge transferred the cases to the Court of Civil Judge, Churu for decision according to law. The Civil Judge Churu on receiving the file of the case proceeded with its trial and passed a decree in accordance with the award on 9-6-1956.

5. Aggrieved by the judgment and decree of the Civil Judge, Churu the plaintiff Hanumanmal and defendant Mahadeo filed an appeal before this Court which was decided on 6-4-1960. This Court held that the Civil Judge Churu had no jurisdiction to deal with the case at all and in this view of the matter the judgment and decree of the Civil Judge Churu were set aside and the case was sent back to the Civil Judge, Ratangarh for disposal of the objections against the award according to law.

6. After remand of the case to his Court the learned Civil Judge, Ratangarh heard the arguments and held that the objections preferred by the parties to the award given by the arbitrators had no substance and therefore he decreed the suit in accordance with the award. Dissatisfied with the judgment and decree of the Civil Judge, Ratangarh the defendant Mahadeo filed an appeal in the Court of District Judge, Bikaner who dismissed the same on 31-7-1964. Mahadeo thereupon, filed a second appeal in this Court from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge, Bikaner. When the case came up for admission on 23-4-1965, Mr. Chacha, learned counsel for the appellant Mahadeo made a prayer that the second appeal filed by Mahadeo may be treated as a revision petition and this was allowed to be done.

7. Mr Chacha, learned counsel for the petitioner Mahadeo, has argued the following points before me

1. That the learned Civil Judge Ratangarh had no jurisdiction to refer the whole matter to arbitration inasmuch as the arbitrators could not have decided the question of jurisdiction of the Court, which was one of the issues in the case.

2. That the award given by the arbitrators is a nullity inasmuch as it contained decision with respect to matters outside the scope of the suit.

3. The Civil Judge, Ratangarh had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for partition in accordance with the award inasmuch as the valuation of the share of the property allotted to the plaintiff according to the award was of a valuation of more than Rs 10,000 and thus beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the learned Civil Judge

4. That the learned District Judge has erred in observing that apart from the question of jurisdiction no other point was pressed before him.

I shall take the points seriatim, points Nos. 1 and 2 in my opinion can be decided together. A bare perusal of the application for making reference (Ex. A 1) would show that the parties had agreed that whatever decision the arbitrators would give, that is, whichever property is held by the arbitrators to be either joint family property or the self-acquired property of any party will be binding upon all the parties. It is further stated in the application that whatever portion of the property is allotted to any of the parties will not be objected to by them. Thus it is clear from the contents of the application that no reference was sought to be made to the arbitrators on the question of jurisdiction of the Court but what the parties wanted was that all their disputes pertaining to partition may be decided by the arbitrators. In these circumstances it cannot be said that the issue regarding jurisdiction of the Court had been referred to the arbitrators. The more important point, however, argued by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that since according to the award the valuation of the share of the joint family property allotted to the plaintiff Hanumanmal was more than Rs. 10,000 the learned Civil Judge, Ratnagarh had no jurisdiction to make the award the rule of the Court. He submits that in the plaint the plaintiff had stated that there were only two items of partition viz. one house and a few moveables, and the valuation of the plaintiff's share as mentioned in the plaint was about Rs. 2500/-. Baboolal contended in his written statement that there were more properties to be partitioned and according to him the valuation of the suit was more than Rs. 10,000. In the award given by the arbitrators some more items of property were included and thus the valuation of the plaintiff's share as determined in the award definitely came to be about Rs. 15,700. It is thus argued by Mr. Chacha that there was inherent lack of jurisdiction and the learned Civil Judge could not pass a decree in accordance with the award. In this connection he had placed reliance on Sections 6 and 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 6, Civil Procedure Code reads as below:—

"6. Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction." Section 15 further provides that "every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it." The Civil Judge, Ratnagarh was admittedly competent to try suits of valuation of not more than Rs. 10,000/- only, and, therefore, argues Mr. Chacha, the decree passed by the learned Civil Judge was beyond his jurisdiction, and therefore a nullity. In this connection it has also been argued that in a partition suit a defendant is also in the position of a plaintiff and in the present case as Baboolal also claimed a share in the joint family properties even though he had raised other pleas he was in the position of a plaintiff. The learned counsel has further submitted that Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act has no application to the present case inasmuch as it is not a case of undervaluation or overvaluation of the suit but it is a case of complete lack of jurisdiction. In support of his argument the learned counsel has placed reliance on Mt. Sundar v. Kandhavia Lal AIR 1946 All 456, Chidamparam v. Subramanian, AIR 1953 Mad 492, Sita Ram Singh v. Tikaram Singh AIR 1942 Oudh 481, Loke Nath Saha v. Radha Gobinda AIR 1926 Cal 184, and Smt. Girija Bai v. Thakur Das, AIR 1967 Mys 217.

8. On the other hand the learned counsel for the respondent Baboolal has contended that the petitioner had waived all objections including that of jurisdiction by agreeing to get the matter decided by the arbitrators. It is argued that as a matter of fact Mahadeo had never raised any objection regarding the jurisdiction of the Court. It is also submitted that the objection regarding the jurisdiction cannot be allowed to prevail as there is no failure of justice in the present case and no prejudice has been caused to any party on merits, and to fortify his submission Mr. Kistoor Mal, learned counsel for the respondent Baboolal has referred to Kiran Singh v. Chaman Paswan, AIR 1954 SC 340, Hiralal Patni v. Sri Kali Nath AIR 1962 SC 199, Moolchand Motilal v. Ram Kishan AIR 1933 All 249 (FB), Shyam Nandan Sahay v. Dhanpati Kuer AIR 1960 Pat 244 (FB) and Krishna Poduval v. Lakshmi Nathiar AIR 1950 Mad 751.

9. I may state at once that none of the authorities cited by the learned counsel for both the parties is with respect to a suit for partition, yet they do lay down certain guiding principles in such matters. In AIR 1946 All 456 a suit had been instituted to obtain a declaration that a deed of gift was not binding on the plaintiff. The suit was valued at Rs. 2000 and instituted in the Court of Munsiff, who had jurisdiction only upto that limit. At a later stage the plaintiff amended the plaint and added a prayer for an injunction which was valued at Rs. 100. In these circumstances the learned Judges held that the facts of the case did not bring it within the ambit of S. 11, Suits Valuation Act. This was obviously not a case of under-valuation and a distinct relief for injunction had been added later on, with the result that the valuation of the suit became more than what was the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsiff. This case is therefore, clearly distinguishable on facts and in my opinion of no assistance to the petitioner.

10. In AIR 1953 Mad 492, it was observed that a Court which has no jurisdiction to determine any matter in controversy in a suit has no jurisdiction to refer it for determination by arbitrators. It was further observed that it will be illogical to hold that what a Court cannot do directly, it can do indirectly through the machinery of arbitration. In my opinion there cannot be any dispute with this proposition. The point, however, is whether apart from reference to arbitrators the Court had jurisdiction to determine the matter in controversy in the present suit, and I shall presently deal with the question whether the Civil Judge, Ratangarh had jurisdiction to decide the suit.

11. In AIR 1942 Oudh 481 it was held that the principle under S 11, Suits Valuation Act cannot be extended to a case where there is a want of inherent jurisdiction.

12. In AIR 1926 Cal 164 it was held that in a suit for partition the position of the parties is not that of the plaintiffs and defendants as in other suits for in a partition suit or in a suit for administration, or in a suit of a similar nature, every party stands in a position of a plaintiff with reference to another and that of the defendant with reference to some other. Therefore, unless there is a special reason, it is not possible to deny to a coparcener that right of partition either at his own instance or at the instance of any one else.

13. In AIR 1967 Mys 217 it was observed that in a suit for partition, each co-owner, as against another occupies in herself or himself the role of the plaintiff as well as the defendant. It is in consequence of this reciprocal character of the right which co-owners have in the matter of partition, that even those who are not the actual plaintiffs can claim that their shares also be allotted to them by the decree.

14. A survey of the authorities cited above by the learned counsel for the petitioner would go to show that in a suit for partition the defendant can also claim to have the partition carried out. It has also been held that in those cases where there is inherent want of jurisdiction S 11 of the Suits Valuation Act can have no application. It is not denied by the learned counsel for the respondent that his client who was the defendant in the suit had the right to claim partition and could claim that partition be carried out not only with respect to the property which had been mentioned by the plaintiff in his plaint, but also with respect to other property, which had been wrongly excluded by the plaintiff. The question, however, remains whether the Civil Judge, Ratangarh had jurisdiction to try the suit. There is no gain-saying the fact that the plaint as framed by the plaintiff was triable by the Civil Judge, Ratangarh. The valuation which the plaintiff has fixed in the plaint was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Judge, Ratangarh. It is well established that the "value of a suit" for purposes of jurisdiction is to be determined by the valuation in the plaint. The valuation which the plaintiff has given in the plaint in the present case is Rs. 2500, and therefore the suit was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Judge, Ratangarh. The petitioner did not contest either the valuation in the plaint or the jurisdiction of the Court. The defendant-respondent Baboolal, however pleaded that the valuation of the plaintiff's share would be more than Rs. 10,000, if all the partible property was taken into consideration. Before the parties could start their evidence, the case was referred to arbitrators and according to the award given by the arbitrators the valuation of the plaintiff's share no doubt came to be more than Rs. 10,000. In these circumstances a question arises could the Civil Judge pass a decree on the basis of the award? In my opinion he could. The reason is that in every case when the Court is seized of jurisdiction it cannot and does not lose it by the precise ascertainment of its value in cases which do not admit of such ascertainment at the time of its institution. Moreover, in the present case, the petitioner completely identified himself with the plaintiff and not only failed to raise any objection regarding jurisdiction but positively agreed to all the assertions made by the plaintiff in the plaint and therefore it does not lie in the petitioner's mouth to raise any such objection regarding jurisdiction, unless he is able to show that it is a case of total lack of jurisdiction.

15. The learned counsel for the respondent urged that it was only case of under-valuation and not a case of inherent lack of jurisdiction. In this connection he has placed reliance on AIR 1954 SC 340. While discussing the scope of Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (1887) their Lordships of the Supreme Court were pleased to observe

"With reference to objections relating to territorial jurisdiction, Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that no objection to the place of suing should be allowed by an appellate or revisional Court, unless there was a consequent failure of justice. It is the same principle that has been adopted in Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act with reference to pecuniary jurisdiction. The policy underlying Sections 21 and 99 C.P.C. and Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is the same namely, that when a case had been tried by a Court on the merits and judgment rendered, it should not be liable to be reversed purely on technical grounds unless it had resulted in failure of justice, and the policy of the legislature, has been to treat objections to jurisdiction both territorial and pecuniary as technical and not open to consideration by an appellate Court, unless there has been a prejudice on the merits. The contention of the appellants, therefore, that the decree and judgment of the District Court, Monghyr, should be treated as a nullity cannot be sustained under Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act."

16. In a later case AIR 1952 SC 199 the validity of a decree passed on award was called into question during the course of execution proceedings and their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that the validity of a decree can be challenged in execution proceedings only on the ground that the Court which passed the decree was lacking in the inherent jurisdiction in the sense that it could not have seized of the case because the subject matter was wholly foreign to its jurisdiction or that the defendant was dead at the time the suit had been instituted or decree passed, or some such other ground which could have the effect of rendering the Court entirely lacking in jurisdiction in respect of the subject matter of the suit or over the parties to it."

17. Learned counsel for the petitioner, has not been able to show how the decree passed by the learned Civil Judge, Ratangarh was entirely lacking in jurisdiction. At one time he argued that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to refer the matter to arbitration at all. He contended that what the court could not do directly could not be done indirectly. What he meant to suggest was that if the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, it could not indirectly invest itself with such jurisdiction by referring the matter to arbitration. I, however, for reasons which I shall presently state find myself unable to accept any of these contentions.

18. In this connection I may refer to the observations made in AIR 1960 Pat 244. In that case a distinction was drawn between the cases where there is inherent lack of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the record and the case where it is doubtful, or at least not so apparent, whether the Court possesses jurisdiction or not. Where there is total lack of jurisdiction, nothing can confer the same on the Court, and an objection to jurisdiction cannot be waived. Therefore, even if such objection has not been raised by any party, the entire proceeding of the Court from the very initial stage is without jurisdiction and void. Where, however, there is no total lack of jurisdiction, but, on the contrary, the averments in the plaint, if not challenged manifestly bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Court in which it is filed, its proceedings are perfectly with jurisdiction, and want of jurisdiction in such a case can rightly be waived. In other words this kind of defect in jurisdiction is not fundamental in character and does not amount to anything more than a mere irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. The lack of pecuniary jurisdiction, it was observed, comes under the latter of the above two kinds of defects, and, therefore, is not fundamental in character. It can be waived by any of the parties, and if not challenged at the proper time, it cannot be questioned subsequently. This is apparent from Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act which clearly indicates that there is no apparent defect in the frame of a suit due to low valuation and it does not take away the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it. In the present case on the valuation given in the plaint, it cannot be disputed that the Courts of Civil Judge, Ratangarh had jurisdiction to try the suit. The defendant raised an objection that the subject-matter of the suit had been under-valued and the valuation of the suit was above Rs. 10,000 but none of the parties wanted to pursue the objection regarding jurisdiction but on the other hand made an application for reference to arbitrators. Learned counsel for the petitioner has failed to show that there was a complete lack of jurisdiction in the Court of Civil Judge, Ratangarh to try the suit, or that there was any defect of fundamental character in the exercise of jurisdiction. The utmost that can be said is that there was under-valuation of the subject-matter of the suit but the decree of the trial court on that account is not liable to be set aside unless the appellate court was satisfied that the under-valuation of the suit had prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on merits. Learned counsel did not at all contend that his client had been prejudicially affected on merits. As observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 340 the objection regarding territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction of a Court is only technical. In this view of the matter I hold that the decree passed by the Civil Judge, Ratangarh for partition of the joint Hindu family property belonging to the parties is neither without jurisdiction nor otherwise null and void. Consequently I overrule this objection also.

19. The next contention raised by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that a decree has been passed by the trial Court with respect to the property which was neither the subject matter of the plaint, nor mentioned in the written statement by the defendant Baboolal. Suffice it to say, that no such objection was taken at any stage of the litigation so far. This objection is not contained even in the memorandum of appeal, and during the course of arguments the learned counsel for the petitioner verbally sought leave to urge this ground. I do not, however, consider it proper to allow this ground to be raised in revision at such a late stage, especially when it is being vehemently opposed by the learned counsel for the respondent. This objection also therefore does not hold any water and is to be stated only to be rejected.

20. Lastly the learned counsel for the petitioner has submitted that his client had urged several grounds attacking the award on merits before the first appellate Court. It is stated that the award was assailed on the ground that the arbitrators had misconducted themselves but the learned District Judge has wrongly mentioned in his judgment that no other point except that of jurisdiction was argued before him. It clearly appears from the judgment of the lower court that no other point was argued before it except the question of jurisdiction. The learned District Judge has mentioned at more than one place in his judgment that no other point was pressed. The statement contained in the judgment must be taken to be true unless there is convincing proof to the contrary. No affidavit either of the counsel who argued the case before the District Judge, nor of the petitioner himself has been filed in this Court alleging that any other points were urged before him and that the statement in the judgment of the lower Court "that no other point was argued" is erroneous. In absence of such an assertion on oath I am not prepared to hold that the observation of the lower court in this respect is incorrect.

21. In the result I do not see any force in this revision and hereby dismiss it, but in the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs of this revision.

VGW/D.V.C. Revision dismissed.

Wealth Tax Act (1957) S. 7(2) — Allowance of depreciation — Matter of discretion of the tribunal — Books showing cost price — Assessee cannot claim depreciation as of right — Finality of exercise of discretion by Tribunal.

It always depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case what amount of depreciation should be allowed and how adjustment is to be made while computing the value of the assets under S. 7(2). While the assessee cannot as a matter of law or as a matter of right urge that depreciation should be allowed to him in accordance with the provisions of the Income-tax Act where his books of account and balance sheet show the assets only at cost price, it cannot be said that when the Tribunal allows depreciation on that basis in the exercise of its discretion, it necessarily commits an error of law. AIR 1964 Guj 154 and (1968) 62 ITR 841 (AP), Ref. to

BHANDARI C. J.: This is a reference under S. 27(1) of the Wealth-tax Act, 1957 (Act No. XXVII of 1957) (hereinafter called the Act) by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, Delhi Bench "A" (hereinafter called the Tribunal), referring the following question to this Court for opinion—

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case, adjustment for depreciation due under the Income-tax Act for the preceding years but not debited to the block account in the balance sheet is in law justified for computing the net wealth of the assessee?"

2. This reference relates to the assessment years 1957-58, 1958-59 and 1959-60. The statement of the case submitted by the Tribunal shows that the assessee is a limited company carrying on the business of manufacture of sugar. For its business, accounts are maintained by the assessee regularly in accordance with the provisions of Section 7(2) of the Act, the Wealth Tax Officer determined the net value of the wealth as a whole, having regard to the balance-sheet of the business as on the valuation date. It was claimed by the assessee that adjustment be made in respect of depreciation on the fixed assets. It was pointed out that all along upto the year ending on 30-6-1955, the assets of the business were shown to the balance-sheet as at cost. For the balance-sheet drawn on 30-6-1956, the value of the assets was shown at cost, less depreciation written off for the year ending 30-6-1956. A note to the effect that "the depreciation on the fixed assets up to the previous year ended 30th June 1955, comes to Rs. 16,73,955 against which a sum of Rupees 1,25,000 only has been provided as a reserve in the previous year due to losses" was appended to the balance sheet. It was claimed that adjustment in respect of the depreciation as due on the assets for the preceding years should be made while determining the net value of the assets on the basis of the balance-sheet. The Wealth Tax Officer and on appeal by the assessee to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of the Wealth Tax, refused to make any adjustment for the depreciation due in respect of the assessment years prior to the year ending on the valuation date. When the matter went up in appeal before the Tribunal, it was held that for a proper valuation of the assets incorporated in the balance-sheet, it was only proper that adjustments should be made in respect of the depreciation due on the assets under the Income Tax Act for the various preceding years. The Tribunal directed the Wealth Tax Officer to recompute the net wealth of the assessee after making adjustment for depreciation due under the Income-tax Act for the preceding years but not taken into account while drawing up the balance-sheet. This common-question referred to us arose in all the three assessment years 1957-58, 1958-59 and 1959-60, so this question of law as mentioned above has been referred to this Court.

3. Under Section 3 of the Act, tax is to be charged in respect of the net wealth of the assessee. The valuation of the net wealth is to be made as provided under Section 7 of the Act which runs as follows:

7. Value of assets how to be determined

"(1) The value of any asset, other than cash, for the purpose of this Act, shall be estimated to be the price which in the opinion of the Wealth Tax Officer it would fetch if sold in the open market on the valuation date.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1).—

(a) Where the assessee is carrying on a business for which accounts are maintained by him regularly, the wealth-tax Officer may, instead of determining separately the value of each asset held by the assessee in such business, determine the net value of the assets of the business as a whole having regard to the balance-sheet of such business as on the valuation date and making such adjustments therein as the circumstances of the case may require.

(b)

4. Under Section 7(1), the value of any asset will be deemed to be the value which the asset would fetch if sold in the open market on the valuation date. This value is to be determined by the Wealth-tax Officer. In order to avoid all complexities involved in determining the value of an asset of an assessee who owns considerable number of properties—big and small—under S. 7(1) another method has been provided under Section 7(2) in the case of an assessee carrying on business and maintaining accounts regularly. Under it, the Wealth-tax Officer may instead of determining separately the value of each asset held by the assessee in such business, determine the net value of the assets of the business as a whole having regard to the balance-sheet of such business as on the valuation date and making such adjustments therein as the circumstances of the case may require.

5. All the revenue authorities in the case adopted this second method in the case of the assessee. It was contended by the assessee all along that its balance-sheet showed the value of the assets at cost and did not take notice of the depreciation. The Wealth Tax Officer took the view that the assessee had not written off any depreciation in his books of account and that the general statement of counsel for the assessee that machinery had depreciated could not be accepted, that in these circumstances, the claim of the assessee was not correct and the book value should be taken as the market value. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Wealth Tax dismissed the appeals of the assessee on the ground that earlier assessments had been set aside with the direction that the Wealth Tax Officer should give the appellant an opportunity of proving that the market value of the assets was less than their book value and such an opportunity was given by that Officer, but the appellants could not adduce any specific and acceptable evidence in this behalf apart from their general assertion that the relevant assets viz., plant and machinery were more than 50 years old and had changed several hands, that the machinery was worked by steam where as the new plants for manufacture of sugar were electric powered but the Wealth-tax Officer in the reassessment under appeal had taken the view that because of import restriction, the value of machinery had been on the increase in the recent years. He concluded by making the following observation:—

"In absence of any specific evidence to indicate that the market value was lower than the book value, the Wealth Tax Officer, to my mind, was justified in going to the book value. This book value, as already stated above took into account charged depreciation of Rs. 1,51,557/- for the year but not reserve of Rs. 1,25,000/- or unabsorbed depreciation of earlier years
... ..
This view seems to be in order and it is upheld.

6. The Tribunal, however, did not accept this view and granted relief to the assessee by making the following observation:—

"The Revenue authorities have refused to make any adjustment for the depreciation due in respect of the assessment years prior to the year ending on the valuation date. For a proper valuation of the value of assets incorporated in the balance-sheet, it is only proper that adjustments should be made in respect of the depreciation due on the assets under the Income-tax Act for the various years. Accordingly the assessee's contention that for working out the valuation of the fixed assets adjustments must be made for the depreciation due on these assets in the preceding years but not accounted for in the balance-sheet, must be upheld.

7. It is thus clear from the order of the Tribunal as well as of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Wealth Tax Officer that these authorities proceeded to determine the value of the assets of the assessee not under Section 7(1) but under Section 7(2) of the Act. The balance-sheet showed the assets at cost, but a note had been appended earlier that depreciation had not been taken into account. The Tribunal took the view that for this reason adjustment must be made in the balance-sheet in computing the value of the assets of the assessee. In the circumstances of the case, the Tribunal took the view that depreciation is to be calculated as provided under the Indian Income-tax Act for the various years and granted relief to the assessee.

8. It is clear from the provisions of Section 7 that while valuing the assets of the assessee, any of the two alternative methods provided in Sections 7 (1) and 7 (2) may be adopted by the Revenue Authorities. It is contended by Mr. Sumerchand Bhandari appearing on behalf of the Department that while adopting the method provided in Section 7 (2) it must be kept in mind that the value of the assets as determined by this method is as near as possible as to the value of the assets if sold in the open market. It is further contended that as the assessee must be taken to have known full well what was the value of his assets on the date of valuation, the valuation shown in his balance-sheet must have been accepted and as the assessee did not make any adjustment on account of depreciation it must be taken that as a whole the assets remained at cost price as shown in the balance-sheet and had not depreciated. But under Section 7 (2) it was open to the Tribunal to make adjustment as the circumstances of the case required and the Tribunal took the view that in the circumstances of the case, depreciation should be allowed. It may have done so for the various reasons that had been urged by the assessee before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner that the machinery was purchased secondhand long back, that it had gone old on account of use and that it was in no way modern as it was to be operated by steam. It cannot be contended as a matter of law that the Tribunal was not justified in making any adjustment on account of depreciation. Mr. Bhandari has, however, contended that even if any allowance was to be made for depreciation, it should have been allowed to the extent allowable under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, because the written down value as calculated under the provisions of that Act merely represents the notional value and may be for different from the market value. Sometimes this may be true, but it cannot be said to be always so. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Commissioner of Wealth-tax, Calcutta v. Tungbhadra Industries Ltd., 1966-60 ITR 447 (Cal), written down value of an asset would give a fair idea of the proper value unless there are abnormal circumstances. In this connection, we may quote the following observations of their Lordships:

"While we agree that the written down value may not in all cases represent the real value of the assets, in normal cases it will give the Wealth-tax Officer a fair idea of its proper value unless the plant and machinery are of a rare type or are of a quality which is not generally available in India and for which there is a keen demand. No such uncommon feature is to be found in the case before us."

9. The Tribunal has in its discretion, in the circumstances of the case before us, taken the view that depreciation is to be computed in accordance with the provisions laid down in the Indian Income-tax Act. The law says that adjustment may be made as the circumstances of the case may require. It was, therefore, in the discretion of the Tribunal to make such adjustment as it deemed proper. Of course, it would have been better if detailed reasons had been given by the Tribunal for computing the depreciation in this manner, but the Tribunal has taken the view that in the circumstances of the case, the proper valuation of the assets was by making the adjustment in respect of depreciation due on the assets according to the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act. We cannot say that as a matter of law, this exercise of discretion was wrong or erroneous. We do not mean to say that in every case, depreciation of assets as shown in the balance sheet of a company is necessarily liable to be adjusted with reference to the written down value of such assets according to the provisions of Income-tax Act. This is the view taken by the Gujarat High Court in Commissioner of Wealth-Tax, Gujarat v. Rapur Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1964-62 ITR 462 = (AIR 1964 Guj 154). This case has been referred and followed by the same High Court in (1985) 58 ITR 544 = (AIR 1987 Guj 12). These cases lay down the correct law, but this does not mean that in the circumstances of a particular case, if the Tribunal is satisfied, it should not allow depreciation according to the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act. Mr. Bhandari has referred to Commissioner of Wealth-Tax v. Andhra Sugars Ltd., 1966-62 ITR 841 (AP) and has urged that the net value of the assets shown in the books of account of the assessee represents the market value of the assets as estimated by the assessee himself and unless circumstances justified, the assessee could not claim a further depreciation. It was further urged that allowances permitted under the Income-tax Act are notional allowances varying from time to time according to the exigencies of the revenue and the interests and promotion of industry by the Finance Acts and they do not represent the true market value at the end of each year. In that case, the assessee had already made adjustment in his books of account to the tune of Rupees 15,42,000/- for depreciation and he further claimed deduction of Rs. 18,14,564/- towards the difference between the depreciation allowance under the Income-tax Act and the depreciation deducted by the assessee from the value of the assets according to the method of accounting followed by it and the contention raised was that depreciation should always be allowed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act because the principle of market value of the assets cannot be taken into consideration when the Wealth Tax Officer had taken recourse to the method indicated under Section 7 (2). After referring several cases of the High Courts, some of which we have already noticed, the concluding part of the judgment is that as a matter of law or of right, the assessee cannot claim deduction of an amount equal to the difference between the depreciation already provided by the company itself in its books and the aggregate sum of normal depreciation and extra shift allowance that he is entitled to under the Income-tax Act. This conclusion is correct. The assessee could not as a matter of law or as a matter of right urge that depreciation should be allowed to him in accordance with the provisions of the Income-tax Act. But it cannot be said that when the Tribunal allowed depreciation on that basis, it necessarily committed an error of law. It always depends on the facts and circumstances of each case what amount of depreciation should be allowed and how adjustment in respect of depreciation is to be made while computing the value of the assets under Section 7(2). It may even be said that when the value of the assets cannot be properly determined by applying the provisions of Section 7 (2), the Revenue authorities may take recourse to Section 7 (1). But in this case, recourse was not taken to Section 7 (1) of the Act and the authorities adhered to the procedure laid down in Section 7 (2) and the Tribunal thought it proper in its discretion to allow depreciation at the rate provided under the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act. In our view, it cannot be said that any mistake of law has been committed by the Tribunal in doing this. All this was a matter purely of discretion which it exercised as it thought proper. Our answer, therefore, to the question referred to us is in the affirmative.

The power given to the Chief Controlling Revenue authority by Section 45 to refund is discretionary and no further proceedings are maintainable if the application is refused. The remedy provided by Section 45 is thus not as efficacious as the remedy provided under Section 115, C. P. C. Therefore, a revision application should be entertained against an order of the subordinate court holding that a document is inadmissible in evidence under Section 35 of the Stamp Act, if the contention of the applicant is that either the document does not require any stamp or it is sufficiently stamped. If, however, the document is insufficiently stamped (which includes documents which require to be stamped but are unstamped) no revision would lie against an order offering to admit the document in evidence on payment of a certain amount of duty and penalty if the contention of the applicant is that the document has been wrongly classified and the duty and penalty demanded are excessive. ORDER:— This is a plaintiff's revision application against an order of the Senior Civil Judge No 2, Jodhpur, holding that a document relating to the sale of a truck is inadmissible in evidence by virtue of Section 35 of the Stamp Act as it is not duly stamped.

2. The case of the plaintiff with regard to this document is that it is an agreement or memorandum of agreement relating to the sale of goods and is exempt from stamp duty under Exemption (a) in Article 5 of the First Schedule of the Stamp Act. The trial court held that it is a conveyance which is chargeable with stamp duty under Article 23 of the First Schedule.

3. On behalf of the defendants two preliminary objections have been taken with regard to the maintainability of this revision application. The first objection is that the finding of the trial court is based on an interpretation of the document and an interpretation of the provisions of the Stamp Act and if there is any error it is an error of law which cannot be interfered with in revision.

4. It is not correct to say that no error of law can be corrected on an application under Section 115, C. P. C. An error of law by which a court assumes jurisdiction which it has not, or declines to exercise a jurisdiction which it has, will come under Clauses (a) and (b). An error of law in the mode prescribed for the exercise of jurisdiction will come under clause (c). Such errors can be corrected under Section 115, C. P. C. It is only a decision of the case on merits arrived at in the proper exercise of jurisdiction which cannot be corrected on an application under Section 115, C. P. C. on the ground that it is erroneous in law. All procedural errors fall under clause (c). The question as to whether a document is admissible or not admissible is a matter of procedure. The first preliminary objection has therefore no force.

5. The second preliminary objection is that as the plaintiff has an alternative remedy under the Stamp Act this Court should not interfere with the order of the trial court under Section 115, C. P. C. That remedy is provided by Section 45 of the Stamp Act which runs as follows:—

"45 (1) Where any penalty is paid under Section 35 or Section 40, the Chief Controlling Revenue authority may, upon application in writing made within one year from the date of the payment, refund such penalty wholly or in part.

(2) Where, in the opinion of the Chief Controlling Revenue authority, stamp duty in excess of that which is legally chargeable has been charged and paid under Section 35 or Section 40, such authority may, upon application in writing made within three months of the order charging the same, refund the excess."

6. The power given to the Chief Controlling Revenue authority to refund is discretionary and no further proceedings are maintainable if the application is refused. The remedy provided by Section 45 is thus not as efficacious as the remedy provided under Section 115, C. P. C. I am therefore of the opinion that a revision application should be entertained against an order of the subordinate court holding that a document is inadmissible in evidence under Section 35 of the Stamp Act if the contention of the applicant is that either the document does not require any stamp or it is sufficiently stamped. If however the document is insufficiently stamped (which includes documents which require to be stamped but are unstamped) no revision would lie against an order offering to admit the document in evidence on payment of a certain amount of duty and penalty if the contention of the applicant is that the document has been wrongly classified and the duty and penalty demanded are excessive.

7. My attention has been drawn to decisions of some High Courts in which it has been held that as an alternative remedy has been provided under Section 45 of the Stamp Act no revision application should be entertained by the High Court. For reasons given above, I am unable to subscribe to the view taken in them. I accordingly hold that the present revision application is maintainable.

8. The facts of the case are that a truck RJQ 2927 was sold by defendant No 1 in Poonamchand plaintiff and Dhanraj defendant. The document in question was executed on the date of the sale. It is recited in it that the truck was sold on the date of the execution of the document to Poonamchand and Dhanraj for Rupees 19,001/-. The price was to be paid to instalments of Rs 450/- per month. Interest was payable monthly at 9 per cent per annum on the price which remained to be paid. If interest was not paid at the end of each month it was to be added to the principal amount and further interest was to accrue on the whole of this amount. The truck was delivered to the buyers on the date of the execution of the deed, but it was provided in it that in case there was any default in the payment of instalments the seller would be entitled to seize the truck and keep it with himself. In case of such seizure the buyers were entitled to get the truck released on payment of the instalments due within a period of one month of the seizure. If the buyers failed to get the truck released within the period of one month from the date of seizure the seller was entitled to sell the truck and recover the deficiency in price from the buyers. There are some other terms so incorporated in the deed which are redundant because they amount merely to a statement of the law.

9. So far as the terms relating to the payment of the price in instalments and the payment of interest are concerned they are part of the agreement to sell. So far as these terms are concerned the document is exempt from stamp duty under exemption (a) to Article 5 of the Stamp Act which runs as follows:—

“Agreement or memorandum of agreement,—

(a) for or relating to the sale of goods or merchandise exclusively, not being a Note or Memorandum chargeable under No. 43.”

The above document does not fall under Article 23. A motor truck is “goods” within the meaning of Section 2 (7) of the Sale of Goods Act. The document is thus an agreement or memorandum of agreement relating to the sale of goods. In this connection I may refer to the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in In re, Raj Balamgir, AIR 1931 All 392.

10. But the above document is not exclusively an agreement or memorandum of agreement relating to the sale of goods. The terms contained in it entitling the seller to seize the truck and keep it with him if instalments were not paid in time and thereafter to sell it are not statutory rights of a seller under the Sale of Goods Act. These terms constitute an agreement between the parties which is in addition to the agreement relating to the sale of goods.

11. Under the Sale of Goods Act an unpaid seller has a lien on the goods only when they are still in his possession — See Section 46 (1) (a). He has no right of re-sale of the goods once they have gone into the possession of the buyer.

12. In this connection I may refer to the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Revenue Board v. P. B. Singh, AIR 1957 All 391.

13. I accordingly hold that the document is chargeable with duty as an agreement. The trial court erred in holding it to be a conveyance within the meaning of Article 23. As the document was however inadmissible in evidence because it was insufficiently stamped no interference can be made in revision with the order of the trial Court as has been explained by me above.

14. I accordingly dismiss the revision application. In the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs of it.

ORDER:— This is a revision application by the Jupiter General Insurance Co. Ltd., defendant No. 3 against an order of the Senior Civil Judge No. 1, Jaipur City, refusing to allow it to defend the suit in the name of Shri Beharilal defendant No. 1.

2. The 10 year-old-son of the plaintiff was run over by a truck belonging to Beharilal and was killed on the spot on 14-7-59. The present suit for the recovery of damages was filed on 13-7-60 against Beharilal, the owner of the truck, Lallu, driver of the truck, the Jupiter General Insurance Co., the Insurer of the truck, and M/s. Prakash and Co. the financier who advanced money for the purchase of the truck. The Insurer and the financier filed separate written statements on 30-5-61.

Shri J. K. Gupta who appeared on behalf of defendant No. 3 also filed a power on behalf of Beharilal defendant No. 1. But no written statement was filed on his behalf. On 18-8-61 the Insurer filed an application to the court for permission to defend the suit on behalf of and in the name of defendant No. 1. No order was passed on this application. On 21-9-61 it was mentioned in the order-sheet that the suit was proceeding ex parte against de-defendant No 1. The plaintiffs closed their evidence on 1-5-62 and 4-8-62 was fixed for the evidence of defendants Nos 3 and 4. As no order had been passed on the application of defendant No 3 dated 18-8-61 another application to the same effect was moved on 3-7-62.

The learned Senior Civil Judge did not pass any order on this application either. The insurer thereupon sent for the insured and got him to apply for the setting aside of the ex parte order on 30-7-62. This application was allowed by the learned Senior Civil Judge on 24-10-62. But the order was set aside in revision by this Court as no sufficient ground for non-appearance of defendant No 1 was made out. Beharilal admittedly left for Nepal without giving any instructions to Shri J. K. Gupta because he knew that the damages would only be recovered from the insurer. The insurance policy is for Rs. 20,000/- but a sum of Rs 30,000/- has been claimed as damages and if any sum above Rs 20,000/- is decreed the insured would be personally liable to pay it.

3. The contention on behalf of the insurer is that the insured was negligent in defending the suit and it should be allowed to defend it in the name of the insured as it is bound to meet the liability under the decree to the extent of Rs 20,000/-. Reliance is placed on the decision in Vimlabai v General Assurance Society Ltd. AIR 1955 Bom 278 and Royal Insurance Co v Abdul Mahomed, AIR 1955 Bom 39.

4. On behalf of the plaintiffs the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in B I G Insurance Co v. Iftab Singh, AIR 1959 SC 1331 was referred to, for this decision the case of AIR 1955 Bom 39 has been referred to, but the decision in it has not been disapproved. In para 16 of the judgment in AIR 1959 SC 1331 it is mentioned that the insurer has the right, provided he has reserved it by the policy, to defend the action in the name of the insured. Such a right is conferred by condition No. 2 of the policy.

The Bombay cases referred to above have also taken the view that the insurer cannot defend the suit in its own name except on the grounds mentioned in Section 106 (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act. But it has been held that if the insured is negligent in defending the suit and a right has been reserved by the policy enabling the insurer to defend the action in the name of the insured then it should be allowed to do so under the inherent power of the court under Section 151 C. P. C.

5. This is a proper case in which such power should be exercised. I accordingly allow the revision application, set aside the order of the trial court dated 22-1-65 and permit defendant No. 3 to defend the suit in the name of and on behalf of defendant No. 1.

6. Shri J. K. Gupta was allowed to cross-examine the witnesses of the plaintiffs. The insurer is permitted to file a list of witnesses on behalf of defendant No 1. The written statement on merits has already been filed by defendant No 3. This written statement shall be treated as being on behalf of defendant No 1 also. The suit will be decided after recording the statements of the witnesses on behalf of defendant No. 1 produced by defendant No 3.

7. In the circumstances of the case, I direct that parties shall bear their own costs of this revision application.

Motor Vehicles Act (1030), Ss. 110-F, 110 and 110-A (3) — Scope — Accident — Change of forum from Civil Court in Claims Tribunal — No vested right in litigant — Claims Tribunal constituted after 60 days of accident — Suit for compensation after constitution of Tribunal — Jurisdiction of Civil Court held barred — By virtue of S. 110-A (3) Tribunal has discretion to entertain application even after expiry of sixty days — (Civil P. Section 110-F bars jurisdiction of the civil courts in respect of all claims to be made after the constitution of the Tribunals even though the accidents may have occurred before the constitution of the Tribunals. Case law discussed: 1962 MPLJ 465 and AIR 1964 Madh Pra 133, Dissented from: AIR 1962 Punj 307, held overruled by AIR 1965 Punj 102.

(Para 7)

Though the right to compensation for injuries is a substantive right and ordinarily such a right cannot be construed to have been taken away by a statute except by express words of the statute or necessary intendment, the same however cannot be said with respect to the forum in which an action can be agitated. No litigant has or can have vested right in a particular forum. The matters relating to forum and limitation relate to the law procedure and should be governed by the law in force at the time of the institution of the Tribunal. The presumption against a retrospective construction has no application to enactments which affect only the procedure and practice of the court even where the alteration which the statute makes, has been disadvantageous to one of the parties. (Para 6)

In case of constitution of the Claims Tribunal after the expiry of sixty days from the accident, the proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 110-A can be used to meet the difficulty. Under Section 110-A (3) the tribunal has been given discretion to entertain application even after the expiry of sixty days, (Para 7)

ORDER:— This is a defendants' revision and is directed against the order of the Senior Civil Judge, Baran dated 26th July 1966 deciding issue No. 6 in favour of the plaintiff-respondent and overruling the defendants' objections as to the maintainability of the civil suit. The facts giving rise to revision application are briefly these:

On 15th March 1964 the plaintiff-respondent Jagdish Prasad, while going on a cycle from Kota on the Kota-Jhalawar road was knocked down at about 8 A. M.

near 6th furlong of 7th mile by motor truck No. RJR 977 and received some injuries. The truck was registered in the name of M/s. Yadav Motor Transport Co., Nasirabad, the defendant-petitioner No. 1 and the defendant-petitioner No. 2 is said to be one of the partners of the Yadav Motor Transport Co. Defendant-petitioner No. 3 Ghasiram is said to be the driver of the truck. At the time of the accident there was no Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal (hereinafter referred to as the Claims Tribunal) in existence for the area in which the accident took place. However, Government of Rajasthan, in the exercise of the power conferred by Section 110 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 issued notification dated 9th November 1964 constituting Motor Accidents Claims Tribunals for the areas specified in column 3 of the notification. The District and Sessions Judge, Kota was constituted a Tribunal for districts Kota, Bundi and Jhalawar. It was after the constitution of this Tribunal that the plaintiff-respondent Jagdish Prasad filed a suit in the court of the District Judge which was transferred to the court of the Senior Civil Judge on 12th March, 1965, claiming an amount of Rs. 70,000/- as compensation. The defendants resisted the suit and inter alia pleaded that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit after the constitution of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal under S. 110 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939.

The trial court framed a number of issues. Issue No. 6 covered the defendants' objection as to the maintainability of the suit and reads as follows:

“Whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit?”

The trial Judge referred to the cases cited before him by the counsel for the parties and then emphasised the fact: “A claim is to be filed before the Tribunal within two months from the accident, therefore, by the time the Tribunal was constituted no time remained to file this instant claim before the Tribunal as the period of two months from 15th March 1964 had already expired.” The judge thereafter observed: “It shows that the bar under Section 110-F does not apply to the facts of the instant case as it was a question relevant to any claim for compensation which may be adjudicated upon by the ‘Claims Tribunal.’ Without commenting upon the cases he observed: “None of the above cases is on all fours with the case in hand and none of the cases has decided to oust the jurisdiction of the civil court. The likely anomaly is the abrupt closing of remedy in a civil suit by the constitution of the Claims Tribunals on 19th November 1964 without there being any positive alternative remedy to the plaintiff.” With these observations the Court decided issue No. 6 in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants have come in revision.

2. During the pendency of the revision the petitioners Nos 2 and 3 died but as the petitioner No. 1 is competent to agitate the controversy raised in the revision petition the revision was heard on merit. The question for determination is whether Section 110-F bars the jurisdiction of the civil court in respect of a claim made after the constitution of the Tribunal even though the claim arose out of the accident occurring before the constitution of the Tribunal. It may be mentioned however that the question relating to the jurisdiction of the Civil court to continue the trial of cases which had been entertained before the constitution of the Tribunal does not arise or call for examination.

3. It may be pointed out that prior to the introduction of Section 110-F in the present form in the Motor Vehicles Act of 1939 by the amending Act No 100 of 1956 with effect from 16th February 1957, a person suffering injuries in an accident could file a civil suit within one year of the date of the accident in a civil court. The legislature presumably considering the remedy of a suit inconvenient, dilatory and expensive provided a complete self-contained machinery for adjudication of claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death of or bodily injury to persons arising out of the use of the motor vehicles. Section 110 of the Act provided for the constitution by the State Government by a notification in the official gazette of Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal for such area as may be specified therein for the purpose of adjudicating upon claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death of, or bodily injury to persons arising out of the use of motor vehicles. Section 110-A provides for making of applications for compensation. Sub-section (3) of S 110-A provides that no application for compensation shall be entertained unless it is made within sixty days of the occurrence of the accident. Section 110-B and Section 110-C provide for the award of compensation by the Tribunal, its powers and procedure to be followed and for appeals against awards. Then Section 110-F which is important runs as follows.

"Bar of Jurisdictions of Civil Courts — Where any Claims Tribunal has been constituted for any area, no civil court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any question relating to any claim for compensation which may be adjudicated upon by the Claims Tribunal for that area, and no injunction in respect of any action taken or to be taken by or before the Claims Tribunal in respect of the claims for compensation shall be granted by the civil court."

4. The contention of the petitioner is that once a Claims Tribunal is constituted the jurisdiction of the civil court to entertain suits for compensation is ousted as

Section 110-F confers exclusive jurisdiction on the Claims Tribunal. The respondent's submission on the other hand is that the right of a suit being a vested right could not be taken away by Section 110-F which cannot be said to have retrospective operation. The learned counsel for the respondent relied upon a few decisions of the Madhya Pradesh High Court and one Single Bench decision of the Punjab High Court reported in Mulak Raj Bhola Shah v Northern India Goods Transport Corporation Ltd., AIR 1962 Punj 307.

5. Taking up the Madhya Pradesh decisions the earliest case is one reported in Khatumal Ghanshamdas v Abdul Qadir Jamaluddin, AIR 1961 Madh Pra 295. In that case the controversy related to the continuance of the civil suit which had already been instituted prior to the constitution of the Tribunal and the Court did not decide the question whether after the constitution of the Claims Tribunal the civil court jurisdiction to entertain the claim for compensation in respect of an accident taking place before the constitution of the Tribunal was taken away or not. The respondent's counsel therefore cannot derive much assistance from this case. Another case of the Madhya Pradesh High Court is the decision reported in Iqbal Prakash v State of Madhya Pradesh, 1962 MPLJ 465 where it was held that a claim for compensation instituted after the constitution of the Tribunal could be tried by the civil court as Section 110-F was not retrospective. The ground for the decision was:

"to require a claimant to apply to the Tribunal within sixty days of the accident when the Tribunal itself did not exist within that period is to ask him to do the impossible."

The third case of the M P High Court is the decision reported in Sushma Mehra v. Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd., AIR 1964 Madh Pra 133 where it was observed that any enactment which has the effect of destroying an existing right cannot be given retrospective effect without express words. The Court also referred to the case of Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd v Irving 1905 AC 369 where the right to appeal was treated as a vested right, and on analogy extended it to the remedy which a litigant has for obtaining relief by means of a suit.

6. I have given my careful consideration to the cases of the Madhya Pradesh High Court and have not felt persuaded to follow the view taken by that High Court. In considering the question of vested right a distinction must be drawn between what is a substantive right and the procedural right. The right to compensation for injuries is a substantive right and ordinarily such a right cannot be construed to have been taken away by a statute.

tute except by express words of the statute or necessary intendment. The same however cannot be said with respect to the forum in which an action can be agitated. No litigant has or can have vested right in a particular forum. He cannot say as a matter of right that a suit or an application should be tried by this or that forum which existed on the date his cause of action arose. Forum belongs to the realm of procedure and does not constitute substantive right of a party or a litigant.

Similarly, limitation cannot be treated as a vested right. A litigant cannot say, where the legislature abolishes a forum that he can wait until the last day of limitation as a matter of right and therefore the court should be retained for his purpose though abolished for other purposes. The matters relating to forum and limitation relate to the law procedure and should be governed by the law in force at the time of the institution of the Tribunal. A reference to authoritative text books on interpretation shows consistent support of a view that the presumption against a retrospective construction has no application to enactments which affect only the procedure and practice of the court even where the alteration which the statute makes, has been disadvantageous to one of the parties. I need only refer to Salmond on Jurisprudence. Salmond considers "that the substantive law is concerned with the ends which the administration of justice seeks; procedural law deals with the means and instruments by which those ends are to be attained"

He gives the illustration in this manner:

"Whether I have a right to recover certain property is a question of substantive law, for the determination and the protection of such rights are among the ends of the administration of justice; but in what courts and within what time I must institute proceedings are questions of procedural law, for they relate merely to the modes in which the courts fulfil their functions."

The same view has been approved in a number of leading cases. In Ramkaran v. Ramdas, 11LR 54 All 299 at p. 306 : (AIR 1931 All 635 at page 639) (FB) Suleman C. J. observed:

"No doubt, a substantial right is not assumed to be taken away by a new Act unless it expressly says so. But a right to sue in one Court rather than another or a right to wait for a particular period of time before suing is not a substantial right. The selection of forum and the period of limitation are ordinarily matters of procedure only. The selection of a Court in no way affects the right of suit itself. The Limitation Act does not necessarily extinguish the right though it certainly places a bar against the remedy by suit."

In Hazari Tewari v. Mst. Maktula Chauhain, AIR 1932 All 30 it was argued that the law of limitation available to the plaintiff under pre-existing law was a vested right and that therefore the provisions of the new enactment for the filing of application within a particular time could not be read as retrospective. The learned Judges refuted the contention on the ground that there could be no vested interest in the choice of any particular forum and observed:

"If the legislature has thought fit to deprive the civil court of its jurisdiction to entertain suits of a particular nature, a plaintiff cannot compel the civil court to hear his suit merely because his cause of action had accrued before the new Act depriving the civil court of its jurisdiction was passed. The choice of forum is a matter of procedure and not a substantive right, and in most cases a new Act would have a retrospective effect so far as the choice of forum is concerned. The analogy of a new Act not affecting a pending action does not apply."

In Unique Motor and General Insurance Co. Ltd., Bombay v. Kartar Singh, AIR 1965 Punj 102, V. C. K. Bus Service (P) Ltd., Coimbatore v. H. B. Sethna, AIR 1965 Mad 149, Palani Ammal v. Safe Service Ltd. 1966 ACJ 19 (Mad) and Natverlal Bhikhal Shah v. Thakarda Khodaji Kalaji, 11LR (1967) Guj 495, a view has been taken that Section 110-F bars the jurisdiction of civil courts in respect of all claims preferred after the constitution of the Claims Tribunals even though the claims arose out of accidents occurring before the constitution of the Claims Tribunals. I have gone through all the judgments and respectfully agree with the view taken in these decisions and I am unable to follow the view taken by the M. P. High Court. As for the Single Bench decision of the Punjab High Court I need only mention that the earlier Single Bench decision relied upon by the petitioner stands overruled by the later Bench decision of the same High Court reported in Unique Motor and General Insurance Co. Ltd., Bombay, AIR 1965 Punj 102.

7. The learned counsel for the respondent however emphasised the principle that where the retrospective application of a statute prescribing the period of limitation would destroy vested right of action, or inflict such hardship or injustice as could not have been within the contemplation of legislature then the statute is not any more than any other law to be construed retrospectively and relied upon this principle to support his contention that Sections 110 and 110-A must be held inapplicable to a claim in respect of an accident occurring more than sixty days prior to the constitution of a Claims Tribunal, for in such a case it would be impossible to comply within the period of limitation laid down in sub-section (3) of Section 110-A and the vested right of action of an applicant would be destroyed. He admitted that under sub-section (3) of Section 110-A the Tribunal has been given discretion to entertain applications even after the expiry of sixty days but the discretion of the Tribunal does not amount to giving a vested right to a litigant to secure the entertainment of his application after the expiry of sixty days. The difficulties pointed out by the respondent's counsel are not insurmountable and do not warrant a conclusion that a plain and grammatical meaning of S 110-A should be departed from on the basis of these difficulties.

Referring to these difficulties the Madras High Court took the view that sub-s (3) of Section 110-A would not govern applications in respect of claims arising out of accidents occurring more than sixty days before the constitution of the Tribunal, for applications under sub-section (3) postulate the existence of a Tribunal. The same High Court expressed the opinion that the proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 110-A can also be used to meet these difficulties. The Punjab and Gujarat High Courts have also met arguments based on these difficulties with reference to the proviso. These difficulties may have some bearing upon interpretation of the provisions governing limitations but they cannot have substantial bearing on the interpretation of Section 110 F. Having regard to all these considerations I am of the opinion that Section 110-F bars jurisdiction of the civil courts in respect of all claims to be made after the constitution of the Tribunals even though the accidents may have occurred before the constitution of the Tribunals. The Senior Civil Judge was not justified in deciding Issue No 6 in favour of the plaintiff and continuing his jurisdiction over the case. His decision on issue No. 6 must be reversed.

8. I therefore accept this revision and holding that the suit was not maintainable reject the plaint of the plaintiff. It will be open to the plaintiff to present an application before the Tribunal and to secure condonation of the delay in presenting the claim before the Claims Tribunal having regard to the observations made in the order of this Court. The respondent shall be entitled to the refund of the Court-fee paid in the court of the Senior Civil Judge.

9. In the circumstances of the case the parties are left to bear their own costs of this revision.

not a "reserved" forest within the meaning of Section 20 in Chapter II and that no offences were committed under section 20 of the Act.

The forests in the present case are not those covered by the three forests mentioned above. It cannot be said that there is no reserved forest in Tripura at all. "Jhuming" also involves cultivation by clearing forest and if this is done in the "reserved" forest areas, contrary to the forest laws, it would also affect the maintenance of the public order. So, the grounds now urged in this Court and not taken before the Supreme Court also have no force.

17. The third contention of the petitioners' Counsel is that if the detenus and others committed offences under the Indian Penal Code or the Indian Forest Act or Cr. P. C., they could be dealt with suitably and that action under the Act was unnecessary. He relied on Khalifa Janki Das v. Emperor, AIR 1950 East Punj 172, which is a case arising under the East Punjab Public Safety Act (Act V of 1949). But, the purpose of the Act is to secure "preventive detention", justified by national security and maintenance of public order and essential supplies and services and its purpose is not criminal conviction justified by legal evidence and by existing laws relating to crimes and offences. If the ordinary laws of the land and their application to any particular person are enough to meet the situation, which the Act is intended to meet, then it is difficult to imagine either the purpose or the object of the Act, which is self-contained. The powers of preventive detention under the Act are in addition to those contained in the Cr. P. C., where preventive detention is followed by enquiry or trial. Vide Raman Lal Rathi v. Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, AIR 1952 Cal 26 and Hadibandhu Das v. The District Magistrate, Cuttack, AIR 1968 Orissa 148 in this connection. So, the respondent was not barred from exercising his powers under the Act.

18. The fourth contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners is that the grounds were vague, that details of the speeches alleged to have been made by the detenus and the details of the meetings were not mentioned, that the names of the reserved forests were not mentioned and that they were handicapped in making their representations to the State Government. He also relied on Sadat Jahan v. The State of Hyderabad, AIR 1953 Hyd 295, where it was held that criticism of the Government, however strong, is not to be regarded as a justifying ground for taking action under the Preventive Detention Act, unless it is such as to undermine security or would tend to overthrow the Government. It was also held that freedom of speech and of the press lies at the foundation of all democracy.

19. In appreciating the above contention it is necessary to examine the grounds covered by Ext. A-2 in all the cases. The grounds in Ext. A-2 in Habeas Corpus Petition No. 30 of 1968 fall under one category. The grounds in Ext. A-2 in Habeas Corpus Petition No. 32 of 1968 are almost similar to the grounds in Habeas Corpus Petitions Nos. 33 of 1968, 34 of 1968, 35 of 1968, 36 of 1968, 39 of 1968, 40 of 1968, 41 of 1968, 48 of 1968, 49 of 1968, 50 of 1968, 51 of 1968, 52 of 1968, 71 of 1968 and 73 of 1968 which raise only questions of fact. Ext. A-2 grounds in Habeas Corpus Petition No. 72 of 1968 may be separately extracted. These three categories of grounds are all as follows:

Banamalipur, AGARTALA.

You are being detained in pursuance of the Detention Order made under sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3 of Preventive Detention Act, 1950, as you have been acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and supplies essential to the community as evidenced by the particulars given below:

1. That you have been instigating the loyal villagers particularly the tribals living in and around the Forest Reserve areas to damage the forest plantation and to do jhuming in Reserve Forest areas in violation of forest laws. Towards this end, you have been attending a number of secret meetings in which it was decided to urge the public to start campaign against the Forest Department and to destroy the forest plantation. You have been voicing the same feelings and inciting the people in a number of mass meetings held in different parts of the District also. That you have by your speeches and activities induced the tribals of the District to take recourse to violence to paralyse the forest administration in Tripura and disturb the public order in Tripura.

2. That you have been instigating the loyal cultivators from delivering the paddy to the Government which has been requisitioned under the Tripura Food-grains Requisition Order for the maintenance of supplies of foodgrains to the people in lean months. You have been instigating and inciting the people to offer organised and violent resistance against the paddy procurement staff. Towards this end, you have been attending a number of secret meetings in which it was decided to urge the public to start campaign against the procurement of paddy. You have been directly inciting the people in a number of mass meetings also. That you have by your speeches and activities induced the (people) of certain areas to offer violent resistance to paddy procurement thereby preventing the Government from maintaining supplies essential to the community during times of need.

The above two facts are evident from the fact that you attended a meeting on 21-7-67 at Gurubaktapara (Garjee) in the house of Ganesh Jamatia, mass meetings on 8-11-67 at Fatukroy bazar (Kailashahar), on 12-11-67 at Kalyanpur, on 28-11-67 at Teliamura and on 6-12-67 at Manikpur bazar and secret meeting on 26-12-67 at Silachari (Sabroom) in the house of Mathu Mog Choudhury and another mass meeting on 27-12-67 at Silachari bazar.

Because of your activities and incitement, forest plantations have been damaged on 18-6-67 at Dograibari and Kakulia, on 21-6-67 at Debdari under P S Bikora, on 23-12-67 at Paratia under P S R K Pore, on 24-6-67 at Paratia on 25-6-67 at Srikantabari P S Bikora and on a number of other dates in different parts of the territory.

Because of your activities on 21-1-68, 900 K G of procured paddy was looted by tribal women at Barkthal under Sidhai P S. On 2-2-68 the procurement staff offered strong and violent resistance by an unruly mob at Chalitabari P S Teliamura.

3 That you took an active part in organising Tripura Bund on 23-8-67 and in preventing the motor vehicles and rickshaws etc from plying on the road.

You are hereby informed that you may make a representation to the State Government against the detention order and that such representation should be addressed to Secretary, Home (Police) Department and forwarded through the Superintendent of Jail in which you are detained as early as possible. You are also informed that under Section 10 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (Act IV of 1950), the Advisory Board shall, if desire to be heard, hear you in person and if you desire to be so heard by the Advisory Board you should intimate such desire in your representation to the State Government.

You are being detained in pursuance of the Detention Order made under sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 3 of Preventive Detention Act, 1950 as you have been acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and supplies essential to the community as evidenced by the particulars given below:

That in pursuance of the agitational programme, you have been instigating the loyal cultivators not to deliver paddy to the Government which has been requisitioned under the Tripura Foodgrains Requisition Order for the maintenance of supply of foodgrains to the people in

Towards this end, you have been attending number of Conferences and meetings in which various resolutions were adopted regarding formation of Resistance Committee Party and to offer violent resistance where the female party would be ahead of such resistance. You have also been found delivering speeches in a mass meeting on the above lines.

The above reports are evident from the facts that you attended the 7th Annual Conference of the Tripura Gan Mukti Parishad Central Committee from 22nd to 24th October, 1967 at Ramthakurpara, on 10-12-67, you participated in a secret meeting in your own house, another conference in the house of Shri Biswa Deb Barma at Dagraibari and on 7-1-68 you presided over a secret meeting in your own house. 20. A comparison of the grounds mentioned above with the grounds extracted by the Supreme Court in its judgment in Writ Petitions Nos. 89 to 92 and 94 of 1968, Bidya Deb Barma v. District Magistrate, Tripura, Agartala (SC) shows that they are all practically similar. It was contended before the Supreme Court that the grounds did not mention in details regarding particulars of time, place and circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the grounds begin by stating generally what the activities were, that they consisted of instigation of tribal people to practise jhuming etc and preventing the authorities from delivering paddy to Government under the procurement schemes, that the instigation was through mass and secret meetings and resulted in violent resistance to Government, that the grounds then specified the places where and the dates on which the meetings were held, and the resistance took place and that no more detailed information was necessary to give the detenus opportunity to make their representations. It was also held that the grounds were specific. So, the same observations apply to the present case also, wherein the grounds are similar. Though the names of the reserved forests were not noted, their location was mentioned. Though the speeches were not extracted in detail, their purport was noted. The petitioners could not be said to have been handicapped.

21 It was also pointed out that the petitioner in Habeas Corpus Petition No 30 of 1968 was in Madurai from 20-1-68 to 2-2-68 and that, therefore, the alleged activities etc could not have taken place on account of his alleged instigation. A similar contention also was raised before the Supreme Court that the results could not follow the activities of the detenus which were later. The contention was repelled on the ground that the mentioning of dates of meetings was merely some evidence to show the kind of activities that the Court is concerned with preventive detention, that there were enough instances cited, that the situation in the area was already bad, that the later activities would not make it any better and that the detention did not suffer from any defect. Besides, as can be seen from Ujagar Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 350 the past conduct or antecedent history of a person can be taken into account when making a detention order. It was also held that it is largely from prior events showing the tendencies or inclinations of the man that an inference could be drawn whether he is likely, even in the future, to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. So, the fact that the petitioner in Habeas Corpus Petition No 30 of 1968 was in Madurai from 20-1-68 to 2-2-68 is immaterial.

22 There is a long catena of cases in consonance with the view that it is the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority about the soundness of the grounds and that the Court is only concerned with whether there had been such subjective satisfaction, whether there is absence of mala fides and whether all the opportunities of making representation were given. Vide State of Bombay v Atma Ram Shridhar Vaidya, AIR 1951 SC 157, Bhim Sen v State of Punjab, AIR 1951 SC 481, AIR 1952 SC 350, Sodhi Shamsher Singh v State of Pepsu, AIR 1954 SC 276, Sarju Pandey v State, AIR 1956 All 589, D. B. Golam Rafique v State of Tripura, AIR 1957 Tri 25, Ramesh-wai Shaw v District Magistrate, Burdwan, AIR 1964 SC 334 and Godavan S Parulekar v State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 1404. So vagueness of the grounds or absence of more details in the grounds is no ground for setting aside the orders of detention and there is no proof of want of bona fides.

23 The fifth contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners is that all the petitioners except the petitioner in Habeas Corpus Petition no 30 of 1968 do not know English, that they were handicapped in making their representations to the State Government and the Advisory Board and that therefore, their detention orders are liable to be set aside. This ground was, no doubt, taken by the petitioners in the petitions themselves. The petitioner in Habeas Corpus petition no 30 of 1968 is said to be a holder of Master of Arts Degree. The petitioners in Habeas Corpus Petitions Nos 33 of 1968 & 36 of 1968 signed the acknowledgments in English, when they were served with the grounds. So, it is stated that the remaining 14 petitioners do not know English.

A similar ground was taken in the rejoinder in the Writ petition 94 of 1968 in the batch of cases, Bidya Deb Barma v District Magistrate, Tripura, Agartala. Writ Petitions 89 to 92 and 94 of 1968 (SC). The Supreme Court held that the detenu in that case filed the petition in English and questioned the implications of the language of the order and the grounds, that he had the assistance of the other detenus who know English and that the complaint was belated. The same observations apply to these cases also, though the objections in these cases are not belated. The Detenus-petitioners, who alleged that they do not know English, filed their petitions in English questioning the implications of Exts A-1 and A 2. Evidently, they had the assistance of the detenus who know English. Besides, they never asked the respondent or the local Government to serve them with copies of translations of the orders and the grounds.

The decision in Harkishan v State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 911, relied on in the batch of cases before the Supreme Court was also relied on before me and it is distinguishable. In that case the detenu requested the District Magistrate to furnish him with a translation of the order of detention, which was in English. But, he was told that the order of detention and the grounds of detention were in English, which was the official language in the District, and that no translation of the same was legally necessary. It was, therefore, held that there was no sufficient compliance with the requirements of clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution and that the communication must bring home to the detenu effective knowledge of the facts and circumstances on which the order of detention was based. In the present case the detenus, who state that they do not know English, never raised any objection until May or June, 1968 when they filed the Habeas Corpus petitions. There is no force in the contention of the petitioners' Counsel that the respondent should have discovered for himself from their signatures, who knew English and who did not know it and that he should have served them with translations of Exts. A-1 and A-2. So, it cannot be stated that they were in any way handicapped in making any effective representations.

24. Though the petitioners were informed by the respondent that they could make representations to the State Government and that they would also be heard by the Advisory Board, if so desired, none of the petitioners except the petitioner in Habeas Corpus Petition No. 30 of 1968 made any representation. It was no doubt held in Prem Dutta Paliwal v. Superintendent Central Prison Agra, AIR 1954 All 315 that a review of the case of the Advisory Board is no bar to the High Court in exercising jurisdiction in issuing a Writ for Habeas Corpus. But, this Court had taken a contrary view in AIR 1957 Tri 25 that the Writ Petitions do not lie. The satisfaction of the detaining authority, which is his subjective satisfaction under Sec. 3 (1) (a) of the Act, is not justiciable. But, the plea of mala fides taken by the detenus is justiciable. So, the fact that the Advisory Board recommended further detention does not bar the Court from entertaining the petitions.

25. It was also contended that the grounds of detention were not served under Section 7 of the Act within 5 days from the orders of detention. In all the cases, except in Habeas Corpus Petition No. 72 of 1968, the orders of detention are dated 9-2-68. But, the petitioners therein were arrested on 11-2-68. Under Section 7 of the Act the grounds shall be served not later than 5 days from the date of detention. As they were all detained on 11-2-68, the grounds were validly served on them on 15-2-68. In Habeas Corpus Petition No. 72 of 1968 the petitioner was detained on 16-3-68 and was served with grounds on 19-3-68. So, there is no illegality on this count.

26. It was finally contended that the respondent stated in his affidavits that the petitioners were "endangering public order" and not that they were acting prejudicial to the "maintenance of public order". This is a difference without distinction. Correct expressions were used in Exts. A-1 and A-2.

27. Thus, the additional grounds, which were urged in this batch of petitions have no force, specially after the batch of similar petitions was dismissed by the Supreme Court.

28. In the result, the petitions fail and are accordingly dismissed.
GGM/D.V.C. Petitions dismissed.

Ramesh Chandra Sutradhar, Appellant v. The State, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 22 of 1967, D/- 27-5-1969, against judgment and order of S. J., Tripura in Sessions Trial No. 3 of 1967.

(A) Penal Code (1860), Chapter IV, General — Motive — Proof of, is not always necessary.

It is not incumbent on the prosecution to establish the existence of any motive for the crime with which the accused may be charged. However, it cannot be gainsaid that there must exist a motive for every voluntary act. It may also be stated without fear of contradiction that in a Criminal trial failure to prove the motive does not necessarily imply that there was no motive for the crime. It is equally well settled that the proof of motive is not necessary to sustain a conviction on a murder charge when there is clear evidence that the person had been done to death by the accused. In other words, when the facts establishing the charge are clear it is immaterial that the motive has not been proved. The reason is that the motive of an act may be known to the perpetrator and to none other and the investigator may not have been able to collect any information in regard thereto.

M Nath (Amicus Curiae), for Appellant,
H C Nath, Court Advocate, for Respondent

JUDGMENT This appeal by Ramesh Chandra raises the question whether he had killed Abinash Chandra, at about dusk time on 1-4-1966 in the village of Mohanpur inside the house of P W 2 Mahendra Debnath, in exercise of the right of private defence of his person. The learned Sessions Judge, Agartala, has returned the verdict of guilty under Section 302, I P C against the appellant and has sentenced him to life imprisonment.

2 A large number of labourers had been engaged by Mahendra Debnath (P W 2), on the date of occurrence, for the digging of a tank in the proximity of his residential house. About an hour before sun-set a Sadhu appeared on the scene and sat down on the west of southern hut in the house of Mahendra Debnath. The deceased Abinash Chandra and his father were busy at that time with agricultural operations in an adjoining field. After finishing the day's work Abinash Chandra proceeded to a place near the south-east corner of the tank where Mahendra Debnath was standing. Abinash Chandra, on being told by Mahendra Debnath that the person sitting close to the southern hut of the house was a Sadhu, expressed his desire to do pranam to him. He then carried a dao in his hand which he had brought from his field. He went towards the Sadhu carrying the dao with him. A short while after Mahendra Debnath heard some sound emanating from the eastern direction. When he turned his back to find out what the matter was he was startled to notice that Abinash Chandra lay on the ground and the Sadhu was administering blows to him with the dao. The Sadhu was none other than the present appellant Ramesh Chandra. Mahendra Debnath let out a cry saying that Abinash Chandra was being done to death by the Sadhu. The labourers working in the tank clambered out and proceeded towards the culprit. However, the latter scared them away by brandishing the weapon. Instantly, quite a few persons from the village including Dinesh Debnath (P W 3) reached the scene of occurrence. This Dinesh Debnath carried a bamboo lathi with him. He utilised the weapon for disarming the accused of the dao and for achieving that end, it is said he rained quite a few blows on his person. Once the weapon dropped from the hands of the accused, he was overpowered by the persons who had assembled around him. He was firmly secured with a rope and confined in a room.

3 One of the persons who had appeared on the scene soon after the occurrence was Subodh Chandra Debnath (P W. 1). After this Subodh had collected the facts of the occurrence from the persons having knowledge of the same he left for the police station, Agartala, and lodged the F. I. R. Ext P-1 (a), at 7-55 P. M. on 1-4-1966, with the S. H. O. Apama Ranjan Bhattacharjee. The S. H. O. reached the scene of occurrence at 8-50 P. M. He placed the accused under arrest, prepared the inquest report and the rough site plan Ext P-4, and then sent the dead body of Abinash Chandra for post mortem examination.

4 The post mortem examination was done by Dr Dwigendra Lal Banerjee (P W. 18) at 11 A. M. on 2-4-1966. He found a large number of injuries on the person of the deceased including one clean cut gaping incised wound $6\frac{1}{2}'' \times 3'' \times$ bone deep on the back of the neck $2\frac{1}{2}''$ below the occipital region, an incised wound $3'' \times 2'' \times$ muscle deep just above the first mentioned injury, and another clean cut gaping incised wound $3'' \times 1'' \times$ muscle deep on the left side of the neck, an inch below the first injury. The internal examination revealed that the fourth cervical vertebra, the spinal cord, the trachea, the oesophagus, and the vessels of the neck had been cut at the level of injury No 1. All the injuries were ante-mortem and occasioned by a sharp-edged weapon like dao. The death according to the opinion of the doctor, had resulted from the shock and haemorrhage occasioned by the injuries received. Injury No 1, the doctor affirmed, was sufficient to cause death.

5 The accused pleaded not guilty to the charge. His defence, as put before the learned Sessions Judge, and repeated in this Court, was that Abinash Chandra, the deceased, and his wife had secured amulets from him to get a child, that the wife of Mahendra Debnath (P. W. 2) being ill he too had taken a charm from him for restoration to health of his wife, and that on the date of occurrence when he, (the accused) went to the house of Mahendra Debnath, the latter and Abinash Chandra abused him on the charge that amulets provided by him had proved ineffective. Abinash Chandra went a step further and opened an assault on him with the blunt side of the dao that he carried on his person. Left with no alternative the accused wrested the weapon from Abinash Chandra and in sheer self-defence occasioned blows therewith to Abinash Chandra, which resulted in the latter's death.

6 The learned Sessions Judge rejected the plea of self-defence and holding the accused as the author of the brutal injuries inflicted on Abinash Chandra sentenced him to life imprisonment on the charge under Section 302, I P. C.

7 Sri M. Nath appearing as amicus curiae for the appellant urged strenuously that there is ample material on the record to sustain the plea of self-defence and submitted that the trial Court had erred in rejecting that plea. Sri H. C. Nath, the learned Government Advocate, urged equally vigorously that the charge of clean murder had been brought home to the accused, though he submitted, towards the close of arguments, that at the best the accused had exceeded the limits prescribed by law for exercising the right of private defence and so he may be held guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under Part I of Section 304, I. P. C. It may be mentioned here that Dr. Dwigendra Lal Banerjee had found a number of injuries on the person of the accused when he happened to examine him at 2-15 A. M. on 2-4-1966. The injuries were a swelling with haematoma and congestion on the upper and lower eye-lids, multiple abrasions of different sizes on the right side of the face, a lacerated injury $1/4" \times 1/4" \times 1/4"$ on the right side of the forehead, two lacerated injuries each measuring about $1/4" \times 1/8" \times 1/4"$ on the lower lip, a lacerated injury $1/8" \times 1/4" \times 1/8"$ on the left side of the face near the border of the cheek, and another simple injury. The doctor also noticed that there was slight, but active, bleeding from the nose of the accused. All the injuries, the doctor affirmed, were on the face, nose, eyes and near about the eyes. It was conceded straightway by Sri H. C. Nath that it is for the prosecution to explain the injuries found on the person of the accused. Indeed it is so.

8. Sri H. C. Nath urged that the injuries had been occasioned to the accused, according to the testimony of the prosecution witnesses, by P. W. 3 Dinesh Debnath or by the people who had assembled near the scene of occurrence. Though it is correct that a large number of prosecution witnesses have deposed in chorus that Dinesh Debnath had been attracted to the spot by the hub-bub raised by Mahendra Debnath and that he had administered a number of blows to the accused with the lathi brought by him with the object of disarming him of the dao, a close scrutiny of that evidence and other circumstances have led me to the conclusion that this part of the prosecution story is a fabrication. The Investigating Officer admittedly reached the spot at 8-50 P.M. and we have his own testimony that he examined Mahendra Debnath, Nitai Debnath, Lakshan Debnath, Gopal Chandra Debnath and Karuna Mohan Debnath during the course of the night before sending the accused to the hospital for the treatment. It was not denied by Sri H. C. Nath that Dinesh Debnath was present in the village when the S.H.O. happened to reach there. However, the S.H.O. did not record the statement of Dinesh Debnath on that day but only on the 5th of April 1966. According to the version of the prosecution Dinesh Debnath had played a vital role at the time of the occurrence. In that context the S. H. O. was bound to record his statement on top priority basis and if he did not care to contact him soon after his arrival in the village, it must clearly be for the reason that the role assigned to Dinesh Debnath during the subsequent stages of the investigation had not been hammered out. Further, some of the injuries found on the person of accused were of bleeding nature. If those injuries had been occasioned by Dinesh Debnath, the lathi used by him would have been stained with blood. That lathi, however, was neither found by the S. H. O. at the spot, nor was it produced before him by Dinesh Debnath or some one else, nor again, the S. H. O. made any effort to locate it. In the F. I. R. it had been mentioned by Subodh Chandra Debnath (P. W. 1) that he had collected the facts pertaining to the offence from the labourers who had assembled at the spot. However, there is no recital in the document to the effect that either Dinesh Debnath had administered blows to the accused to deprive him of the weapon, or that after the accused had been relieved of the weapon the labourers had stormed him. All these facts cumulatively yield the inescapable conclusions that neither Dinesh Debnath had given lathi blows to the accused nor the labourers had fisted or cuffed the latter as contended by the learned Government Advocate. It may be appositely pointed out that the Medical Officer did not notice a single injury on the hands or arms of the accused and that none of the labourers was specific in saying who out of them had physically manhandled the accused. Another factor worth mention is that Kamala Kanta Debnath (P. W. 10), the father of the deceased, admitted that Dinesh Debnath is the maternal uncle of the deceased Abinash Debnath. If Dinesh Debnath is related to the deceased in that manner, Mahendra Debnath, a brother of Dinesh Debnath, would also be related to Abinash Debnath in the same way. Hence the averments of the two brothers, Mahendra and Dinesh, have to be taken with a grain of salt.

9. If the Court disbelieves the prosecution version that the injuries had been occasioned to the accused by Dinesh Debnath or by individuals assembled at the spot, as has been done above, it is left with no explanation, on the part of the prosecution, respecting the various injuries noticed by the doctor on his person. The corollary that follows is that the defence set up by the accused that those injuries had been occasioned to him by the deceased Abinash is thrown up in bold relief. Sri H. C. Nath minutely examined in Court all the injuries listed by the doctor and submitted that the haematoma and congestion on the eye-lids and the abrasions on the right side of the face could not have been occasioned by the blunt side of the dao as pleaded by the accused. I do not want to enter the lists with Sri H. C. Nath on that point. However, those two injuries can be easily explained. After the accused had wrested the weapon from the hands of Abinash Chandra, the latter could have entered into scuffle with him (the accused) to secure back the weapon and in the process to have administered him some fist blows in the region of eyes. Such blows could have occasioned haematoma and congestion in the eye-lids. The abrasions on the face may well have come about when the accused was secured by the persons at the spot. Sri H C Nath did not contest the proposition that the lacerated injuries on the forehead, lower lip and on the left side of the face could have been occasioned with the blunt side of the dao which was brought to the Court room at my instance and was examined critically by Sri H C Nath.

10. Sri H C Nath very fairly conceded that the prosecution had not been able to establish genesis of the conflict that cropped up between the deceased Abinash and the accused Mahendra Debnath was the first to know about the occurrence but admittedly when he looked in the direction of the scene of conflict the deceased was lying on the ground and the accused was administering blows to him. What had happened before that moment was apparently not known to Mahendra. As against the complete absence of prosecution evidence bearing on the origin of the conflict, we have the version of the accused that Mahendra Debnath and the accused played foul with him because the objectives for which they had secured the amulets from him had not materialized. It is also the version of the accused that Abinash used the blunt side of the dao he carried in his hand in occasioning him (the accused) some blows and it is then that he snatched the weapon from Abinash and used the same effectively against the latter. This version of the accused is not in conflict with facts established by the prosecution evidence. It also explains the injuries found on the person of the accused and provides in addition a reasonable version of how the situation flared up. Sarat Debnath (P W 7), the son of Mahendra Debnath, admitted that his mother had secured a talisman respecting her illness. It is in the statement of the Investigating Officer (P W. 20) that amongst other articles seized by him from the scene of occurrence there was the amulet Ext M O 5. Hence it is possible, nay probable, that the wife of Mahendra Debnath and the deceased had secured amulets from the accused. This piece of evidence also lends corroboration to the story propounded by the accused.

11. I agree with Sri H C Nath that it is not incumbent on the prosecution to establish the existence of any motive for the crime with which the accused may be charged. However, it cannot be gainsaid that there must exist a motive for every voluntary act. It may also be stated without fear of contradiction that in a criminal trial failure to prove the motive does not necessarily imply that there was no motive for the crime. It is equally well settled that the proof of motive is not necessary to sustain a conviction on a murder charge when there is clear evidence that the person had been done to death by the accused. In other words, when the facts establishing the charge are clear it is immaterial that the motive has not been proved. The reason is that the motive of an act may be known to the perpetrator and to none other and the investigator may not have been able to collect any information in regard thereto. In the background of these principles and the fact that the prosecution was unable to attribute any motive to the accused for having indulged in allegedly unprovoked assault with a deadly weapon on Abinash, we cannot lightly dismiss the motive which, according to the accused, had weighed with Abinash and Mahendra Debnath in creating a situation which cost a valuable young life. The defence of the accused that the two persons had firstly abused him and that Abinash had subsequently opened an assault on him with the blunt side of the dao looks highly probable, and since it has the merit of explaining the injuries suffered by the accused and also provides the motive for the accused making an assault on Abinash it cannot be left out of account. I would, therefore, accept the version preferred by the accused.

12. The only question that remains for determination is whether the facts bring the case within Exception 2 to S 300, I P C as canvassed by Sri M Nath, the Counsel for the appellant. That exception provides that culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, in the exercise in good faith of the right of private defence of person or property, exceeds the power given to him by law and causes the death of the person against whom he is exercising such right of the defence without premeditation, and without any intention of doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of such defence. It may also be mentioned at this stage that Clause 4 of Section 99, I P C enacts that the right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence, and that Section 102, I P C states that the right of private defence of the body commences as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence though the offence may not have been committed and that it continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues. It was contended by Sri M Nath that the apprehension to the person of the accused commenced when Abinash opened the assault on him with the dao and that it terminated only after the accused had succeeded in flooring Abinash. When the unchallenged statement of Mahendra Debnath (P W 2) that the accused had administered some blows to Abinash even after the latter had fallen on the ground was brought to his notice, Sri M Nath said that his client may be held guilty on the footing of that evidence under Section 324, I P C for having exceeded the right of private defence. Sri H. C Nath, however, urged that immediately after the moment the accused had succeeded in wresting the weapon from Abinash the right of private defence of body ceased to exist, and since all the blows had been administered by the accused to Abinash after that moment, he should be held guilty of murder. In my opinion, the truth lies somewhere in between the two extreme stands taken by the parties' Counsel. To quote the words from an American judgment, "detached reflection cannot be demanded in the presence of an uplifted knife". It is, indeed, often said, and rightly, that one cannot weigh in golden scales what maximum amount of force was necessary to keep within the limits of the right of private defence. Hence I cannot subscribe to the contention of Sri H. C. Nath that apprehension to the person of the accused had terminated with the snatching of the weapon by him from the hands of Abinash. As observed earlier, Abinash must have in all likelihood continued the scuffle with the accused in a bid to snatch back the weapon from the latter. I have also observed above that possibly the injuries around the eyes of the accused had been occasioned by Abinash at that stage of the scuffle. Therefore, I do not feel safe in holding that the danger to the person of the accused had terminated after Abinash had been deprived of the weapon. At the same time I cannot agree with Sri M. Nath that the danger at that stage to the person of the accused was so grave that he could legitimately harbour the apprehension that Abinash would either kill him or occasion him grievous hurt.

In terms of Section 100, I. P. C. the right of private defence of the body extends to the voluntary causing of death, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be, inter alia, such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt shall otherwise be the consequence of that assault. I cannot believe that in bar-handed condition Abinash could have made an assault of such a nature on the accused. I would in consequence hold that the accused had over-stepped the legal limits of the defence of persons and as such he is guilty of an offence made punishable by Part II of Section 304, Indian Penal Code. I find material on record much too scarce to sustain the finding that the accused had any intention of causing death of Abinash or causing such bodily injury to him as was likely to cause his death. However, in view of the grave nature of the injuries inflicted on Abinash especially injury no. 1, the accused can be attributed the knowledge that his act was likely to cause death of Abinash. If the accused had come with the set intention of taking the life of Abinash, he must have brought some weapon with him. But that is not the case of the prosecution. The weapon used by him against Abinash had, by common agreement, been secured by him from the possession of Abinash.

13. In the matter of sentence I am not inclined to show any leniency to the accused. The reason is that the number of injuries inflicted by him smack of barbarism and the nature thereof indicates brutality. I would, therefore, sentence him to 3 years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 2,000/-, or, in default, additional rigorous imprisonment for 2 years. The fine, if realised, shall be paid to the heirs of the deceased Abinash. Announced.
MVJ/D.V.C. Order accordingly.

Criminal Appeal (Jail) No. 7 of 1967, D/-20-6-1969, against the judgment and order of Addl. S. J., Agartala, Tripura in S. T. No. 21 of 1965.

(A) Evidence Act (1872), S. 3 — Penal Code (1860) — Circumstantial evidence — Appreciation of — Must be consistent only with guilt of accused — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367) — (Penal Code (1860), S. 364).

The principles bearing on what should be the nature and quality of the circumstantial evidence before a charge can be held established by it are: (i) the circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should in the first instance be fully established; (ii) all the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of accused; and (iii) the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency and they should be such as to exclude every hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. It is equally well established that, in cases dependent on circumstantial evidence, in order to justify the inference of guilt, the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused or the guilt of any other person and also incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Circumstantial evidence, therefore, must be a combination of facts creating a network through which there is no escape for the accused, or, in other words, the facts taken as a whole do not admit, to the extent of moral certainty, of any inference but of his guilt. The chain of facts constituting the evidence must be so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for a conclusion therefrom consistent with the innocence of the accused. AIR 1952 SC 343 & AIR 1960 SC 29, Rel. (Para 12) on.

Held on facts that it could not be said that the circumstantial evidence was consistent only with the hypothesis that the accused had abducted the two deceased or that the abduction was for purposes mentioned in S. 364, Penal Code. (Para 12)

Though it is not essential for the prosecution to establish motive against the accused in all cases, but at the same time it cannot be gainsaid that without adequate motive, speaking normally, none is expected to take the life of another human being. (C) Penal Code (1860), S. 364 — Offence under S 364 — No enmity between the two accused persons and two deceased — Third co-accused P who was alleged to have procured services of accused for abduction of deceased, exonerated of charge under S 364 read with S 109, I P. C and acquitted — It is futile for prosecution to contend that either of the two accused had any motive for committing double murder — If the co-accused P had not engaged them for alleged abduction, charge of abduction against accused must fall ipso facto inasmuch as it was the basis of prosecution story that it was P who procured abduction of deceased.

(1952) AIR 1952 SC 343 (V 39)=

1953 Cri LJ 129, Hanumant Covind v State of Madhya Pradesh 12

A M Lodh, (Amicus Curiae) with H Dutta, for Appellants, H C Nath, Govt. Advocate for Respondent

JUDGMENT The appellants Fulkumar and Lalikumar challenge the correctness of their conviction under Section 364, Indian Penal Code, and sentence of 8 years rigorous imprisonment, imposed on each by Shri N. M. Paul, the Additional Sessions Judge at Agartala, by his judgment dated 27-12-1966

2 The two appellants were tried on the charge of murder under Section 302, Indian Penal Code and in the alternative on the charge under Section 364, Indian Penal Code. Their co-accused Promode Ranjan Dewan was charged under S 302 read with S 109, I P C and in the alternative under S 364 read with Section 109, Indian Penal Code. The charge of murder could not be sustained against either of the accused and so they were all acquitted of that charge. Promode Ranjan Dewan was also exonerated of the charge under Section 364 read with Section 109, Indian Penal Code. The present appellants were held guilty under Sec 364, Indian Penal Code and sentenced in the manner stated above.

3 The prosecution story, as gathered from the testimony of the various witnesses examined at the trial, is that at about 9 P M., on 22-9-1963, the appellants Fulkumar and Lalikumar visited the house of the deceased Panchakumar when the latter was sitting in his hut at Hajachara along with his wife and both were smoking. The two accused requested Panchakumar to accompany them out and he agreed. The party of three left the house of Panchakumar and made for that of Khagendra, the other deceased of this case. Khagendra and his wife Chandrasree were also enjoying smoke in their hut. Fulkumar and Lalikumar requested Khagendra to go out with them and Khagendra nodded assent. However, neither Panchakumar nor Khagendra returned to their respective huts during that night and so their spouses felt anxiety in regard to their safety. Bagalaxmi, the wife of Panchakumar, contacted Chandrasree, the wife of Khagendra, on the morning of 23rd to ascertain if the latter had any information respecting her husband. Each apprised the other that her husband had not returned since he had left on the previous night in the company of Fulkumar and Lalikumar. Both the women also happened to meet Fulkumar and Lalikumar in the village on the same morning and made inquiries about their husbands. However, Fulkumar and Lalikumar denied any knowledge in regard to their whereabouts. After the necessary but abortive search in the village and elsewhere the two women went to the police Outpost at Silachari to report that their husbands were missing since the previous night. It appears that Radhapada, the A S I in charge of the Outpost at Silachari, advised them to submit their report in writing. Consequently, they went to the bazar at Silachari and requested Benoy Bhusan (P. W. 3) to help them in preparing the reports. Benoy Bhusan prepared the reports Exts P-1 and P-1(a) at their instance and these reports were then presented to Radhapada, who sent those reports, in original, on the same day by post to the police station Sabroom, under which the Outpost at Silachari falls.

4 On 23rd of September, 1963, Priyanath Ghosh (P. W. 9), an employee in the Anti-Malaria Department as Field Worker, was surprised to notice one aged lady and an aged man on the run while he was proceeding from Hajachara to Silachari. On enquiry from those two persons, the witness learnt that they had seen two dead bodies, with serious injuries on their persons, lying in a paddy field close-by. The witness then visited the place where the dead bodies were reported to be lying and was convinced about the veracity of the information passed on to him by the aforementioned two persons. On the next day, 24-9-1963, Priyanath Ghosh communicated what he had seen to Anil Kumar (P. W. 4), an employee in the Forest Department, and this Anil Kumar, in turn, went to the Outpost at Silachari and told A S I Radhapada, the officer in charge, that the dead bodies of two persons were lying in the paddy field. A S I Radhapada then contacted Priyanath Ghosh (P. W. 9) and asked him to accompany him to the place where the dead bodies were lying. Priyanath excused himself but detailed one peon of his own Department for accompanying A. S. I. Radhapada to the relevant field. A police party headed by Radhapada then left for that field where they reached at about 3 P. M. After seeing the dead bodies, Radhapada sent a word to the widows of Panchakumar and Khagendra. After those women had reached the field and identified the bodies of their husbands, Radhapada prepared the inquest reports. He seized one blood-stained sickle, some blood-stained earth and some blood-stained garments from the scene of occurrence and prepared the recovery memo in that respect. That done, he sent the dead bodies to Silachari and busied himself in the search of Fulkumar and Lalikumar. That search, however, was unavailing. He returned to the Outpost at about 7-30 P. M. and then sent a radiogram message to the Officer-in-charge of the police station Sabroom intimating the recovery of the dead bodies of Panchakumar and Khagendra as also the reports lodged by the widows of the deceased on the previous day. On the next morning (25-9-1963) Radhapada sent the dead bodies to Sabroom for post mortem examination.

5. The radiogram message sent by Radhapada was received by Aparna Ranjan Bhattacharjee, the Officer-in-charge of the police station Sabroom, at 9 A. M. on 25th of September. On the basis of that message Bhattacharjee registered a case and then started the investigations. At about 2 in the night between 25th and 26th, he left for the place of occurrence via the Outpost Silachari. From the latter Outpost he collected all the papers on the evening of 26th and after spending the night at that Outpost he left for the place of occurrence on the next morning. He prepared the site plan and collected from there another two sickles and two tufts of blood-stained hair. Thereafter, he went to the village of the two deceased and examined a few persons. He also happened to search the houses of the accused Fulkumar and Lalikumar, but abortively. On 29-9-1963 Bhattacharjee happened to arrest Amarendra Dewan, a nephew of the accused Promode Ranjan Dewan, and Sonadhan Chakma, from whose paddy field the dead bodies were found. But it appears that they were subsequently released, nothing incriminating having been discovered against them. One Brajendra Tripura was also arrested in connection with this case, but he too was not ultimately proceeded against. Bhattacharjee arrested Promode Dewan on 4-10-1963, while Radhapada (P. W. 18) succeeded in arresting the present appellants on 15-12-1963.

6. Before the investigations had concluded, Bhattacharjee had to leave Sabroom for Kamalpur in connection with Court evidence. He, therefore, made over the investigations on 17-12-1963 to Gobinda Gopal Basak (P. W. 17). Radhapada sent the two appellants on 17-12-1963 to the police station Sabroom. Sri G. G. Basak secured police remand respecting them on 18-12-1963 from the Magistrate at Sabroom. It is in the statement of Basak that on 20th of December, 1963, both the accused made disclosure statements to him and that pursuant thereto he recovered the takkal daos Exts. PM-1 and PM-1 (a) respectively at the instance of Fulkumar and Lalikumar.

7. The post-mortem examination on the two dead bodies was done by Dr. Nilmani Deb Barma (P. W. 15) on 26th of September, 1963. He noticed a large number of incised wounds on the persons of the two deceased. All the wounds, the doctor affirmed, were ante-mortem and sufficient to occasion death.

8. P. W. 1 Bagalaxmi and P. W. 2 Chandrasree, the wives of the two deceased, happened to affirm that their husbands had taken some lands on rent from Promode Dewan, the accused since acquitted, that Promode Dewan wanted their husbands to vacate the lands, and that since the deceased had refused to oblige Promode Dewan the latter happened to nurse a grievance against them. It was to secure his objective, the two women insinuated, that Promode Dewan had procured the murders of Panchakumar and Khagendra with the help of the present appellants. These facts, the prosecution contended constituted the motive culminating in gruesome felony.

9. Fulkumar and Lalikumar entered the plea of not guilty. The defence set up by them was that they were altogether innocent and had been falsely implicated.

10. Shri A. M. Lodh, the learned Counsel representing the appellants as amicus curiae, urged vehemently that the evidence on the record falls far short of establishing the various ingredients of Section 364, Indian Penal Code. That section provides that whoever kidnaps or abducts any person in order that such person may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered, shall be punished with imprisonment for life, or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. The expression "abduction" is defined in Section 362, Indian Penal Code. That section enacts that whoever by force compels, or by any deceitful means induces, any person to go from any place, is said to abduct that person. Shri Lodh canvassed that it was not the contention of the prosecution that the appellants had forcibly compelled the two deceased to accompany them out, on the evening of 22-9-1963, and that in consequence the prosecution could at the best contend that the deceased had been beguiled into going out of their huts by deceitful means. However, the Counsel urged further that there was not an iota of evidence to establish that any deceitful means had been employed by the appellants against the two deceased. Shri H. C. Nath, the learned Government Advocate, did not join issue with Shri Lodh on the point that it was not the prosecution case that any force had been used by the two accused against the deceased for the purpose of taking them out of their huts. However, Shri Nath submitted that the circumstantial evidence available on the record leaves no scope for doubt on the point that the accused did apply deceitful means in taking the two deceased out. When asked by the Court to detail the circumstantial pieces of evidence in support of his contention, Shri Nath could marshal only two of them. They are, (i) that at about 9 P.M. on 22nd of September, 1963, the two accused had firstly visited the house of Panchakumar and then of Khagendra and had taken them out of their huts along with them, and (ii) that the dead bodies of Panchakumar and Khagendra were found lying in the paddy field of Sonadhan Chakma on the morning of 23rd of September, 1963. Shri Lodh, it must be stated here, did not contest that the two facts listed by Shri Nath are proved beyond doubt by dependable evidence.

The statements of P.W. 1 Bagalaxmi and P.W. 2 Chandrasree sound wholly convincing on the points that the two appellants had visited their respective huts late in the evening of 22-9-1963 and had taken their husbands along with them, and that they had lodged the reports Exts P-1 and P-1 (a) with the Outpost at Silachari in the evening of 23rd of September, 1963, after they had failed to get any information about their husbands, despite intensive and extensive search during the day. It is convincingly established from the testimony of Priyanath Ghosh (P.W. 9) that he had seen the dead bodies lying in the paddy field on 23-9-1963 and that he had vouched that information to Anil Kumar (P.W. 4). This Anil Kumar deposed that he happened to visit the Outpost at Silachari on 24th of September, 1963 when he communicated the information, passed on to him by Priyanath Ghosh, to Officer-in-Charge of the Outpost Radhapada (P.W. 16) affirmed that on 23rd the reports Exts P-1 and P-1 (a) had been delivered to him by the two women and that on the next day Anil Kumar apprised him personally that two dead bodies were seen lying in the paddy field. He deposed further that after ascertaining for himself that the bodies were lying at the place mentioned by his informant, he sent a radiogram to the police station Sabroom. That radiogram message is marked Ext P-11. It is recited therein that the two women had made the reports on 23rd of September and that the dead bodies of the two persons had been found lying in the paddy field of Sonadhan Chakma of Hajachara on 24th. Therefore, the two facts emphasised by Shri Nath are proved indisputably.

11. However, the point that falls for determination is whether those two facts per se constitute sufficient material to warrant the conclusion that the two accused had abducted the deceased persons or that their abduction was actuated by the intention to murder them or that they may be so disposed of as to be put in the danger of being murdered. The motive, if any, behind the murder of the two deceased persons was attributed only to the accused Promode Dewan. However, he has been completely cleared of the charge and acquitted. His acquittal has not been challenged by the State. Though, I agree, it is not essential for the prosecution to establish motive against the accused in all cases, but at the same time it cannot be gainsaid that without adequate motive, speaking normally, none is expected to take the life of another human being. To bag human body as a game is a rare occurrence, if at all. In the reports Exts. P-1 and P-1 (a) no evil intentions were imputed to the present appellants, nor the two women assigned any motive to them in their statements made at the trial. P.W. 13 Jogendra happened to affirm in the committing Court that there was no enmity between the two deceased and the accused Promode Dewan. This averment of a prosecution witness dwarfs the contrary assertion of the widows of the deceased Naradmoni (P.W. 7), the elder brother of the deceased Panchakumar, undoubtedly deposed that his family had enmity with Promode Dewan. However, it is significant that he did not go further to state that the appellants had any differences with the two deceased. He also did not affirm that the accused Promode had such intimate connections with the appellants that he could prevail upon the latter to murder the deceased. P.W. 2 Chandrasree affirmed at the trial that she had stated before the committing Magistrate that her husband had no enmity with the accused Fulkumar and Lalikumar. In the face of all this data it is futile for the prosecution to contend that either of the two appellants had any motive for committing the double murder. The learned Trial Court could not record a definite finding against the appellants respecting the motive part of the story. In para 24 of its judgment, it is mentioned that

"Though there was no direct evidence to prove the motive of the accused Fulkumar and Lalikumar, it may be inferred from the circumstances of the case that the accused Fulkumar and Lalikumar might have been engaged to abduct the deceased with a plan that they would be murdered or be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered."

It is further stated in the same para that as a consequence of their abduction the deceased Panchakumar and Khagendra had been murdered during the course of the night. The expression "might have been engaged" is clearly indicative of the doubt in the mind of the trial Court respecting the motive attributed to the accused. The view of the trial Court would look rather amazing in the context that not only Promode Dewan, who is alleged to have procured the services of the two appellants for the abduction of the deceased, but also the appellants have been given clear acquittal on the charge of murder, and that, in addition, Promode Dewan has also been exonerated of the charge under Section 364 read with Section 109, Indian Penal Code. If Promode Dewan had not engaged the two appellants for the alleged abduction of the deceased, a corollary that follows from his acquittal, the charge of abduction against the two appellants must fall through ipso facto inasmuch as it is the basis of the prosecution story that it was Promode Dewan who had procured the abduction of the two deceased through the appellants.

12. Coming back to the submission of Shri H. C. Nath that there is abundant material available on the record to justify the conclusion that the appellants had abducted the deceased for the purpose mentioned in Section 364, Indian Penal Code, it can bear repetition to state that he had founded that submission on the facts that the deceased Panchakumar and Khagendra had accompanied the appellants from their respective huts at about 9 P. M. on 22nd of September, 1963, and that the dead bodies of Panchakumar and Khagendra were seen lying in a paddy field on the morning of the next following day. The principles bearing on what should be the nature and quality of the circumstantial evidence before a charge can be held established by it are well settled. They are, (i) the circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should in the first instance be fully established; (ii) all the facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of accused; and (iii) the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency and they should be such as to exclude every hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. In this connection, reference is invited to the cases of Hanumant Govind v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 343, and Govinda Reddy v. State of Mysore, AIR 1960 SC 29. It is equally well established that, in cases dependent on circumstantial evidence, in order to justify the inference of guilt, the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused or the guilt of any other person and also incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Circumstantial evidence, therefore, must be a combination of facts creating a network through which there is no escape for the accused, or, in other words, the facts taken as a whole do not admit, to the extent of moral certainty, of any inference but of his guilt. The chain of facts constituting the evidence must be so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for a conclusion therefrom consistent with the innocence of the accused.

If we examine the facts of the case in hand in the light of these principles, there looks no scope for doubt on the point that the network constituted by the two facts, relied upon by Shri H. C. Nath, leaves gaps of varied dimensions through which the accused can get out with facility. The record is altogether barren of evidence that the two appellants and the deceased had remained together for any length of time after 9 P. M. Nor is there any evidence to indicate, even approximately, the time at which Panchakumar and Khagendra were hacked to death. Again, there is no evidence to establish that the two appellants had not slept at their respective houses during the night of occurrence. The prosecution evidence is altogether insufficient to prove that the appellants had any motive for taking the lives of Panchakumar and Khagendra. Further, it is in prosecution evidence that the dead bodies were found lying in a paddy field, that A. S. I. Radhapada had recovered one bloodstained sickle from that field, and that S. S. I. Bhattacharjee (P. W. 21) came by another two sickles from the same field. It may be that the two deceased had gone to cut standing paddy crop from the field of another and the latter opened an assault on them with some dangerous weapon. The unchallenged acquittal of Promode Dewan smashes the foundations of the prosecution edifice that the appellants had wilyly brought the two deceased out of their huts at the instance of Promode Dewan, either to murder them or to dispose of them in a way that they may be exposed to the danger of being murdered. All these factors constitute loopholes which lend colour to the contention of the appellants that they had been hauled up without any justification. Lastly, it may be mentioned that in the reports Exts. P-1 and P-1 (a) the appellants were not mentioned as the possible culprits, and that the Investigating Officer happened to arrest, within a few days of the occurrence, Brajendra Tripura (P. W. 10), Amarendra Dewan and Sonadhan Chakma. The present appellants were the last in the list of the persons to be arrested in the case, their arrests having been effected as late as 15-12-1963. There is no evidence to establish that the appellants had been absconding right up to the date of their arrest. They are labourers by profession and so could not have adopted any means to escape arrest if the police were earnest in apprehending them. No incriminating article was recovered from or at the instance of the appellants. The trial Court has rejected the testimony of Shri Basak that the appellants had made disclosure statements before him or that those disclosure statements had led to the recovery of any instruments. Shri H. C. Nath did not challenge that finding of the trial Court. Hence I find it difficult to uphold the conclusions of the trial Court that the circumstantial evidence was consistent only with the hypothesis that the accused had abducted the two deceased or that the abduction was for purposes mentioned in Section 364, Indian Penal Code.

13. As a result, I allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence of both the appellants, and order their immediate release. Announced.

AIR 1969 TRIPURA 62 (V 56 C 13)

R S BINDRA, J C.

Nripendra Chandra Dutta Majumder, and others, Petitioners v Administration of Tripura and others, Respondents

Writ Petn No 10 of 1963, D/- 21-7-1969

(A) Tenancy Laws — Tripura Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (Central Act 43 of 1960), Ss. 2 (s), 99 (1) (c), 135 (d), 134 (1), 133 (d) — Jotedars are owners of lands as also trees thereon — Government cannot claim royalty respecting those trees.

The expression "jotedar" is synonymous with expression "rayat" used in Tripura Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act (Para 3)

After the Government had acquired the rights, title and interest of intermediaries in the estates in terms of Section 134 (1), it (the Government) passed on all the rights in the lands to the tenants of those lands and such tenants were given the nomenclature of rayats. The bundle of rights given to rayats, as gathered from clauses (a) and (b) of S 99 (1), are virtually the plenary rights of ownership and what detracts, if at all, from their ownership is the designation "rayat". Otherwise, the rayats have all the attributes of ownership, e.g., their rights in the land are permanent and those rights are heritable and transferable. The rayats are referred to as owners in S 2 (s) and they are liable to pay, like an ordinary owner, only land revenue to the Government and nothing more (Para 3)

Under S 99 (1) (c) the jotedars can take benefit of this clause and the trees standing on their jote lands shall be their property. In such an event the question of payment of royalty respecting those trees would not arise. The concept of ownership militates against the claim of royalty respecting the property owned. Hence, if the jotedars are owners of the lands as also of the trees standing thereon, the Government cannot claim royalty respecting those trees (Paras 4, 5)

(B) Forest Act (1927), Ss 41, 42, 2 (4) — Transit Rules respecting timber and other forests produce — Chief Commissioner is possessed of ample powers to make rules relating to transit of all timber and other forest produce whether found in or brought from reserved forests or private lands (Para 6)

(C) Constitution of India, Art 226 — Subsequent events — Courts can take notice of developments which take place pendente lite. (Para 5)

M R Choudhury and R L Chakraborty, for Petitioners, H. C Nath, Govt Advocate, for Respondent

ORDER: In this writ petition, under Article 226 of the Constitution, the petitioners allege that they are owners and in occupation, as jotedars, of certain lands situate in the villages of Charlam and Chasmai and that a large number of trees of various varieties are standing on those lands. It is complained that though the Government has no claim or right to those trees, yet the forest officials at Charlam object to the petitioners' felling the trees and utilizing them for their personal requirements. The forest officials, it is alleged further, demand royalty from the petitioners respecting those trees and threaten them with dire consequences in case the trees are felled and removed without transit pass secured from them or without payment of royalty. Aggrieved by such illegal demands made by the local forest officials, it is stated, the petitioners addressed a number of representations, including the one dated 30th of March, 1963, to the Chief Forest Officer of the Union Territory of Tripura, but the latter without giving any hearing to them rejected the last one on 24-4-1963. The prayer made by the petitioners is for issuance of a Writ of mandamus directing the respondents to desist from claiming royalty from them and not to insist on their securing the transit pass before removing from their lands the trees after they are felled. Another prayer made is that the respondents be directed not to act upon Notification No 12 issued under the Tripura Forest Act and Forest Rules as that Notification, it is pleaded, has no sanction behind it and so is illegal. It is also prayed that the aforementioned order dated 24-4-1964 of the Chief Forest Officer rejecting the representation dated 30th of March, 1963, of the petitioners should be quashed.

2 The respondents resist the prayers made by the petitioners on the assertions that the forest officials are within their rights in demanding the royalty from the petitioners, the trees being in the ownership of the Government, and also in insisting that the petitioners must arm themselves with the transit pass before removing the trees from the place at which they are felled, this being in accordance with Notification No 12, dated 29-4-1952, issued by the Government under the Tripura Forest Act. It is vehemently denied that the Notification or any part of it is illegal. The correctness of the stand taken by the Chief Forest Officer in his order dated 24-4-1963, it is urged, is perfectly valid in law and sound in principle.

3. The first point canvassed by Shri M R Choudhury, representing the petitioners, is that the officials of the forest department are not justified in law in claiming royalty from the petitioners respecting the trees standing on the lands of which they happen to be jotedars. Shri H C Nath, the learned Government Advocate, does not challenge the fact that the petitioners are jotedars of the lands mentioned in the writ petition, though he did not concede that the petitioners have absolute right to the user of the trees standing on those lands or that they are not liable to pay the royalty claimed by the forest officials. The expression "jotedar", it is commonly admitted, is synonymous with the expression "rayat" used in the Tripura Land Revenue and Land Reforms Act of 1960 (hereinafter called the Act) in clause (s) of Section 2 of the Act, "raiya" is defined to mean "a person, who owns land for purposes of agriculture paying land revenue to the Government and includes the successors-in-interest of such person". The rights which "raiya" hold in the land are precisely defined in Section 99 of the Act which runs as under:—

"99. (1) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that subject to the other provisions of this Act.—

(a) the rights of a raiya in his land shall be permanent, heritable and transferable;

(b) the raiya shall be entitled by himself, his servants, under-raiys, agents or other representatives to erect farm buildings, construct wells or tanks or make other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land or its convenient or profitable use;

(c) the raiya is entitled to plant trees on his land, to enjoy the products thereof and to fell, utilise or dispose of the timber of any trees on his land.

(2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall entitle a raiya to use his land to the detriment of any adjoining land which is not his or in contravention of the provisions of any other law for the time being in force applicable to such lands."

According to clause (c) of sub-section (1), the raiya is given the right to fell and utilize or dispose of the timber of any tree on his land. Hence, if clause (c) has been enforced in the region in which the petitioners' lands are situated, then the petitioners are justified, in my opinion, in advancing the contention that they are not liable to pay any royalty to the Government. From the definition clause (s) of Section 2 of the Act it can be safely spelled out that the Parliament has given the status of owner to the raiya respecting the land in his occupation for purposes of agriculture. The only obligation imposed on him respecting such land is that he shall have to pay the land revenue to the Government. By cls. (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 99 of the Act, it is declared that the rights of raiya in his land shall be permanent, heritable and transferable, and that the raiya shall be entitled by himself, his servants, under-raiys, agents or other representatives to erect farm buildings, construct wells or tanks or make other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land or its convenient or profitable use. How a person is clothed with the title of raiya, as defined in cl. (s) of Section 2, is made clear by clause (d) of Section 135 of the Act.

It is stated therein that notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force or in any agreement or contract, express or implied, with effect from the vesting date (specified by the Administrator by a Notification issued under Section 134 (1) of the Act) but subject to the other provisions of the Act, "every tenant holding any land under an intermediary shall hold the same directly under the Government as a raiya thereof and shall be liable to pay to the Government land revenue equal to the rent payable by him to the intermediary on the vesting date". The expression "tenant" is defined in clause (d) of Section 133 of the Act to mean "a person who cultivates or holds the land of an intermediary under an agreement, express or implied, on condition of paying therefor rent in cash or in kind or delivering a share of the produce and includes a person who cultivates or holds land of an intermediary under the system generally known as "bhag," "adhi" or "barga."

It clearly follows from these statutory provisions that after the Government had acquired the rights, title and interest of intermediaries in the estates in terms of Section 134 (1) of the Act, it (the Government) passed on all the rights in the lands to the tenants of those lands and such tenants were given the nomenclature of raiys. The bundle of rights given to raiys, as gathered from clauses (a) and (b) of Section 99 (1) of the Act, are virtually the plenary rights of ownership and what detracts, if at all, from their ownership is the designation "raiya". Otherwise, the raiys have all the attributes of ownership, e.g., their rights in the land are permanent and those rights are heritable and transferable. The raiys are referred to as owners in clause (s) of Section (2) of the Act and they are liable to pay, like an ordinary owner, only land revenue to the Government and nothing more.

4. In Section 12 (1) of the Act, it is stated that the right to all trees, jungles or other natural products growing on land set apart for forest reserves, and to all trees, brush wood, jungle or other natural product, wherever growing, 'except in so far as the same may be the property of any person,' vests in the Government, and such trees, brush wood, jungle or other natural product shall be preserved or disposed of in such manner as may be prescribed, keeping in view the interests of the people in the area with regard to the user of the natural products. The underlined (here in ' ') words indicate unmistakably that the trees and other natural products do not vest in the Government if they happen to be the property of any individual. Clause (c) of S. 99 (1), as reproduced above, enacts that the raiya is entitled to fell, utilize or dispose of the timber of any tree standing on his land. It is obvious that if the petitioners can take benefit of this clause, then the trees standing on their jote lands shall be their property and in such an event the question of payment of royalty respecting those trees would not arise. The concept of ownership militates against the claim of royalty respecting the property owned. Hence, if the petitioners are owners of the lands as also of the trees standing thereon, it would be fantastic to suggest that the Government can claim royalty respecting those trees.

5. Sub-section (3) of Section 1 of the Act provides that the Act shall come into force on such date as the Administrator may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint, and different dates may be appointed for different areas and for different provisions of the Act. On 12th of May, 1966, the Administrator issued the Notification No. F 39(60)-Rev/63 stating that in exercise of the power conferred on him by sub-sec (3) of Section 1 of the Act, he had appointed 15th of May, 1966, as the date on which clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 99 of the Act shall come into force, inter alia, in Bishalgarh Police Station of Sadar Sub-division. Shri H. C. Nath, the learned Government Advocate, was far in admitting that the land in dispute is situate in the Bishalgarh Police Station as mentioned in Para 1 of the writ petition.

In fact, the allegation made in that para had not been challenged by the Government in the counter-affidavit. Therefore, cl (c) of Section 99 (1) of the Act is very much in force respecting the lands in dispute with the result that the petitioners are at present the full-fledged owners of the trees standing on their lands with the right to fell, utilize or dispose of them in the manner desired. Hence, the petitioners can legitimately contend, as at present, that the respondents be restrained by suitable writ or direction from claiming royalty respecting the trees standing on the lands mentioned in the petition. It is correct that clause (c) was not in operation on 25th of June, 1963, when the writ petition was filed. However, it is well settled that the Courts can take notice of the developments which take place pendente lite. Here, again, Shri H. C. Nath did not contest the validity of this proposition of law. I would therefore hold that the petitioners being the owners of the trees as also of the land on which those trees stand, the demand of royalty from them respecting those trees cannot be countenanced and so the respondents have to be restrained from making such a claim.

6. This brings us to the consideration of the second contention raised by Shri Choudhury on behalf of the petitioners. He submitted that the forest officials have no authority to insist that the petitioners cannot remove the timber of the trees standing on their lands without a transit pass. It was vehemently urged by Shri Choudhury that the Notification dated 29th of April, 1952, issued by the Chief Commissioner, Tripura, under Sections 41 and 42 of the Indian Forest Act prescribing Transit Rules respecting timber and other forest produce is ultra vires. He was particularly critical of para 11 of the Notification which bears the heading "Removal of forest produce of private forests and lands". Shri H. C. Nath contended, on the other hand, that the Chief Commissioner is possessed of a statutory authority to issue such a Notification and in consequence the contention put forth by Shri Choudhury is without any merit or substance. I think the stand taken by Shri H. C. Nath can withstand legal scrutiny and so must prevail. The Indian Forest Act came into force in the Union Territory of Tripura on 16-4-1950 when simultaneously the Tripura Forest Act was repealed. Section 41 (1) of the former Act gives power to the State Government to make rules to regulate the transit of all timber and other forest produce, while Sec 42 arms the State Government with authority to provide in the rules formulated under Section 41 the penalties to which the person contravening the provisions of the rules shall be subject to.

The expression "forest produce" is defined in clause (4) of Section 2 of the Indian Forest Act to include timber whether found in, or brought from, a forest or not. Hence, it can be stated without demur that the Chief Commissioner is possessed of ample powers to make rules relating to the transit of all timber and other forest produce whether found in or brought from reserved forests or private lands. Hence, the proposition canvassed by Shri Choudhury has to be negatived. Towards the close of his argument, I may mention, Shri Choudhury realised that there was no substance in the submission made by him and so he did not seriously press it. However, he wanted this Court to give the definition of the expression "transit". I am not inclined to do so because the question what constitutes transit in terms of the rules formulated by the Chief Commissioner does not arise in a pointed manner in the instant case. Moreover, this point was emphasised by Shri Choudhury during the course of his reply to the arguments addressed by Shri H. C. Nath and so the latter had no opportunity to make his submissions respecting that point. It would, therefore, be unfair to the Government Advocate if I were to express my opinion on what constitutes "transit". Shri Choudhury had some justification for making the request. He represented that the lands of his clients are adjacent to their homesteads and so it would mean real hardship to them if the forest officials were to insist on their securing a transit pass before they can move the trees felled on their lands even to their homesteads. For reasons already stated, I leave the matter open.

7. As a result of the conclusions recorded above, I allow the writ petition in part and direct the respondents not to claim royalty from the petitioners respecting the trees standing on the lands mentioned in para 1 of the writ petition. However, I reject the petitioners' prayer that the respondents should be restrained from insisting on their securing a transit pass in connection with the transit of the timber of trees standing on those lands. In view of the partial success of the parties I leave them to bear their own costs. Advocate's fee Rs 50/- SSG/DVC

Welcome News to the Profession
A long awaited Publication
A. I. R. COMMENTARY ON The Constitution of India

(Second Edition)

By D. V. CHITALEY

AND

S. APPU RAO

IN FIVE VOLUMES

First Volume expected to be ready by April 1970.

Other Volumes to follow at short intervals.

It is no exaggeration to say that the A. I. R. Commentary on the Constitution of India was a landmark in the field of Commentaries on the Constitution. A learned Judge of the Madras High Court hailed it as the "Willoughby of India".

In the interval after the 1st edition, the Constitution has undergone several important and far-reaching amendments which have changed the law altogether in many respects. A huge mass of case-law, both of the Supreme Court and of the High Courts, has also accumulated during this period. Many of these decisions are of far-reaching importance and have revolutionised the law and rendered obsolete previous positions on various questions.

The present edition, incorporating all the amendments and all the case-law now explaining all the legal positions in the light of the later decisions and amending Act will be the most exhaustive, up-to-date and reliable publication on the Constitution for the use of lawyers and Courts.

The Constitution has heralded a new era, both in regard to the pattern of litigation and the volume of work in the Courts.

At the time of the first edition, the case-law on the Constitution had not developed sufficiently and Courts had to draw largely on American and other foreign decisions for analogous precedents. The position has changed very much and now case-law now covers a vast area and the reference to foreign decisions has become largely unnecessary now.

This edition of the A. I. R. Commentary on the Constitution is practically the only book which covers the entire field and includes the entire body of Indian case-law that has come into existence after the Constitution. There can be no substitute for this edition from the point of view of lawyers and Courts.
